With such opportunities at his command Britton, naturally amassed a valuable private library of his own, the excellence of which has been testified to by no less an authority than Thomas Hearne, who likewise spoke of Britton's skill in rare books and old manuscripts. Not only did Britton's library comprise a valuable collection of old musical works, but he added many manuscripts copied with his own hand. And his efforts as a collector were not confined to music; he dabbled in curiosities of all sorts—drawings and prints, and ancient and modern musical instruments. A large portion of his library was sold before his death, and Hearne confessed that he had often looked over its printed catalogue 'with wonder.' Another collection of musical books and manuscripts constituted the chief property left by Britton, and this his widow sold by auction at Tom's Coffee-house. Many of the items passed into the possession of Sir Hans Sloane, and were by him bequeathed to the British Museum. The works on music realised something like £100.

It is hardly surprising that so obvious an eccentric as Britton should have suffered on account of his hobbies. In an age of suspicion, when success in whatever direction was attended with considerably more drawbacks than it now is, he was variously accused of being an Atheist, Presbyterian, Jesuit, Sectary, and Conjuror, and his musical assemblies a cloak for seditious meetings, magic, and necromancy. The singularity of his mode of life and, perhaps most of all, the marked contrast between his station and his connections, combined to incite a variety of opinions concerning him and his meetings. Need it be said that these calumnies were absolutely groundless? Britton's record proves him to have been a simple and honest man, of 'open countenance,' ingenuous, wholly without offence—save that which jealousy inspired—whose tastes tended towards the arts rather than to politics.

And the manner of his death was no less romantic than his extraordinary life had been. Britton's end was poignant, and strangely in keeping with his singular life. An imaginative man, he was virtually killed by his own imagination; although it is not improbable that his head had been turned by his mystical studies. One day a friend introduced him to a ventriloquist, a fellow of mischievous jests, named Honeyman. This worthy, by way of a joke, in a far-away voice bade poor Britton prepare for his approaching end by repeating the Lord's Prayer upon his knees. Britton, credulous as ever, promptly obeyed the injunction, went home to his bed terrified, and in a few days—September, 1714—passed away. His remains were interred in a vault at St. James', Clerkenwell, - but no record now marks the spot. Woolaston, who has already been mentioned as a member of his orchestra, pronounced him to be a plain, simple, honest man, bent solely upon amusing himself, and, he might have added, others as well. Hughes, another member of his orchestra, penned upon him the following lines :

* Woolaston's portrait was reproduced as a supplement of the Musical Times, August, 1906.

'Tho' mean thy rank, yet in thy humble cell
Did gentle peace and arts unpurchas'd dwell;
Well pleased Apollo thither led his train,
And music warbled in her sweetest strain.
Cyllenius so, as fables tell, and Jovè,
Came willing guests to poor Philemon's grove.
Let useless pomp behold, and blush to find
So low a station, such a liberal mind.'

With all his accomplishments Britton never rose above his station : he died as he had lived—a small-coal man. His is a remarkable instance of genius in semi-obscurity. Did he attempt to rise, as the term is now generally understood ? Would he have been happier in his new-found world had he done so ? These are questions at once interesting and difficult to answer. For our part we are inclined to suspect that Britton cherished more philosophy than has been laid to his credit.

And who shall say that his passing was not eased by the reflection that he had honestly striven to leave the world—at least the musical world—a little better than he had found it ? How many children of fortune do we light upon throughout the ages—children tossed hither and thither upon her vagrant winds ? . . . Thomas Britton was assuredly one of them, and not the least interesting.

NEGRO SONGS

BY IAN CAMERON

Down on the Suwanee River, Massa's in the cold, cold ground, My Old Kentucky Home, and other of Foster's and kindred melodies, known as Plantation Songs, are songs that the white man has put into the negro's mouth. The truth is the negro seldom sings them. They are not his in the truest sense. The real negro melodies are more or less grotesque, and sung to tunes that are partly creations and partly adaptations of songs he has caught imperfectly. I have heard many negro songs in the fields and tobacco stemmeries, and I do not recall that on any of these occasions the negroes sang, unless by special request, the so-called Plantation Songs.

Negroes are extremely emotional. Their favourite songs are religious with weird minor strains. After the religious songs come those of some phase of their own lives, and of the animal life about them. Joel Chandler Harris has caught this more truly than any other writer. The talk of his negroes is often heard in their songs. Brer (brother) rabbit, brer owl, brer bear, &c., are sung about. The rabbit particularly, being very common in the south, is lauded as a very astute and cunning creature. This is a peculiar negro oddity, for the rabbit is anything but cunning.

It has been pointed out very clearly by Roy Cohen—whose crap-shooting negroes have figured in the pages of the Saturday Evening Post for the past year or two, and who have also had their day on the New York stage—that the negro's humour is wholly different from that of the white man. The negro will be greatly amused, and will laugh loudly in boisterous appreciation over a situation that, apart from his almost childish point of view, has nothing humorous about it. Even in his songs the humour lies usually in the odd twist of the words, and in his inimitable way of saying the most trivial things. It is impossible to reproduce this in type. The negro must be heard in the fields and in his country churches, when he thinks he has no white hearer. If you ask him for a song he is apt to 'show off,' and to imitate a manner instead of being natural. The best real negro songs are heard in the lonely woods of the south, or in the fields behind the plough, or as he rides to and from his work on the back of a mule.

Very often the words of these songs are unintelligible. The negro coins words to suit himself, and runs them together in a queer jargon. He is inordinately fond of big words. His misuse of them would fill Mrs. Malaprop with envy. 'Now, brethren,' I heard one very pompous negro preacher explain to his flock, 'dis is de way dat passage reads in de mataposick langwidge of de scriptur.' But he did not explain what he meant by 'mataposick.' That sounding word was his passport to learning.

In his humorous songs the negro frequently chuckles to himself, doubtless tickled by some personal experience that the words recall, or over the dilemma of 'dat nigger' in a like experience. I remember to have heard a tall Carolina negro singing—as he walked along by himself, setting his feet obliquely as though, in negro parlance, 'he had bones in his feet'—the following words to a sort of chant with many quavers and minors :

Aint hit a pity?
I doan know,
She didn't say nothin'.
But she slam de do'.

She sho done dat ;
Whar's a nigger to go ?
She didn't say nothin',
But she slam de do'.

Well, I got a catfecsh,
Ef I got to go,
I aint gwine hongry
Cause she slam de do'.
(Chuckle.)

This song is purely negro. It has been sung many times, and with many verbal changes to fit the occasion and the humour of the singer. It is a hit at the 'old 'oman,' who would get 'cantankerous.' Songs of this kind, with a sly dig in the ribs, are much relished by negroes.

Another similar song runs as follows—and let it be said in passing that most negroes cannot understand a man 'that won't take a drink' :

Gwine buy a ba'l o' whiskey,
An' throw way de cup,
An' I sho gwine pass
All de hypocrites up.
You shell be free,
You shell be free,
De good Lawd sets you free.

Some folks say dat
A preacher won't steal,
But I cotch one
In my corn-fiel'.
You shell be free,
You shell be free,
De good Lawd sets you free.

Ef I wuz a chicken
I'd roos' mighty high
When dat ole preacher
Comes a-shashain' by.
You shell be free,
You shell be free,
De good Lawd sets you free.

A song called Ole Molly Hyar, the rabbit, is heard everywhere in the country. In it are introduced the opossum, the coon, and the bear. The tune is lively, and sung with great gusto, especially when work is done :

Ole Molly Hyar,
What you doin' dar,
A-settin' in de cornder,
Smokin' a segyar ?

Ole brer coon
I gwine see you soon.
I gwine to make yo' 'quaitance
By de light o' de moon.

Yu may hang yo' haid,
An' play yo' is daid,
But ole Mister possom
Yo' game's done played.

On a still night I have heard negroes singing in their churches at the distance of half a mile. Their voices are wonderfully melodious, and as a rule very strong. They sing with the utmost abandon, the women especially giving a peculiar tremolo effect to the words. The hymns in the country churches are almost invariably lined out by the preacher and taken up by the congregation. Familiar hymns are used, but the negro has a way of changing them that is indescribable. There are many that may be called exclamatory refrains, like:

Jesus went down in de watch,
Yes, my Lawd!
I gwine to follow my Jesus,
Yes, my Lawd!

A great favourite at one time was Swing low, sweet Chariot:

Swing low, sweet Chariot,
Comin' fo' to car'y you home,
Swing low, sweet Chariot,
Comin' fo' to car'y yo' home.

Of course the American negro is changing rapidly. The old type is not often found, but a lot of stuff has been written about their servitude to-day in the south. A well-behaved negro is liked by the southern people in a way that none but a southern man can understand. It is only the 'uppity' type that is disliked. Crowds of white men yet gather to be entertained by negro songs and dances, as in the old days. A few extremists, whose opinion is worthless, speak of 'a negro having no soul.' Thousands of dollars are given by whites to negro causes of religion and education, but negro agitators do far more harm than good.

One of the tenderest of negro airs I heard sung when I was a boy by an old white-haired negro who was held in affectionate regard by the whole town. As I remember the song, it was sung very softly, and with unfailing pathos:

Way down in de pastah
Sheep bells is ringin',
Fiel-larks is a-singin'
So fyah:
Way down in de pastah
Shaddahs gittin' longah,
Hyeh de bells a-tingin'—
Dey comin' home.

Way down in de pastah
Sheep's a-walkin' fastah,
Sparrahs is a-singin'
So fyah:
Way down in de pastah
Gittin' kindah lonesome—
Bells is clingin', clingin';
Dey comin' home.

Way down in de pastah,
Shaddahs is a-fallin',
Fiel-larks is a-callin',
So fyah:
Stayars is a-shinin',
Yes, Lawd, I'se comin',
Angels is a-singin'—
I'se comin' home.

No self-respecting negro of the old type will ever be 'sassy' to a white 'gen'lman,' but he will by sly innuendo of saying and song express his opinions, his wishes, and his sarcasm. He will sing at his work about the place, and he expects to be heard. If taken to account for his song he will turn it off with a laugh. This trait is thoroughly understood by the whites, who, as the negro expresses it, are of 'we-all's fambly'—that is, of the old order. For 'de po' white-trash' the negro has nothing but scorn, and does not hesitate to say so openly. Here is one of these songs of sarcasm in part:

My ole missis she promus me
When she died she'd set-a-me free;
But now ole missis is daid an' gone,
An' here's po' nigger a-hoein' de cawn.

My ole missis was kindeh shy
Wid rale hog-meat and punkin' pie;
An' her buttermilk was tolerble thin
She give her nigger sop his cawn-pone in.

Noah, frequently pronounced Norah by the country negro, is a favourite Biblical character. The fact that he got drunk seems to add to his popularity among the negroes. They take what is known as the 'sinner's weak-kneed comfort' in the fact:

De Lawd say to Norah des build me a-nark,
An' Norah he made hit outer hickory bark,
An' he pitched hit tigh' 'ithout an' 'ithin,
An' den he 'vited all de animiles in.

De animiles come in two by two,
De elerphunt an' de kangaroo;
An' Norah he say to his boy Shem:
Dese is all dey is an' dat is all dem.

Den ole Miss Norah she git mighty high
A settin' up dar so high an' dry;
Dat's de way o' a 'oman, dey is jes like dat,
Dey all gits uppity when dey's livin' on de fat.

But de Lawd he sont her a tho'n in de flesh;
'Cause she got biggoty an' kindeh fresh,— Norah got drunk on de blackbe'y wine,
An' den de had trouble all along de line.

But de Lawd he 'gived 'em, and bimeby
De got to a place whar hit wuz dry,
An' Norah got out, an' he tuck off he hat
And he called his altah Mount Narryrat.

The negro's prime favourite, however, is the chicken song, that has as many different versions as there are different breeds of chickens. One that is frequently sung runs like this:

Chicken, chicken, you may go up in a berloon,
Chicken, chicken, you may roos' behin' de moon,
But, chicken, chicken, wherever yo' may be,
Oh, chicken, chicken, yo' kyant roos' too high fo' me.

These songs may be heard to-day all over the southern part of the United States. When they pass (may the day be distant!), and a new 'uppity' negro supplants the old, I am firmly convinced that he will be less happy, less prosperous, and far less educated in the good manners of the heart.

Music in the Provinces

ABERDEEN.—Glasgow Orpheus Choir, visiting Aberdeen on April 15, sang Morley's April is in my mistress' face, Max Bruch's Morning Song of Praise, Balfour Gardiner's Cargoes, Elgar's Feasting, I watch, Coleridge-Taylor's Dead in the Sierras, and Holst's Swansea Town, and, among other arrangements of Scottish songs, Bantock's O can ye sew cushions.

BANGOR.—A mixed choir of fifty voices, organized by Miss Olwen Rowlands, on May 10 sang Bach's The Lord is my Shepherd, the words translated into Welsh by the Rev. Gwilym Richards.

BARNSTAPLE.—The Musical Festival Society conducted by Dr. H. J. Edwards and Mr. Sydney Harper, on April 25 performed Walpuris Night and Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast. Dr. Edwards and the orchestra were heard in Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G minor.

BARRY.—On May 10 Parry's De Profundis was performed by a choir of a hundred and fifty voices with orchestra, conducted by Mr. J. M. Morris.

BARRY DOCK.—At Holton Road Baptist Church on May 10, Mr. J. M. Morris conducted Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, with Mr. Garforth Mortimer as soloist, and Parry's Song of darkness and of light, with Madame Laura Evans-Williams as soprano. Choir and orchestra numbered a hundred and fifty performers.

BIGGLESWADE (Bedfordshire).—Conducted by Mr. J. A. Lewis, the Choral Society on March 21 sang The Battle of the Baltic and The May Queen.

BIRMINGHAM.—Concert-giving has been overshadowed during the month by the Midland Festival (dealt with elsewhere).—Miss Winifred Browne on April 28 gave some interesting pianoforte music. A Chopin group was followed by Brahms's Rhapsody in G minor, and this by a Scarlatti Sonata. She played also a Caprice (No. 2) by York Bowen, Goossens's Hurdy-gurdy Man and Musical-Box, and two manuscript pieces by Doris Brookes—Interlude and Bridal Procession of the Elves. Songs were given by Miss Mary Ogden.

BRISTOL.—Dr. Hubert Hunt addressed the Rotary Club on April 24, on 'How to listen to Music,' and advocated the establishment of public gramophone halls, where music of many kinds might be heard.—The Great Western Railway Choral Society on April 26, conducted by Mr. Clare G. A. Beavis, sang O, who will o'er the downs (Pearsall), Now is the month of maying (Morley), Awake, sweet love (Dowland), and Music, all powerful (Walmisley). An orchestra played a Dream dance by Coleridge-Taylor.—On May 9 Mr. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte) and Miss Madge Thomas (vocalist), gave a recital, the latter singing Purcell's Dido's Lament and Stanford's I'll rock you to rest.—The last concert of the Children's Concerts Society on May 13 consisted of a lecture-recital by Miss Desirée MacEwan, dealing with Rameau, Scarlatti, Paradies, and Ravel.

CAMBORNE.—West Cornwall Musical Society, numbering two hundred members, at its annual meeting reported a balance in hand after giving six concerts during the season. After the business, music was played and sung, including a Hebrew Melody, by Bantock for violoncello, and Liza Lehmann's In a Persian Garden.

CARDIFF.—Mr. Garforth Mortimer's orchestra played on Easter Sunday Fould's Suite Française, Volpatti's Rapsodie Slave, and a Minuet by Cowen. Miss Flora Woodman sang.—The Carl Rosa Opera Company opened a fortnight's season on April 24. Mr. Harold Howell, one of the conductors, is a native of Cardiff and son of a well-known resident.—The Welsh Operatic Society gave a stage performance of Elijah on April 28.

CHATHAM.—Part-songs were given by Mr. Leslie Mackay's Choir on April 26, and by the Campus Musical Society on April 28. The latter Society, of which Mrs. Elsie Seaman is the director, also provided chamber music and duets for two pianofortes.

EASINGWOLD (Yorks).—Supported by orchestra, the Musical Society of seventy voices sang The Death of Minnehaha on April 18, conducted by Mr. John Groves. The bass vocalist was Mr. Albert Murgatroyd, of Leeds Parish Church.

EASTBOURNE.—On April 27 after the V.M.C.A. Red Triangle Choir had performed with orchestra the first and second parts of the Hiawatha trilogy, a presentation was made to the conductor, Dr. Hall.

EDINBURGH.—The William Morris Choir, of Glasgow, conducted by Mr. William Robertson, sang on May-Day Balfour Gardiner's Cargoes for male voices, several Elizabethan Madrigals, and an adaptation by William Morris of a Cavalier song.—Mr. Joseph Hislop, on April 29, sang Stanford's Windy Nights and groups of Norwegian and Scottish songs. Mr. Ramsay Geikie (pianoforte) played a Berceuse by Godowski and Brahms's Scherzo, Op. 5.

ETON.—The performance of The Dream of Gerontius given by the Windsor and Eton Choral Society at the School Hall recently, was remarkable in the case of a choir undertaking the work for the first time. It was technically good and expressive to a high degree. At the conclusion, a presentation was made to the Rev. Bernard Everett, trainer and conductor of the choir and orchestra. Blest Pair of Sirens was in the same programme.

EXETER.—The Chamber Music Club, of which Dr. Ernest Bullock is director of the music, on April 26 met to hear and perform vocal quartets and instrumental items that included Dr. H. J. Edwards's Romanza and Elgar's Sonata for violin and pianoforte.—On May 3 the Club arranged a visit of the Spencer Dyke String Quartet, who played the Debussy Quartet, McEwen's Biscay, Frank Bridge's Three Nocturnettes, Goossens's By the Tarn and Jack o' Lantern, a Lament by Ernest Tomlinson (the viola player of the party), and Grainger's Molly on the Shore. Songs were given by Miss Dilys Jones.—St. David's Orchestra, strings and wood-wind, conducted by Mr. Howard Trencor, made its first public appearance on May 2. Creditable performances were given of the Rosamunde Ballet music, an Intermezzo by Eric Coates, Grainger's Molly on the Shore, a March of the Mannikins by Percy Fletcher, and Coleridge-Taylor's Demande et Réponse.

GILLINGHAM.—The chief items in the last concert of the String Quartet, on May 4, were Dvorák's Pianoforte Quintet (with Mr. William Petchey) and a Beethoven String Quartet.

GLASGOW.—A choral society has been formed by the workers of the Wallace-Scott Tailoring Institute, and Mr. Francis Sheard has been appointed musical director. The junior and senior choirs, numbering ninety voices, combined with the orchestral class on April 20 to perform Bridge's The Incheape Rock, and oratorio choruses.—Dr. Vaughan Williams, on April 22, addressed members of the Scottish branch of the Church Music Society on 'Hymn Tunes and their Place in the Church Service,' in the course of which he referred to 'the magnificent Scottish psalm tunes.' Motets were sung by the Glasgow Bach Choir, conducted by Mr. A. M. Henderson.—On April 24 the Bach Choir sang Blessing, Glory, Wisdom, and Thanks, in the Cathedral, and also an interesting historical series from Tallis to Rachmaninov.—The Corporation's indoor concerts during the winter have suffered a financial loss amounting to £500. The Saturday concerts have been of higher standard than formerly, but the attendances fell short by over eighteen thousand of those of last year. The greatest deficit was on the orchestral concerts.—The British Music Society listened, on April 29, to a lecture by Miss Agnes Miller on 'The Pianoforte Concerto,' and in illustration were played Bach's Italian Concerto, Liszt's E flat Concerto, and the Emperor.

HANLEY.—North Staffordshire District Choral Society, on March 30, conducted by Mr. John James, performed with orchestra Bach's B minor Mass. This great effort was made in celebration of the twenty-first season of the Society. The players were mainly selected from the Birmingham City Orchestra, and Mr. George Baskeyfield was at the organ. The solo vocalists were Miss Carrie Tubbs, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Arthur Jordan, and Mr. Norman Allin.

HARROGATE.—On May 4 the Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Howard Carr, played Delius's On listening to the first cuckoo in spring and Ravel's Parvane pour une infante défunte.

HERTFORD.—The East Herts Musical Society, conducted by Mr. W. J. Comley, gave the concert selection from Faust on May 4. The programme also included the Ballet music from the same opera, and Stanford's The Last Post.

KIDDERMINSTER.—On March 30 the Choral Society, conducted by Mr. J. Irving Glover, performed The Dream of Gerontius with Mr. Arthur Jordan, Miss Mary Foster, and Mr. Arthur Crammer as principal vocalists. Mr. Chatfield was at the organ, and an orchestra took part in the performance.

LEYTONSTONE.—The music offered by Hainault Glee and Madrigal Choir at St. Andrew's Hall on May 13 included Morley's Nolo mortem peccatoris, Byrd's My sweet little baby, Beale's This pleasant month of May, Morley's The nymphs in green, Weelkes's As Vesta was, and glees and part-songs of a later age. This excellent programme was conducted by Mr. John Cook.

LINDFIELD.—Under the conductorship of Dr. H. T. Pringuer, the Musical Society gave a creditable performance of Sterndale Bennett's May Queen on May 3. The miscellaneous after-part included the Epilogue from the Golden Legend and Mendelssohn's Departure.

LIVERPOOL.—An exhibition of instruments and a festival of music of the 16th, 17th, and 18th centuries was opened on May 8, under the direction of Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch. The exhibits included some of Mr. Dolmetsch's own productions, including a beautiful clavichord, and examples of other English, German, and Italian models. Music for lute, recorder, cithren, and three viols was played, also a Fantasy for five viols by John Cooper, an early 17th century work, and a Trio for harpsichord, violin, and viola da gamba by Rameau. On the following day were played a French Suite for treble and bass viols and harpsichord by de Caix d'Hervelois (18th century), two Scarlatti Sonatas, and the Bach Sonata in D for harpsichord and viola da gamba.

LIANDUDNO.—The Season Extension Choral Society performed Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast on March 30, conducted by Dr. Caradog Roberts. A Motet by Bach will be included in next season's programme.

MAIDSTONE.—The twelfth annual concert of the Maidstone Orchestral Society took place on May 10, under the direction of Mr. Frederick Cole. The programme included the New World Symphony, Beethoven's Prometheus Overture, Percy Grainger's Mock Morris, and the second Peer Gynt Suite. Mr. Norman Williams sang, and Mr. Albert Fransella played a Suite for flute and orchestra by Godard.

NEWCASTLE.—The Glee and Madrigal Society, conducted by Mr. R. W. Clark, on May 4 sang music relating to spring—by Spofforth, Beale, and Muller—pieces from Mendelssohn's Ædipus and Antigone, and Parry's Jerusalem.

NORWICH.—The Philharmonic Society, conducted by Dr. Frank Bates, has concluded an excellent season. The following works have been performed entirely with local resources, choral and orchestral: Bach's Mass in B minor, King Olaf, Balfour Gardiner's News from Whydah, Stanford's Songs of the Fleet, Symphonies by César Franck, Dvorák (the New World), and Mozart (the Jupiter); Concertos by Rachmaninov, for pianoforte, in C (Miss Irene Scharrer), Elgar, for violoncello (Miss Beatrice Harrison), and Mendelssohn, for violin (Miss Margaret Fairless); the Magic Flute Overture; Sibelius's Karelia; Sonatas for violin and pianoforte by Elgar and John Ireland, played by Messrs. Sammons and Murdoch; and music for violin and organ, played by M. André Mangeot and Mr. Sidney H. Nicholson. The preliminary lectures given by Dr. Bates are a popular and useful feature.

PETERBOROUGH.—A performance of The Apostles in the Cathedral on May 11 proved a notable event. The Peterborough Choral Union and the Peterborough Orchestral Society combined for the occasion. Mr. H. Coleman was at the organ, and Mr. A. E. Armstrong conducted. It is estimated that between two and three thousand people attended.

PORTSMOUTH.—Brahms's Symphony No. 2 and a Miniature Suite for strings, composed and conducted by Lieut. B. Walton O'Donnell, were played by the band of the Royal Marine Light Infantry on April 14.—At a concert on May 5 the Quartet Players were heard in Quartets by Brahms and Rheinberger, and Hurlstone's Violoncello Sonata.

ST. ALBANS.—The Mayson Opera Singers visited the County Hall Theatre on May 17, and gave condensed versions of Faust, Martha, and Il Trovatore. This Company—a group of picked operatic artists who have already won success on the stage—gives 'potted' opera, produced by Mr. Sumner Austin.

ST. ANDREWS.—On March 23, the Musical Association, conducted by Mr. Alexander Hendry, sang McCunn's Lord Ullin's daughter, The Revenge, and trios for female voices by Walford Davies and Coleridge-Taylor. An orchestra assisted.

SOUTHAMPTON.—For the last concert of the season, on May 3, the Philharmonic Society gave a spirited performance of Caractacus under Mr. George Leake. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Silk, Mr. John Collett, Mr. Herbert Heyner, and Mr. Harold Lankester. In memory of the late conductor, Mr. E. H. Moberley, the programme opened with Spohr's Blest are the Departed.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON.—The boys of All Saints' Choir, Margaret Street, London, commemorated Shakespeare's birthday by visiting his burial place, Holy Trinity Church, and singing a De Profundis composed for them by Sir George Henschel, and a setting of the dirge from Cymbeline, especially written for the occasion by W. S. Vale, their choirmaster. The De Profundis is written for trebles and altos unaccompanied. Mr. Vale's Fear no more the heat of the sun is in the manner of a part-song. Three stanzas are set similarly, and the fourth is built upon a kind of melodic expansion of a phrase employed for each of the closing lines of the earlier stanzas.

WINKLEIGH (Devon).—The Rev. E. Boyton Smith, who has formed a string orchestra in the village, on April 25 conducted his players in Cyril Scott's Passacaglia, a Gavotte by Aletter, and an Indian Idyll of his own composition.

WOKING.—The Mackenzie Festival held by the Woking Musical Society on April 29 was a great success. The programme had been devised and prepared by Mr. Patrick White as president and Mr. H. Scott Baker as organizing secretary and choral trainer, and Sir Alexander himself came to conduct. Under his baton the orchestra (augmented from the Philharmonic) played the Crickel on the Heath Overture, part of the London Day by Day Suite, the Scottish Pianoforte Concerto—with Miss Isabel Gray as a brilliant soloist—and the choir gave selections from The Rose of Sharon and The Dream of Jubal. Some part-songs were sung under the direction of Mr. Scott Baker. The solo singers were Miss Olive Groves, Miss Violet Southam, Mr. Manuel Jones, and Mr. H. M. Warde.

WORCESTER.—At the last concert of the Symphony Orchestra on April 23 was played By the sea, by the conductor, Mr. George Austin. The programme further included Finlandia and Elgar's Sursum corda.

WREXHAM.—On April 25 the Philharmonic Society performed The Dream of Gerontius, in which Miss Dillys Jones sang the part of the Angel, and Mr. John Coates that of Gerontius. The conductor was Mr. T. Hopkin Evans.

Obituary

We regret to announce the following deaths:

EDWARD HUGH MORERLEY, at Southampton, at the age of seventy-two. He was the fifth son of Bishop George Moberley, of Salisbury, under whom he was educated at Winchester. He entered the Church in 1872. Fourteen years afterwards (in 1886) ill-health compelled him to resign the living he then held at Chute Vicarage. From that time he devoted himself to the fostering of music in the South of England. He founded the Andover Musical Society, the Test Valley Musical Society, the Avon Vale Musical Society, and a Ladies' Orchestra which earned great renown. As conductor of the Southampton Philharmonic Society for twenty years he raised the standard of performance to a high level. He was a musician who combined lofty ideals with great practical gifts.

JAMES FREDERICK SLATER, Mus. Bac. Dunelm., a popular and well-known Oldham musician, at the age of sixty-six. In the course of his career he was organist, teacher, chorus-trainer, and music-master to a boys' school. He was much in demand as an adjudicator at brass band contests.

THE GLOUCESTER FESTIVAL

We have received the programme of the two hundred and second Festival of the Three Choirs, to be held at Gloucester on September 3, 5, 6, 7, and 8. British composers are unusually well represented, about twenty being drawn on. As is usual and fitting at these Festivals, Elgar is prominent. The Apostles and The Kingdom are down for September 5 and 6; For the Fallen and the Bach Fugue transcription will be heard on September 7. New works are Dunhill's Elegiac Variations for orchestra (in memory of Hubert Parry), Bantock's Prelude and First Day from The Song of Songs, Arthur Bliss's Symphony, and a choral work by Eugène Goossens—the last three being written for the Festival. Other native works in the programme are Parry's Symphonic Variations, two orchestral pieces by German, W. H. Reed's The Lincoln Imp, Holst's Two Psalms, and Brewer's The Holy Innocents. The familiar side will be provided by Elijah, The Messiah, Verdi's Requiem, and Brahms's Symphony in D.

The organ, rebuilt at a cost of about £5,000, plays a prominent part. It joins the orchestra in Herbert Howells's Phantasy, Sine Nomine, written for the occasion, and organ solos to be played during the week are Wesley's Choral Song and Fugue, Lloyd's Elegy, West's Song of Triumph, Stanford's Fantasia (Op. 181), Reed's Toccata in D (new), Harwood's Capriccio, and Brewer's Pean of Praise (new). The orchestra is the London Symphony, there is a strong force of soloists, and the conductor-in-chief is, of course, Dr. Herbert Brewer. The whole scheme shows that this two-hundred-years-old music-making is still very much alive.

MUSIC IN IRELAND

A new Irish Opera Company has been formed by Mr. H. B. Phillips, of Belfast and Derry, formerly one of the directors of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, and will inaugurate its season with the first production of an operatic version of Boucicault's Arrah-na-pogue, entitled Shawn the Post, the libretto being by R. J. Hughes and the music by Harold R. White, the popular Dublin composer and musical critic.

On March 21, at the Town Hall, Dun Laoghaire (Kingstown), the Dalkey Choral Society (now in its third year), under the conductorship of Mr. Hubert Rooney, produced Cowen's Rose Maiden, with a chorus and orchestra of eighty performers. Miss Violet Blackadder was an efficient accompanist. There was a large and appreciative audience.

Although the annual grant of £300 given by the British Government since 1872 to the Royal Irish Academy of Music automatically ceased at the signing of the Treaty, it is gratifying to chronicle that the Provisional Government of Ireland has intimated that a like grant would be continued to that old-established institution, now in its seventy-fourth year of usefulness.

So far as can be learned from the new programme for Music Instruction in National Schools in Ireland, Tonic Sol-fa is practically tabooed, and the Staff is given pride of place. Naturally Irish traditional music will be fostered under the new régime.

Quite a delightful Bach organ recital was given recently in the Chapel Royal, Dublin, by Mr. W. E. Hopkins, Director of the State Musick. The proceeds went to help the fund to alleviate the distress in Connemara and the west of Ireland.

The last concert of the season by the Belfast Philharmonic Society took place in Wellington Hall, and consisted of Bizet's Carmen. Chorus and orchestra, under the baton of Mr. Godfrey Brown, deserved the highest praise. Mr. J. H. MacBratney accompanied.

At a meeting of the Ulster Society of Organists and Choirmasters, in the Assembly Buildings, Belfast, an interesting paper on 'Some Deficiencies in the Organist's Equipment' was read by Dr. E. M. Chaundy. At the election for the coming year Dr. Lawrence Walker was re-elected president, with Mr. C. J. Brennan and Dr. Chaundy as vice-presidents, and Mr. George Smith as hon. secretary. At the Rotary Club in the northern capital, on April 7, Mr. Plunket Greene delivered a delightful lecture on the Art of Singing, giving unstinted praise to Sir Charles V. Stanford for his efforts in the adequate mating of music and intelligible words. Singing was, he said, but a glorified form of speech.

Much interest was centred in the Press Fund Concert given at the Mansion House, Dublin, on April 1, when a fine miscellaneous programme was gone through before a packed house. Mr. Hubert Rooney's Choir lent valuable assistance. The same singers presented a satisfactory performance of Sullivan's Prodigal Son at the Abbey Theatre, on April 5. An efficient orchestra was led by Mr. Nabarro.

Miss Culwick's Choral Society attracted a critical and appreciative audience to the Abbey Theatre, Dublin, on April 3. A carefully-selected programme was presented, the items including Bryson's Drum Taps and John Ireland's Cradle Song. Miss Sidford Fannin was an admirable accompanist.

Master Gerald Shanahan, a prodigy pianist, aged twelve, gave an interesting recital at Aberdeen Hall, Dublin, on April 5.

The continued success of the Dublin dramatic soprano, Miss Peggy Sheridan, at La Scala Theatre, Milan, especially her triumph in La Wally, has resulted in her engagement at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, for next season.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

We seemed to have turned back to the days of the early forties of last century, when the scheme of the subscription concert of March 16 announced part of a Concerto for bassoon. The music was the Andante of Mozart's Concerto, and the player M. Elders, our first bassoon, who proved himself a performer of very high attainments. Of the two novelties that were heard—Florent Schmitt's Rêves and Ravel's Valses Nobles et Sentimentales—neither could be called a success, least so the first-named, the discordant character of which seemed deeply to depress the mind of the audience.

In the concert of March 19, M. Francis Koene, the talented leader of the Utrecht Symphony Orchestra, was heard to great advantage in Suk's Fantasia, Op. 24. To celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of Brahms's death, the still remaining four concerts of this season were devoted to his music. With the exception of the two orchestral Serenades and the D minor Piano-forte Concerto, we heard all the orchestral works, besides the Schicksalslied, in which our Toonkunstkoor lent valuable assistance, and the Alto Rhapsodie, in which Madame Emmi Leisner's singing of the contralto solo was absolutely beyond praise. The vocal background was sustained by the Apollo male choral society. If I say that never can I hope to hear finer choral singing than was given by this body, any further criticism is rendered superfluous. Indeed, the entire concert will linger in memory for a long time to come. It opened with a magnificent performance of the third Symphony, and concluded with the Violin Concerto, in which M. Zimmermann was again heard to the best of his ability. Besides the soloists, Dr. Muck and the orchestra were greatly applauded. At the first concert the soloists were Messrs. Zimmermann and Loevenrohn, who joined forces in Brahms's double Concerto; at the second, Mr. Frederic Lamond made a splendid appearance in the B flat Concerto. The last concert, being also the last of the series of subscription concerts, furnished the public an opportunity for giving Dr. Muck an unmistakable proof of its appreciation. He obviously has won the hearts of the audience to such an extent that the announcement of his coming back to Amsterdam next year has caused great satisfaction.

At the last of the Concertgebouw chamber music concerts, Madame Charles Cahier performed exclusively works by Brahms—the Vier Ernste Gesänge, the two lieder with viola obbligato, and a very exhaustive choice of Brahms's best secular songs. Herr Julius Röntgen, who acted as accompanist, played together with his son the Violin Sonata in D minor by Brahms.

Owing to an internal feud, part of the R.C. Oratorio Society has separated from the mother institution and formed a new choral organization that inaugurated its foundation by a performance of Heinrich Schütz's Passion of St. Matthew. To cope with the intricacies of a style so obsolete as that required for this particular work would, however, demand a more intimate knowledge of musical history than M. Theo. v. d. Byl possesses. To his credit be it stated that he refrained from giving the work with Arnold Mendelssohn's additional accompaniments. On the other hand, the performance was found lacking in too many other respects to be called satisfactory. Mention has to be made of Messrs. Anton Sistermans and Joseph Holthaus, who very capably sustained the parts of Christ and the Evangelist.

A fine treat was provided on March 22 by the Royal Choral Society, when Pierné's Croisade des Enfants was heard with the composer himself conducting. The Madrigal Society gave its first concert on March 27, its finished singing of works old and new arousing great enthusiasm. A new composition of Willem Pypers, Heer Halewyn, proved to be a rather unsavoury dish. As regards chamber music concerts, the palm has been carried off by the Poulet Quartet, of Paris, whose standard of execution in the performance of Debussy's String Quartet can only be imagined by actually hearing. The concert of the Dutch String Quartet owed its main interest to Cyril Scott's Pianoforte Quintet. With Mr. Howard-Jones at the pianoforte, a very fine reading of this extremely difficult work was secured. Mr. Howard-Jones's solo recital has further enhanced the reputation which this artist enjoys here. He moreover is one of the few who realises his duty towards the art of his country. Consequently he never appears here without introducing new works of British composers. This time works by Arnold Bax and Eugène Goossens were chosen. Taken as a whole, his recital was one of the finest we have had this winter. Madame Berthe Seroen and M. Evert Cornelis came again with some very interesting items. Fine songs by Debussy and Moussorgsky were heard at their concert on March 28. The Quatre Poèmes Juifs by Darius Milhaud could not, however, induce us to change our attitude towards this reckless extremist. Besides Debussy's Children's Corner, M. Cornelis gave a fine reading of Moussorgsky's Pictures from an Exhibition.

M. Hubert Cuypers, who as chorus-master ranks among the very first of his profession, has been very active of late. Under his able tuition our youngest choral society, Schola Cantorum, has in an almost incredibly short time made splendid progress. This was evident in a Church concert on April 14, when we were regaled with a fine selection of a cappella works of such masters as Lotti, Ingegneri, and some compositions of more modern date. With the magnificent Toonkunst-koor and the orchestra of the Concertgebouw, M. Cuypers, on April 29, gave an exceedingly fine performance of Bossi's secular oratorio, Jeanne d'Arc. The treat was enhanced by a select body of soloists, comprising Mesdames Mia Peltenburg, Jeanne Brandsma, Suze Luger, and Messrs. Urlus and Thom. Denys.

At the second concert given by the Madrigal Society we heard a composition by C. Caplet, Messe dit des Petits de St. Eustache, a highly interesting work, originally written for boys' voices, and containing splendid music conceived in a style which is absolutely modern and yet does not violate the ears of the listener.

Since May 1 we have again had Italian Opera. Cavaliere de Hondt has this time shown an exceedingly fortunate hand in selecting his artists. Indeed I venture to say that the operatic world is likely to hear more anon of such excellent singers as the lyric tenor, Signor Gilletta, Signorina Torri, and the two baritones, Signori Ghirardini and Conati, not to forget Signorina Cassani, whose magnificent singing succeeded in making even Donizetti's Lucia palatable to our ears. Talking about opera, it pains me to have to record the final debacle of our National Opera. There seems to be still a faint possibility of restoring it to life on a more limited scale next season. The more initiated are, however, far from sanguine on that subject.

On May 7 we were visited by the Vatican Choir, en route for England. W. HARMANS.

GERMANY

MAX REGER

This is a time of progress and development. While some of the younger composers are zealously busy to cultivate the field of music with more or less success, Max Reger has since his death become a pillar in the land. He is looked upon not as a revolutionist, but as a link in the line Bach, Beethoven, Brahms. Since Lindner published his life of Reger (Stuttgart, I. Engelhorn's Nachf.) the world knows how he adored and loved these giants, and that 'an intense study of their compositions has made him what he is.' Powerful factors are at work to bring Reger home to the masses. At Leipzig a Reger Gesellschaft has been formed, with Richard Strauss at the head, for the purpose of organizing regular Reger Festivals and publishing scientific and artistic works to explain his art and manner. Realising a wish of the deceased, funds are to be collected to assist young composers in the publication of their works.

As the result of a most successful Reger Festival, lasting three days, another Max Reger Gesellschaft has been formed at Vienna, with Reichwein, Schütz, Kistersitz, Foll, and Dr. Viktor Junk as founders, and aims similar to that of Leipzig.

One does not expect to fill a hall with an audience listening to a Reger programme, and it was a daring undertaking on the part of Wilh. Jinkertz and Emanuel Gatscher, of Berlin, to advertise a concert devoted exclusively to Reger compositions for two pianofortes—the Variations and Fugue, Op. 132A, on a theme by Mozart, Introduction, Passacaglia, and Fugue, Op. 96, and Variations and Fugue, Op. 86, on a theme by Beethoven. With Reger's thorough mastery of the organ style the solo character of the pianoforte disappears to a certain degree, and the aural effect of the performance does not exceed that of two performers on one instrument.

On the other hand, in the domain of organ music Reger is the unparalleled master of our time. When the Cologne Gesellschaft für neue Musik enlisted the services of Hans Bachem, one of the most qualified interpreters of Reger's organ music, it was thought advantageous to repeat either at the same or at some future concert the more abstruse works. It is characteristic of the audience which in this respect begged at the last of the six concerts a repetition of the Fantasia and Fugue in D minor, Op. 135B, instead of the monumental Fantasia and Fugue, Op. 46, which had opened the cycle of concerts. With such programmes it was possible to form a judgment of the style of the earlier works, with their unbridled strength, in contrast to the clear ripeness of the later compositions. Between the great Fugues, Fantasias, and Passacaglias, Bachem interpolated miniature specimens of Reger's art, such as pieces from Op. 59, which depict in an especial manner the deep religious trait of the composer's life work. While they showed the organist's taste in the choice of tone-colour, the monumental works proclaimed him a master of form and matter.

Prof. Carl Straube, of Leipzig, the intimate friend of Max Reger and master interpreter, is engaged on a book, Reger und die Orgel, which is anxiously looked forward to by German organists. It forms the sixth book of a series of monographs published by Otto Halbreiter (Munich), dealing with Reger's Harmonik, by Grabner; Reger's Persönlichkeit, by Wülz, Kaas, and Unger; Reger's Chorwerke, by Holle, &c., the authors being pupils or personal friends of the deceased master.

Mention must also be made of an excellent book on Max Reger by Karl Hasse (Leipzig, L. F. W. Siegel), Professor of Music at the University of Tübingen and a pupil of Reger. It is an answer to those who declare Reger's art a product of decadence. Hasse is not only intimately acquainted with all his master's works and methods; he is also a psychologist, although in this respect he gazes somewhat too intently through the spectacles of a pupil. All the aforementioned booklets are but accessories to Lindner's path-breaking book already referred to. It is an introduction into the mind of Max Reger, inexhaustible in historic material, and at the same time a monument of a friendship based on mutual understanding. Included in it are analyses of Reger's great works, together with a series of photographs hitherto unknown. Lindner discovered the boy's great gifts, taught him pianoforte playing and theory, and was ever looked upon by the pupil as an authority.

A NEW OPERA

The Birds of Aristophanes, a political satire, appears at first sight a subject of little attraction to a composer. Indeed, when Walther Braunfels chose this old Greek comedy he had to adopt considerable alterations. Thus the nightingale, the symbol of eternal longing, becomes a central figure whose melodies form a red thread throughout the story. At the same time, with the omission of the satirical element the dramatic interest has suffered considerably. Braunfels's music is beautiful beyond description—it does not excite, it does not cause the blood to freeze, it is no theatre music. It is natural, economical as regards resources, and flows on like a beautiful river. Braunfels composes regardless of intuition, of spontaneous inspiration, and the listener hardly ever receives the impression of an especially happy thought.

NEW MUSICAL ORGANIZATIONS

A year has gone by since Oswald Kühn, of Stuttgart, organized the Württembergische Konzertbund for the purpose of preventing the danger of collapse that menaced the life of music. The Bund grasps all available forces to give to musical life a solid foundation, being a reform on a grand scale, realising modern ideas with respect to public performances, disregarding the star system and the profit-devouring musical agent, and thus serving both artist and public. As the Bund can only attain its great aims if all music-loving circles and individuals become members, its work is spread all over the country. With the aid of the Tonkünstlerverein, Musikpädagogischer Verband, Landestheaterorchester, the Bach-Verein, all choral societies, and numerous artists, seven groups of concerts—each comprising six programmes—have been in progress during the last winter. Each group supplied a symphony concert, a chamber concert, a choral concert, and three concerts for soloists, and the final group was devoted to sacred concerts only. The prices of admission are low, being six, four, and three marks. The success of the undertaking was so great that a rejuvenation of the national musical life is expected. Henceforward series of high-class concerts are provided, uniformly and systematically artistic, which will do away with the haphazard system hitherto followed. Young and unknown composers, unable to pay fees to hear their own works performed, may now obtain a hearing, and even payment; and the public has opportunities to listen to the greatest of players so long as their charges are not exorbitant.

Another organization to be welcomed is Der Berufsverband der Musikwissenschaftler, that purports to guard the interests of musical scientists. This new union was formed at Frankfurt a/M., at the instigation and under the auspices of the professors of music of the Universities of Leipzig, Frankfurt, Freiburg, Cologne, Heidelberg, and other scientists not connected with universities. It was decided to organize local branches in all towns, if possible, in connection with musico-historic institutions, all to be subject to a central committee, and the first meeting of delegates is to take place in the summer at Leipzig.

A VICTIM OF THE WAR

From time to time the world is reminded of the great loss the musical world suffered when in 1915 Rudi Stephan died on the battle-field of Galicia. Schulz-Dornburg, of Bochum, the champion of modern music, organized in memory of the young master a three days' Festival, producing songs (Frl. Laner-Kottlar and Richard Breitenfeld, of Frankfurt a/M.), excerpts from the opera Die ersten Menschen and the Musik für Orchester, and Dr. Karl Holl, the friend and propagandist of the dead composer, showed at a matinée how Stephan followed Hugo Wolf, and coined spiritually a new musical language. The operatic excerpts were very successful, the music being so characteristic that the eye did not miss the scenic representation. The orchestra, under the spirited guidance of Schulz-Dornburg, performed brilliantly, causing great enthusiasm among the large audiences. Sixteen posthumous songs have just been published by Schott Söhne (Mayence), each a world in itself—songs that are best described by referring to the style of Hugo Wolf.

NEW MEN AND THEIR COMPOSITIONS

All is well for modern music if only it be taken in hand by enthusiasts. Bruno Stürmer, a professor at the Conservatorium at Karlsruhe and a well-known composer, has been giving chamber concerts at Heidelberg and Mannheim, devoted to the works of Busoni, Béla Bartók, Hindemith, Scriabin, Reger, Ravel, Debussy, Scott, Moritz, Stürmer, Alban Berg, Windsperger, Schulhoff, Schönberg, von Weber, and Moussorgsky. As Stürmer admitted only music of a vivid character, without regard for school or tendency, his concerts proved a great success.

The works of Hugo Kaun are slowly but surely finding their way to the front. His chamber music having been interpreted by the Rostock Kammermusikvereinigung, the Rostock Town Theatre held a two days' Hugo Kaun Festival, the composer being present. The programme included the third Symphony in E minor, a Pianoforte Concerto, the Overture Am Rhein, and concluded with the first performance of the fantastic opera Der Fremde.

NEW MUSICAL LIFE AT NÜRNBERG

Nürnberg has received a new attraction for the lovers of music. St. Katherine's Church, built about 1300, from 1620 until 1770 Schul and Singeraum of the Meistersinger, afterwards successively anatomical museum, school of art, military hospital, granary, store-room, exhibition building, and during the war storing place for all sorts of things, has now, by an expenditure of a million marks, been changed into a concert-hall with accommodation for twelve hundred listeners and a platform for a hundred and fifty performers. The new hall is acoustically an ideal place, especially for chamber music. It was inaugurated with a performance of Wagner's Prelude to Die Meistersinger under Michael Balling, and it is hoped that this means a period of increased musical life at Nürnberg.

F. ERCKMANN.

NEW YORK

New York is so congested with orchestral concerts—those of the chamber music societies and the innumerable pianoforte, violin, and vocal recitals—during the winter months that choral performances of importance are more apt to be given in the spring. Foremost of those deserving mention this year was the visit of the Mendelssohn Choir of Toronto, previous visits to New York having been made in 1907 and 1911, under the leadership of Dr. A. S. Vogt, who founded the choir. His successor, Mr. Herbert Fricker, proved that he had maintained the reputation the choir had gained under its founder—that of an unsurpassed and probably unrivalled choral organization in existence anywhere. On this visit the choir gave two concerts, the first, entirely a cappella, the programme including the names of Palestrina, Rachmaninov, Schindler, Elgar, and Sibelius. At the second concert—with the aid of the New York Philharmonic—the singers were heard in another group of short choruses and Vaughan Williams's Sea Symphony. Mr. Fricker trained the English choir that first gave the Symphony at Leeds in 1907. The composition itself, despite orchestral background and admirably chosen soloists, did not prove to be very interesting, though presenting occasional brilliant moments; but the work of the singers, their superb body of tone, their perfect precision, and their wonderful variety of tone-quality was absolutely flawless. More interesting and equally well done were the short choruses that formed the whole programme at the a cappella concert and completed the symphonic one. Special mention should be made of Kurt Schindler's arrangements of a Siberian Prison Song—strong in its dramatic power—and of a dainty Spanish choral ballad called The Silversmith, which had to be repeated.

Mr. Schindler's Schola Cantorum ranks high among our own choral organizations, but claims rank more for its leader's taste and aims in his programmes than for the excellence of its performances. Probably the indifferent character of these is largely due to insufficient rehearsing, for the body of tone is good and Mr. Schindler's ability is unquestioned. It is very hard to get the members of a choir at New York to devote sufficient time to rehearsal. The result is that the concerts are only moderately good, and not good enough to arouse enthusiasm and insure large audiences. Mr. Schindler gave the Bach B minor Mass at one of his concerts last season, and another evening was devoted entirely to Italian compositions. Verdi's Stabat Mater had been heard here before, but his Te Deum was sung for the first time at New York, and proved imposing and effective. Pizzetti's Lament for the Death of Hyppolitos was also a novelty, and is an interesting composition conceived and executed in a lofty and dignified spirit. A cantata by Malipiero, San Francesca d' Assisi, with baritone solo, was given a world première, Mr. Schindler having brought the work in manuscript from Italy last summer. In this cantata, besides the full choir every resource of a modern orchestra was employed. The soloist was Giuseppe de Luca, who, in the few appearances he has made on the concert-platform, has proved himself to be as remarkable an artist as he is on the operatic stage. The composition itself, in spite of its elaborate construction, did not find favour either with the critics or with the audience, and although other novelties by Malipiero have been performed at New York, nothing of his so far heard has given him a high standing as a composer. Like many of the modernists, he attempts ideas that he cannot formulate, giving us instead dull and tiresome works whose meaning is obscure.

Our oldest choral organization, the Oratorio Society, founded some fifty years ago by Dr. Leopold Damrosch (father of Walter), was awakened last winter, by its new conductor, Mr. Albert Stoessel, from the lethargy into which it had fallen. The Christmas performance of The Messiah was far better than had been heard for years, while the spring concert, devoted to Bach's Passion Music, aroused real enthusiasm by the excellence of its performance. The old Oratorio Society conserves some good material, and under its new conductor has regained some of its lost prestige, but it must work still harder to aspire to rival the Toronto Choir.

To celebrate the eightieth anniversary of the founding of the Philharmonic Society—April, 1842—two performances of Beethoven's ninth Symphony were given by the combined forces of the Philharmonic Orchestra and the Oratorio Society, M. Willem Mengelberg conducting. This glorious composition never fails to draw large audiences, who listen reverently, as it were, to the supreme masterpiece of symphonic writing. The Philharmonic Society has given this immortal work over twenty times under several different conductors, but on two occasions the choral Finale was omitted. On both of these the Symphony had been prepared and announced, but the Ode to Joy could not be sung two weeks after the assassination of President Lincoln (April, 1865), or four days after the death of Anton Seidl (April, 1898), who was at that time the conductor of the orchestra. M. Mengelberg gave a sound reading of the score, though it lacked the inspiration he bestows on more modern works.

Although the four orchestras which during the season give over a hundred concerts at Carnegie Hall, and the twenty-three weeks of opera given at the Metropolitan Opera House are the musical attractions which draw the largest audiences at New York, and which undoubtedly make the biggest noise, yet the smaller organizations often perform music equally (or more) grateful to the ear of true music-lovers. One of these, known as 'The Society of the Friends of Music,' is under the direction of M. Artur Bodanzky. The function of this Society is to produce works that are not suited to the modern full orchestra or to the big choir of an oratorio society. The orchestra numbers about fifty performers, and on the programmes for the last season are found Symphonies by Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, and Schubert, along with Serenades and Suites by old and new composers. For choral work there are sometimes a dozen voices and sometimes forty or fifty. M. Bodanzky seeks to explore a field neglected in these modern days, often with the happiest results. In the winter series of ten concerts Bach's name is frequently seen, and this season one whole concert was devoted to him, the programme consisting of two Cantatas—Nos. 102 and 211 (Coffee Cantata)—and the Concerto in D minor, Harold Bauer presiding at the pianoforte. The tenth and last concert of the series presented a remarkably beautiful programme exceedingly well performed. The Mozart Symphony in C major (Köchel 338) was played as Mozart should be played—entirely without the exaggerations and affectations that afflict so many of the conductors of the present day. The Bach Concerto in A minor for flute, violin, and pianoforte, No. 8 (Mr. Bauer again at the pianoforte), delighted the audience, which gave unusual expressions of pleasure both for the composition and for Mr. Bauer's masterly interpretation of the spirit of the great composer. There are no more intelligent musical audiences at New York than those that listen to the concerts of the Friends of Music, and it means something to arouse these to enthusiasm; but enthusiasm was the order of the day at this concert, for the last number on the programme, Brahms's Song of Destiny, is a composition of such extraordinary beauty—so especially adapted for small orchestra and chorus—and received from instrumentalists and singers so flawless a performance, that the listeners left the concert-hall in an exalted mood and with eager anticipations for the next season's appearances of this Society.

The eighth and last novelty at the Metropolitan Opera House was a production of Mozart's Così Fan Tutte. It was more than a hundred and thirty years ago when this delightful opera was first given at Vienna, and every effort was made to reproduce the art of the period. A small stage, curtained off, was built on the large one, the foot-lights imitating lamps or candles. Costumes, furniture, and properties were historically correct, and the nine scenes in the two Acts were given appropriate settings. So carefully was every detail thought of that even the pianoforte that gave the chords for the recitatives was made to sound like a harpsichord. The silly story of woman's faithlessness was delightfully acted and sung by the six principals, George Meader and Giuseppe De Luca representing the true lovers and the disguised ones; Florence Easton and Frances Peralta the tempted sweethearts; Adamo Didur the sneering philosopher who has no faith in woman's constancy, and who plans the downfall of the maidens with the help of their scheming maid (Lucrezia Bori). Florence Easton, the most versatile artist on the operatic stage to-day, was easily the star of the performance, her lovely voice, her consummate art, and her great dramatic talent fulfilling all the requirements of the score and the story. M. Bodanzky's labours in the performance deserve unstinted praise.

M. H. FLINT.

PARIS

Kussewitzky's presence at Paris has resulted in a fine revival of Boris Godunov at the Opéra, with M. Vanni Marcoux in the title-part, M. Gresse as Varlaam, M. Huberty as Pinnen, M. Fabert as Shuisky, Mr. Sullivan as Grigory, Mlle. Lubin as Marina, Mlle. Courso and Mlle. Laval as the Tsar's children, and Mlle. Lapeyrette as the innkeeper. The settings by Golovin created a most favourable impression, and the chorus as well as the orchestra were unanimously pronounced satisfactory. Kussewitzky has given a remarkably good concert of Russian music for the benefit of the Russian Famine Fund, and is announcing four symphonic concerts which promise to be of unusual interest.

At the Concerts-Colonne was given the first performance of a new symphonic work of vast proportions by Vincent d'Indy, Poème des Rivages. It is remarkably fine, and not a little complex from the structural point of view, and curious as an attempt to incorporate certain types of harmonic idiom—which may be described, briefly, as ultra-modern—into a fabric whose plan is as solid and whose proportions are as rigorous, in their logical aspect, as in any previous work of d'Indy's. It leaves us with the impression that here is something fine and lofty, but which we desire to study more closely before expressing a definite opinion.

Another important novelty was Albert Roussel's Symphony at the Concerts-Pasdeloup—again one which it is hardly fair to judge from a first impression, and one whose broad architecture and efficiently-controlled progress are far easier to perceive than its artistic purpose. It did not prove so convincing, perhaps, as the superb Évocations or the more recent Pour une Fête de Printemps. Yet it was well received, and certainly deserved to be.

On the following Sunday, at the same Concerts, were given excerpts from Louis Aubert's delightful fairy opera Forêt Bleue—the production of which at one of the Paris theatres all music-lovers agree in clamouring for, as they do for that of de Bréville's Éros Vainqueur (mentioned in my last letter). But the ways of State-aided theatres are strange; and while these fine works and many others are waiting, the pageant of still-born operas written to order and produced 'because it is the law' continues its wearisome course.

At the Concerts-Colonne Pierné's Solo de Concert for bassoon and orchestra was performed for the first time. It is an extremely clever and tasteful piece of writing, and was well played by M. Dhérin. The same day Enesco's second Symphony was performed and received with favour. A new Trio by Pierné was the main feature at the concert of the Société Nationale given the next day.

The Bacchanal from Roger Ducasse's Orphée received its first performance at the Concerts-Colonne on the following Sunday. It is replete with effects of extreme violence, most ably devised and carried out; but the substance is somewhat thin, and the music at times failed to carry conviction.

At the Concerts-Pasdeloup a whole programme was devoted to Belgian composers. Those represented were Lekeu, Léon Du Bois, Scharrés, Dupuis, Bouserez, de Boeck, Jongen, and T. Ysaÿe.

Various works by Busoni have been performed. At the Concerts-Colonne his Concertino, Berceuse Étiologique, Rondo Arlecchinesco (vocalist, M. Sabatier); and at the Conservatoire, two Études for his forthcoming score of Faust, entitled Sarabande and Cortège—both ingenious and impressive. Busoni and Petri have repeated here the recital of music for two pianofortes by the first-named which they had given in London.

P. Kunc's Suite Symphonique, another novelty given at the Concerts-Lamoureux, consists of altogether workmanlike developments of a folk-song from the Pyrénées.

The Orchestre de Paris gave a Brazilian Suite, pleasing and picturesque, by a Brazilian composer, M. Nepomuceno.

Other interesting events were the concert given by the 'Studio' at the Hall of the Theosophic Society, at which Madame Olénine d'Alheim sang a number of songs by Hugo Wolf, which she interprets admirably; a programme by Madame M. Meyer devoted to works by the French 'Six,' Satie, and Stravinsky—all quite entertaining if the listener happens to be in the right mood; a Vincent d'Indy evening given at the Nouveaux-Concerts (the nomenclature alone of new concert halls and new choral societies is becoming more bewildering than ever); at the Société Musicale Indépendante a good 'Cello Sonata by Opol Ygouw and Schmitt's Mirages for pianoforte; and I must end by mentioning that Madame Roger Miclos, at her recital at the Salle Pleyel, gave the first performance of Harrison's County of Worcester and John Heath's A Child's Night.

A. BOLD.

ROME

At the Augusteo Mr. Albert Coates renewed his triumphs of last year in a concert which included Holst's The Planets, the Wedding-March from Rimsky-Korsakov's Coq d'Or, Ravel's Ma Mère l'Oye, and the Death and Transfiguration of Strauss. A second concert given by Mr. Coates was notable for the performance of a Suite for strings by Purcell and Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony; and his visit closed with a third concert, in which the programme consisted of Brahms's fourth Symphony, Tommasini's Il beato regno (first performance), Liadov's Eight Popular Russian Airs, and Elgar's Enigma Variations.

At the time of writing Ferenc de Vecsey is at Rome, where he is regarded as the greatest living violinist, and has given a concert at the Augusteo. He played Concertos of Max Bruch (G minor), Sibelius (D minor, Op. 47), and Paganini (D major).

M. Cortôt visited Rome for the first time on April 7, and gave a concert under the auspices of the Accademia di S. Cecilia, with a programme that included Debussy's first book of Preludes.

During Holy Week, if we except the usual liturgical music which draws thousands of visitors to the patriarchal basilicas, the chief musical event was the performance of Perosi's sacred Trilogy The Passion of Christ at the Royal Philharmonic Society's hall, under the direction of Alexander Bustini, the artistic director of the Roman Philharmonic. This poem, written when Perosi was only twenty-four, is the first of the series which has rendered his name famous and foreshadows the remarkable melody and orchestration which later were to raise such a furore in the Natale, Resurrection, and Transfiguration. The eminent composer (who is, it appears, about to secede to the Waldese Protestants) resolutely refused to attend the representation, to which he was opposed.

Amongst other events at the Philharmonic this month are to be noted a concert given by the Bolognese Quartet, which was heard in Beethoven in B flat major and Glazounov in A, and a series of Laudi written for strings and pianoforte by Renzo Bossi, teacher of composition in the Milan Conservatory, and son of the famous organist Marc Enrico.

A notable concert has also been given in the great Hall of the Pontifical School of Music by Ulisse Matthey, first organist of the Santa Casa of Loreto, with a programme that included a Sonata in B minor by Schiapatti and a Symphonic Study by E. Bossi.

LEONARD PEYTON.

TORONTO

Two concerts by the New York Symphony Orchestra have suggested that either Mr. Damrosch has profited from his sojourn with the London Symphony or the New York Symphony has retained something of Mr. Albert Coates. Be that as it may, Mr. Damrosch conducted very thoughtful and satisfying performances of the César Franck Symphony and Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on a Theme by Thomas Tallis. He was not so happy in the Tchaikovsky Concerto (B flat minor), which was played with fine comprehension by Mr. Ernest Seitz, a Toronto pianist.

The Hambourg Conservatory has given two concerts recently, which proved thoroughly enjoyable. One programme was devoted to Tchaikovsky, the other contained Beethoven's Variations on See the conquering hero comes for violoncello and pianoforte, with Mr. Boris Hambourg as 'cellist and Signor Guerrero at the pianoforte.

The Orpheus Society, conducted by Mr. Dalton Baker, gave an impression of careful training at its recent annual concert. Works chosen included Bach's I wrestle and pray, Elgar's Death on the Hills, Bantock's One with eyes the fairest, English Madrigals and part-songs by West and Walmisley, and anthems from the Russian School by Gretchaninov, Tchaikovsky, and Balakirev.

Madame Emma Calvé, Dame Clara Butt, Mr. Kennerley Rumford, and Mr. Watkin Mills were heard in recital. Young singers of to-day might well take note of the dignity of style which still distinguishes Mr. Mills. The present age has yet a few things to learn from its predecessor.

The efforts of the Toronto Chamber Music Society have certainly increased the desire for this type of music. A well-filled house greeted the return concert of the London String Quartet. Never before has this body played with such rare taste and purity of style. The Beethoven Quartet in F minor (Op. 95) gave ample proof of the unique talent the Londoners have of passing the melodies smoothly, almost unconsciously, from one instrument to another. Especially was this noticeable in the beautiful second movement. The first performance of H. Waldo Warner's Fairy Suite The Pixy King made a vivid impression by its colour and descriptive power. Truly it is a charming work, distinctive in style and skilfully written. Frank Bridge's Londonderry Air, Dvorák's Nigger Quartet, and solos by Miss Athens Buckley, of Toronto, completed the programme.

The Toronto Mendelssohn Choir, of two hundred and thirty voices, and under the conductorship of Mr. H. A. Fricker, recently completed a tour through four cities of the United States. From April 3-7 concerts were given at Buffalo (a cappella), New York (one a cappella and one with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra), Philadelphia (one with the Philadelphia Orchestra), and Baltimore (one a cappella). The works performed with orchestra were Vaughan Williams's Sea Symphony, with Florence Hinkle and John Barclay; The Ballad of the Kremlin (arranged by Kurt Schindler), The Wreck of the Julie Plante (Geoffrey O'Hara), and the Choral Finale of The Mastersingers. The a cappella numbers included the Bach Motet Sing ye, the Palestrina Surge Illuminare, To Thee, O Lord (Rachmaninov), Judge me, O God (Mendelssohn), Bless the Lord, O my soul (Ippolitov Ivanov), The Silversmith (arranged by Kurt Schindler), Love's Tempest (Elgar), Broken Melody (Sibelius), Lullaby (Ferrari), and The Miracle of St. Raymond (arranged by Kurt Schindler).

Dr. Broome held his Spring Festival on April 24, 25, in conjunction with the Cleveland Orchestra under Mr. N. Sokolov. Miss Alice Gentle, of the Scotti Grand Opera Company, was the soloist. The Oratorio Society introduced Mr. Cyril Jenkins's Ode to the West Wind (the composer being present at the performance), Sir Charles Stanford's rather vague At the Abbey Gate, and a number of part-songs.

VIENNA

THE LEGEND OF JOSEPH AT THE STAATSOOPER

In drawing the summary of this season's work at the Staatsoper, we find a pitifully small result. There had not been a single première so far, and when well towards the end of the opera season the first novelty of the year was produced, the choice fell on a work by one of the directors of the house—a fact which in itself is open to criticism, but all the more so in view of the fact that The Legend of Joseph, the one-Act Ballet by Richard Strauss, is not at all a work of towering importance. Its origin, in 1914, was due to the passing vogue of the then famous Russian Ballet, which produced it at Paris without causing more than an ephemeral sensation. At the Vienna Staatsoper, the première of the Ballet took place in conjunction with a revival of Feuersnot.

BRAHMS CELEBRATION

Aside from this première at the Staatsoper, the dominating features of the last few weeks were the various Brahms Festivals attendant upon the twenty-fifth anniversary of this composer's death. The city of Vienna—which rightly claims Brahms as her son, though his birthplace was in Germany—had provided a worthy official celebration, in the course of which, amid befitting ceremonies, a marble memorial tablet was unveiled on the site formerly occupied by Brahms's dwelling-place, while his grave in the Vienna Central Cemetery was beautifully decorated. There were four individual Brahms celebrations given by the foremost musical organizations of the city, and a complete cycle of his works was arranged by a local concert bureau, in which the Vienna Symphony Orchestra, the Rosé Quartet, Ernst von Dohnányi, and some of the leading Vienna artists, were the participants. The most impressive of these memorial functions was, perhaps, a concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted for the first time by Wilhelm Furtwängler, which gave evidence of the wonderful work of these players are still capable when inspired by a really great conductor. The concert took place in the Grosser Musikvereinsaal, where so many of Brahms's works had their first hearing in the presence of their composer, and it was sponsored by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, of which Brahms was at one time musical director.

ORCHESTRAL NOVELTIES

The Philharmonic Orchestra this season has not been particularly happy in its choice of novelties, which were all 'first performances anywhere.' Least successful of these was an Overture, Diana, by Joseph Klein. More attention was attracted by a Symphonic Fantasy by the young Viennese, Hans Gál, which, though not very productive of new ideas, recommended itself by a distinct sense of form and style. Georg Széll, formerly a pianist child-prodigy, and now assistant-conductor of the Darmstadt Opera, has been invited to conduct his new Lyric Overture at a Philharmonic concert. It is a melodious piece and well-orchestrated, but much too long, and, at times, incoherent.

The era of 'autobiographical' symphonies initiated by Richard Strauss's Heldenleben found a rather belated sequel in two of this year's Philharmonic novelties. The Symphony No. 3, by Guido Peters, belongs to that species, depicting as it does the vain struggle for general recognition which this earnest Viennese composer has been going through for many years past. Equally 'autobiographical,' to some extent, is the Autumn Symphony by Joseph Marx, who paints the moods of the artist passing through the autumn of his life, reaping harvest, yet preparing for new conquests. It is a beautiful and serious work, though at times overloaded with orchestral effects which make it appear rather too massive in sound.

The Philharmonic, once probably the most exclusive and independent orchestra on the Continent—it is just now preparing for a three months' tour of South America, under Weingartner—has of late acquired the habit of selling its services to visiting conductors and artists, regardless of their merits. This habit, probably forced upon the orchestra by adverse financial conditions, is a sad sign of the times, and one deeply deplored by Vienna's conservative music-lovers. At one of these 'extra' concerts another work of the 'autobiographical' variety was ably conducted by Arthur Löwenstein. It is termed by its composer, E. N. von Reznicek, 'a symphonic-satirical poem of the day,' and is entitled The Victor. It employs a huge orchestra with a predominantly strong brass section, with, in the last movement, a chorus (off stage) and a contralto soloist.

At an orchestral concert conducted by Carl Audiérieth we heard a symphonic poem entitled Vorfrühling, by the Viennese composer and musicologist, Egon Wellesz, who, though originally a pupil of Schönberg, in this piece discloses a tendency towards the impressionistic methods of Debussy as evinced in some of his exquisite tone-colourings. Wellesz, whose opera Princess Gurnara has had some success in Germany, will shortly pay a visit to England, in the course of which he will deliver a lecture at Cambridge University.

VISITING CONDUCTORS

Among the foreign conductors who have paid frequently recurring visits to Vienna, Bruno Walter is particularly dear to the hearts of our public since the days when he conducted, under Gustav Mahler, at our then Imperial Opera. Later he assumed the post of director with the Munich Opera, which he has just resigned after ten years of activity. To Vienna audiences Walter is the chosen conductor of Mahler's Symphonies. These Symphonies, once laughed at and hissed in Vienna concert-halls, are now features in the programmes of the very same Philharmonic Orchestra which once rejected Mahler's services as a conductor, considering him 'too exacting' in his demands on his players; and Bruno Walter, once ridiculed as Mahler's prophet and permitted to leave the Vienna Opera, now returns in triumph to conduct four sold-out performances within one week of Mahler's eighth Symphony. This Symphony of the Thousand, which requires a huge orchestra, double chorus, children's chorus, and soloists—well over nine hundred heads in all—had a remarkable performance under Walter's baton, and with the same composer's Song of the Earth, the 'song symphony' in six movements, for two solo voices, Walter's name has become so closely identified that no other conductor so far has been able to succeed with it here. Karl Schuricht, from Wiesbaden, failed utterly this season, and even Oscar Fried, himself a disciple of Mahler, was unable to banish memories of Walter's reading.

Among the younger conductors from Germany, Fritz Reiner, until lately connected with the Dresden Opera, is one of the commanding figures. He even succeeded in rousing a certain amount of interest in Strauss's Alpine Symphony.

Egon Pollak, a guest-conductor from Hamburg, introduced an Overture to a Merry Play by Joseph Rosenstock, a gifted pupil from Franz Schreker's class. It is a sparkling piece of refreshing unaffectedness. At the same concert we heard a new song-cycle by Erich Wolfgang Korngold entitled Songs of Farewell, sung by Maria Olszewska, and accompanied at the pianoforte by Korngold himself.

A young conductor from Stockholm, Nils Grevillius, has been a frequent visitor to Vienna this season, impressing our audiences by his spontaneity and by an assurance that is remarkable in one so young. To him we owe the acquaintance with a number of contemporary Swedish composers. The most interesting of these was Hugo Alfvén with a Swedish Rhapsody, and even more so with his Symphony, which excels by the clever treatment of the human voice as an 'orchestral' instrument pure and simple (without the use of words)—a device used also by Gustav Holst, the English composer, in the last movement of his Suite The Planets.

Of the guest-conductors who have appeared here during the last few weeks, Siegfried Wagner requires but short comment, both as a composer and orchestral leader. In the latter capacity he is hardly above the average customary with the conductors of provincial German opera houses, and his compositions, while they contain some nice, simple melodic strains, are hardly able to evoke more than casual interest. Whatever importance attaches to him with pan-German circles and with the close friends of the Wagner dynasty, is due principally to a reverence for his distinguished parent and for his grandfather, Franz Liszt, whose works, besides Siegfried's own, figured prominently on the Vienna programme. The short stay here of Paul von Klenau, the Danish composer, resulted in the first performance of his Symphonic Fantasy, entitled Hampstead Heath, which is an appealing and well-orchestrated bit of music, picturing an English Fair. In another concert, Klenau showed himself to be a very able conductor when he produced, for the first time anywhere, a large choral work, entitled Weltfeier, by Karl Weigl, a Viennese composer. It was written well over ten years ago, and, in spite of undoubted talent and of some original traits, on the whole employs the idiom of Richard Wagner, which was the dogma of most young German composers of that period.

[Mr. Bechert's consideration of the Deutsche Motette of Richard Strauss and some works of Pfitzner, Bartók, and others, is held over.]

THE SALZBURG FESTIVAL.

Definite plans have just been announced for the great Festival which will take place this summer at Salzburg, the Austrian provincial city so closely connected with the name Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. As is well known, the proceeds of these annual festivals are being devoted to a fund intended to bring about the foundation of a large festival theatre at Hellbrunn, near Salzburg. This year's festival will comprise four Mozart operas and Das grosse Welttheater, the play which Hugo von Hofmannsthal, the Austrian poet, has adapted from the old Spanish drama by Calderon de la Barca. Einar Nilson has composed the incidental music of the play, which will have thirteen consecutive performances in the rare and beautiful environment of the old Collegian Church of Salzburg, between August 13 and August 25. The operatic part of the festival will be furnished by the Vienna Staatsoper, which intends to give four performances each of the following four Mozart operas: Don Juan on August 14, 18, 22, and 26; Così fan tutte on August 15, 19, 23, and 27; The Marriage of Figaro on August 16, 20, 24, and 28; and The Elopement from the Seraglio on August 17, 21, 25, and 29. Richard Strauss will conduct the presentations of Don Juan and Così fan tutte, while the remaining two operas will be entrusted to Franz Schalk, co-director with Strauss at the Vienna Staatsoper. Two orchestral concerts of classical works are scheduled for August 15 and 20. Preceding the Festival proper there will be a six days' 'International Festival of Modern Chamber Music,' commencing on August 5, and featuring the works of living composers from all countries, a number of whom will personally participate in the performances of their works. Among the English composers who will be heard at these concerts are Messrs. Bliss, Bax, and Goossens. Compositions by Richard Strauss, Schönberg, Korngold, Joseph Marx, Bartók, Hindemith, Busoni, Alfredo Casella, Malipiero, Darius Milhaud, Arthur Honegger, Stravinsky, Percy Grainger, Ernest Bloch, Antonio Salazar, Ebbe Hammerik, and many others will figure in these programmes.

PAUL BECHERT.

Miscellaneous

Under the auspices of the National Organization of Girls' Clubs, a concert will take place at the Albert Hall on June 14, at 8, when a choir of twelve hundred members of working girls' clubs will sing unison songs, rounds, and part-songs. They will be assisted by Mesdames Adila Fachiri (d'Aranyil) and Margaret Champneys, Messrs. Plunket Greene and Harold Darke.

The West Middlesex Musical Society has been inaugurated, for the study of choral and orchestral music. The hon. secretary is Mr. J. H. Cuddington, 21, Selby Road, Ealing, and the hon. conductor Mr. C. Stanley Smallman. The first rehearsals will be held in the autumn, at Ealing, the works chosen for the first season being The Golden Legend, A Tale of Old Japan, and The Redemption.

The Amphion Choir of Seattle, conducted by Mr. Claude Madden, opened its twelfth season recently with a programme of part-songs for male voices. These included Cooke's Strike the Lyre, Button's arrangement of The Land o' the Leal, and Give a man a horse he can ride by the young Canadian composer, Geoffrey O'Hara.

The National Provident and Union Bank Musical Society gave an excellent concert at Queen's Hall on April 22. The chief works performed were Brahms's Song of Destiny, Grieg's Landerkennung, Bath's The Legend of Nerubda, and Grieg's Pianoforte Concerto, with Miss Kathleen Thomson as soloist. Mr. Herbert J. Bagge conducted.

The Oratorio Society of Brantford, Ontario, gave Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, and a selection of part-songs on April 27, under Dr. Frederick C. Thomas. The choir of a hundred voices was accompanied by an orchestra of twenty-five, which also played Cherubini's Anacreon Overture.

The Lothbury Male-Voice Choir gave a concert at Cannon Street Hotel on April 26, Mr. E. Stanley Roper conducting. The programme included part-songs by Spofforth, Calkin, Brewer, Hatton, Elgar, E. H. Thorne, Brahms, and Lloyd.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	0	3	0
Three Lines	0	3	4
For every additional Line	0	0	10
One Inch (displayed)	0	10	0
Half a Column	2	0	0
A Column	4	0	0
A Page	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than WEDNESDAY, JUNE 21 (FIRST POST).

CONTENTS

Page

Bright Players and Singers: VI.—Carrie Tubb (with Special Portrait). By Herman Klein ...	387
Trinity College of Music (Illustrated) ...	389
Music and Materialism. By Keighley Snowden ...	391
Rebel Romantics. By Mrs. Frank Liebich ...	392
The Nurseries of English Song.—I. By Frank Kidson ...	394
British Music at Vienna. By Paul Bechert ...	395
The Fancy. By Jeffrey Pulver ...	396
Occasional Notes ...	398
Festival Week at Oxford. By H. E. Wortham ...	402
The Musician's Bookshelf ...	403
New Music ...	407
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ...	409
Opera in London ...	410
London Concerts ...	410
Northampton Musical Society: Presentation to Mr. C. J. King ...	420
Carnegie Trust ...	420
Gresham Music Lectures ...	421
Byrde and his Contemporaries ...	421
Reception to M. Rachmaninov ...	421
Church and Organ Music ...	422
The Organ in Johannesburg Town Hall (Illustrated). By J. S. Yates ...	422
Letters to the Editor ...	426
The League of Arts ...	427
Sixty Years Ago ...	428
Sharps and Flats ...	428
Chamber Music for Amateurs ...	428
Royal Academy of Music ...	428
Royal College of Music ...	429
Music in the Universities ...	429
Thomas Britton: The Musical Small-Coal Man. By C. Edgar Thomas ...	429
Negro Songs. By Ian Cameron ...	431
Music in the Provinces ...	432
Obituary ...	434
The Gloucester Festival ...	434
Music in Ireland ...	434
Musical Notes from Abroad ...	434
Miscellaneous ...	434

MUSIC:

Blessed be the Lord God of Israel. Full Anthem from 'Sing to the Lord.' By HENRY SMART ... 413

THREE EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. Portrait of Carrie Tubb.
2. Save us, O Lord, while waking. Anthem for General Use. By Hugh Blair.
3. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BLUNT, F. W.—"Now the day is over." Hymn and Tune "Lyndhurst." (No. 1070, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

BOYCE, ETHEL.—"Dirge." Four-part Song for T.T.B.B. (No. 578, The Orpheus.) 3d.

—"Choric Measure." Four-part Song for T.T.B.B. (No. 579, The Orpheus.) 3d.

—"The Bramble." Four-part Song for T.T.B.B. (No. 580, The Orpheus.) 4d.

—"The Bowl." Four-part Song for T.T.B.B. (No. 581, The Orpheus.) 4d.

BURGESS, FRANCIS, and T. P. HOLMES.—"Missa de Angelis." Melody only. Edited. 2d.

CAUSTON, THOMAS.—"O Sacred and Holy Banquet." For S.A.T.B. (No. 3a, Cathedral Series of Church Music, edited by ROYLE SHORE.) 3d.

CHAMBERS, H. A.—"O Lord, the Maker of all thing." Evening Anthem. (No. 1095, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

HILL, LADY ARTHUR.—Songlets for Children. (For Contents, see page 386.) 4s.

HOLST, GUSTAV.—Two Songs without words. For Small Orchestra. No. 1, "Country Song." No. 2, "Marching Song." Full Scores. 7s. each.

JONES, J. J.—Three Hymns and Tunes. 3d.

MARTIN, G. C.—"Like as a father." Anthem for Tenor Solo and Chorus, from "O come before His presence." (No. 951, The Musical Times.) 2d.

PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, REV. W.—Eucharistic Hymn, No. 3. ("O Feast of Love"). 1d.; or 2s. 6d. per 50.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 360, contains the following music in both notations.—"The Holiday." Unison Song. W. McNAUGHT. 2d.

SCHUBERT, F.—"Ave Maria" (Op. 52). Arranged for Organ by HUGH BLAIR. (No. 63, Organ Arrangements, edited by JOHN E. WEST.) 1s. 6d.

SMART, H.—"Blessed be the Lord God." Full Anthem from "Sing to the Lord." (No. 952, The Musical Times.) 2d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2380. "The Dirge of Darthula." Part-song for S.A.A.T.B.B. J. BRAHMS 4d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BANKS, H. C., JUN.—"O Most Blessed Jesu." Unaccompanied Anthem. 12 cents (6d.).

BURDETT, G. A.—"The Lord is in His Holy Temple." Anthem. 12 cents (6d.).

CLOKEY, J. W.—"Hymn Exultant." Anthem. 15 cents (8d.).

FORSYTH, CECIL.—"The Luck of Eden Hall." Choral Ballad for Men's Voices. 50 cents (2s.).

HARRAT, F. T.—"Benedictus es Domine" ("Blessed art Thou, O Lord"). 12 cents (6d.).

LANSING, A. W.—"God shall wipe away all tears." Sacred Song for Low Voice. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

TRUE, L.—"Invocation." Song for Contralto or Baritone. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

JUST PUBLISHED.

MEDITATION FOR ORGAN

BY

H. DOUGLAS.

Price, Two Shillings net.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

VESPER HYMN—"GRANT US THY PEACE." By A. VIVIAN MAY.

Effectively harmonized. Extensively used at conclusion of Divine Service.

Price 1½d., from the Composer, Highview House, Malmesbury, Wilts; or from the Publishers, Messrs. Novello & Co., London.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O.—Eight model Essays on the two books set for next July exam. Valuable hints on writing. Send 5s. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

40 SHORT ARTISTIC STUDIES. Full directions. Pioneer P.F. Professionals, Artists, Write. 24, Lawrence Street, Chelsea, London.

FOR SALE.—Boudoir GRAND PIANOFORTE, in walnut case. Overstrung. Price £65. Hoadley, Handcross, Sussex.

SOLO BASS WANTED, for St. Cuthbert's, Kensington. £25 per annum. Apply by letter to Dr. W. J. Phillips, 65, Philbeach Gardens S.W.5.

TENOR, experienced in Catholic music, resident North London, is open for Sunday engagement. Write. "W. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED. Choir-training experience essential. St. Philip's, Norbury. S.W. £50-£60. Apply Vicar.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for West Parish Church, Greenock. Salary £100. Excellent opening for teaching. Applications, stating qualifications, to be lodged with Alexander King, Session Clerk, 13, Hamilton Street, Greenock.

JUL 1 1922

No.
953

THE MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

JULY 1, 1922

Price
6d.

JUL 1 1922

SPENCER PIANOS

GRANDS * UPRIGHTS * PLAYERS

Sole Agents

MURDOCH MURDOCH & CO

Piano & Player Piano Experts

461 & 463 OXFORD STREET

And at BRIGHTON * PORTSMOUTH * SOUTHAMPTON
FOLKESTONE * DOVER * CHATHAM
BIRMINGHAM * CAMBRIDGE

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN LTD.

PATENT THREE COMPARTMENT TOP LID FOR GRAND PIANOS

We have already fitted over

1000 PIANOS

by most of the leading makers with this New Device.

Kindly send for Booklet giving particulars.

GEGILIAN HOUSE,
65, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON.
12, Park Row, LEEDS.

Patented in AMERICA - FRANCE - GERMANY.

THE GREAT ENGLISH PIANO

□
ACTUAL
MANUFACTURERS.

Factories:
LEIGHTON ROAD,
KENTISH TOWN, LONDON.

□
Proprietors of the
JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'
TUNING CONNECTION.

THE INSTRUMENT DE LUXE
OF THE PIANO WORLD

□
GRANDS,
PLAYER PIANOS,
UPRIGHT PIANOS,
DETACHABLE PARTS.

□
SHOWROOMS:
56-60, WIGMORE STREET,
W.1. LANGHAM 1418.

ESTEY ORGANS ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.

Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317.

Telegrams: "ESTEY OX. LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.

- 12 -

RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

TWELVE NUMBERS NOW READY.

Historical Songs and Ballads of Ireland

ARRANGED BY

HERBERT HUGHES.

SILENT, O MOYLE
KITTY OF COLERAINE
THE DEAR LITTLE SHAMROCK
THE WIDOW MALONE
THE WIND THAT SHAKES THE BARLEY
RORY O'MORE

SHE IS FAR FROM THE LAND
THE LOW-BACKED CAR
GENERAL MUNROE
THE WINDING BANKS OF ERNE
THE BARD'S LEGACY
ERIN, THE TEAR AND THE SMILE

Price, 2s. each net.

METZLER TRIO SERIES

(Trios for All.)

FOR PIANO, VIOLIN, AND VIOLONCELLO. PRICE 1s. NET, EACH TRIO.

(Extra parts may be had for 1st violin, 2nd violin, 'cello, bass, and harmonium, price 4d. net, each.)

20 celebrated familiar numbers easily arranged for Cinemas, Restaurants, and for use in the HOME CIRCLE.

METZLER & CO. (1920), LTD.,

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

142, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

Reproduced from a Photograph by Alex Corbett

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JULY 1 1922

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

1822-1922

A school—no matter of what kind—that reaches its hundredth year full of life and vigour is so much of a national institution that its centenary cannot be regarded as a mere domestic event. Every one of its hundred years of life has seen its influence the rest and best of Europe are products of our great music schools. In the most real and practical sense, then, our musical history of to-day and of the past half-century is bound up with that of our teaching institutions, and it is fitting that the centenary of the Royal Academy of Music is to be celebrated by a series of events in which ample provision is made for the public to take part. Here is a condensed list of these celebrations :

July 10.—Æolian Hall, at 3. Lecture by Mr. Tobias Matthay.

July 10.—Æolian Hall, at 8.15. Concert. Selections from the works of J. B. McEwen.

July 10.—Duke's Hall, at 8. The Yeomen of the Guard.

Photo by]

ENTRANCE HALL, ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

[Alexander Corbett

spread farther and farther, and this influence, instead of being weakened by diffusion, has become stronger as old scholars grow in numbers and disperse themselves abroad. In the case of a school devoted to music this cumulative power is exerted in a direct and unmistakable way because the great majority of its ex-students occupy public positions as teachers, conductors, performers, or composers. The handful of people who pooh-pooh academic training in music have no answer to the fact that, with very few exceptions, the musicians—composers, as well as performers and conductors—who have enabled us to hold up our head once more before

July 11.—Æolian Hall, at 3. Chamber Concert.

July 11.—Æolian Hall, at 8.15. Chamber Concert.

July 12.—Æolian Hall, at 3. Chamber Concert.

July 12.—Æolian Hall, at 8.15. Chamber Concert.

July 12.—Duke's Hall, at 8. Mackenzie's The Cricket on the Hearth.

July 13.—Æolian Hall, at 3. Chamber Concert.

July 13.—Æolian Hall, at 8.15. Chamber Concert.

July 14.—Æolian Hall, at 3. Chamber Concert.

July 14.—Æolian Hall, at 8.15. Pianoforte Recital by Miss Winifred Christie.

July 14.—Duke's Hall, at 8. Goring Thomas's Nadeshda.

July 15.—Æolian Hall, at 3. Students' Chamber Concert.

- July 15.—Æolian Hall, at 8.15. Students' Chamber Concert.
- July 17.—St. Paul's Cathedral, at 12 noon. Thanksgiving Service, preceded by orchestral and organ music by composers connected with the Academy.
- July 17.—Queen's Hall, at 8. Reception and Masque. The Ladies' Choir, composed of two hundred voices, will perform Corder's Motet, Sing unto God, conducted by the composer.
- July 17.—Duke's Hall, at 3. Dramatic Performance under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond.
- July 18.—Duke's Hall, at 3. The Yeomen of the Guard.
- July 18.—Queen's Hall, at 8. Orchestral Concert by ex-students. Conductors: Sir Henry J. Wood and composers.
- July 19.—Queen's Hall, at 3. Orchestral Concert by ex-students. Conductors: Sir Henry J. Wood and composers.
- July 19.—Duke's Hall, at 8. Mackenzie's The Cricket on the Hearth.
- July 20.—Queen's Hall, at 3. Students' Orchestral Concert. Conductor, Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie.
- July 20.—Duke's Hall, at 8. Dramatic Performance under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond.
- July 21.—Queen's Hall, at 3. Distribution of Prizes by the President, H. R. H. The Duke of Connaught, K.G.
- July 22.—Duke's Hall, at 3. Goring Thomas's Nadeshda.
- July 22.—Great Central Hotel, at 7.30. Banquet.

The R.A.M. is now so strongly established and so popular an institution that its early struggles make interesting reading. The first forty years of its life were a more or less constant struggle against insolvency, and that the shutters did not go up once and for all was due not to the wealthy amateurs who started the school nor to the efforts of business men, but to the energy and practical ability of the professors themselves. For example, they came to the rescue in 1824 by giving their services for three months, and in 1868 they surrendered a good sum in fees—£629 19s. 6d., to be exact. But their best stroke was in this same year, when, it being reported that the Committee had resigned the Charter, they obtained legal ruling that such a step was not valid unless taken with the consent of every member of the Academy. Having saved the Charter, the professors, led by Sterndale Bennett, drew up a form of government in which they themselves were prominently represented. This proved to be the turning-point in the Academy's career.

There is no need for us to attempt even a sketch of the history of the R.A.M. Much of it may be read in Grove, and the whole has been set forth most attractively by Mr. Frederick Corder in a booklet which will be public property during the forthcoming celebrations. We may, however, be allowed to comment on one or two of the facts mentioned by Mr. Corder.

He tells us that during the first forty years of the Academy's life

‘ . . . the musical press of the period never ceased to assail it with a virulence rather difficult to account for. From its foundation, attacked at great length by the Musical Review of 1823, to the time of its greatest trial, 1868, when the Musical World seldom let a week pass without some acrimonious onslaught, the R.A.M. suffered under the blows of those who knew it could not hit back. But “sweet are the uses of advertisement.” These attacks seemed to do at least as much good as harm, by keeping the public aware of the existence of the Institution; so the unkind journalists of that period may be reckoned among our benefactors.’

Anxious for the credit of our predecessors we have turned up some of their references to the R.A.M. We are unable to lay our hands on the Musical Review for 1823, but a stack of the little brown volumes of the Musical World is at our elbow. If all the attacks on the R.A.M. were as justifiable as those we have turned up appear to be, the ‘unkind journalists’ were indeed some of the best friends the Academy has had.

Their indictments seem to have been mainly concerned with the shortcomings of the institution on the vocal side, and with the undue influence exercised by the founder, Lord Burghersh. And it should be noted that their complaints had the backing of the lay press. Thus the Musical World of June 9, 1837, in a report of an R.A.M. concert, after falling foul of the institution as ‘worse than useless as a vocal school,’ and ‘not what it ought to be’ on the instrumental side, quotes The Times report of the concert:

‘The combination of the pupils in one elaborate composition, requiring not only execution but great knowledge of music, seems to be a form of discipline quite lost sight of at the Academy. The miscellaneous selection was nearly all bad, and ought never to have been admitted here. Of course, no one can object to the Overture to Oberon, if the pupils are able to play it, but a set of worn-out dramatic pieces from Rossini and Meyerbeer should never be permitted, and, above all, we would exclude all the compositions to which the name of Lord Burghersh is attached. They belong to no school, have no sort of merit, and can only serve to pervert the taste, such as it is, of the pupils. We really think that his Lordship should, out of delicacy, refrain from all attempts to keep up a musical reputation, to which he has no pretension, through this medium. As he is known to be absolute dictator in the affairs of the Academy, the making himself judge of his own merit is what any man of refined feeling would avoid. We hear of Lord Burghersh at no other concerts but those of the Academy. The reason is obvious, but both reason and propriety alike are opposed to their introduction here. If his vanity, however, leads him to this breach of decorum, it does more and worse, by lowering the tone of the whole selection.’

Hard hitting though this be, it is mere reproachful tapping by the side of an onslaught that appeared in the Musical World a few weeks later, as a sequel to an article entitled ‘State of the Royal

[Photo by]

[Alexander Corbett]

THE R.A.M. IN TENTERDEN STREET, 1822-1911

Academy of Music,' by Collet Dobson. Mr. Dobson drove a vigorous quill:

'In writing of this subject [he begins] I have the "advantage" of having been for three-quarters of a year an extra student at this Institution. The knowledge conferred by this "advantage" is, however, only a knowledge of the mode of proceeding in Tenterden Street: to expect thereby to acquire an acquaintance with the rich stores either of native or foreign composers, would be an absurdity only paralleled by Henry Hunt, who boasted of knowledge of the people of Ilchester, explaining that he derived it from his residence in the jail.'

Mr. Collet does not get far before dealing faithfully with Lord Burghersh:

'When the student has fairly entered the Academy, these bright prospects fade away one by one. He finds that the band seldom practise together more than twice a week, and sometimes not so often; nay, while Lord Burghersh was out of town last year, they were not assembled at all During three-quarters of a year that I have been a partaker in "the advantages of this national establishment" the singers have never once practised with the orchestra, except at rehearsals for the public concerts; and at these their practice is confined to singing a few choruses, chiefly by Rossini and Lord Burghersh.'

After paying a tribute to the professors ('almost without exception they are fully competent to their duties; their lessons are very valuable, and they are anxious for the improvement of their pupils') the writer proceeds to complain of the vocal students' lack of opportunity for gaining platform experience at the Academy:

'At the amateur societies . . . there is as much vocal music performed in one evening as at Tenterden Street in a whole year. If then the question be asked, "Who is to blame?" I answer Lord Burghersh, and Lord Burghersh only; he is in truth director, conductor, and dictator; in short, the grand primum mobile of the stand-stillism of the Academy. His introduction of his own compositions, to the exclusion of those of Handel, Haydn, and Mozart; his inattention to the real interests of the institution, his carelessness of everybody's time and convenience; show most clearly that his object is not so much to improve the musical art, as to draw round him a circle of which he may be the principal attraction.'

This article—the first of a series of three—drew an anonymous reply in the Morning Chronicle, from a student's parent, which in its turn called forth a heated editorial in the Musical World, followed by a letter from 'Vindex,' a student at the Academy. 'Vindex' tells us that on the appearance of the Collet article, the superintendent drew up a 'disproval' which the students were 'compelled to sign,' and which was then forwarded to his Lordship. 'Vindex' leaves Mr. Collet far behind in frankness. No musical journal of to-day—so mild have we become!—would dare to print such a passage as this, for example:

'Nothing, Sir, can be more ridiculous and contemptible than our system of management. We have a great man, who enacts the part of Manager Strut with a ten-horse power. He fancies himself a composer (God save the mark!) and there are not wanting sycophants to play the "toady." They tell him he is a second Lord Mornington, and, behind his back, laugh at him. We have to sing stuff which he composes and calls "Madrigals"; nor is there one programme suffeted to be made up without one or more of these delectable compositions. The whole thing, building, managers, teachers, &c., are under this great man's thumb. He is the real prototype of Shakespeare's Sir Oracle; for no dog dare bark in Tenterden Street without his leave.'

'Vindex' ends with italicised praise for everybody else at the Academy:

'With good masters we are well provided. Nothing, in this respect, can be better. They appear to vie with each other in kindness and attention to the pupils.'

Why dig up these old, unhappy squabbles? it may be asked. Well, there are several reasons. The public of to-day, reading of the early difficulties of the R.A.M., will naturally be disposed to put the blame on all sorts of shoulders. Seeing Mr. Corder's reference to the attitude of the Musical World, some may hold an unsympathetic press to be chiefly responsible. Others will blame the unappreciative English public, and we may be sure that there will not be wanting those who will be ready to lay the trouble at the door of the early professors. After wading through a good many pages of old musical journals it is clear to us that (apart from the difficulties incident to the founding of such an institution at that particular period) the vicissitudes were due to the well-meaning but unpractical and despotic amateurs who founded the Academy. The official history of the R.A.M. cannot do more than vaguely hint at this fact, lest it should seem ungrateful to the Founders. The public ought to know, however, that although the inception of the R.A.M. was due to Lord Burghersh and his friends, the institution had to be saved from them before it could enter on the successful career that has enabled it to play so big a part in the revival of English music. A further reason for this glance at its early struggles is that it enables us to appreciate fully the splendid success of its present regime.

We wonder, by the way, whether the Founders' choice of title was due to a desire to perpetuate the memory of the ill-fated Royal Academy of Music with which Handel was associated—that operatic venture which in its short life (1720-28) swallowed the whole of the original subscription of £50,000 as well as the receipts. (One of the last of the crushing blows from which it suffered came from our friend The Beggar's Opera, then in its first flush of success at Lincoln's Inn Theatre.)

Mention of opera reminds us of the unpromising hostility shown by Crotch, the first Principal, when in 1824 it was proposed that the students should give a stage performance of a complete work. One can see him raising his hands in horror before sending the following protest to Lord Burghersh:

'Kensington Gravel Pits,

'September 13, 1824.

'SIR,—On reconsidering the proposal that the students should act [underlined] an opera ON A STAGE [twice underlined] IN PUBLIC [thrice underlined], I feel so much more alarmed for the consequences than I was at first that I think it my duty to write immediately requesting that you will have the goodness to pardon the following remarks.

'Is it agreeable to the express intention of the establishment to make actors and actresses of the Academicians? May it not be much more offensive to the parents than anything that has yet been objected to? Ought the character of an instructor in music, or of a composer, to become identified with that of an actor? Would not persons wanting teachers for their daughters (especially female teachers) prefer any who had not sustained that character? . . . When I recommended Così fan tutte I merely meant such parts of it as might be performed in a Concert, not all the Recitatives concerning the plot, &c. Nor am I quite persuaded that learning music by complete stage performance, in which its reprehensible plot was laid bare, and an uninsular display of passion called for, was clearly a matter for the less proper foreigner. Not until the present Principal took up the reins (1888) was opera given its proper place in the curriculum. We said above that our musical history of recent years is that of our teaching institutions. Mostly this has been to the good, but here we have a big item on the wrong side of the balance-sheet. Thanks to the wide-spread feeling expressed by Crotch, and to the obsession in favour of Italians where opera was concerned, we are only now doing what ought to have been done fifty years ago. The best comment on the changed attitude of the Academy

Photo by]

THE CONCERT HALL, FROM THE BALCONY

[Alexander Corbett

memory will (if it does no harm) do any good to the student, who ought rather to perform from notes in order to perform well at sight. Hoping you will excuse the liberty I take,

'I am, Sir, with great respect,
WM. CROTCH.'

Even more amazing than the protest itself is the fact that it carried weight enough to put off the evil operatic day for about four years. When at last a start was made, the study of opera was only fitful—partly, of course, owing to lack of facilities, but probably even more to a kind of feeling that, so far as young England was concerned, an opera must be regarded merely as an alluring dish from which plums might be extracted for concert use. A towards opera is a bare statement that a site adjoining the institution has been secured with a view to the early erection of a Students' Theatre for Opera and Drama. There, with the shade of William Crotch hovering uneasily in the background, the Students will act ON A STAGE IN PUBLIC.

Against what the R.A.M. did not do for English opera and opera in English may be set its fine work for the native teacher. At the start a concession to public taste was made, the prospectus bristling with foreign names—even Rossini's being added! The actual work however was done almost entirely by home-grown musicians. Mr. Corder gives a list of those who taught during the first year, adding:

'When our excellent first batch of students began to grow up they nearly all became sub-professors and taught the next generation. Thus did the R.A.M. from the very first achieve its proper task of producing a race of properly trained native teachers, and now at the end of a hundred years it can look with pride on the results of its work.

'Speaking only of those whose labours have ceased, we had in Composition, Charles Lucas, Thomas Mudie, Sterndale Bennett, George Macfarren, Arthur Sullivan, Arthur Goring Thomas, and others; in Pianoforte, W. H. Holmes, W. Dorrell, F. Brinley Richards, F. B. Jewson, W. G. Cusins, Walter Macfarren. Arthur O'Leary, T. Wingham, F. Westlake, Alfred Izard, and Sidney Blakiston are only a few of those who rose from the ranks to be distinguished professors: in Violin we had H. G. Blagrove, H. Burnett, Frye Parker, Weist Hill, F. Amor, and many others; in 'Cello, H. Chipp, Lucas, Aylward, Pettit, and Buels; in Double-Bass, Howell and White, while nearly all the existing wind instrument players and organists have at least been educated by native teachers who owe their existence to the Royal Academy.'

Photo by]

[Alexander Corbett

SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE

Of the present staff of about a hundred there is no need to speak. The mere list of their names in the current prospectus is the best of evidence as to the position now occupied by the Academy. Nor is it necessary to dwell on Sir Alexander Mackenzie's share in bringing about this state of affairs. When due credit is given to Sterndale

Bennett and Macfarren for their sterling work on behalf of the institution, the fact remains that the R.A.M., always in danger until Sir Alexander became Principal, has been an increasingly brilliant success ever since. As composer, his part in the renaissance of British music is beyond dispute. We do not belittle that share when we say that in the long run his work at the Royal Academy of Music may prove to be an even more potent factor in the musical life of the nation.

OUR DECADENCE

BY RUTLAND BOUGHTON

Music was an aristocratic privilege in the days of Byrd and Wilbye; in the time of Bach and Handel it was a popular art; it became exclusive again under the hands of Mozart and Beethoven; and more general in both practice and appeal during the period which culminated in Wagner. But whether the appeal was a large or a small one there was always a certain quality in the music which proved that the understanding of it was not confined to professional musicians. The country lady who employed Wilbye, the masses who acclaimed Handel, the noblemen who supported Beethoven, and the throng of contemporary Wagner worshippers were amateurs who loved music chiefly for its elements of rhythm, form, melody, harmony, and so on. They may have been pained by certain dissonances, they must often have misunderstood the tendencies, and they certainly missed many subtleties of which the composers themselves were aware; but they had a sufficient enjoyment of the music to prove that it was no more an art for musicians only than chairs were articles of furniture solely for the use of joiners. But a very great part of contemporary musical activity is enjoyed only by musicians—that is, if we take them at their own word and believe that they do indeed have honest joy of it. In view of the vogue of the Russian ballet, some people may be inclined to think that the kind of music so many of us are up against makes the same sort of popular appeal, in spite of the hostility of the faculty, that Wagner's music made in his early days. That, however, is a point we will discuss later in this article. For the moment we need bear in mind only that Stravinsky at the Alhambra meant full houses and a commercial success, while at Queen's Hall during the existence of the same boom his works could not pay their way. But altogether apart from the very much engineered Stravinsky movement, there exists a mass of music of a similar kind which has no sort of hold on any but a small band of musicians; and it is clearly an unhappy state of affairs when a number of people are engaged in producing things which are of no earthly use to anyone but themselves, inasmuch as they become deprived of the means of exchange which secures an honest livelihood, and (what is still worse) of the sense of sharing with the majority of men the essential things of life—friendship and love, the sun and moon, wisdom and folly, and all the other forces which unite to find expression and give joy by means of the arts.

The indifference or positive dislike which so many cultured and uncultured people have for cacophony, and the fact that we have to fall back on early composers for a clear statement of musical principles, are, I submit, signs that modern music has lost its way. In a recent number of the Musical Times I dealt with the present situation at some length, and suggested a practical step towards recovery.* Now it will be well for us to discover what vital principle, if any, has been violated to bring us to this pass—what principle, if any, existing in the great music of the past is being ignored in the music of to-day. Then we may be able to recover the connection, and more surely go on our way with such developments as may seem to arise—for it cannot be a good thing for us to be dependent entirely on the art of the past. However great it may be as art, and however permanent its influence, the very forms in which it is cast must hinder any large enjoyment of it by people other than musicians. This morning I saw the sun rise and turn a dull green field first to silver and then to gold, and experienced such emotions as must have been felt by many worshippers of Apollo. But for us no Delphic hymn would give adequate re-creative form to that experience, nor to any full extent would Chaucer's rapture on the daisy seem a true morning-song to people living under conditions which prevent them from seeing the day's eye open. We must have our own sane modern music in spite of the insane music of the present, and equally in spite of the sane music of the past.

In the article already alluded to I suggested the passage from Mozart to Beethoven as being the moment when music definitely began to lose its way. Let us examine the suggestion for what it is worth.

All the great masters of music up to and including Mozart represent culminating points of art made by a body of musicians under certain local or temporal conditions. They felt themselves as units of a group, were comparatively indifferent as to their personal importance in the group (at any rate so far as posterity was concerned), seeking chiefly two things: their daily bread and the advantage of the art they practised. Some did not even sign or avow their works. So it follows that the greatest musician of any particular time, group, or place represents a community of purpose, and is often credited with compositions which were actually the work of lesser men. Rubinstein rightly remarked that of Bach as of Homer it might be said that 'this is not the work of one man but of many.' When we appreciate this point of view Handel's so-called thefts lose much of their odium, for he is seen, not as an unimaginative artist eking out his thought by robbing other men, but as a master making the best use of a mass of material common to his age. This attitude was fairly preserved up to the time of Mozart, so that it was possible for Süssmayer to complete the unfinished Requiem without seriously offending professional or public opinion, and, what is more, without injury to the work as a whole; for it is only a very prejudiced person who will declare any movement of it to be seriously below the standard of the rest of the work. For my own part, and judging solely by the score, I am unable to say which movements were left unwritten by the master himself. He was, however, the last great master to whose work such a thing could have happened.

With Beethoven everything is changed from the outset—personal conditions of work, personal attitude to the existing art (including that of his own master), and a true conception of what is original and individual.

Personal conditions of work (e.g., whether a musician is an organist or a theatre conductor) are bound to a large extent by circumstances over which one has no control; and even the personal attitude of the artist himself is part of a vanity that is inborn, and to a certain extent also beyond complete control. But a right conception of what really is original and individual in art is so vital to its life and health that we need to give it some thought.

Originality is the sign by means of which we recognise the various sources of thought and form which influenced a composer. The originality of Bach declares him as the great sea into which flowed many converging streams of polyphonic form, Protestant thought, and Gothic tradition. We can trace his work back to its origins as easily as we can trace rivers from their mouths to their springs.

Individuality is the sign by means of which we recognise that an art-work is not standing alone, is not divided from other similar work of its time. The individuality of Mozart associates the form of his musical thought with that of Haydn, Salieri, and many lesser men. If it is the work of the greater men that survives rather than the work of the others, it is not because of its greater individuality (a phrase without syntax or sense) but because it is better work, and generally—though not necessarily—because it carries greater thought. The thought may be so strong and strange that no available technic can give it adequate form—and this happened with Blake and to a great extent with Beethoven; but theirs was not individual so much as dividual art. The more individual and definite the thought of the artist the more likely he is to find a clear and adequate expression for it in whatever forms and idiom are current at the time.

For us of to-day, however, the words 'originality' and 'individuality' have come to carry thoughts which are exactly opposed to their real and original meaning. For us originality means novelty and an absence of original descent; while individuality means character so peculiar that it is divided from the general character of contemporary work of the same kind. This inversion of thought seems to have occurred in connection with the music of Beethoven. Now I firmly believe that the spirit informing the music of Beethoven is, work for work, a greater spirit than that which informs the music of Mozart. But it is the spirit of passion, egoism, rebellion, and severance; and it tends to dissolution even in its creativeness.

* 'Modern Music and a Way Out.' April, 1922.

Mozart's musical thought varies from the comparative vacuity of scale and arpeggio themes to the noble and condensed material of the C minor Mass, an even finer work than the Requiem. His predominant moods are sweet, calm, and gay; he is melancholy seldom, draws near to passion only on the rarest occasions, and then in the most guarded way. His Fantasia in C minor may be cited as one of his few approaches to passionate expression, and it affords an admirable example of wild emotions suggested without abandonment. The emotion of the work never gets out of control, being always checked by the will for technical clarity of statement and musical euphony.

Beethoven's thought, on the other hand, was passionate from the outset. He seems to have had the very shortest childhood as an artist, the very shortest period of making music just for the love of beauty and happiness, and he enjoyed depths of calm only by chance, as it were, or after immense struggles, fighting for a pure, clean line of musical theme (as his sketch-books show), as most artists have had to strive for the more terrible and darker shapes of tone. Even his least interesting passage-padding seems full of anger and pain. A very notable and characteristic wildness of Beethoven's was to launch himself on the chord of the diminished seventh, floating hither and thither without aim, taking this path and that, but following none, and generally finding himself at the end of the delirium much where he was at the beginning of it. I do not refer to such passages as that in the first movement of the Sonata Appassionata, where the emotion gradually drops from frenzy to the sulky muttering opening of the recapitulation, but to such desperate use of the chord as occurs towards the end of the Sonata in C sharp minor, where four bars are inserted to declare that the master is at the end of his means of expression, that the emotional stress has passed beyond the language of music; or, again, to such tentative use of the chord as occurs near the end of the big Trio in B flat for pianoforte and strings, where it is used for the sake of its tonal vagueness to allow of the insertion of the Presto in the unrelated key of A, at the end of which we find ourselves exactly where we were, so to speak, for the Coda then proceeds in the right key, as it could have done without the interposition of the A major passage. It may be contended quite fairly, of course, that such characteristic passages and usages are an extension of musical expression, and the contention need not be denied; but it is plain that they are also of that kind of expression which is so passionate as to be uncontrollable and beyond the limits of clear phrase and shapely form. Passion is indeed a more tremendous force than gaiety and melancholy, but it does not make for clearness or beauty in the arts any more than it does in life. And because passion and ugliness are near akin, we find Beethoven infinitely less concerned with the need for euphony. He clashes dissonances which Mozart would not admit, and even Bach would have prepared and softened, tolerating them only as inevitable details of some vital polyphonic scheme which could not be achieved without their presence.

In these days when there is a positive cult of cacophony, it may seem absurd to draw attention to the occasional harshnesses of Beethoven; but it was in his music that they were first admitted, and for a very significant reason. He had already accustomed himself to a kind of musical thought beyond the power of clear expression in tone; it was but a small step further to seek relief for the still unexpressed parts of his nature outside the art of music altogether—for, unlike the masters who preceded him, it was self-expression he sought rather than the service of musical art. The need of his nature was not that individuality which gives the artist the sense of the vanishing of the self, but rather to declare his divided self in the most emphatic way possible.

Before the time of Beethoven music had often enough been associated with ideas of poetry, dance, and drama, and suited its emotion to whatever need be of harshness, suffering, or evil experience that might occur in this association. But under the most vehement stress the music was never allowed by any great master to abrogate its own musical laws.

Weelkes in many a madrigal, Purcell in many a melodic phrase, Bach in whole movements of instrumental accompaniment, Mozart in his operas (notably in the Finale of Don Juan), associated the musical sound with ideas of pain and evil, but in every case it had to work out its own rights as musical art—preparing and resolving dissonant chords, balancing phrase with phrase, and generally securing a fair musical shape quite independently of its extra-musical association. Mozart's Requiem is a self-standing piece of music, though every section of it is in emotional agreement with the ideas with which it is associated, but the trumpet music in Beethoven's Missa Solemnis can be explained only by something entirely outside the art and purpose of the work. Similarly, Bach's Caprice on the Departure of a Brother has no musical moment which cannot be justified by the laws of euphony; but Beethoven's Lebewohl Sonata contains dissonances which are merely clumsy unless we think of them in non-musical terms and imagine, not cadences of tone, but rude people pushing each other about in the clamour of their farewells.

Some of Beethoven's ineptitudes were probably due to carelessness (e.g., the jarring A flat in the Eroica Symphony), others to deafness (e.g., the disproportion of tone as between the different orchestral families in the Choral Symphony), but making every such allowance there yet remains a large body of musical ugliness definitely associated with unpleasant thoughts outside the realm of music, and only sufferable when one ceases to regard the music as such, but accepts it as a mere accompaniment to the thought. Either the master's moods were too powerful, passionate, and painful for euphony to endure, or his technique was not sufficiently developed to carry his ideas. Or, yet again, his thought did not always reach that pure and essential form where music inevitably follows. However that may be, it was a serious thing for musical art, which up to his time stood as vital an expression of the spirit of the Christian era as sculpture had stood to the faith of classic Greece—Bach and Mozart in music being fair equivalents of Phidias and Praxiteles in marble. Beethoven in his turn proved himself the Scopas of his art—admitting a degree of passion which could only be expressed by ugliness, and arriving at a pass where the form and detail of the music needed to be explained by something quite outside the art.

Choice has, therefore, to be made, in reconstructing the art of music for the future, between the principles which prevailed before and since the time of Beethoven. Euphony must stand as an immutable law, based on the physical construction of the human ear and brain, and what cannot be expressed without a violation of euphony must be regarded as outside the realm of music. And then, though music may be allowed to be associated with the other arts, its own laws may never be abrogated—the music set to verse or to a dance must be a self-standing piece of work, just as satisfying in the concert-room as in the theatre, and just as perfect without words or extraneous thought as with them. For is it not by this time sufficiently clear that Stravinsky's success at the Alhambra and his failure at Queen's Hall were due to the fact that his ballets conform to the laws of the stage but fail to conform to the laws of music?

A few musicians with a philosophical and historical point of view may perhaps ask if we, living in a decadent age, may not be forced, will-we, nill-we, to fall into line with the evil of an out-worn civilisation—if we may not, perhaps, be more fully in the life-stream doing the work of decadence than struggling against it? But that point of view is based on a misconception as to significance of the decadent periods of art. To descend a mountain is not a less moral proceeding than to ascend one; indeed, having reached the top we have simply got to descend if only in order to ascend the next, or die of too much fresh air. If anything the process of descent needs the greater skill, and the great works of art produced during the Greek decadence (works like the Victory of Samothrace and the Aphrodite of Melos) are as beautiful in their way as the sterner virtues of the intellectual climb which attained to the Lemnian

Athena and the frieze of the Parthenon. So also, the symphonies of Brahms and Elgar, the songs of Schumann and Wolf, are as important to a broad understanding of the whole art of European music as the madrigals of Byrd, the fugues of Bach, and the sonatas of Mozart. The virtue is not in the chance of living in this or that period of an art, but in observing its vital laws whatever our period may be. Out of the decadence we are now experiencing a new art has to grow, and we shall best prepare the way for it by holding fast to the principles which carried to greatness the Masters of the Climb who observed them more or less instinctively, as well as the Masters of the Decadence who observed the same laws well enough to do good work in spite of the greater difficulties which beset them. And if you ask what those greater difficulties are, I fear I should have to write another article to reply; but to put the matter shortly, periods of crescent art are those in which the arts are devoted to the service of religion; and periods of decadent art those in which, the religion having lost force and faith, the arts are pursued for their own beauty's sake.

ON EDITING ELIZABETHAN SONGS

By PHILIP HESELTINE

In suggesting 'the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth' as a motto for modern editors of old music I am adopting an unpopular attitude against which all respectable editors will naturally rise in dignified protest. But a flattering review of some modern reprint is so often written by one who has obviously no knowledge of the original version—and therefore no knowledge of the discrepancies between the two editions—that those of us who are contemptuously called 'purists' by the kind of critic who deplores Rimsky's 'improvements' to Moussorgsky only because Stravinsky would have done them so much better, must occasionally endeavour to raise a stand on behalf of old, forgotten, far-off composers who are not allowed to sing for themselves.

In the days of the figured bass a certain amount was left to the discretion of the performer. Nowadays it is tacitly assumed that performers have no discretion. Granting this, it is hard to believe that the average performer would be guilty of such flamboyant indiscretion as distinguishes the work of certain editors of Henry Purcell. But there was a great—perhaps the greatest—period of music in England a century before Purcell's time, and the notation of this period left nothing* to chance. In the vocal music, melody, harmony, and bass are very clearly indicated in their every detail. How is it, then, that an editor rather than an intelligent copyist is employed by the modern publisher who wants to put this music on the market again? The answer is simple, but unpleasant. Though good stuff sells (sometimes), commonplace sells much better (always). If a living composer submits a work to a publisher, he is unlikely to agree to its being radically altered so as more effectually to tickle the vulgar taste which is either shocked or bored by originality. But when the composer has been in his grave for nearly three centuries, his works may be pillaged with infinitesimal risk of his wraith rising in protest, even though in his time he was one of the chief glories of his (and our) country's music. To some of us this seems wrong. We feel that a certain respect is due to all great artists—more especially when they are at the same time consummate technicians—however much their idiom may differ from that of our favourite modern composer. We do not translate Shakespeare into American; yet the Restoration mauling of his work, deplored by everyone, is no whit worse than the 20th century mauling of the music of his age which—I repeat with emphasis—is as technically perfect as any of his lyrics. Some people do not like the harsh dissonances of Schönberg; but you cannot 'translate' them into common chords without destroying their significance. Modern editors appear to dislike the extremely delicate and subtle harmony of the lutenists—harmony often suggested rather than stated, calling the imagination to delighted play in the hearing of it; but you cannot translate Elizabethan into Victorian without destroying its significance. There is no need to decry the Victorian in comparison with the Elizabethan. Both are good, but their blending is as grisly as Mr. Bottomley's breakfast of kippers and champagne.

* For the sake of strict accuracy it should be added that only one verse of a song was printed beneath the music, and there is occasional doubt as to the correct fitting of some of the other verses to the tune.

Now for specific instances. There is in the British Museum a manuscript, over three hundred years old, which contains several songs, tune and accompaniment being clearly and fully set forth in the notation of the period. One of these songs figures in a modern reprint,* but although the editor assures us in his preface that he has 'endeavoured to present [the songs] as far as possible in their original form and free from alterations,' not one bar of the original accompaniment remains intact, and even the bass has been rewritten.

In the April number of the Musical Times Miss Sylvia Townsend Warner discoursed very charmingly on the songs of the English Lutenists. She rightly insisted that these songs, so far from being 'antiques' or 'curios,' are as fresh and lovely to-day as the lyrics with which they are allied. So far from being material for the specialist and the scholar alone, difficult of execution and obscure to the understanding, their character is such as would win them universal popularity could they but be presented to the public in a clear, straightforward reprint, unspoiled by officious editorial 'improvements' on the one hand and pedantic adherence to certain obsolete conventions of notation on the other. Unfortunately Dr. Fellowes's edition of

The English School of Lutenist Song-writers, which Miss Warner so warmly commends, suffers conspicuously from both these defects.

Dr. Fellowes [writes Miss Warner] reproduces the tablature of the original lute-parts with an exact transcription underneath. He supplies further for each song a pianoforte accompaniment based exclusively upon the composer's own material, but so arranged as to be suited to the keyboard idiom. These arrangements, made with the minimum of alteration, show admirable sympathy and discretion. From the practical point of view they are absolutely justifiable, and from the critical point of view notably so. The lute is a plucked instrument of six strings with no power of sustaining a note, and thus a harmonic rather than a polyphonic instrument. But it was the instrument of a polyphonic age, and the lutenists' accompaniments, especially those of Dowland, are extremely contrapuntal in import, even when the exigencies of lute tablature thwart the full indication of this. The principle followed by Dr. Fellowes in his alternative accompaniments has been to complete the texture sketched in the tablature, which is certainly more representative of the composer's intention than any mere filling out of block chords could be.

This is a clever summary of the editorial methods of Dr. Fellowes, but it is the summary of a skilful barrister speaking from a brief. The principle of completing the polyphonic texture sketched in the tablature is already applied in the 'exact transcription'—justifiably enough, seeing that the strings are not entirely devoid of sustaining power. Dr. Fellowes in his General Preface to the edition admits 'having exercised his own discretion in interpreting the individual values of the notes as plucked on the lute; but the percussion of the notes on the pianoforte precisely corresponds with that on the lute.' Here is a simple example of the method employed:

TABLATURE (LITERAL TRANSCRIPTION)

Ex. 1.

night's black bird her sad in - fa-my sings, There let me live for - - lorn.

DR. FELLOWES'S TRANSCRIPTION

Ex. 2. (Voice part as in Ex. 1.)

let me live for - - lorn.

* Of the many versions of this song that have appeared in print not one is correct. The same may be said of Morley's It was a lover and his lass.

* Dr. Fellowes's error. This should be A.

But when we come to the new pianoforte accompaniment supplied by Dr. Fellowes, the polyphonic texture clearly indicated in the tablature is merely hinted at, while an additional part, doubling the voice (a practice never resorted to by the lutenists), has been added:

Ex. 3.

A foot-note informs us that the last bar quoted from the improved accompaniment 'has been borrowed exactly from Thomas Morley's setting of the Lacrimæ in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book.' This is equivalent to quoting any bar but the first from Brahms's Violin Sonata in A (♩ ♩, ♩) and saying that it has been borrowed exactly from Brahms's setting of Walther's Preislied. Apart from an accidental resemblance in the opening phrase, Morley's Pavan bears no resemblance to Dowland's song, of which there are two acknowledged transcriptions, by William Byrd and Giles Farnaby, in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book; but having been labelled as a transcription of Dowland's Lacrimæ, presumably by Messrs. W. Barclay Squire and J. A. Fuller-Maitland, the modern editors of the book (to whom be much gratitude for the book itself), the ascription has been accepted without further question, and uncritically repeated not only by Dr. Fellowes but by Dr. E. W. Naylor, M. van den Borren, Prof. Granville Bantock, and no doubt other professors and antiquarians as well.

It will be observed that in Dr. Fellowes's version a four-bar phrase of common time has been 'somewhat modified with the object of simplifying the interpretation of the music' (General Preface), but no signatures accompany the changes from

C to 3-4, 3-4 to 6-4, and 6-4 back to C, which this process of 'simplification' involves. There are, in fact, no time-signatures in any of Dr. Fellowes's versions.

The bar in Elizabethan times had none of the rhythmic or accentual significance with which it was subsequently invested. It was used in the song-books chiefly as a convenient method of enabling singer and accompanist to keep together—in the virginal books to help the left hand know what the right hand was doing. In the separate part-books, vocal and instrumental, bars rarely occur at all. It is therefore merely pedantic to retain this original irregular and largely arbitrary system of barring in a modern reprint which should be the means of bringing these songs not only to the libraries of professional musicians and musical institutions, but into the hands of every English-speaking amateur who ever buys or sings a good song; for music depends for real popularity upon the great body of amateurs rather than upon the comparatively small body of professional musicians. And to replace the old system of irregular barring by a new one is a most unnecessary procedure, seeing that every Elizabethan song can be divided into bars of equal length (changes from duple to triple time being invariably marked in the original editions). This regularity is a great convenience to the reader, and detracts nothing from the music so long as it is phrased intelligently and not accented by the bar.

The average amateur knows little about musical history, and cares less. He is a shy bird when it comes to exploring new fields of music, and anything suggestive of archæology is a sure and certain scarecrow to frighten him away. He merely wants a good song clearly printed in the most readily intelligible form for reading and singing. Let us suppose him an enthusiastic lover of Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, Sidney, and the rest. Someone tells him that the songs of the period are as lovely as the lyrics, and he goes into a music-shop and opens a volume of Dr. Fellowes's edition. His eye lights at once on hieroglyphics which have no meaning for him and no connection with any form of musical notation he has ever encountered. Accompanying them he sees three staves of ordinary music-type, but even these present an unfamiliar and forbidding appearance. A bar containing fourteen minims is preceded by one of four minims, and followed by one of two without any warning, and breves—another scarecrow—abound. Small wonder if he turns hurriedly from such pages with the thought that they are not for the likes of him. And if he does not altogether abandon his idea of getting acquainted with the music of Shakespeare's England, he will in all probability turn to some such edition of Elizabethan songs as that produced by Mr. Frederick Keel. Nothing could be more delightful—to look at (how much appearance counts with the amateur, fearful of unaccustomed difficulties on every page!). Simple tunes in familiar crotchets and quavers, and nice easy accompaniments which anybody could play and many transpose at first sight. So Mr. Keel's volumes are purchased and our amateur begins to entertain his friends with Elizabethan love-songs, oblivious of the fact (for Mr. Keel's modesty forbade him to mention it in his preface) that the accompaniments bear no relation whatever to the original tablature, having been entirely composed by Mr. Keel, complete with new basses and all.

Now we come to the question of arranging music so as to be suited to 'the keyboard idiom.' This is a tiresome and meaningless phrase. Flatly, there is no such thing. Every significant composer uses the keyboard in a different manner, as everybody knows perfectly well. We enjoy Liszt's transcriptions of Schubert's songs as one great artist's commentary upon the work of another; but such commentaries spring from excess of love and appreciation of the original work in its original form, an attitude as far removed from pedantic notions of the original's inadequacy for modern requirements as the pedant is ever removed from the creative artist.

The original accompaniments of the Elizabethan song were designed for the lute and the bass-viol, but in no example do they contain anything that the pianoforte cannot successfully and beautifully reproduce without any alteration whatever. The lute, as Miss Warner observes, was the instrument of a polyphonic age, but these songs belong to the transition period, and we must not forget the important part played by the lute in promoting the concept of harmony as such and in stimulating genuinely homophonic thought. Is there anything peculiarly offensive to the modern ear in four-part harmony in which the voice bears a part not doubled in the accompaniment? Or in a common chord of which the voice sings the third while the accompaniment sustains the open fifth? Or in a bass which is not pounded out in octaves? And is it essential to propriety and decorum that the pianist's right and left hands should be continually an octave and a half apart? Dr. Fellowes would, it seems, answer all these questions in the affirmative, and though one cannot but admire the spirit which has prompted him to publish so much good music, one cannot on the other hand but regret that in this particular department he has not shown a little more humility and a little more reverence for the finished work of great masters. For Dowland—to name but the chief of them all—was one of the most technically proficient as well as one of the most inspired song-writers the world has ever seen, and no one who has any regard for purity of style—to say nothing of a sympathetic understanding of the music itself—would wish to add to or detract anything from what he has written. Wholesale doubling is bad enough, but wholesale decoration with twiddle-bits that the most charitable euphemism could not call counterpoints is impertinent and unjustifiable from any point of view, whether practical or critical.

When the first volume of The English School of Lutenist Song-writers appeared, I was given to understand that the 'alternative accompaniments' were added reluctantly by Dr. Fellowes at the request of his publisher. Now, however, that Mr. Winthrop Rogers is dead and private generosity alone enables the edition to be continued, one regrets more than ever the money expended on their inclusion in volumes which might otherwise, at equal cost, contain twice as many genuine Elizabethan songs (there are over six hundred of them, of which but fifty have as yet appeared in this edition, which aims at completeness).

It may be argued that I am unduly critical of Dr. Fellowes's improved accompaniments seeing that these are, at least, constructed upon the original basses and may be compared with the naked original that appears on the preceding page. My quarrel, it is true, is not specifically with Dr. Fellowes's accompaniments (horrible as they indeed sound, regarded as original works in 'the keyboard idiom'), but with the principle of tampering with fine work that is already complete in all its detail. The amateur, seeing any alternative version alongside the original, naturally concludes that there is something wrong with the latter, and is at once predisposed to regard the songs not as living music but as archæological specimens in need of restoration for practical use. But works of art cannot be restored save by a genius equal in all respects to that which created them. Craftsmanship titivating the work of genius is a sorry spectacle; and in conclusion I would ask those doctors and professors who may even now be stirring their ill-smelling pots of editorial glucose and colouring matter to stay their hands awhile and reflect upon some wholesome remarks of Mr. Cecil Gray, occasioned by the work of Béla Bartók, who [says Mr. Gray] has freed himself from ... the tyrannic conventions of musicianship which are in reality its negation—all those superfluous counterpoints, meaningless figurations, and all the other familiar forms of remplissage which have so long inhibited all native freedom of expression, like a kind of elephantiasis. The Greeks used to believe that the man who would not show himself naked must necessarily have some physical defect. The characteristic musicians' maladies are gymnophobia and agoraphobia—the fear of nakedness and of empty spaces.

THE BLACKBIRD'S SONG

BY ALEXANDER BRENT SMITH

William Ernest Henley, the Gloucestershire poet, had a real countryman's love for the blackbird. He says:

The blackbird plays on a boxwood flute
... I love him the best of all.

Most poets, if asked to name the bird-singers in order of merit, would lead off with the nightingale, though I very much doubt if half the poets who rhapsodise about nightingales ever heard one sing. He is a wonderful singer undoubtedly, but a star-performer who will sing only to suit himself. But the blackbird sings his heart out on every occasion, and if anything he sings his best when everything is sodden under foot and tattered clouds are trailing through the hills. And what a flute he has! From some far distant tree he sings, and through the sound of dripping rain and the chatter of bickering sparrows in the blackthorn hedge his song is clearly heard. And what a song he sings! For many years I have kept my ear upon him, and noted his turns of melody. I will not compare him with the nightingale, because my human frailties have interfered with my study of the latter's song. But of birds who sing by day the blackbird is by far the most musical. His song is individual; no two blackbirds sing the same, and yet they seem to be governed by a passing fashion which decides the form but not the details of the song. This year the fashion decides that songs are to be very simple in design, consisting chiefly of a graceful arpeggio, cut rather short, decorated about the close with a delicate shake. My blackbird, therefore, sings a tune of which the following is the chief motive:

Two years ago the fashion was for much more elaborate tunes, founded upon an arpeggio groundwork but trimmed with chromatic passing-notes. My present little friend's grandfather, the pride of his landlord and the neighbourhood, sang the following motive:

(N.B.—This is transposed down about a fifth.)

This was the principal theme of the song, sung marcato and, I think, un poco nobilmente. After many repetitions of this tune, he would add a cadence possessing great distinction, yet again conforming to the fashion of the year:

Sometimes he would give a new significance to the phrase by pausing after the E and flinging out the last two notes with a ring of finality.

Who taught the blackbird to sing in intervals that we can reproduce through our men-made musical notation? Did the blackbird pick his intervals from man, or is there in the depths of nature some guiding principle of sound which birds by chance may stumble on in song? Personally I like the latter view, and I hazard an opinion that though our experimentalists who live in the clangour of the streets may astonish their friends with sophisticated intervals of their own devising, yet for mankind who live in God's own fields the music that will be their happiness and consolation will lie within those worn-out intervals which ring as fresh and beautiful among the trees to-day as they did when God first taught the blackbird, the cuckoo, the thrush, and the nightingale to sing their native tunes in Paradise.

MUSIC AND COMMUNISM

By C. D. GRAHAM

In a previous article* some reference was made to the importance attached by the Bolsheviks to what is described as 'cultural propaganda.' There is no need again to enlarge upon the apparent anomaly of a policy which aims at a sane mind at the expense of a sound body. Culture, it seems, still has its uses, although recent associations have placed it on the list of 'tainted' words recently referred to by Mr. A. B. Walkley.

As early as 1918 the Soviet recognised the value of music as an anodyne for 'killing care and grief of heart.' Accordingly, in October of that year a body possessing the imposing title of the 'Commissariat for Public Enlightenment,' of which Lunascharsky was the head, decreed that music, in common with all other enterprises in Russia, was to be socialised. Among other changes involved, this meant that the conduct of the Conservatoires had to be submitted for approval to specially appointed commissaries instead of being left to the discretion of the governing board of professors. It was decreed also that the students were to be represented on the board by a council of 'elders,' elected from among themselves.

Those who know their Gilbert will remember what happens to a community where 'everybody's somebody.' The scheme, however, seems to have worked well enough in the main, although in some cases it naturally resulted in a good deal of mutual recrimination between the pupils and their nominal chiefs. The reorganization had another comic aspect, for in order to conform still further to the Gilbertian ideas of Communism and the dignity of Labour—and presumably of Art—it was considered advisable to revise nomenclature as well; thus 'work-shop' was substituted for 'class,' 'master-worker' for 'professor,' 'great assembly' for orchestra, and so forth.

Another astonishing step in the direction of providing music for the million was a decree under which instruction in all music schools was thrown open free of charge. Only in the case of the larger conservatoires was the stipulation made that applicants should display a certain amount of natural aptitude. In March, 1919, therefore, all students in the Moscow Conservatoire—to take a typical instance—were subjected to a weeding-out process. Those who failed to reach the qualifying standard were obliged to seek instruction elsewhere. For the rank and file, opportunity for obtaining gratuitous education was afforded by the numerous musical centres which were then springing up all over the country. Many such centres were already in existence, having been founded under the regime of Kerensky for the benefit of the lower classes. Other conservatoires in which high fees were being charged were also 'taken over' by the people, together with all other so-called 'bourgeois' property.

* Musical Times, May, 1922.

professional hornist brings an instrument crooked in F, and in F that instrument remains, while with admirable patience he transposes all the parts at sight, except of course those sections which are scored for horn in F, and so require no transposition. What does the reactionary think? Nothing. He does not think: he exists as a being apart, in a sphere of marvellous imagination. But he gives his horn player a cheque, and perhaps compliments him on his tone, quite oblivious to the fact that, during the greater part of the performance, notes made by the valve were used almost exclusively!

When, not much less than half a century ago, Tchaikovsky wrote the beautiful horn solo in the Andante of his fifth Symphony, he must have realised then that the mechanism of valves as applied to brass wind instruments had been successfully perfected. Note these passages, and the 'fingering'—the usual three valves being used separately and in combination, in addition to the normal 'open' notes:

performer, appreciate also the convenience of scoring for trumpets in exactly the same key as clarinets.

But the reactionary appears to delight in difficulties—difficulties of a kind. He obstinately sets his face against chromaticism, though so great a master as Richard Wagner, forty years ago, saw fit, at the commencement of the Parsifal Prelude, to score the air for trumpet solo (in F):

Richard Strauss, after his unfortunate pronouncement above quoted, will hardly be acceptable as a model to the prehistorics, yet, deplorable as may be the fact, his works are frequently performed by our greatest orchestras. No critic, so far, has had fault to find with the tonal effect of the chromatic trumpet solos Strauss delights in, one of which, from Don Quixote, is here quoted:

Occasional Notes

We have received copies of the Perthshire Advertiser containing a correspondence concerning Mr. Hugh Robertson, the conductor of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir. With the point at issue we have nothing to do—indeed we do not know even what it is, as we have not seen the opening letters; our concern is solely with a passage in a letter written by Mr. F. H. Bisset, the president of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir. Mr. Bisset, alluding to our criticism of the Choir's recent concert in London, says that 'the Musical Times has been nothing if not consistent in its ill-tempered unfriendliness to Mr. Robertson. But [he adds, darkly] there are reasons for everything.' Presumably Mr. Bisset has his reasons for accusing the Musical Times of being consistently unfriendly to Mr. Robertson, but for the life of us we can't imagine what they can be. So far as a glance at our past volumes can show us, the Musical Times has contained only one adverse criticism of the Orpheus Choir—that written in connection with the London concert. If the word 'consistent' means anything, Mr. Bisset must be able to point to a good deal more than that. One adverse criticism no more proves consistent ill-tempered unfriendliness than does one swallow make a summer. Everybody knows of Mr. Robertson's work for choral music in Scotland, and the Musical Times would be false to its traditions if it in any way belittled such work. But no choir is above criticism. The Glasgow Orpheus came to London with such a high reputation that we paid it the compliment of judging it by the standard we have heard reached in the best English choral centres. It struck us as falling short of this standard, and we said as much, giving our reasons. Mr. Bisset assumes that frank criticism of this kind must necessarily be inspired by unfriendliness. Does he (to be consistent) assume that some at least of the highly laudatory notices are due to the writers' personal regard for Mr. Robertson? Mr. Bisset cannot have it both ways. Any kind of public appearance is a challenge to criticism. There are ingenuous débutants who regard favourable notices as proofs of critical acumen and pooh-pooh the unfavourable ones as evidence of the milder forms of lunacy (or even 'ill-tempered unfriendliness'). We may tolerate such an attitude in young and inexperienced soloists, but we expect something different from one who is chairman of the Glasgow Musical Competition Festival Association; chairman of the Edinburgh Musical Competition Festival Association; vice-chairman of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals (headquarters, London); chairman of the Scottish Musical Competition Festivals Joint Advisory Council; president of the Glasgow Orpheus Choir; ex-president of the Glasgow Bach Choir; president-elect of the Edinburgh Bach Society; ex-member of Executive of the Glasgow Society of Musicians; late conductor of the Greenock Male-Voice Choir and other choirs; correspondent for Scotland for the Musical News and Herald (London); musical critic and reviewer for the now defunct New Tribune; and frequent adjudicator at Scottish and English Musical Competition Festivals—for the Perthshire Advertiser, in an awestruck footnote, tells us that Mr. Bisset is all these. He must be a busy man, but none the less we must ask him to spare time to give us particulars of the consistent unfriendliness of which he accuses us. If he is unable to produce chapter and verse, he will no doubt be ready to withdraw the remark.

Now that our Tudor composers are at last in a fair way of having justice done them, it is to be hoped that we shall extend the revival work so as to include some worthies who were less fortunate in the date of their birth. A composer who spends the greater part of his working life in a transition period is apt to come off badly in the matter of posthumous honour and glory. Such a composer was John Blow, whose fame suffers, too, from his having been so completely overshadowed by Purcell. It is good to hear that he is to be commemorated by a service at Westminster Abbey on Monday, July 3, at eight o'clock, when the whole of the music will be drawn from his works. Six anthems will be sung—Lift up your heads (hitherto unpublished), Save me, O God, Let Thy hand be strengthened (hitherto unpublished), Salvator Mundi, Sing we merrily, and I beheld, and lo! a great company. The last-named is perhaps Blow's most familiar work, but it has so far been printed in a corrupt form. The correct readings have now been restored. It will be given with orchestral accompaniment, as will also be Sing we merrily and Lift up your heads. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis will be sung to the setting in F, a fine contrapuntal work in a style somewhat reminiscent of Gibbons. It has so far existed only in MS. The service will close with a hymn by Blow, given in Playford's Divine Companion (1701), followed by the Gloria from the Jubilate in G.

The Abbey Choir and the Abbey Special Choir will join forces for the occasion, and the orchestral accompaniments will be played by a contingent of the British Symphony Orchestra. Tickets of admission are to be had on application (with a stamped addressed envelope) to the Secretary, Westminster Abbey Special Choir, the Song School, Westminster Abbey.

We understand that this Blow service is the first of a series of commemorations of the great English Church composers, more especially of those connected with the Abbey. The great value of such services is too obvious to need discussion, but we may be allowed to point out one direction in which they should be particularly helpful. Everybody knows that, so far as old English Church composers are concerned, the repertory of our choirs is not only extremely meagre, but quite unrepresentative in the matter of quality. Much of the finest work of the school remains in manuscript, or is available only in old editions that are inconvenient, and often corrupt as well. Blow, for example, wrote fourteen services and over a hundred anthems, but not a fifth part of his output is published. If the small portion that has been published happened to be the cream of his work there would be less cause for complaint, but musical historians tell us that this is not the case. Such services as these projected at the Abbey will do a much-needed work if they give choirs and choirmasters (and publishers' readers) an opportunity of hearing music that has been undeservedly neglected. The two anthems and the service that are to be revived at the Blow Commemoration have been copied at the British Museum by Mr. Sydney Nicholson, and have just been published by Messrs. Novello. It is safe to assume that they have not been performed since the composer's day.

'Blow [says Dr. Ernest Walker in his History of Music in England] is undoubtedly far the greatest of the Restoration composers, after his great pupil; and much of his Church music is of really noble quality, though some of the best still remains unpublished. . . . Blow's is one of the outstanding names in English music. . . . there are things in the best of his sacred compositions which can very fairly stand comparison with any contemporary music of any nationality.'

The Abbey should be crowded on July 3.

The Conference of the British Music Society will have opened by the time this number appears, but it is not too late to remind readers that the music at Westminster Abbey, Southwark Cathedral, Westminster Cathedral, and All Saints', Margaret Street, on July 2 will bear on the occasion by being specially chosen from native sources, ancient and modern; and that on July 3 the Conference ends with a concert by the London Contemporary Music Centre at Seaford House, by kind permission of Lord and Lady Howard de Walden.

The following order—apparently the result of the combined efforts of a heat-wave and an unmusical typist—was received by Messrs. Novello recently:

I Wrink's Organ School. W. T. Bass.

I Bark's Prelude and Fluids, Book No. 2.

A pity the list stopped so soon! Handel's Water Music and 'Ruddier than the Sherry' would have made up an attractive little consignment.

Seeing that all our daily papers have on their staff at least one musician, it seems odd that the editorial department does not make use of expert knowledge before printing musical matter received from lay sources. A week or two ago the Daily Chronicle published on its leader page an article on the cuckoo in which the song of that unprincipled fowl was three times shown thus:

One would have thought it impossible that a writer sufficiently educated to be a contributor to a great daily paper should be ignorant as to the position of an accidental. Even more surprising is it that the mistake should be made three times, and pass unquestioned through editorial and printing rooms.

Another example: the Pall Mall Gazette of June 9 contained an article headed 'London Girl Organist. Deputy for Sir Frederick Bridges (sic) at age of sixteen. Eyes on an Abbey.' One naturally supposes that the London Girl Organist had deputised at Westminster Abbey, but it turns out that she had merely taken Sir Frederick's place at a political demonstration held at Central Hall! The P.M.G. writer makes great play with the fact that this young woman, though only just seventeen years of age, is 'a proficient organist of great promise after a year's study', and is now able to play an occasional service for her teacher, Mr. Allan Brown, at the City Temple. As he tells us later on that she was being taught the pianoforte at the age of eight, we are less astonished than he expects us to be. Miss — may have all the talent claimed for her, but the P.M.G. rhapsodist may take it from us that there is nothing 'remarkable' in a student of seventeen, after nine years' pianoforte lessons and one year at the organ, being able to play at the City Temple—or even at a political demonstration. We hope the London Girl Organist will go ahead and attain all her ambitions, but the less she allows herself to be interviewed and written up in this way the more likely she is to reach that Abbey on which she has her eyes.

From the Annual Report of the Fitzwilliam Museum we learn of some recent additions to the music department. An autograph letter of Robert Schumann has been given by Sir Herbert Thompson to accompany his previous donations of musical autographs. Mr. Denis R. H. Browne has presented a quantity of books from the library of his brother W. C. Denis Browne, of Clare College, who while at Cambridge took a leading part in its musical life. He died in 1915 of wounds received in action at Gallipoli. Other gifts to this department have been received from Captain Evelyn Broadwood, H. J. W. Tillyard, of Gonville and Caius College, J. B. Trend, of Christ's College, and the Director of the Biblioteca de Catalunya at Barcelona.

A very interesting new departure is to be made at the presentation of diplomas at the R.C.O. on July 22. Probably many of those attending such functions have said to themselves: 'Here on the platform are some of our finest organists, and close by the platform is an organ. Why shouldn't we be given a little music, even if, in order to make time for it, some of the votes of thanks and other oratorical standing dishes have to be sacrificed?'

The R.C.O. Council has asked itself the same question, and answered it by arranging that at the next presentation Dr. W. G. Alcock will kindly play the pieces chosen for the December Fellowship examination. Wise students will bring copies of the pieces and make notes. They will not be wise, however, if they run away with the idea that the interpretations they hear are necessarily, or even probably, those the examiners will expect from candidates. The object is rather to give members, especially those from the remoter parts of the country, a chance of hearing the test-pieces played by acknowledged masters, and so realising the technical and general standard at which they should aim. No doubt opportunity will be found later on for a performance of a group of Associate tests.

Organ students seem to be specially favoured in this way—at all events we have not heard of pianoforte, violin, or vocal recitals, given publicly, in which the programmes are made up from examination syllabuses. For once, the despised organist seems to be in front. The R.C.O. test-pieces have lately been played at various places in London, among others, at the National Institute for the Blind, by Mr. H. V. Spanner, and by Mr. Herbert Hodge at St. Stephen's Walbrook. Examinees who have not yet had an opportunity for taking advantage of such recitals should note that Mr. Hodge plays all the tests (Associate and Fellowship), during July at his weekly recitals at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey (Tuesdays, at 1).

Something new in the way of Summer Schools has been arranged by the Federation of British Music Industries in conjunction with the British Music Society. As a rule such holiday courses are for the more enthusiastic professional teachers. But there is an enormous amount of valuable educational work done by amateurs and part-time musicians—for example, in clubs and institutes, and in connection with village choral societies. A Summer School for such teachers (though of course not exclusively for them) will be held at Oxford from August 15 to 30. Here is the syllabus:

- Mr. Frank Roscoe: Principles of Teaching (four lectures).
- Mr. Robert McLeod: Aural Training and the School Singing Class (infants and older children).
- Mr. Percy A. Scholes: The History of Music—A Sketch of the subject and a discussion of its application in 'Appreciation' Teaching (three lectures).
- Dr. R. R. Terry: School and Village Choir Training for Competitions: Hints to Conductors (two lectures).
- Major J. T. Bavin: Teaching Musical 'Appreciation' with the Gramophone. School Violin Classes (twelve lectures).
- Mr. T. Pennyquick: (Head Master, Fonthill Road School, Liverpool) Music 'Appreciation' lessons in Elementary Schools. A demonstration of the lecturer's practical experience and methods (three lectures).
- Mr. Edward Mitchell: Pianoforte Lecture Recitals—The Modern Composers (eight lectures).

A civic reception will be held by the Mayor of Oxford; Sir Hugh Allen will make the opening speech, and Dr. Arthur Somervell the closing one. There is a tempting list of recreations, indoor and outdoor. Particulars may be had from the Federation of British Music Industries, 117-123, Great Portland Street, W.1.

The Form of Service for the R.A.M. Centenary Thanksgiving Service at St. Paul's Cathedral on July 17 has just been issued by Messrs. Novello. It contains ninety-five pages of music, all of which has been composed (a good deal of it for the occasion) by past and present members of the Academy. It is worth noting that of the two psalms included, one will be sung to plain-song, with some faux-bourdon verses, and the other to an Anglican chant. The two most important numbers are Dr. G. J. Bennett's anthem, This is the day, written for the Centenary, and the fine setting of Te Deum Laudamus, composed by Dr. Charles Macpherson for the Peace Thanksgiving Service, July 6, 1919.

May we venture to say a few timid words on behalf of poor old London? Of course the small attendance at the Leeds Choral Union's splendid performance of The Apostles made those of us who were present feel angry. But the haste with which Mr. Bernard Shaw and some of our newspapers handed out the blame led them to say some foolish things. For example, when Mr. Shaw says he apologises to posterity for he forgets that he is a writer of plays, with a bigger public in London than anywhere. Either metropolitan culture is not so bad as he thinks it is, or his plays appeal chiefly to sporting costermongers and grown up school-boys. And what is wrong with the sporting costermonger, anyway, that he should be used as an opprobrious epithet? We have been in far worse company at many a West-end concert. For underlining class distinctions there is nobody like your democrat!

. . . living in a country where the capacity and tastes of school-boys and sporting costermongers are the measure of metropolitan culture

'London's Apathy to Great Music' made a good large cap. headline in the Daily News, but has no other merit. Is it apathy to fine music that has made possible twenty-six consecutive seasons of Proms.? That fills the Albert Hall year after year for Gerontius, The Messiah, and other choral masterpieces? That led to a packed Queen's Hall for the B minor Mass, the Ninth Symphony, and other great music given by the Philharmonic Society and L.S.O. during the past season? That provides a steady public for chamber music by the finest players, native and foreign? Is there any other place in the country where a pianist (not a foreign lion, but a mere Englishman) could give Bach recitals for a week of afternoons and find it a paying proposition? Is it apathy, plus the taste of school-boys and costermongers, that is responsible for a two years' run of The Beggar's Opera, a record season of Gilbert and Sullivan, and (at the time of writing) successful seasons of serious opera given simultaneously at Covent Garden and Hammersmith? We could fill another column with examples of musical activity that are apparently possible nowhere else than in this uncultured and apathetic old metropolis. No; the small attendance at The Apostles was due chiefly to the fact that the performance was given at the wrong time—a time that was of course inevitable owing to the travelling plans of the choir. Everybody knows that what Mr. Shaw calls 'London Society' is by no means the most musical section of the public. The modest amount of enthusiasm it can screw up for the art runs in the direction of opera or star soloists. Of all kinds of music it has the least use for choral, especially when the choralists are engaged in oratorio. To give a choral concert at a time when, roughly speaking, the only leisured folk are those who have no use for choral music, is simply to book a failure. Even the most attractive of orchestral concerts have to be given in the evening or on a Saturday afternoon. We had a good proof of the difficulty of getting an audience on any other afternoon, when during the war the experiment was tried of shifting the Proms. from the evening to the afternoon in order to dodge air-raid alarms. The experiment was a failure. No doubt hard things are being said at Leeds. But would the Choral Union draw a big audience in Yorkshire on a Thursday afternoon in June? Mr. Shaw is fond of music, but cold where sport is concerned. There are plenty of us who like music as much as he does, but who may be pardoned if, given the choice between Queen's Hall and Lord's or the Oval on a summer's afternoon, we do not hesitate much before joining the cricket crowd. In a few trifling details this is still a free country, and Mr. Shaw, the Daily News, and the other democrats to whom liberty is supposed to mean so much, must allow folk to choose their own ways of spending their spare time. Mr. Shaw has no more right to shriek at people who prefer sport to oratorio than the sporting costermonger has a right to abuse Mr. Shaw for spending a fine afternoon listening to music when he might be spotting likely ones at Epsom.

Apropos of The Apostles, we note that the work is constantly spoken of as 'neglected.' Of course such a term is relative, and a number of performances that would be small for (say) The Messiah may be large in the case of a modern work. The Apostles was inevitably shelved during the war, and was rarely heard for the first two seasons that followed. This is not surprising, seeing that, in addition to making heavy demands on choir and orchestra, it calls for six first-rate soloists. Critics who seem to be unable to mention this work without tacking on the 'neglected' will be interested in the following list of performances :

- March 24, 1920—Leeds Choral Union—Leeds.
- May 8, 1920—Choral Leeds Union—Newcastle-on-Tyne.
- March 17, 1921—Notts Sacred Harmonic—Nottingham.
- May 7, 1921—Alexandra Palace Choral Society—London.
- September 7, 1921—Hereford Festival—Hereford.
- March 29, 1922—Leeds Choral Union—Leeds.
- March 30, 1922—Hallé Concerts—Manchester.
- April 11, 1922—London Choral Society—Queen's Hall.
- May 11, 1922—Peterborough Choral Union—Peterborough.
- May 18, 1922—Bedford Musical Society—Bedford.
- June 8, 1922—Leeds Choral Union—London.
- June 9, 1922—Leeds Choral Union—Canterbury.
- September 5, 1922—Gloucester Festival—Gloucester.

The crescendo is significant, and coincides with the gradual revival of the big choral societies—two performances in 1920, three in 1921, and seven in the short period from March 29 to June 9.

Members and friends of the Livery Club of the Worshipful Company of Musicians were entertained at a reception given by Mr. Augustus Littleton, the President, at 160, Wardour Street, on June 20.

Sir Dan Godfrey's knighthood is a fitting recognition (made none too soon) of fine, all-round work. An immense amount of talk about our native music is delivered, on paper and otherwise, with comparatively little result. Sir Dan's propaganda is the only kind that counts for much in the long run. He cuts the cackle and gets on with the performance. Lucky Bournemouth!

The seventh of our series of articles on 'British Singers and Players,' reviews of new books and music, gramophone notes, and some letters to the editor, are unavoidably held over.

'Mr. —, the yell-known local tenor, won the bronze medal.'—Scotch Paper.

Yell-known, certainly; but no longer merely local. We have lately heard him in quite a lot of places.

More news from over the water :

After more than a quarter of a century's service as conductor of the London Choral Society, Sir Frederick Bridge has retired from his post.—Musical America. This will enable Mr. Arthur Fagge, the Society's founder and first conductor, to take up his old post again.

Here are three extracts from the daily press, showing that music is at last taking its place among the things that matter :

By keeping the mind of his patient, a highly nervous girl, lulled with music from a wireless telephone, a New York surgeon was yesterday able to operate for appendicitis without even a variation in her pulse. A spinal anæsthetic was used, causing the patient to become insensible to pain from the shoulders downwards. Wireless telephone receivers were strapped to her ears, and she lay listening to a Chopin recital on the pianoforte while the surgeon operated.

The complaint against a woman in the Bow County Court, to-day, was that she was so 'crazed' on her gramophone that she would even have it going in the bathroom when she was having a bath.

Every afternoon, in — Restaurant, 'the Singing Mannequin,' a well-known opera singer, masked, will entertain visitors with selections from her repertoire whilst displaying the newest fashions.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL AT HALLE:

MAY 25 TO 28

BY E. VAN DER STRAETEN

Handel's birthplace, the town of Halle, in Saxony, celebrated the memory of its greatest son by a four days' Festival, organized by a committee of which Prof. Dr. Arnold Schering, the well-known music historian, Prof. A. Rahlwes, University music director, and Dr. B. Weissenborn, chief librarian, all of Halle University, were the principal moving spirits. The Festival was remarkable, firstly, in showing the master-mind in his various aspects; secondly, in bringing to light new facts concerning his person. It demonstrated, moreover, that gigantic proportions of chorus and orchestra, wonderful and impressive as their effect is in some of the monumental choruses, are not the best means of presenting Handel's work in the most artistic manner. This was clearly shown by the performances of the oratorios, Semele and Susannah, in which the choruses were rendered by the Robert Franz Vocal Academy of a hundred and sixty-three singers, under their conductor, Prof. Rahlwes. The Halle Orchestra was increased to sixty-four instrumentalists by twenty-three members of the Leipsic Philharmonic Gaartz in a very delicate manner, and the orchestra distinguished itself particularly in the exquisite Morpheus music. All this may seem extravagant praise, but may be justified by the fact that a crowded house, including several hundred eminent musicians and writers on music, as well as musical amateurs from all parts of Germany, Austria, Switzerland, England, and Italy, were absolutely electrified, and roused to a pitch of enthusiasm that I have seldom witnessed. Prof. Rahlwes was responsible for the edition of the work, while Prof. Schering had prepared the version of Susannah which was given at the Cathedral, conducted by Prof. Rahlwes. Mesdames Rose Walter as Susannah and Frieda Schmidtes (the servant) proved themselves possessors of fine and well-trained soprano voices, Dr. H. J. Moser (baritone) was an excellent Joachim, and the same applies to Mr. Ernst Meyer (tenor) as Daniel. Messrs. G. A.

Photo by)

(Newman Flower

DR. WEISSENBORN, DR. A. SCHERING, MR. E. VAN DER STRAETEN

and Gewandhaus Orchestras. With Semele the Festival began at the handsome theatre. In England this oratorio is known at present only by the two fine arias, Where'er you walk and O sleep, why dost thou leave me? although of its kind it is as great a work as The Messiah, and Prof. Rahlwes obtained a magnificent performance. He is imaginative, full of temperament, and called to life the many great beauties which the work contains. The choir sang with great precision and spirit, and produced a fine volume of sound of good quality. The soloists, especially Madame L. Leonard (soprano), Madame A. Leydhecker (contralto), Mr. George A. Walter (tenor, the quality of whose voice was not quite equal to his very artistic style), and Prof. A. Fischer, who combines a magnificent bass voice with the temperament of a great artist, acquitted themselves of their task in an excellent manner, the fine reading of the duet between Semele and Hera, and the beautiful aria of Morpheus, being worthy of special comment. The recitatives, &c., were accompanied on a concert grand (for want of a harpsichord) by Dr. Hans Walter, Prof. Fischer, and Dr. F. Viol, gave a fine rendering of the two Elders and the Judge. On Thursday evening there was a concert at the Marktkirche, where Handel first played the organ, the programme including his sixth Chandos Anthem and Organ Concerto in G minor, Op. 4, No. 1; also works by former organists of this Church, viz., Zachow, Wolff Heintz, William Brade (Variations for violin and organ), a fine Magnificat by Samuel Scheidt, Sacred Concert for soli, chorus, strings, and organ, by A. Krieger, and an impressive Sanctus by Friedemann Bach for chorus, orchestra, and organ, all performed for the first time. Friday began with the opening of the Handel Loan Exhibition by Dr. Weissenborn, who recently discovered that the house in which Handel was born stood at the corner of the Nocalai and Kleine Ulrichstrasse, and is not the adjacent one fixed upon (though not without misgivings) by Chrysander. Both are shown on page 488 in a photograph by Mr. Newman Flower. The pseudo-Handel house was decked with garlands for the Festival. The exhibition contained, among autographs, personal souvenirs, &c., what is probably the last portrait of Handel, which was found early this year by Prof. Werner in the possession of descendants of Handel's sister. In the evening there was a symphony concert, when the Overture, Ballet music, and the exquisite Dream music of Alcina, with the second part of the Water Music, formed the orchestral numbers, while Madame Leydhecker sang an aria from Tamerlane and two arias from Partenope, and Prof. Fischer the beautiful solo cantata Cuopie tal volta il cielo. On Saturday morning Prof. Schering gave a very interesting lecture on 'The World of Handel,' in which he pointed out that Handel's genius could never have attained its proper development but for his coming to England.

Photo by)

(Newman Flower

HANDEL'S BIRTHPLACE (THE HOUSE ON THE LEFT).

Sunday morning began with a musical service at the Marktkirche, where were heard a Motet from the eighth anthem, an Organ Fugue in C minor, 'Glory to God,' and 'Hallelujah' from The Messiah, an Organ Prelude, Es ist das Heil, by Zachow, and one by J. S. Bach on the same Chorale. At mid-day began a chamber concert of works by Handel in the Aula of the University: Trio for two oboes and Continuo in E flat major, played by Messrs. H. Schmiedel and A. Karl, and Dr. H. Gaartz; Lucrezia, solo Cantata for soprano, sung by Madame Leonard; Harpsichord Suite, in F minor, Miss A. Linde; Chamber Duet, Madame Leonard and Dr. H. J. Moser; two German Arias, with oboe and violin obbligato respectively, Madame Leonard; and the Harmonious Blacksmith Variations, Miss Linde. The whole programme met with an enthusiastic reception by the audience. At the banquet which followed a professor of Freiburg University told about his discovery of a letter from George I. to the King of Prussia which throws an entirely new light upon the story of the Water Music and Handel's relation to the Court; but of this anon. The evening brought the opera Orlando Furioso at the theatre, which proved a great success. Dr. H. J. Moser, who had translated and edited the opera, explained in an essay added to the programme-book that the staging could not be done as he would have wished it owing to present conditions. Nevertheless the scenery and costumes were most artistic and very well executed. The costumes adhered to the baroque style of Handel's time. The absurdities of the book are pushed into the background by the genius of Handel, who treats the characters from a psychological standpoint, and therefrom received the inspiration of a great deal of most beautiful music. Space, however, will not permit a detailed account of this. An excellent performance was conducted by Mr. Oscar Braun.

Messrs. Willi Sonnen, as Orlando, and Cornelius Barck, as Zoroaster, had exceptionally fine voices and shone in dramatic as well as cantabile passages, but their coloratura was less satisfactory. The Medoro of Mr. S. Matuczewski, Angelica of Madame Hilde Voss, and Dorindo of Madame Anna Eghardt were worthy of all praise. It is to be hoped that the intention of holding another Handel Festival at Halle in five years' time may crystallise and prove as great a success as that of 1922.

[Mr. van der Straeten's modesty prevents him from mentioning his own share in the Festival.

THE HANDEL PORTRAIT RECENTLY DISCOVERED
BY PROF. WERNER

From another source we hear of the success of his performance of a Gamba Sonata—the only one for which Handel wrote out a harpsichord part in full. Mr. van der Straeten used a very fine old English lyra-viol (the smallest bass-viol), made about the time of Charles I. Following is an extract from the Berliner Tageblatt of May 31:

The greatest artistic treat offered was a chamber concert in the Aula of the University in which the most select concert pieces of the master were magnificently rendered. The artists, especially Lotte Leonard (Berlin), Anna Linde (Berlin), E. van der Straeten (London), Dr. Hans Gaartz (Halle) received ovations such as were never known before in the industrial town of Halle.—Ed., M. T.

The Rondel Quartet—Miss Ethel Waddington, Miss Eleanor Tibbits, Mr. C. E. Dodge, and Mr. A. B. Bacon—gave an excellent programme at St. Helen's Gymnasium, Blackheath, on May 23. Half was Elizabethan (Lichfield, Wilbye, Morley, Edwards, Dowland), and half modern (Stanford, Ireland, Holst, Balfour Gardiner, Gerrard Williams, and Whittaker).

Music in the Foreign Press

ON JOHANNES BRAHMS

The twenty-fifth anniversary of Brahms's death is adequately commemorated by most German periodicals and a few non-German. The special Brahms numbers of the Neue Musikzeitung (April 6), the Zeitschrift für Musik (April 1), Cecilia (April 10, further contributions in May issue), and Die Musikwelt (June 1) contain much that will be prized by investigators.

In Die Musikwelt Prof. Ferdinand Pfohl writes :

As a composer Brahms belongs entirely to the 19th century. So far as actual influence is concerned, his music does not overstep that century's limits although it possesses vitality enough to carry it forward another hundred years. There have been 18th century composers—Haydn, C. Ph. E. Bach, and even, in a measure, Mozart—who express their period fully, are nowise revolutionists such as Gluck, Beethoven, or Wagner, and whose music endures. Thus is Brahms part and parcel of the 19th century. Comparing his Symphonies with those of Beethoven, you will see that they embody no progress, and are side-issues (Seiten-Aufwirkungen) rather than a sequel, a step towards the future. It is for that reason perhaps that Brahms, although he is to be considered as a specifically German composer, has never gained a real footing, from the higher point of view of culture and influence, outside Germany.

In the same issue, Dr. R. St. Hoffmann writes :

After a period of excitement over exoticism, impressionism, expressionism, and so forth, composers are reverting, O wonder ! to the study of polyphony and of form problems. They are writing variations and fugues. They are sick of mere colour, and long for form and design. Is not this the very spirit of Brahms, who always considered that without loving labour and accurate comprehension of form, there could be no genuine work of art ?

And Dr. Wilhelm Altmann investigates the genesis of Brahms's Op. 34—a subject upon which he brings new light to bear.

In the Zeitschrift für Musik Dr. Alfred Heuss writes :

Brahms reacted against the destructive elements which the modern spirit was introducing into German music. The critical history of the new German school, whose leader was Liszt, has not yet been written. Liszt, by creating a progressive party among German composers, has done German music a good deal of harm. It is he who is responsible for the fashion of seeking novelty at all costs. The easiest way to achieve novelty being to employ novel means, we saw whole generations of composers intent upon creating such means, and overlooking the fact that the essential thing is not to invent means, but appropriately to use means—old or new, provided they are suitable. This unaccountable misconception led 'progressive' circles to assert that Brahms is 'un-modern,' has nothing new to say, simply because he does not resort to new means. That nowadays his music should be alive and in full bloom, whereas that of hundreds of composers who achieved 'novelty' is dead and forgotten, is a fact whose moral is obvious.

In the Neue Musik-Zeitung the most interesting contributions are Dr. Grabner's ('The Elegiac in Brahms's music') and Alfred Weidemann's ('Brahms and Wagner'). A set of anecdotes, collected by Mathilde von Leinburg, makes rather depressing reading.

In the Musikblätter des Anbruch (March) Alexander von Zemlinsky publishes his personal recollections of Brahms.

Letters from Brahms to Ernst Frank appear in the April issue of the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft.

NEW WORKS BY BARTÓK AT FRANKFURT

The first performances outside Hungary of Bartók's music-drama Duke Blue-Beard's Castle, and of his ballet The Wooden Prince, have taken place at Frankfurt. Here are a few excerpts from notices in the local Press :

The obscurity of the libretto of Blue-Beard is regrettable; for from the musical point of view the work constitutes an impressive specimen of the newer order. Bartók's way of expressing the poem's various moods is most striking. The interest of the music lies in the wonderful, glittering combinations of timbres. The composer's fancy in this respect is inexhaustible, although it originates merely in a multiplication of Debussy, Schrecker, and other modern masters. The results are impressive, yet one never feels that he is confronting an artist endowed with great creative power: even Bartók's surpassing, and almost uncanny skill cannot disguise the fact. The score of The Wooden Prince marks a progress, and is noteworthy not only for its colour, but because it reveals an altogether fresh sense of rhythmic characterisation. Here Bartók's touch is masterful, telling, and entirely original. He reveals the most attractive aspects of his individuality.—Volkstimme, May 15.

In Blue-Beard Bartók is a master of melodic expression; but in his melody he uses sequences of intervals whose almost indefinable spiritual qualities and characteristic charm lie hidden under closed doors. His music may at first appear intricate and empty; but study will supply the key to its many beauties. The scoring is manly, heroic in character.—Volkszeitung, May 16.

The music of Blue-Beard is the outcome of thought and feeling rather than of a capacity to build. It lacks the actual live quality which befits the lyric stage, and also dramatic warmth. In many respects that of The Wooden Prince is more effective. Bartók's gift for the burlesque is undeniable; and his sense of characterisation finds ample opportunity to assert itself.—Frankfurter Zeitung, May 15.

In the Signale (May 31) Robert Hagenow remarks that despite, their external dissimilarity, both scores constitute an organic whole, and might be respectively the Andante and Scherzo of a huge symphony.

SCANDINAVIAN MUSIC

In the Musikblätter des Anbruch (May) Kurt Atterberg describes the contemporary Swedish school :

On one hand, a number of composers, unequivocally romantic in spirit, faithful to the principles of classical tradition, and not disinclined to use plain, forcible orchestral combinations; these composers are Hugo Alfvén, Natanael Berg, Ture Rangström, Oskar Lindberg, and Kurt Atterberg. On the other hand a number of modernists: Edwin Kallstenius, who writes harsh chamber music; Hennig Mankell, whose Piano-forte Concerto and piano-forte pieces are not dissimilar in style to the music of the younger Frenchmen; Daniel Jeisler; Viking Dahl, 'whose music reminds one of that kind of hallucinating piano-forte piece which can almost be played with one finger.'

In the Signale (May 10) Fritz Crome writes :

The younger generation of Norwegian composers is numerous, but comprises little that is worthy of notice. In Sweden, the most interesting among the younger men is Ture Rangström; Kurt Atterberg evinces individuality, his chamber music, ballet, and scores being interesting from the point of view of both colour and expression by rhythmical means. In Denmark, we find symphonists such as Victor Bendix, Louis Glass,

(Continued on page 495)

PART-SONG FOR MIXED VOICES

Words by PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY

Music by ERIC FOGG

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante

SOPRANO

espress.p

There was a lit - tle lawn-y is - let By an - e - mo - ne and vio - let,

ALTO

espress.p

There was a lit - tle lawn-y is - let By an - e - mo - ne and vio - let,

TENOR

espress.p

There was a lit - tle lawn-y is - let By an - e - mo - ne and vio - let,

BASS

espress.p

There was a lit - tle lawn-y is - let By an - e - mo - ne and vio - let,

Andante $\text{♩} = 72$

(For practice only)

p

Like . . mo - sa - ic, pa - ven : And its roof was flow'rs and leaves Which the

Like . . mo - sa - ic, pa - ven : And its roof was flow'rs and leaves Which the

Like . . mo - sa - ic, pa - ven : And its roof was flow'rs and leaves Which the

Like . . mo - sa - ic, pa - ven : And its roof was flow'rs and leaves Which the Copyright, 1922, by Novello and Company, Limited.

summer's breath en - weaves, Where . . nor sun nor showers nor breeze Pierce the pines and tall-est

summer's breath en - weaves, Where . . nor sun nor showers nor breeze Pierce the pines and tall-est

summer's breath en - weaves, Where . . nor sun nor showers nor breeze Pierce the pines and tall-est

summer's breath en - weaves, Where . . nor sun . . nor showers nor breeze Pierce the pines and tall-est

trees, p dolce Each . . a gem en - gra - ven. Girt by ma - nyan trees, p dolce Each . . a gem en - gra - ven. Girt by ma - nyan trees, p dolce Each . . a gem en - gra - ven. Girt by ma - nyan a - zure trees, p dolce Each . . a gem en - gra - ven. Girt

a - zure wave . . With which the clouds and moun - tains pave

a - zure wave . . With which the clouds and mountains pave wave . . With which the clouds and moun - tains pave by ma - nyan a - zure wave With which the clouds and moun - tains pave

A lake's blue chasm, . . . a lake's blue chasm.

A lake's blue chasm, . . . a lake's blue chasm.

A lake's blue chasm, . . . a lake's blue chasm.

A lake's blue chasm, . . . a lake's blue chasm.

A lake's blue chasm, . . . a lake's blue chasm.

a tempo
There was a lit - tle lawn - y is - let By an - e - mo - ne and vio - let,

a tempo
There was a lit - tle lawn - y is - let By an - e - mo - ne and vio - let,

a tempo
There was a lit - tle lawn - y is - let By an - e - mo - ne and vio - let,

a tempo
There was a lit - tle lawn - y is - let By an - e - mo - ne and vio - let,

a tempo
There was a lit - tle lawn - y is - let By an - e - mo - ne and vio - let,

Like mo-sa-ic, pa-ven: And its roof was flow'rs and leaves Which the summer's breath en-weaves,

Like mo-sa-ic, pa-ven: And its roof was flow'rs and leaves Which the summer's breath en-weaves,

Like mo-sa-ic, pa-ven: And its roof was flow'rs and leaves Which the summer's breath en-weaves,

Like mo-sa-ic, pa-ven: And its roof was flow'rs and leaves Which the summer's breath enweaves,

Where . . nor sun nor showers nor breeze Pierce the pines and tall-est trees, Each a gem en - gra - ven.

Where . . nor sun nor showers nor breeze Pierce the pines and tall-est trees, Each a gem en - gra - ven.

Where . . nor sun nor showers nor breeze Pierce the pines and tall-est trees, Each a gem en - gra - ven.

Where nor sun . . nor showers nor breeze Pierce the pines and tall-est trees, Each a gem en - gra - ven.

(Continued from page 490.)

Carl Nielsen, writers of dramatic music such as Peter Heise, August Enna, Hakon Børresen. In Finland, the list of contemporary composers includes, besides Järnefelt and Palmgren, Erki Melartin and Leevi Madetoja (whose Symphony in E flat major is worthy of notice).

VIENNESE COMPOSERS

Musica d' Oggi (February-March) contains a useful encyclopædic article by Richard Specht on Viennese composers of to-day. Among the lesser-known names mentioned in it are those of Franz Schmidt, Karl Weigl, Karl Prohaska, Josef Rosenstock, Wilhelm Grosz, Felix Pétýrek, Georg Szell, Hans Gal, Hugo Kander, Egon Lustgarten, Walter Klein, and Robert Konta.

In the Musikblätter des Anbruch (April) R. St. Hoffmann speaks highly of Wilhelm Grosz, and gives a list of his works.

OTTORINO RESPIGHI

In Il Pianoforte (May) Ettore Desden defines in convincing terms Respighi's individuality as a composer, and gives a complete catalogue of his output.

SMALL INTERVALS

In Le Ménestrel (May 12-19) E. C. Grassi expresses the opinion that the future of musical art lies in the study of modes, which can best be accomplished by investigating the present music of the Far East.

He analyses certain Siamese scales, and calls attention to the subtle intervals which they contain. Advocating the use of distinctions lesser than the semitone, he acknowledges that tempered quarter-tones are in principle undesirable, and points out that there is a possibility of producing small, non-tempered intervals upon wind instruments.

Readers acquainted with Grassi's music will find a special interest in these suggestions, and in the sidelights on æsthetics which the article (unfortunately far too short considering the novelty of the ground it breaks) contains.

THE PUBLIC AND SCHÖNBERG

The following remarks from the pen of Emile Vuillermoz (Excelsior, May 1) carry a truth whose scope is more than local:

Abruptly introduced to an unprepared public, Schönberg's Five Orchestral Pieces, which are pure music, music of the kind that has to be felt and yielded to, without any attempt at 'understanding,' frightened and scandalised that public. Fright and scandal, if not legitimate, are easy to explain. With great difficulty, those people were taught to comprehend the syntax of Wagner and of Debussy. But hardly have they learnt the lesson than they are confronted with a new way of assembling sounds, which strikes them as excruciating, pending the time when they will enjoy it. Their indignant protests are therefore quite natural.

PORTRAITS OF ANCIENT MASTERS

In La Revue Musicale (June) Henri Prunières shows reasons why a painting ascribed to Lorenzo Lotto and preserved at the Palazzo Pitti, Florence, might in fact be the painting by Sebastiano del Piombo which Vasari mentions as representing Hobrecht and Philippe Verdelot.

MONTEVERDE'S TWO STYLES

In the same issue, A. Tessier devotes a long and interesting essay to Monteverde's views on his art, to his innovations in the order of the madrigal and in that of monody. He examines the most typical passages of Monteverde's various works, and especially of The Crowning of Poppea, praising them with judicious enthusiasm.

ANTON REICHA

Daniel Lazarus in the same number emphasises the originality of outlook which characterises Reicha's Cours de Haute Composition Musicale (published 1824-26), and shows how great an influence it may have exercised on Berlioz, who was Reicha's pupil for counterpoint and fugue.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

SONGS AND THEIR WORDS

To listen to Miss Lucia Young's concert (Wigmore Hall, June 12), at which her English versions for songs of Schubert, Schumann, and Brahms were used, was to ponder again on the mysterious relations between the verbal and the musical bearings of a song. Ought words to weigh at all with the truly musical listener? No, we have been told; the words and the rhythm of the verse have had their use in fertilising the composer's musical thought; the various sounds of words may be an enrichment of singing tones beyond the mere use of open vowels, but there the rôle of the word stops short—the truly musical listener is all-absorbed by the new, super-verbal product. This resulting musical value is all he cares for, and it is all one to him whether the words are about Roses in Picardy or Bluebells of Scotland. Mr. W. J. Turner has somewhere put forward this view, or something like it.

Certainly we listeners do get into the way of dispensing with words, but is this a state of sublimation or is it a makeshift? Take the hardened opera-goer. He descends to the grave without knowing what Trovatore and Ballo in Maschera are about. Has he resigned himself to dwell in this ignorance or has he soared into a realm really superior to crude verbal information? Ask (in your crude way) of your hardened opera-goer why, although the young persons of La Bohème are severely feeling the cold indoors at the beginning of the opera, they can adjourn pleasurably to partake of their Christmas dinner in the middle of the street. Ask why in Act 3 of that opera all the characters have apparently taken up their residence in a Customs House. He cannot tell you, naturally, and points out that that is not his concern, it is the composer's obscure private concern—he, for his part, goes to the opera to see Melba or whoever. This is possibly sublime; or else possibly an indication of the shrinking of unused faculties—like the blindness of subterranean fishes. So, possibly, is the indifference to words of us listeners inured in long years to the singing of nonsense in English or else a macedonia of foreign words. (Once when it was only a question of Italian, French, and German, some pretence could be made at following. But of late the tale is Russian, Spanish, Finnish, Erse, all round us, and a famous prima donna gives recitals in fourteen languages! It is true she cannot pronounce 'bird,' but, then, was it quite fair of Handel to set English words to music?)

Somehow the ordinary plain person seems to want to get the hang of the words of the song he hears. But not even he invariably. For instance, when Tristan and Isolde rush into each other's arms in Act 2 no one, not the most literal-minded among us, ever wanted to know what exactly they are saying. We all perfectly well know that they cannot possibly be saying anything with any 'sense' (that is, verbal meaning) in it. Their song is merely quasi-animal gurgles and chuckles heightened into music, practically without verbal intermediaries. But such song is something different from the ordinary quiet song of our smaller concert-platforms, where the composer's chosen text, so often in these days itself the work of an artist, and the fact that it is printed in full on the supplied programme, are invitations to an exertion of the verbal alongside the musical understanding. This admission will, I hope, not be deemed treachery to music. I do see how soon a song, when its musical character is at all vivid, passes beyond the interest of the verbal understanding. The Erl King, I conceive, would do just as well if the text were in never-translated Chocław—we know that the piano-forte version 'does' as well, to tell the truth, as Schubert's original. But is there not a territory of song—an Alsace, both French and German—which is alike verbal and musical?

Miss Lucia Young thinks so evidently, for she has taken the trouble (an unbelievably arduous trouble, which she has cunningly disguised with an air of happiest humour and grace) of turning into genuine English these German song-texts. The Musical Times recently recommended Miss Young's translations published in Music and Letters. About twenty-five were sung at this concert. She is a singer, and all were singing versions. All were good. She is not a miracle-worker to the point of giving us all of Du bist wie eine Blume; in fact, her solution here was to give us not Heine at all, but something very serviceable and singable if not exactly very good verse (the 'flower' is left out and the first line runs, 'How lovely in its radiance that youthful, glowing face.' The third line begins, 'Though some would smile at my fancy, a prayer I've softly made.' Miss Young ignores the fact that Heine's poem was addressed to a white pig). But of songs made on light verse rather than fine poetry Miss Young has given us altogether definitive English versions. There will henceforth be no need for anyone to tackle afresh, or indeed to alter aught in the way in which she has done, such songs as Schumann's Aufträge, Wanderlied, Marienwürmchen, Brahms's Sonntag, Des Liebsten Schwur, and eight numbers of the Love-song Waltzes. We heard all these with delight; the English fitted; a partiality for this language has to be admitted; the good music was brought home.

There were four singers. Singers who would be safe in Chocław take risks when they sing to us in English. Luckily these were good singers, but Miss Olga Haley—most impressive in Schubert's Dem Unendlichen, and ever admired for her musicianship and beautiful voice—did not escape the comment (since we were so particularly listening to the singing of English) that in the minutiae of verbal forms she is vague and lax. Mr. Frederick Ranalow, vocally indifferent that day as it happened, still could show us how English sounds. Miss Young as a singer is winning, but still unfinished. The accomplished Mr. John Adams made up the quartet. C.

London Concerts

LEEDS CHORAL UNION AND THE APOSTLES

Before a half-empty Queen's Hall the Leeds Choral Union, the London Symphony Orchestra, and a fine set of soloists—Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Phyllis Lett, Messrs. John Coates, Charles Knowles, Norman Allin, and Herbert Heyner—conducted by Sir Edward Elgar, gave a performance of The Apostles on June 8 in aid of the Westminster Restoration Fund. Such splendid choral singing has not been heard in London since the last visit of a Yorkshire choir some years ago, chiefly because no choir that has sung to us in the meantime has been blessed with such ample resources in male voices. The prime excellence of the Leeds singers' work lay in their ability to pile up magnificent climaxes without a trace of effort or loss of quality. In such passages as 'Proclaim unto them' and 'The right hand of the power' they gave us unforgettable moments. Their soft singing was less moving, and there were some odd lapses in the matter of sostenuto, the opening phrase 'The Spirit of the Lord is upon me,' and a few similar passages later on, being broken for no apparent reason. Better enunciation could not be wished for, the words coming through with a clearness quite startling at times. It is regrettable that the visit of the choir took place at a time when such Londoners as care for concerts of the kind were busy earning their living. Most of our conductors and singers have yet to realise that the difference of standard between the average London choral society and the crack northern bodies is not so much a matter of material as of hard work. The Leeds choir made the most difficult passages sound easy; our choirs make heavy weather of them, because too many singers look on a rehearsal as a mixture of rest cure and recreation. In the North the rule is plenty of rehearsals and coats off all the time. We hope Dr. Coward and one or another of his choirs will forget this discouraging occasion, and pay us another visit soon, choosing an evening or a Saturday afternoon. They will then have no cause to complain of London apathy. H. G.

GERVASE ELWES MEMORIAL FUND

The concert given at the Albert Hall on May 24 in aid of this fund drew nothing like the audience both cause and programme deserved. The soloists were Miss Louise Dale, Messrs. Hubert Eisdell, Ben Davies, and Robert Radford, but even so accomplished a group could not prevent the main interest from being centred in the splendid playing of the Goossens Orchestra and, in a lesser degree, the singing of the Westminster Cathedral Choir. The orchestral items were the Brandenburg Concerto in G for strings, Butterworth's Shropshire Lad Rhapsody, Quilter's Children's Overture, Grainger's Air from County Derry and Shepherd's Hey, the Entrance of the Gods into Valhalla, and Elgar's Enigma Variations and Cockaigne, the Variations receiving a really memorable performance. The Westminster Cathedral Choir (conducted by Mr. P. J. Collis in the absence through illness of Dr. Terry) sang the Sanctus from Palestrina's Missa Papa Marcelli and Lumen ad revelationem gentium by the same composer, side by side with Byrd's settings of the same text—a capital bit of programme-making. The comparison showed the futility of describing Byrd as 'the English Palestrina.' There is a world of difference between the suave beauty of the Italian and the strength and frequent roughness of the Englishman. Great music, all of it, with little in common beyond the polyphonic method of the period. The choir was heard also in a group of Madrigals. Inevitably we compared the singers with the Vatican Choir. A smaller body, they sang with far better blend and balance, and of course their style was more level and reserved. The boys were delightful, save for a trifle of hootiness in the middle and lower notes. The wearing of ecclesiastical garb for the madrigals was a bad mistake. Chloe, Oriana, and those Nymphs of Diana went ill with cackocks and cottas. Sir Henry Wood conducted Cockaigne, Mr. Roger Quilter his Children's Overture, and Mr. Eugène Goossens the rest of the orchestral music. Mr. Kiddle was at the pianoforte. H. G.

KUSEWITZKY CONCERTS

It was the contrast between the two sections of the programme that made the second Kussewitzky concert on May 25 specially attractive. The first half was severely classical, but not too familiar, for it is not every day that we have the chance of listening to one of Handel's Concerti Grossi, and as for the music of Carl Philip Emanuel Bach it is all but forgotten. It is to Maximilian Steinberg, the son-in-law of Rimsky-Korsakov, that we owe the resuscitation of a charming Concerto which he has arranged for small orchestra. Steinberg is a musician of serious—some say too serious—attainments. His ballet, Midas, the work by which he is remembered in London, suffered a little from this, but compositions in which the scholarly element is not out of place show him at his best. It was to be expected that the man who completed Rimsky-Korsakov's great book on orchestration would score well, and the Concerto was no disappointment. Both works were brilliantly performed. Then followed Beethoven's first Concerto, with Alfred Cortôt as the soloist. The exuberance with which he played the Rondo made an 'encore' inevitable.

Cortôt was also the soloist in de Falla's Nights in the Gardens of Spain, which formed the central feature in the second half of the programme. Not for the first time it made one reflect whether composers are well advised in attempting the interpretation of their own works, for the only previous performance in London was one in which de Falla took part, and it certainly did not reveal the warm effulgence of this remarkable music. The work consists of three connected Nocturnes, and is not only a characteristic example of modern Spanish music but a welcome enrichment of a form which seems to be in need of it, for the number of really interesting works of recent date for pianoforte and orchestra is by no means commensurate with the activity prevailing in other branches of composition. It is to be hoped that the success of this performance will help to popularise the work. It was preceded by Ravel's La Valse, played with remarkable clarity, but less rhythmic elasticity than it seems to demand, and followed by Rimsky-Korsakov's Capriccio Espagnol.

At the third concert, on June 1, the interest for the greater part, if not the whole, of the audience, was concentrated in some wonderful Wagner interpretations. The excerpts were, of course, more than familiar, but if any doubts remained concerning Kussewitzky's claim to rank with the great conductors of to-day, these performances should silence them. Wagner's slow tempi are a searching test, because the temper of a modern audience is a little prejudiced against their gravity. We have grown accustomed to a slight but perceptible acceleration of the readings, and it needs an impressive personality to restore them, as Kussewitzky did, without incurring the danger of restive listeners. Next in importance was his performance of Tchaikovsky's Pathetic, in memory of Arthur Nikisch.

In comparison, the novelties were not very significant, though to a journalist they necessarily represented 'news value.' There has been much curiosity concerning Prokofiev's opera The Love of Three Oranges, but the two fragments introduced on this occasion will not go very far towards allaying it. They consisted of a March and Scherzo, both of exhilarating character and scored in sparkling but somewhat tinselly style, excellent as orchestral comedy, but not in the least of the stature of the composer whose third Concerto aroused so much interest. As for 'The Flight of the Bumble-Bee' from Rimsky-Korsakov's opera The Legend of Tsar Saltan, it is a piece of descriptive virtuosity, ingenious and effective, but not rich in musical substance.

E. E.

THE CAPET QUARTET

Both the concerts given by the Capet Quartet of Paris at Æolian Hall were exceedingly interesting. It is highly probable that quartet playing is now better than it has ever been. It cannot be denied that few of us remember, or, for that matter, have ever heard the Joachim Quartet in its best days. But whatever the Joachim Quartet was, it alone held the supremacy thirty years ago, while at present quartet parties come to London one after the other, and all of the first rank. The Flonzaley, the Budapest, the Lener, the Copenhagen, and now the Capet Quartet—these have all given performances which in one way or another had some point of extraordinary beauty. The speciality of the Capet Quartet appears to be freedom and unanimity of rhythm. Of course freedom and unanimity of a kind are expected in all good quartet playing. But the Parisian combination has extended this art far beyond the usual limits. To begin with, while other leaders, in approaching the point where a slight alteration is going to be made, hang out—perhaps unconsciously—some kind of signal, M. Capet, apparently, felt it unnecessary to warn his colleagues. And the others, for their part, followed the leader as if they shared his conviction that the reading was not so much the best of many, but the only possible reading. It was this unanimity that gave force and incisiveness to their phrasing and rhythm, and at the same time gave their performance its characteristic clear and easy grace.

B. V.

HAROLD BAUER

The return of Mr. Harold Bauer after a long absence was one of the most welcome events of the month. He always was one of the most intellectual of pianists, who never allowed his brain to hamper his temperament. He gave two recitals, on May 30 and June 7 respectively. At the first he was most impressive in César Franck's Prelude, Aria, and Finale, and the C major Fantasia of Schumann, which was played with extraordinarily fine impulse. Very impressive is his skill in pedalling, which remains unequalled. In Moussorgsky's Pictures of an Exhibition he showed that he also has an ingratiating humour and power of characterisation. At the second recital he played with exquisite purity of style a group of 18th century music, both French and Italian, and his performance of Brahms's F minor Sonata was in every respect masterly. A. K.

HOWARD-JONES'S RECITAL.

Without detracting from the acknowledged merit of Mr. Howard-Jones's Beethoven playing, we might advance that on that particular afternoon his English group was more refreshing, for the thirty-two Variations are not suited to the tropics, in which we were then living. It consisted of two new pieces by John Ireland, followed by the first of Eugène Goossens's Nature Poems, Arnold Bax's Hill Tune and his boisterous Burlesque, one of his most effective pianoforte pieces, which had to be repeated.

The new Ireland pieces are in two contrasted moods, both familiar from earlier works, but none the less welcome, and expressed from a fresh angle. The Soliloquy might belong to the Preludes, and has in fact a remote affinity with The Holy Boy in its lyrical quality, as apart from the inner thought inspiring it. On a birthday morning might perhaps be assigned to the London pieces because of its buoyancy, not unlike that of Soho, though again reflecting other impulses and motives. Both pieces are attractive additions to the slender quantity of Ireland's pianoforte music, which grows too slowly for the liking of his many admirers. E. E.

FREDERIC LAMOND

Mr. Frederic Lamond gave a Beethoven recital on the afternoon of June 17 at Queen's Hall, and played pieces that were familiar, with the exception of the seldom heard Fantasia in G minor. It is a work the existence of which one is glad to be reminded occasionally, especially played as Mr. Lamond played it. His reading of things like the Waldstein Sonata, the Appassionata, and the E major Sonata had all the merits which we associate with Mr. Lamond's Beethoven playing; and, as things go nowadays, the audience was large and extremely cordial. A. K.

BALOKOVIK

M. Balokovik, who had left very pleasant memories at his last appearance here, gave a violin recital at Queen's Hall on June 13. The most notable feature of his programme was the inclusion of John Ireland's first Sonata, with the composer at the pianoforte. It is rare that foreign virtuosi pay such a compliment to our native composers, and when they do it should be accounted to them for virtue. Mr. Ireland's musical personality and idiom have changed somewhat since he wrote this Sonata, but it is a work full of charm and individuality, and its melodic invention, especially in the second and third movements, is of a high order. The work as a whole perhaps makes a quicker and more general appeal than some of his later compositions. M. Balokovik played with obviously keen sympathy with the music, and with remarkable beauty and variety of tone. His technique in Paganini's D minor Concerto was dazzling, and he avoided the temptation of making it seem merely an exhibition of fireworks. In his playing of a Mozart Concerto he proved himself a consummate musician who has the gift, which seems to grow rarer and rarer, of the necessary self-effacement. He certainly deserves a place in the foremost rank. A. K.

ANNE THURSFIELD

Anne Thursfield—salve! True and delightful mistress of the art of song, hail! Where, I ask, among the lyric singers of these latter years is her equal? I came from her concert (Wigmore Hall, June 9) feeling that musical England is still not half proud enough of such an ornament. 'But it is not exactly a great voice, is it?' I fancy some folks remarking in a sad, familiar way. Always that fatuous cry for bigness! Well, Anne Thursfield does command bigness—by the side of such an infinitely delicate pianissimo as hers her more impassioned singing sounds by force of contrast big to the point of absolute adequacy. A matter of scale! But when she sings we are not thinking at all about the instrument. She plays upon it too well. So completely does she apprehend her powers that there results no vacillation of voice or method. The composer has his chance when Miss Thursfield sings. Her voice sheds light on the music. Is not that after all the business of singing? There were high suspended sostenuto tones in Miss Thursfield's second group quite ethereally lovely. Her diction was compounded of appreciation of colour and culture. The programme was original and satisfying. The consummate interpreter of the songs of Arnold Bax, Goossens, and Arthur Bliss, this time made her particular contribution some very fresh and winning work by Armstrong Gibbs. H. J. K.

FRIEDA HEMPEL

We heard how truly beautiful the human voice can be, on June 11, at the Albert Hall. The physical conditions that control its emission are, with Madame Frieda Hempel, perfection. She is understood to style herself a light soprano. If she really is, then her voice is an anomaly—a light voice of a great expressive depth. How far this depth is the reflection of the singer's personality or an unconscious possession was not clear, since the programme was not of a sort truly to test her. Her voice has not the impersonal, bird-like quality of the ordinary coloratura singer; and it was never shrill. At the same time she cannot vie with a Galli-Curci or a Tetrizzini when fluttering high above the stave. She is less mechanical than they, and consequently less agile. I incline to call her an absolute soprano, and leave labelling there. She began with Handel and went on to Schubert. The mellow, muted beauty of tone in the Ave Maria was ravishing. The Trout, Youth at the Spring (a departure from the usual hackneyed selections from Schubert), and Impatience, all were given with pure lyric soprano sweetness. Two solos were pyrotechnical, and unfortunately other songs were merely silly. No musical bliss without alloy! Frieda Hempel in a properly chosen programme might give us it, if anyone could, we fondly fancy. Mr. Conrad V. Bos's accompanying was admirable. H. J. K.

SUSAN METCALFE-CASALS

On Saturday, June 17, Madame Susan Metcalfe-Casals gave a song recital at Wigmore Hall with M. Casals at the pianoforte. He is a skilled pianist and, naturally, his great musicianship is apparent in everything he did, but it seemed sometimes (and in the circumstances it is not perhaps unnatural) that he was rather the dominant personality in the partnership, especially in the Zigeunerlieder of Brahms. In these he seemed to be forcing the pace to an extent which made it difficult for the singer to make the fullest use of her powers of expression and phrasing. Madame Metcalfe Casals is a singer who has much variety of expression at her command, and it was perhaps best shown in a group of Schumann's songs, which she sang with great purity of style. Her programme also included a group of songs of Charles M. Loeffler and Emanuel Mohr, which she sang admirably, and the interest of which was somewhat esoteric. A. K.

A BATCH OF SINGERS

A great many singers' recitals were heard in London in May and June, and a tendency at a number of them was an excessive striving after big tone. This is all right when the tone, on arriving, really is big, but often the needlessly laborious struggle merely ended in bad tonal balance, and both listener and singer suffered. Tone, to be effective, must of course escape the singer; often the tone that rings so richly in the head, to the conviction of the performer, is muffled to the listener by reason of its own excessive resonance. It is bottled up, in fact. A judicious musical friend may often put his finger on the defect, if the artist is artist enough to profit by such criticism; and, incidentally, writers in the newspapers would be spared much uncongenial work. Singers' faults arise far more from misconceptions of their own tones than from any other source. When an inexperienced singer cultivates a wrong sort of tone it is because he hears it differently from his audience. But the listener, after all, is the arbiter. So much for generalisations.

Miss Phyllis Lett's tone (she sang at Wigmore Hall on June 7) was for the most part lavishly beautiful. At moments the musical appeal was absolute. Her experience in vocal poise accounts partly for this, but still more does the naturally dulcet quality of her voice. Regrettable was the marring of her sostenuto work by indifferent breath control—a marring no so much in the actual phrasing as in the tonal release, forcing her to gasp much as Elena Gerhardt so unfortunately does. It was curious that Miss Phyllis Lett's voice was most delightful when it was at its least contralto-ish. Not of course that the fundamental tone is not contralto, but in striving after fulness she often leant too much on the heavy vowels and obscured her diction. She sang some very beautiful songs, old and new, by Purcell (Dido's Lament, I attempt from love's sickness), Blow, Parry, Holst (The Heart Worshipers—a song which is surprisingly little known despite this great composer's present recognised fame), Martin Shaw (two of whose songs were encored), and Duparc. Miss Phyllis Lett, perhaps, has too absorbing a position as an oratorio singer to care to seek further perfections, but if she desired she could easily be a really commanding figure in the interpretation of contemporary lyric song.

Miss Rosalie Miller, who sang at Wigmore Hall on May 30, is prone to exploit a naturally large voice. As a consequence the more subtle shades of a well-balanced diction are often lost. Fortunately her voice is of good quality, and an interpretative sense was there. This matter of unwieldy diction was her shortcoming, and thus the original impression made by her dramatic singing of Lully's Le héros que j'attends and Gluck's Adieu! conservez dans votre âme was not later enhanced by enough variety. Her low tones were quite contralto-like in fulness. Her fault of vocal prodigality is not so very serious—with experience Miss Rosalie Miller will cultivate her art in the less obvious directions.

Miss Winifred Holloway (Æolian Hall, May 30) leans in just the opposite way from Miss Miller. Words are for her of paramount importance. Her speaking tones are extraordinarily vivid, and she finds the transition from speech to song the easiest thing in the world. Irresistible is the friendliness of her style; she charmingly puts herself on the footing of intimacy, and has the rare gift of making her personality felt by the means of simple frankness. Herself playing the harpsichord, she sang, dressed in antique costume, and was to perfection the prim damsel of a bygone day. In word and in gesture this art of hers defies criticism—and besides, she probably knows better than anyone all about her own voice! Her perfect speech is a proof of this. Mr. Plunket Greene sang too at this concert, as ever with sincerity and keen instinct for musical values.

Miss Una Bates sang at Queen's Hall (May 30), accompanied by Sir Henry Wood and the orchestra. Her easy production enabled her tone to fill the hall reasonably well, but we were not convinced that her choice of so big a scene was justified—her musical portraiture was not vivid enough for those spaces. She has a beautiful voice, she often sang artistically, and still not more than a placid attention could be paid. We might have been more touched in a smaller hall. Iphigenia's Invocation to Diana (Gluck) was Miss Una Bates's most important number. She did not shrink from choosing a triviality or two.

Mr. Brabazon Lowther sang a certain proportion of sad, poor stuff—some of it his own—at Wigmore Hall on May 31; a pity, for he is almost a great singer. Cultivated diction gives his voice a resemblance, at moments extraordinary, to that of Gervase Elwes. How commonly do singers obscure the difficult lingulate sounds! Nothing of the sort from Mr. Lowther—too good a vocalist for any slipshod ways. His technique was a triumph of care and culture. His mezza-voce was beautiful, his breath control always impressive. Alone some occasional ugly, high, open tones marred his singing.

Miss Sibyl Cropper, who sang in the same hall later that day, is a real contralto, not a masquerading mezzo-soprano. Also she is in many ways a sterling artist. With a degree more of ripeness in her art, with a gain of flexibility in her voice, she ought to rise to high rank in contemporary song. She already sings intelligently, smoothly. Against a certain lack of actual profundity of tone she balances evenly the material that is hers, and conveys a sense of reserves behind. She has been well trained, and her programme showed a delicate judgment. Songs of lightness, such as Strauss's Sweet Month of May, were perhaps those that most indicated the directions where she has still to learn.

Miss Astra Desmond offered an extremely interesting programme at Wigmore Hall on June 10, including a new song by Cyril Scott, the two recent songs of Goossens with string quartet accompaniment, and songs of Fauré, Ravel, and Manuel de Falla. Miss Desmond has many of the qualities which make a great singer. She is so splendidly equipped that the listener feels it may be a bit his own fault that he is not more seized with positive enthusiasm. In the course of an afternoon wherein everything was admirably competent there were moments when the singer's art really kindled, when her personality became highly vivid, and these moments suggested that perhaps time and a deepening of musical sentiment will make this very able singer into a supreme one. Miss Agnes Bedford's remarkable accompanying (wholly from memory) was a vital part of the concert.

Mr. Cecil Fanning, baritone, sang four times at Wigmore Hall, in the course of May and June. He is of the intellectual order. Obviously he loves his art, and his voice is beautiful. Still he does not manage to scale any very great heights. Curiously enough, his dramatic singing was the most satisfactory; it had earnestness and vitality, though it was at moments toneless. The voice itself, you would say, is meant for lyric singing, but here Mr. Fanning is not able to sink a too anxious scrupulousness over details. The sense of individual phrases was most conscientiously expressed, but he made of no song a spontaneous whole. Not one but was déçousu. At his third and fourth concerts he sang some Irish Melodies of Moore, together with settings by Berlioz of the same poems. Grieg, Rachmaninov, some modern American songs, and a ballad of Loewe (for whom Mr. Fanning evidently has a weakness) made up the programme. H. J. K.

Miss Ursula Greville, at Steinway Hall on May 29, brought her lively faculties to bear on songs of Martin Shaw, Gerrard Williams, and Dr. Egon Wellesz. A pupil of Schönberg, Dr. Wellesz is not behindhand in modern daring, and has the courage of his own harmonies. He has ideas to express, however, and his five captivating Kirschblütenlieder were well worth the singer's trouble. The wordless Aurora is more exacting, without such clear grounds.

M.

Mr. William Higley made his re-entry to the concert world on June 2 with a programme well calculated to propitiate. Ten British songs were given for the first time. Three were by Roger Quilter, who accompanied them, two were by Thomas Wood, two by the singer himself, and of the others may be mentioned Dr. Naylor's Had I a thousand souls and W. H. Reed's The Young Knight. One of the most striking of the British songs—not, however, labelled 'first time'—was Alexander Brent Smith's The Cotswold Farmers. Dale's Come away, death, with the viola obbligato played by Mr. Reed, made a deep impression. Twenty-four songs did Mr. Higley sing, under the burden of a laryngitis that would have sent many an artist home to bed. His accompanist, who played con amore, was Mr. Harold Brooke. M.

THE APOSTLES AT CANTERBURY

The choir of the Leeds Choral Union, seventy members of the London Symphony Orchestra, with Sir Edward Elgar and the artists who had taken part in the London performance of The Apostles, journeyed to Canterbury on Thursday night (June 8). The Kentish streets hummed with broad Yorkshire which, I heard, the natives had great difficulty in understanding—puzzled almost as much as the Milanese once were on a similar occasion by the Sicilians.

The performance of The Apostles was repeated in the Cathedral in aid of the Fund for the Preservation of the Cathedral. The Church was crowded in every corner, and was made to hold over four thousand people, which is said to be the largest number ever assembled there.

Having had a rehearsal in the morning, everybody concerned felt more at ease than in London on the previous day, and the performance was in all ways magnificent. After what has been said above, it is not necessary to go into details, but my most vivid recollections are of the outburst of the male voices in the scene 'In Cæsarea Philippi,' 'Some say John the Baptist,' and the chorus of women, 'This Man, if He were a Prophet,' which comes later in the same scene: and the close of the first part was beyond words impressive. The claims of a London daily paper and the telegraph office prevented me from staying to the end, but I saw Sir Edward Elgar at the close, and he told me that in his opinion it was the finest performance of the second part, especially the closing chorus, which he himself had ever heard.

The Apostles is a work which requires a cathedral for the full appreciation of its beauty and strength, and there is no building in the kingdom in which these can be brought home more fully to the hearer than Canterbury Cathedral. Some there were who complained that the acoustics were bad, but I had nothing to complain of from the seat allotted to me.

I have seldom, if ever, been at a performance which appealed more forcibly to the eye. The singers were so placed that the afternoon sun, streaming in through the stained-glass windows, painted wonderful patterns of colour over the whole of the platform and the tiers of seats behind, which enhanced the feeling of other-worldliness produced by the whole.

A. K.

Opera in London

[We are glad to be able to say that our protest against the British National Opera Company's attitude to the musical press has had a most satisfactory result. The secretary, after satisfying us that the action of which we complained was due to the directors of the Company, informs us that in future the Musical Times will be afforded the usual press privileges. We give below a brief résumé of the season just ended, and when the Company comes to London again we hope to be able to treat the various productions in more detail fashion.—ED., M.T.]

THE NATIONAL COMPANY'S SEASON AT COVENT GARDEN

By the time this issue is in the hands of readers the season at Covent Garden by the British National Opera Company will have come to an end. It has been in every way memorable, for more than one reason. The chief reason cannot fail to give immense satisfaction to those who have stood for the cause of opera in England for it has been made abundantly clear that present-day public is ready to support its representations. The whole story is a long and interesting one, and some day when time and space permit I will discuss it. For the present I content myself with a record—a bare record of 'business done.'

In the first place the feature of the British National Opera Company's season has been success of the Wagner performances. They were restricted almost exclusively to The Ring, Parsifal, and Tristan, for Tannhäuser did not appear until late, and Lohengrin not at all; so that it is on that particular phase that the Company has concentrated, and to good purpose. There have been two complete cycles of the great Wagnerian music-drama and numerous representations of the sacred work. In these the outstanding points are the success of Miss Beatrice Miranda as a Ring singer; the staying-powers of the tenors, headed by Mr. Walter Hyde, who has risen to the foremost place I have long prophesied for him; the playing of the orchestra (part of the organization), and the success with which, in The Ring, Mr. Albert Coates concentrated attention on the orchestra when he directed it.

THE SINGERS

To particularise: the performances have introduced a tenor with a future in Mr. Tudor Davies, a notable Hans Sachs in Mr. Andrew Shanks, a new Wagnerian soprano in Miss Florence Austral from Overseas, and that rare and precious thing, a lyric baritone, in Mr. Percy Heming. The Company, too, has been able to offer two British Carmens, which is something of an achievement, although that of Miss Olga Haley in comparison with that of Miss Phyllis Archibald was more in the nature of promise than performance. Miss Maggie Teyte returned to grand opera, and though she restricted her attention to Madame Butterfly she contrived to make that opera one of the big attractions of the season. Miss Mignon Nevada is another British singer whom the Company has brought to mind, and it was her privilege to take part in a performance of La Bohème attended by the King and Queen, an event that put the seal on this particular page in the history of opera in English. Sterling work has been done by Miss Edna Thornton and by Miss Agnes Nicholls, Messrs. William Boland, Norman Allin, and Robert Radford. Mr. Robert Clarence Whitehill and Mr. Robert Parker have been pillars of strength in The Ring performances, and striking proof of versatility has been given by Mr. Sydney Russell, who has sung all sorts of character parts from Mime to Alcini-doro.

THE CONDUCTOR

The brunt of the general conducting has been borne by Mr. Percy Pitt, who has been a true guide, philosopher, and friend to the undertaking, even though the Offenbach olla-podrida manufactured in Germany and styled The Goldsmith of Toledo, and introduced at his recommendation, was a mistake. Mr. Julius Harrison has done good work, as has Mr. Eugène Goossens, and Mr. Albert Coates has acted as specialist in the direction of The Ring, though without making history in any way.

The performances themselves have been distinguished by high individuality. The British singers have put their own interpretations on the operas and tradition has been thrown to the winds. As some of it inculcated in the recent seasons we have had was thoroughly bad, it is as well that it has gone by the board. The Company has set its own standard, and it is largely one that stands by itself, a fact that may cause experienced opera-goers to blink their eyes, but which is nevertheless helping things on to the real end of it all—an opera of our own—not opera in English but English opera.

F. E. B.

LOUISE

The performance of Louise (June 7) ought to have convinced a good many people that, although opera in the vernacular may be a good thing, opera in the original foreign tongue is sometimes better. When Louise has been done into English there is precious little of the original flavour left, and there is nothing much to make up the loss. We had some fine singing from the principals—Miriam Licette, Edith Clegg, Walter Hyde, and Robert Radford—and some of the small parts were so well done that they left as vivid impressions as the big ones. This was especially the case with Norman Allin's Ragman and the soloists among the work-girls. Mr. Percy Pitt conducted. The orchestral playing generally was too loud, so the poverty of much of the music was shown up mercilessly, and we lost a lot of the singers' words.

H. G.

LA TOSCA

La Tosca was conducted on June 9 by Mr. Julius Harrison, and sung by Miss Beatrice Miranda, Mr. William Boland, and Mr. Percy Heming. The conductor was the best, and the baritone the next best, but this does not mean that the whole was not sound and good and successful. No doubt our singers have deep down in them the sense that this gory Tosca business can't really be taken too utterly to heart. Can we blame them? Are we to blame Mr. Percy Heming if he was born probably to use his spare room for billiards rather than a thumbscrew-and-rack installation as a source of amusement? Deep down in us too is a sense of the unimportance of this Sardou-Puccini fee-foh-fum. The most here suggested is the merest hint of some inner mildness in Scarpia, and of stability in Tosca's agonies. Mr. Heming's now ripened art has made one of the pleasures of the season. To praise the excellent services of this soprano and this tenor becomes a routine. The instrumental notes lived under the conductor's hands—at moments even too vehemently.

C.

18TH CENTURY COMIC-OPERA. STORACE'S HAUNTED TOWER

The few who knew have long advocated attention to English opera of the 18th century as a superior article to German musical comedy. No doubt the success of The Beggar's Opera, like the kettle, began it. And now we have a regularly constituted Society whose sole object is the performance of these examples. It is called the Mayfair Dramatic Society, and seems to have a large and enthusiastic following. In May at the Guildhall School of Music Theatre it gave a performance of Stephen Storace's comic-opera, The Haunted Tower. This gem dates from 1789, and well represents the gifts of the composer and the state of British operatic art at that time. The book by James Cobb is distinctly good, positively Gilbertian at times in wording and characterisation. For the music, Storace laid various other writers under contribution, showing that the 'additional number' is not such a modern practice, and included a bit of Purcell as well as some Martini and Pleyel. It was either diffidence or laziness that caused him to take this unnecessary course, for his own work is by far the best. There is a remarkably good Sextet, a model of part-writing, and some charming duets anything but conventional in style. There is also that very beautiful number—the sole survivor of the opera outside—'My Native Land,' enshrined in most English song collections. The music had been scored for trumpet and strings by Mr. Henri Lucas. The orchestra was used sparingly, the songs being accompanied on the pianoforte. This was described as a harpsichord—the only error I could detect in the production. There is an element of truth in the statement because the instrument used had been a harpsichord (the jack bar remains), but hammers had been put in. The tone in its old world purity was wholly appropriate. In fact the Society is to be warmly congratulated on the success with which it re-established atmosphere. There was a draped stage all-sufficient for the purpose of the thirteen changes of scene, and the singing and representation were excellent. Everyone is to be congratulated, not omitting the producers, Mrs. J. T. Grein and Mr. Alec Brooksbank, and the conductor, Mr. Alfred Roth. I can recommend the piece for professional production—Mr. Nigel Playfair and Mr. Frederic Austin please note. In September the Society promises Stora's other comic-opera, The Siege of Belgrade, which I await with keen interest—and so, I fancy, will many others. F. E. B.

THE BEGGAR'S OPERA

Mr. Gay's obstinate success celebrated its second anniversary and eight hundred and twenty-eighth performance on June 5, before a crowded audience consisting largely of habitués. (One galleryite, Mr. Playfair told us, was putting in his hundred and nineteenth attendance!) Almost every number was encored, some doubly and trebly, and there was great enthusiasm at the end, with showers of roses from the upper boxes and presents and speeches galore. Mr. Nigel Playfair made the interesting announcement that when the Beggar does retire there is a prospect of English opera at the Lyric. It has since been announced that Mr. Frederic Austin is at work on a libretto by Mr. Drinkwater, written round Burns. H. G.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

DISTRIBUTION OF DIPLOMAS

Members and friends are cordially invited to attend the distribution of diplomas to successful candidates at the Fellowship and Associateship Examinations by the president, Dr. Charles Macpherson on Saturday, July 22, at 11 a.m. After the president's address Dr. W. G. Alcock will play upon the College organ the three Fellowship organ-work pieces selected for the January Examination, 1923, viz.:

1. Choral Prelude, I give to thee farewell, J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 19, p. 7.)
2. Toccata and Fugue, The Wanderer (Fugue only), Parry. (Novello.)
3. Sposalizio, Liszt. Arranged by E. H. Lemare. (Schott.)

No tickets are required.

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

Will also be held on the above date at the College, at 11.45 a.m.

H. A. HARDING,

Hon. Secretary.

E. H. LEMARE

Mr. Lemare paid a visit to London recently—his first for over eight years—and gave recitals at Goldsmiths' College, New Cross, and Westminster Chapel. We regret that absence from town prevented us from renewing acquaintance with Mr. Lemare's fine playing. Reliable report says that he showed all his old mastery, which is another way of saying that he is still in the front rank of the world's greatest organists. His programmes were on familiar lines, mainly owing to requests which it would have been ungracious to ignore. Here is the programme of the New Cross recital:

Toccata and Fugue in D minor (Op. 98) ...	Lemare
Elfentanz	Bernard Johnson
Réverie in D flat	Sandiford Turner
Summer Sketches	Lemare
Trauermarsch	Wagner
'Canzona della sera'	d'Erry
Easter Morn	Lemare
Fugue on BACH	Liszt

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

A West and North-West section of the above Society was inaugurated on May 27 at a meeting held in Armitage Hall, National Institute for the Blind. The president, Mr. Stanley Roper, was in the chair, and set forth the objects of the Society. The hon. secretary of the newly-formed section is Mr. Edward Watson, National Institute for the Blind, Great Portland Street, W. 1.—At a recent meeting of the Epping Forest branch of the Society, Mr. G. D. Cunningham gave a brilliant organ recital on the recently enlarged organ in South Woodford Congregational Church. The collection (£6 5s.) has been sent to the Westminster Abbey Restoration Fund. Afterwards Mr. Stanley Roper gave an entertaining address.

ORMSKIRK RURIDECANAL CHOIR UNION

After a lapse of fifteen years the annual Festival of the Ormskirk Ruridecanal Choir Union was successfully revived on June 7, when a Festival Service was held in the fine old Parish Church at Ormskirk. The combined choir of three hundred and fifty voices, representing the Churches in the Union, took part in singing Dr. James Lyons's Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A and Woodward's anthem, The Radiant Morn. The conductor was Mr. John Ball, of Ormskirk, and the organist Mr. W. A. Roberts, of Maghull, hon. secretary of the Liverpool Church Choir Association.

NORWICH DIOCESAN CHURCH CHORAL ASSOCIATION

After a lapse of ten years this Association successfully revived its annual Festival at Norwich Cathedral on June 8, about a thousand singers taking part. The Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to the setting by Arthur Somervell, and the anthems were Walmisley's From all that dwell below the skies and Parry's Crossing the bar. The service ended with Part 1 of The Creation, the soprano solos being beautifully sung by the Cathedral boys. Dr. Bates conducted, Mr. Maddern Williams was at the organ, and Mr. Edmund Weeks led the orchestra.

The fine organ erected in King George's Hall, Blackburn, as a memorial to Blackburn men who fell in the war, was opened on May 25 by the Mayor, Alderman Joseph Fielding. M. Marcel Dupré gave two recitals, playing Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor and Passacaglia and Fugue, Franck's Pastorale and Chorale No. 2, Widor's Toccata in F and Variations from Symphony No. 6, d'Aquin's Noël with Variations, and his own Prelude and Fugue in F minor and G minor, and a couple of improvisations.

The organ at St. Margaret's, Anfield, Liverpool, has been rebuilt by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper. The following is the specification:

GREAT ORGAN

Double Open Diapason	... 16	Harmonic Flute	... 4
Open Diapason	... 8	Twelfth	... 2 1/2
Flute à Pavillon	... 8	Fifteenth	... 2 1/2
Höhl Flöte	... 8	Mixture	... 3 ranks
Stopped Diapason	... 8	Trumpet	... 8
Gamba	... 8	Claron	... 4
Principal	... 4

SWELL ORGAN

Bourdon	... 16	Fifteenth	... 2
Open Diapason	... 8	Mixture	... 3 ranks
Lieblich Diapason	... 8	Contra Trumpet	... 16
Keraulophon	... 8	Cornopean	... 8
Salicional	... 8	Oboe	... 8
Vox Angelica	... 8	Vox Humana	... 8
Principal	... 4	Claron	... 4

TREMULANT

Octave ... Acting also Sub-Octave, through Unison Off) Unison Couplers.

CHOIR ORGAN

Clarabella	... 8	Harmonic Piccolo	... 2
Gamba	... 8	Clarinet	... 8
Dulciana	... 8	Orchestral Oboe	... 8
Lieblich Flöte	... 4	Tuba	... 8

Sub-Octave.

PEDAL ORGAN

Double Open Diapason	... 32	Violoncello	... 8
Open Diapason	... 16	Mixture	... 3 ranks
Violone	... 16	Trombone	... 16
Bourdon	... 16

ACCESSORIES

- 6 Thumb Pistons to Great Organ.
- 6 Thumb Pistons to Swell Organ.
- 4 Thumb Pistons to Choir Organ.
- 1 Reversible Thumb Piston for 'Great to Pedal' Coupler.
- 6 Pedal Pistons to Pedal Organ.
- 6 Pedal Pistons acting on Swell Pistons.
- 1 Reversible Pedal Piston for 'Great to Pedal' Coupler.
- 1 Lever connecting Great and Pedal Pistons.
- Lever Swell Pedal to Swell Organ.
- Lever Swell Pedal to Choir Organ.

The wind is generated by a 'Discus' Rotary Blower actuated by a 7 h.p. Electric Motor.

A new organ, built by Messrs. P. Phipps & Son, of Oxford, was dedicated at Littlehampton Parish Church on June 1. The instrument has three manuals and twenty-nine stops. Mr. Stanley Roper gave a short recital at the dedication, and another later in the day, his programmes including Franck's Choral No. 3, Karg-Elert's March on 'Now thank we all,' Elgar's Imperial March, Rheinberger's D minor Sonata, and Parry's March from The Birds.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have just built a two-manual organ for St. Luke's Church, Walton, Liverpool—seven stops on the Swell, seven on the Great, three on the Pedal, and a very convenient set of fourteen pistons.

The Aberdeen Bach Society gave a fine programme on May 31—two of the 'Mystical Songs' of Vaughan Williams, a group of airs from Bach's cantatas and the chorale Jesu, Joy of man's desiring, and the Missa Brevis of Palestrina. The soloists were Miss Margaret Shakle, Miss Bella Wright, and Mr. Hugh Munro. Mr. Albert Adams conducted the Bach and Mr. Willan Swainson the Palestrina. Mr. Swainson also played Chorale Preludes by Bach, Scheidt, Böhm, Pachelbel, and Buxtehude.

The friends of Mr. Watkin Mills will be interested to hear that he has been appointed choirmaster and soloist of Knox Church, Toronto, his wife co-operating as organist. Mr. Mills leaves Winnipeg after seven years' work at Broadway Methodist Church, where (the Winnipeg Evening Tribune tells us) he has built up a choir of rare excellence. Mrs. Watkin Mills studied the organ with Dr. Alfred King, and later with Dr. Charles Macpherson. At the R.A.M. she was a pianoforte pupil of Mr. Frederick Corder.

M. Marcel Dupré has been engaged to give recitals at Lincoln Cathedral on Wednesday, July 5, at 3 and 8 p.m., in aid of the Cathedral Restoration Fund.

A well-attended Hymn Festival was held at St. Mary's, Kettering, on May 22, conducted by Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, with Mr. S. J. Loasby at the organ. At a meeting held later in the day Mr. Shaw gave an address on the reform of Church music, and an interesting discussion took place. As a result a branch of the Church-Music Society is being formed, Mr. S. J. Loasby, the organist of the Parish Church, being the secretary.

A carillon of thirty-one bells, made by Taylor & Co., of Loughborough, has been installed at Mostyn House School, Parkgate, Cheshire, as a memorial to old boys who fell in the war. The carillon was dedicated on Ascension Day by the Bishop of Chester. Before the ceremony Mr. W. W. Starmer gave a lecture on carillons, illustrations being played by M. Antoine Nauwelaerts, the Bruges carillonneur.

At St. Aidan's, Leeds, on May 31, the Leeds New Choral Society gave a Bach evening, singing the Magnificat and the cantatas My spirit was in heaviness and Christ lay in death's dark prison. Each work was preceded by some helpful notes read by the Vicar of St. Aidan's. The soloists were drawn from the rank and file of the choir. Mr. W. Hartley, of Selby Abbey, was at the organ, and the indefatigable Mr. Matthias Turton conducted.

The Church-Music Society has just issued a penny four-page pamphlet of 'Suggestions for Conducting a Festival Evensong with Combined Choirs.' The suggestions are all extremely practical, and deal with some points in organization that are often overlooked with unfortunate results. A useful feature is a list of recently published books on Church music.

We congratulate Mr. Chastey Hector, organist and choir-master of Brighton Parish Church, on having obtained the degree of Mus. Doc., Oxford. The Parish Church Choir and a few friends have shown their regard for Dr. Hector by presenting him with his academic hood and an illuminated address.

The Welbeck Abbey Oratorio Choir, a hundred strong, sang the Hymn of Praise on Whitsun-day afternoon. The soloists were Mrs. Dorothea Rogers and Mr. A. S. Burrows, with Mr. Horace Fulford at the organ. Mr. Harry Minchin conducted.

Mr. James Hodgson has just completed forty-eight years of duty as organist of Huyton Parish Church, and the congregation has shown its appreciation of his services by presenting him with an address and a cheque for £400.

In our June issue we mentioned an appeal made by Sir Frederick Bridge at a City Temple recital on behalf of the Organists' Benevolent League. We now hear that the result was a collection of £42 10s. Good!

The University of Toronto has conferred the degree of Mus. Doc., honoris causa, on Mr. Frederick Mouré, organist of the University.

Mr. J. Kendrick Pyne, organist of Manchester Town Hall and University and Lecturer on Church Music, has received the degree of Master of Arts from Manchester University.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Paul Rochard, Kendal Parish Church (an Elgar programme)—Imperial March; Prelude to Part 2, 'The Apostles'; 'Pomp and Circumstance' March, No. 4; Morning, 'Caractacus'; March in G minor.

Miss Ada Petherick, St. Mary-le-Bow—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; 'Sleepers, wake!' Bach; Epilogue, Willan.

Mr. F. G. M. Ogbourne, St. Andrew's, Holborn—Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Sonatas Nos. 1 and 3, Mendelssohn.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church (for Organists' Benevolent League)—Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Légende, Dvorik; Cantilène, Vierne; Prelude on 'Komm, Gott, heiliger Geist,' Bach.

Mr. Albert Orton, St. Stephen's, Bayswater—March in D, Best; Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Introduction and Passacaglia in D minor, Reger.

Mr. Patrick A. Black, Dumbarton Parish Church—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Howells; 'Schiller' March, Meyerbeer.

Rev. E. A. Ingham, St. Anne's, Stanley, Liverpool—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Caprice in B flat, Guiltant; Variations on 'Austria,' Chipp.

- Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Concerto in F, Handel; 'Londonderry Air,' arranged by Hamand.
- Mr. H. Uttley, National Institute for the Blind—Choral No. 3, Franck; Passacaglia and Fugue, Bach.
- Mr. W. Wolstenholme, St. Lawrence Jewry—Fugue à la Gigue, Bach; Andante in D, Hollins; Festival Toccata and Fantaisie Rustique, Wolstenholme.
- Mr. Laurence M. Ager, Fletching Parish Church—Fugue in E flat and Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Prelude Archaïque, Hillemacher; Preludes on 'St. Ann's' and 'Old 104th,' Parry.
- Mr. Arthur L. Bates, St. Thomas's Presbyterian Church, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada—Intermezzo (Symphony No. 6) and Finale from Symphony No. 8, Widor; Chorale Preludes by Bach and Karg-Elert.
- Mr. James M. Preston, Laygate Presbyterian Church, South Shields—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; 'Covenanters' March,' Hailing; Fugue à la Gigue, Bach; Rhapsody No. 2, Saint-Saëns.
- Mr. Herbert Sumsion, Christ Church, Lancaster Gate—Sonata No. 1 and 'Dithyramb,' Harwood; Imperial March, Elgar; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Larghetto, Wesley.
- Mr. Sidney Smith, St. Nicholas, Chislehurst—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; 'Meistersinger' Overture.
- Dr. Harold Darke, All Saints, Hertford—Overture, 'Berenice,' Handel; Psalm-Prelude No. 1, Howells; Prelude and Fugue in G major, Bach; Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams; Kieff Processional, Moussorgsky.
- Mr. C. D. Boulton, St. Paul's, Covent Garden—Toccata and Fugue in F, Bach; Sonata in E flat minor, Rheinberger.
- Dr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church—Fugue, Op. 25, Guilmant; 'Hosannah!' Lemmens; Prelude to 'Parsifal'; 'Bohemesque,' Wolstenholme.
- Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, St. Margaret's, Whalley Range—Preludio (Sonata No. 3), Guilmant; Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Allegro Vivace and Toccata in F, Widor.
- Mr. E. T. Cook, All Saints, Hertford—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Fantasia Pastorale, Diéod de Stéverac; Rhapsody, Grace; Prelude on St. Mary, Wood; Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Liszt.
- Mr. Allan Brown, Bishopsgate Institute—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Fugue in C, Bach; March on a theme of Handel, Guilmant.
- Mr. Ambrose P. Porter, St. Matthias's, Richmond—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Grand Pièce Symphonique, Franck; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Mary's, Prittlewell—Villanella, Ireland; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside—Prelude and Fugue on BACH, Liszt; Sonata in E minor, Merkel.
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Bromley Congregational Church (for the Bromley and District Organists' Association)—Toccata in A, Purcell; Andante in E, Wesley; Three Chorale Preludes, Bach; Fugue in G (Pastoral Sonata), Rheinberger; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne.
- Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Introduction and Fugue from Sonata in E, Merkel; Chant de Mai, Jongen; Sonata in the style of Handel, Wolstenholme; Psalm-Prelude No. 2, Howells.
- Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—'The Wedge' Prelude and Fugue, Bach; Pavane, Ravel; Rhapsodie sur deux Noëls, Roparts; Choral, Jongen.
- Mr. Cyril G. Church, Holy Cross, Crediton—'Holsworthy Church Bells' and Choral Song and Fugue, S. S. Wesley; Allegro con Grazia, Tchaikovsky; Villanella, Ireland.

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. Cecil D. Boulton, organist and choirmaster, St. Paul's, Covent Garden.
- Mr. Mark Franklin, organist and choirmaster, St. John's Parish Church, Sligo.
- Mr. H. Newton Purcell, organist and choirmaster, Keighley Parish Church.
- Mr. H. V. Spanner, organist and choirmaster, St. Michael and All Angels, Blackheath.
- Mr. Herbert W. Sumsion, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, Lancaster Gate.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players.

- Young vocalist wishes to meet pianist, preferably West London, for mutual practice; also another vocalist for duets, &c.—C. M. M., c/o Musical Times.
- Violinist with extensive library of classic and modern Sonatas would like to meet a pianist for mutual study. Also a 'cellist to join in trios. Middlesbrough district.—'STACCATO,' c/o Musical Times.
- Mezzo-contralto, some professional experience, would like to join party or operatic society for study.—M. H., c/o Musical Times.
- Pianist (male), enthusiastic, desires to join orchestra or concert party. S.E. district preferred.—G. D., 113, Crampton Road, S.E. 20.
- Accompanist (male), good pianist, wishes to meet vocalist or instrumentalist for mutual practice. N. London preferred.—A. BIGGS, 10, St. Edmund's Terrace, N.W. 8.
- Amateur dance quartet requires a pianist and drummer to join violinist and clarinetist for practice.—Write, A. MORRIS, 92, High Road, Chiswick.
- Young gentleman violinist would like to meet pianist, mutual practice. Must be enthusiastic; same sex.—1, St. Mark's Terrace, Easton, Bristol.
- Violinist required for mutual practice one evening weekly, S.E. district.—A. N., 236, Malpas Road, S.E. 4.
- Amateur instrumentalists, all parts, required in orchestra at Cricklewood. Rehearsals Tuesdays, and Sunday service.—Write, M. E., 93, Chichele Road, Cricklewood, N.W. 2.
- Young violinist wishes to meet good accompanist (lady or gentleman) with view to mutual practice. Lewisham.—W. Y., c/o M. THOMPSON, 8/9, Talbot Court, E.C. 3.
- Hammersmith Orchestral Society. Advanced amateurs (all instruments, strings and wind) desirous of gaining experience with a symphony orchestra playing the best classical and modern music are invited to apply for membership. Rehearsals begin September 14. HON. SEC., 20, Castelnau Gardens, Barnes, S.W. 13.
- Violist would like to join quartet, &c., in S.W. district.—Address, 'VIOLA,' 6, Hauberk Road, S.W. 11.
- Accompanist, experienced, moderate sight-reader, offers his services to an amateur or P.S.A. Orchestra.—'REN,' 4H, Halton Mansions, Canonbury, N. 1.
- Young gentleman (pianist) is desirous of meeting 'cellist (lady or gentleman) for mutual practice at Bristol. Clifton district preferred. A love of classics a sine qua non.—Write, R. A., c/o Musical Times.
- Pianist (gentleman) desires to meet a violinist and 'cellist (either sex) for mutual practice.—H. C. LIGHTEN, 5, Churston Avenue, Upton Manor, E.
- Violinist (young lady) would like to meet pianist or another violinist. Knowle, Bngm.—FAIRFAX, c/o Musical Times.
- Keen lovers of music are cordially invited to join the East London Orchestral and Choral Society. Patrons: Madame Elsa Stralia, the Mayor of Stepney, Isador Epstein, Esq., &c.—For full particulars please write SECRETARY, E. L. O. S., 98, Whitechapel Road, London, E. 1.
- Wanted for trio, 'cellist for mutual practice, standard, Beethoven, Gade, Hurlstone trios.—Apply SEC., 17, Curzon Street, Wolverhampton. Also members wanted for new Y.M.C.A. amateur orchestra.—Apply, Y.M.C.A., Lichfield Street, Wolverhampton, or above address.
- Pianist (twenty) would like to meet instrumentalist (male) for mutual practice. Pendleton district, Manchester.—H. B., c/o Musical Times.
- Young soprano and bass-baritone anxious to meet contralto and tenor for studying four-part songs, &c. North London preferred.—W. E. WHITE, A.R.C.M., 2, York Terrace, Cedar Estate, Enfield.

[Will C. M. M. kindly send her address? It has been mislaid, and a letter awaits her.—ED., M. T.]

Letters to the Editor

DID VIADANA USE FIGURES?

SIR,—It is well known to all students of the early history of the Bassus continuus that Viadana's basses are, to all appearance, entirely unfigured, and that no mention of figures is made in the twelve Rules embodied in his preface to the famous Centi Concerti, 1602, the nearest approach to figuring being in the use of # and b, to indicate a major and minor third respectively, the accidental being placed slightly to the left of the note (not immediately above it, as in later basses) and exactly a third, or, occasionally, a tenth above it, as :

Such, at least, was the intention, though by the carelessness of the printer (and, perhaps, of Viadana himself) these accidentals were very often in the wrong place, and, as often, omitted altogether.

I am, however, firmly convinced that Viadana's use of accidentals (other than those sharpening or flattening the bass note itself) was somewhat wider than is generally supposed. This belief was founded, in the first instance, on the following passage from the Concerto Peccavi super numerum, for Cantus solus vel tenor :

It will be observed that the voice moves in sixths with the four bass notes provided with accidentals, and also that not one of the accidentals is correct, according to the usage just described, except the one over the crotchet g, indicating b, the passage being in D minor.

I will deal first with the # prefixed to the penultimate bass note. Here the case seems clear.

Adriano Banchieri, in his L'Organo Suonarino, 1605, tells us that # or b, placed to the left of the bass note and a third below it (as the inversion of a sixth above it), indicates an accidentally major or minor sixth (or thirteenth) respectively, and gives the following example :

Galeazzo Sabbatini, in his Regola facile, &c., 1628 (2nd ed., 1644), mentions this usage, but adds that it had already become practically obsolete. There can, I think, be no doubt that this explains the # in the passage from Viadana, the more so as there are several other passages, to be quoted presently, where a # preceding the bass note corresponds with an accidentally sharpened sixth in the voice parts.

I will, for the moment, quote only the following one (omitting the irrelevant voice parts) from the Concerto à voce pari (Cantus, Altus, Tenor, Bassus), Sanctorum meritis :

This looks as if Viadana placed the accidental a sixth above the bass instead of a third below it (according to the usage mentioned by Banchieri and Sabbatini), though, even on this assumption, the # is not quite in place, being exactly a fifth above the bass. It would, however, be unsafe to draw any decided inference from the position of an accidental which may, as likely as not, be due to the carelessness of the printer. It is nevertheless significant that, in all the instances in which I have found a # in the bass to correspond to a sixth in the voice parts, the # has always been either above the bass note (to the left of it) or immediately in front of it, never below.

To return to the example from Viadana (Ex. 2), the first three accidentals remain to be accounted for, or rather the first and third.

They may, of course, be misprints pure and simple, but I think it highly improbable, because in all the Concertos of Viadana which I have scored, though accidentals are constantly omitted in the Bassus continuus, they are very rarely wrongly inserted. My own belief is that Viadana wrote not b but 6. At that time the letter b was still very commonly used instead of b, and would be even more easily confused with the figure 6.

My conjecture, therefore, is that Viadana wrote the bass as follows :

A careful examination of all the hundred and forty-six Concerti of Viadana contained in Stein's reprint of 1613 (Brit. Mus. D 212, c.) has yielded the following further examples, both of # as an indication of an accidentally sharpened sixth, and of b as an indication of a diatonic sixth, either major or minor.

In several cases the verification of the significance of the # and b in question has not yet been possible, owing to the fact that the copy of the Concerti in the British Museum lacks the tenor part-book, and I have not yet been able to obtain a transcript of the one belonging to the 1626 edition preserved in the National Library at Paris. Nevertheless, I think it is better to include these doubtful examples, which I hope shortly to be able to verify.

EXAMPLES OF # AS INDICATION OF A SHARPENED SIXTH¹⁾

¹⁾ The # is, in every case, given in exactly the position which it occupies in the printed copy, though, theoretically, it should be either a sixth above or a third below the note, on the left of the same.

Ari Sancta Maria (Tenor solus). B.c. xxxviii., bars 15 & 37.

O Pater, O Franciscus (2 Tenors and 2 Basses). B.c. cxxxviii.

Ex. 8.

Ten. 1.

Ten. 2
(conjectural).

B.c.

Lauda Sion (2 Tenors and Bass). B.c. xcvi. (5 bars before section in 3-2 time.)

Ex. 9.

Ten. 1.

Ten. 2
(conjectural).

B.c.

Tria sunt munera (2 Tenors and Bass). B.c. cii., bar 4.

Ex. 10.

Ten. 1.

B.c.

2) G sharp presumably either present in the missing second tenor part, or, in any case, to be included in the accompaniment.

O dulcis Amor Jesu (2 Cant., Alt., and Bassus). B.c. cxxvii., ad init.

Ex. 11.

Altus.

B.c.

EXAMPLES OF d AS INDICATION OF A DIATONIC SIXTH

MAJOR OR MINOR (the unverified ones first).

Hunc præclarum (Tenor solus). B.c. xxix. (5 bars from end).

Ex. 12.

B.c.

Ave hostia salutaris (Ten. solus). B.c. xxxvi. (bar 10).

Ex. 13.

B.c.

3) The x, denoting the major third, should, of course, be in the space above, instead of beside the note.

4) b here = $\frac{6}{4}$ followed by $\frac{5}{3}$, though the x over the following d, denoting the major third, is omitted. This omission was constantly due to carelessness, but the x over the dominant was also generally omitted (as we see from the Concerti in 3 and 4 parts) when the major third on the dominant was preceded by a suspended fourth, as in Ex. 10 above.

Sub tuum præsidium (Cantus and Altus). B.c. liii., ad fin.

Ex. 14.

Cantus.

Altus.

B.c.

As the Cantus part shows, d here indicates a $\frac{6}{4}$ chord preceded by $\frac{5}{3}$ (or $\frac{5}{4}$). One would here have expected, either the d to be on the right of the note :

or else the notation :

but, if Viadana wrote a 6 on the right of the bass note, the printer, mistaking it for a b, may easily have put it on the side on which he was accustomed to see it. In this, as in the preceding example, the b denotes $\frac{6}{4}$, not $\frac{6}{3}$.

Montes Gelboe (Cantus and Bassus). B.c. lvi. (bar 22).

Ex. 15.

Ibid., ad fin.

Ex. 16.

In both the above Exx. the ♯ denotes $\frac{4}{3}$, and, in both, the absence of the ✕ after it, unless, as so frequently, due to carelessness, suggests a $\frac{4}{3}$ suspension, as mentioned above.

Verbum iniquum (Altus and Bassus). B.c. lxi. (11 bars from end).

Ex. 17.

This example is identical, so far as the ♯'s and the ✕ (at †) = $\frac{6}{5}$ are concerned, with Ex. 2 from Peccavi super numerum, in which the ♯ over the crotchet g (here omitted) is present.

Fili quid fecisti (Cantus, Altus, and Bassus). B.c. xcii. bar 20.

Ex. 18.

It is strange that there is no indication of a sixth over g†, but the omission is probably due to carelessness, as in the previous example.

Two things are now clear: (1) that Viadana used ✕ to indicate an accidentally sharpened sixth, and that it was probably his intention to place the ✕ (in most cases, at any rate) a sixth above the note, rather than a third below, as prescribed by Banchieri and Sabbatini; and (2) that the cases in which ♯ over the bass corresponds with the presence of a sixth in the voice parts are too numerous to admit of the possibility of their being pure misprints. Therefore, either Viadana used ♯ (contrary to any usage known to have existed) to indicate a diatonic sixth, major as well as minor; or else, as I have suggested, he wrote 6 which was mistaken by the printer for ♯. We have abundant evidence that Viadana was not a careful corrector of proofs, and it is not, therefore, particularly astonishing that he should not have noticed the mistake.—Yours, &c.,

F. T. ARNOLD.

P.S.—A very interesting comment on the rare occurrence of ♯ (a sixth above, or a third below the bass), to denote an accidentally sharpened sixth, is afforded by the following passage from the Dialogo musicale (an imaginary dialogue between the author and a friend), which is added in the second edition of 1611 of Banchieri's L'Organo suonarino (Brit. Mus. K. 4 i. 2). After explaining the use of ♯ and ♮ a third above the bass (to denote a major or minor third or tenth), Banchieri proceeds:

'And, to satisfy some curious critic, know that such accidentals cause the same alteration in sixths; however, in a Concerto for two or three voices, even though the vocal bass make a sixth with the upper part, modern organists and composers (the intelligent ones for the most part), in such an event, insert, in the instrumental Basso continuo, a fifth below the vocal bass, in which case cognizance is taken only of the tenth between the instrumental bass and the vocal soprano, and the vocal bass will be a middle part, and no cognizance is therefore taken of altered sixths.'

April 23, 1922.

'Example of how to avoid sixths in the Basso continuo :

† Misprint for G (?).

Hodie nobis coelorum (2 Cant. 2 Bass.) B.c. cxiii. (bars 23, 24 from end).

• • Misprint for E (?).

N.B.—Bassus 1 is in the missing Tenor part-book.

[The above letter was unavoidably held over from our June issue.—Ed., M.T.]

TRINITY COLLEGE EXAMINATIONS IN INDIA

SIR,—In a report dealing with the activities of Trinity College of Music, which appeared on page 204 in the March number of the Musical Times, reference is made to the College local examinations, and to the fact that emphasis had recently been laid 'on their real value as a guide and test from the teachers' point of view.' Dr. Creser, who had recently returned from his tour in India and the Malay Straits, is mentioned as adding his testimony to the above. He is quoted as having stated that 'there are young ladies in India who have passed our [Trinity College] examinations, who play the music of the great masters with intelligence and brilliance.' I have been teaching at Calcutta for a number of years, and have seen a good deal of this examination system and its results. I may say that I am unable to agree with the view that it possesses any educational value. On the contrary, I am strongly of the opinion that these examinations have the effect of obstructing all progress in musical education, and that they are actually responsible for its very low standard in India.

The authorities of Trinity College do not require that the candidates should have received any definite amount of musical education, or that they should have studied any regular course under qualified teachers, before being considered eligible to appear for an examination. All that they concern themselves with is that the candidates should play properly the two (or three) pieces set for the particular examination. If the examiner is satisfied with the performance of these test-pieces (and, probably, with the answers given to a few elementary questions) a certificate of efficiency is awarded, regardless of the fact that a whole year or more may have been given to the study of them, exclusive of any others.

There is no inducement to the teachers—the majority of whom are very poorly qualified, generally having been trained themselves on the same system—to depart from the easiest course of merely teaching the pieces (or parts of pieces) set for the examinations. It is not to be wondered at that the result—in India, at any rate—is that certificated musical ignoramus are legion.

As regards Dr. Creser's remark quoted above, this conveys a wrong impression, and would lead one not cognizant with the facts to suppose that these 'young ladies' he refers to have received a sound education in the music of the great masters, and are really capable of interpreting it 'with intelligence and brilliance.' It would have been more accurate if he had said '... who play two pieces, or parts of pieces, of the great masters ...' adding, 'after at least one year's exclusive study of them.'

With regard to the State recognition referred to in the above report, I can say that in Bengal, at any rate, it has not been accorded, and is not likely to be. Indeed, I happen to know that responsible educational advisers of the Government have strongly condemned the Trinity College system.—Yours, &c.,

S. M. EVERETT

(Honorary Pianoforte Professor, Calcutta School of Music).

Calcutta.

March 30, 1922.

SIR,—I am obliged by your courtesy in giving me the opportunity for replying to the above letter in the same issue of the Musical Times as that in which it appears.

I feel that to reply at all to such grotesque misstatements is paying the writer of the letter an altogether undeserved compliment; nevertheless, in order that those interested may not even temporarily be misled by these assertions, it is perhaps well to say a few words in answer to them.

In the very lowest grades of our Practical examinations—'First steps' and 'Preparatory' divisions—Technical Exercises, Scales, two Studies, and two Pieces are required; in the 'Preparatory,' Ear-tests in addition to the foregoing.

From the Junior grade upwards, the requirements include two Studies, two Pieces, Scales and Arpeggios, Sight-Reading, Ear-tests, and Questions on the Grammar of Music—the latter from the Intermediate Grade, comprehending Intervals and Modulation, and in the Senior and Higher Local Grades, Form also.

I enclose copies of our syllabuses for your inspection, in the hope that you may be sufficiently interested in the matter to see chapter and verse for yourself. But as our Examinations are so widely known, it really seems scarcely necessary for me to say in unqualified contradiction of what Mr. Everett has stated, that Trinity College does not under any circumstances whatever grant Certificates for playing two (or even three!) pieces alone, however perfectly these may be rendered. The requirements as specified are rigidly insisted on, and the Examiner neither has authority to omit, nor does he omit, any of these on any occasion.

Mr. Everett is therefore on the horns of a dilemma. Either he has not examined the syllabuses of Trinity College, and consequently is open to the charge of making statements without verifying their correctness, or, on the other hand, if the syllabuses have been consulted, then the writer is convicted of putting forward as true that which he knows to be false!

Certainly we 'do not require that the candidates should have received any definite amount of musical education, or that they should have studied any regular course under qualified teachers before being considered eligible to appear for an examination.' No examining body in music does this. It would be obviously impossible in the case of candidates at Local Examinations, and without doubt extremely difficult for Higher Examination candidates to meet such requirements.

We hold, and rightly, that the mere fact of passing the examination entered for is sufficient evidence that the student has received instruction from a teacher who is, to that extent at least, competent to impart it.

Clearly, Universities which have a curriculum for their Degrees, or Institutions which examine their own students, are on a different plane, and need not here be considered.

Into the merits or demerits of the examination system in general, and of Trinity College in particular, I do not propose to enter. It is late in the day to do so. Examinations have come to stay, and a teacher who ignores this fact will not be in the van of success.

Mr. Everett apparently does not know that the official certificates in music of the Education Department of the Punjab and of Madras are those of Trinity College; and other instances of the same kind within the Empire can be named. But as I am dealing with India alone, I confine myself to that country.—Yours, &c.,

E. F. HORNER

(Director of Examinations,
Trinity College of Music).

ORGANISTS' CONTINENTAL TOUR

SIR,—May I, with your permission, advocate the desirability of organizing a Continental tour this summer for the members of the various societies of organists and other musicians. The professional musicians in this country are mainly organists, and opportunity for forming a party with a view to visiting foreign countries, friendly intercourse with foreign musicians, seeing the haunts and birthplaces of great musicians, and inspecting the principal foreign organs is not one lightly to be turned aside. Such a visit, apart from being a pleasant holiday, would have distinct educational value. Compared with my own previous visits to the Continent in pre-war times, I found last year in a visit to Austria that the passport and customs regulations were somewhat troublesome, but this year I understand things are better. Visas have been abolished in several countries. Owing to depreciation of the currency, travelling, &c., beyond Switzerland into Austria, Bavaria, and Germany is cheap. I would suggest the following: Lausanne, Interlaken, and Zurich, Munich, Salzburg, Vienna, Prague, Dresden, Leipsic, Weimar, Eisenach, and the Rhine.

A most enjoyable tour could be organized, and the cost need not be great. For instance, a return ticket to Lausanne costs £8 10s. Besides the foreign musicians there are usually English Church organists in these centres, and I am sure they would welcome their brothers from the old country. Let those interested write to their Societies and Unions, and get them to move and co-ordinate with the London Society of Organists. No time should be lost, as passports would have to be got. Personally I should be very glad to help in any way.—Yours, &c.,

'Sandon,' 57, Bexley Road, HERBERT WESTERBY.
Erith, S.E.

'PIZZETTI AND BEETHOVEN'

SIR,—A friend has sent me the letter of Mr. Percy A. Scholes, published under the title of 'Pizzetti and Beethoven,' in the Musical Times of June 1, 1922.

Permit me to forward, together with the original, a translation of a letter written in order to clear up the facts alluded to by Mr. Scholes. This letter has been sent to some Italian musical papers (Il Pianoforte, of Turin, &c.), and has been published by them:

Florence, February 25, 1922.

SIR,—In the documents of the first Italian Congress of Music, which met at Turin last autumn, are repeated the words which M. Orefice pronounced against Pizzetti's lecture on 'The Musical Institute in Italy.' On page 88 we read:

'In order to show how Pizzetti understands musical culture, the orator states that in 1918, as a member of commission of the Liceo Musicale at Bologna, he had to examine a pupil of Pizzetti's whose name he can give—Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco. Among other examinations, there is one of extempore reading of an orchestral score. M. Alfano gave Castelnuovo the score of the Eroica. Orefice objected, because he said that this composition was—and certainly ought to be—known to Castelnuovo, but to his great surprise they assured him that he did not know it at all.'

M. Orefice in good faith made a great mistake in what regards myself. It is quite possible that the third Symphony of Beethoven, which I knew perfectly well, was part of the reading tests, and that perhaps it was given to some other pupil in that session. But I was asked to read the Symphony in G minor of Mozart, and as I considered it my duty to declare that I knew it well, they gave me to read at first sight the score in MS. of the Ombra di Don Giovanni of M. Alfano.

I remember these circumstances perfectly clearly; but for the public I wished to have the fact confirmed by M. Alfano (who presided at the commission of examination) and I received the following reply:

DEAR MR. CASTELNUOVO-TEDESCO.—I remember perfectly well that in your examination for the diploma here in 1918, you were indeed given the Symphony in G minor (orchestral score) of Mozart, and then the orchestral score of second Act of my Ombra di Don Giovanni. With regard to the Eroica I also remember distinctly that it was never given to you, and that you were not asked any questions about it.—Yours, &c.,

FRANCO ALFANO.

As your periodical has been among the promoters of the Congress, I should be glad if you would publish this letter. In the meantime accept my best thanks.—Yours, &c.,

MARIO CASTELNUOVO-TEDESCO.

In order to clear up the other points alluded to in the Musical Times I may add that I have studied in the Royal Musical Institute at Florence with M. Pizzetti, but that I have taken the examination of diploma in composition as an external student at Bologna in 1918.

I am sure that for the sake of truth you will publish the above statement.—Yours, &c.,

Via Martelli F., MARIO CASTELNUOVO-TEDESCO.
Florence, Italy.

June 13, 1922.

THE LIFE AND WORK OF R. L. PEARSALL

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me the use of your columns to make a request? For some six or seven years I have been gathering material for an account of the life and work of Robert Lucas Pearsall. I have been especially fortunate in some respects in securing original MSS., &c., but wish to make my essay as complete as possible.

For this reason I should be glad to hear from any of your readers who may possess any MSS., either in music or letters, or any early publications such as those by Goulding, D'Almaine & Co., Messrs. Schott, &c., if they would send me particulars. I might mention that several of these early publications appear under the initials only, R. L. P., in which way Pearsall often signed his letters.—Yours, &c.,

HUBERT W. HUNT

14, Belgrave Road, Bristol. (Musical Director of the Bristol Madrigal Society).
May 18, 1922.

'THE BALLAD IN AMERICA'

SIR,—It is curious to see how a certain kind of mind works when brought into contact with one that has different standards from it. Because I do most certainly not consider the songs of Charles Wakefield Cadman anything higher than the salad of commonplace and cliché that is turned out by the ton by English ballad purveyors, Mr. Porte thinks that perhaps I, being a modernist (!), despise anything so weak as melody. By what process of reasoning he reaches this alarming conclusion I cannot think. Why in the name of Baphomet Mr. Porte should be waiting for a 'general verdict' on my Sonata as good as that received by Cadman's work I cannot think: any way, it is very nice of him to say so, but again I cannot see what conceivable connection exists between my first Pianoforte Sonata (ci sono tre!) and American song recital programmes.

Now for Mr. Porte's 'white Englishmen and white Americans': I am sorry that your space should be taken up with ethnological details, but nonsense cannot expect to go unchallenged merely because it appears in a musical paper. Of 'white Americans' (I am told by well-informed Americans themselves), the number of those of other descent than British now greatly exceeds those of the latter and includes specimens of every race in Europe. Are all these your 'cousins'? 'White Englishmen' is an expression that interests me. Are there other colours in stock? Men from Persia and India, like myself, are of course quite accustomed to the perennial display of indecent ignorance which calls us 'black men.' Someone once congratulated me—it was an Englishman, of course—on being a compatriot of Coleridge-Taylor!—Yours, &c.,

175, Clarence Gate Gardens, KAIKHOSRU SORABJI.
Regent's Park, N.W.1.
May 31, 1922.

P.S.—I observe that your excellent Viennese correspondent, Paul Bechert, whom I had the pleasure of meeting, after having referred to me with some approach to accuracy as a Persian in the Musical Courier, now speaks of me as being of the left wing of British music! It ought not to be necessary now for me to insist on the fact that neither by race, ideals, thought, aims, or method have I anything whatever in common with anybody whatever of the modern Englishmen.—K. S.

PEROSI: A CORRECTION

SIR,—In your last number there appears a passage which calls for correction. It is as follows: 'The eminent composer, Perosi (who is, it appears, about to secede to the Waldese Protestants)', &c.—'Musical Notes from Abroad' ('Rome,' p. 439). I have it on good authority that Dr. Perosi is insane, and has been so for some years. Lately he got much worse. Consequently he is at present quite irresponsible for his actions, and I consider it to be taking a very unfair advantage of the unfortunate man if importance is attached to anything he may do. This places the remark of your Roman correspondent in a different light.—Yours, &c.,

Bishop's House, Plymouth, A. J. POWER
June 16, 1922. (Precentor of Plymouth Cathedral).

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of July 1, 1862:

THE GREAT HANDEL FESTIVAL AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE

This part was wound up by the laughing solo and chorus 'Haste thee, nymph,' from L'Allegro. Mr. Weiss had kindly undertaken to sing the short solo, which was too high for his voice, but he made up with comic vigour for any little deficiency of compass. The male chorus acted well up to its part in the following joyful sounds, but the ladies were deficient in the vis comica, and their laugh gave one no idea that they were any of them holding both their sides. It was now half-past three, and no wonder if they required something substantial to support them: it is no laughing matter to sing for two hours and a half without nourishment.

MANCHESTER.—On June 18, a concert took place at Henshaw's Blind Asylum, under the direction of Mr. Hiles, the musical instructor of the Institution. During the last half-year, twenty-three concerts, alternately sacred and secular, have been given, at which there have been but few repetitions, proving the ability and perseverance both of the teacher and his blind pupils.

WORCESTER.—The Festival Choral Society appeared in public for the first time as an independent body on June 13, when they performed the Creation in very good style. The principal singers were Madame Vining, Mr. Mason, and Mr. Briggs. Pianist, Mr. Tirbutt; harmonium, Mr. Caldicott. The oratorio was conducted by Mr. Done.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CONSCIENCE MONEY.—Received 1s. 6d., being the amount which ought to have been paid for music purchased from us some time since, upon a false representation that it was obtained for a professional musician.

Sharps and Flats

The more beautifully choirboys sing, the more deadening to true religion do they become. Their very existence as choirboys lends an air of unreality and indevotion to their performances.—The Rector of St. Ethelburga's, Bishopsgate.

Where a good and well-trained choir of boys' voices can be obtained, such voices are without doubt peculiarly suitable for rendering the music of the Church.—The Bishop of Lincoln.

I play the violin occasionally.—The Ex-Crown Prince.

I distinctly saw six people in the stalls.—G. Bernard Shaw.

You could have driven a carriage and pair through the stalls.—Sir Landon Ronald.

You must expect it if you give oratorio on a hot afternoon at this time of the year . . . People go out playing tennis and in search of other outdoor enjoyment and recreation, and I do not know that I blame them . . . Let the choir come in the winter, and I am sure people will go to hear them.—Sir Frederick Bridge.

There is something to be said, on cooler reflection, for the public that day . . . Afternoons and oratorios never go well together . . . All things considered, London did very well in sending six paying people—I am sure there must have been that many—to the stalls.—Ernest Newman.

Canterbury has to some extent made amends for the shameful behaviour of London.—Alfred Kalisch.

Expressing my opinion as an independent listener, I have no hesitation in saying that the London performance [by the Leeds Choral Union] was the finest that has ever been given.—Dr. Henry Coward (conductor of the Leeds Choral Union).

With proper curtailment, up-to-date production, intervals sufficiently long to secure interesting food and drink, and a thorough knowledge of the whole story on the part of the audience, The Ring could be made quite a cheery festival.—A. Corbett-Smith.

In one case where a story of mine was filmed, if the producer had changed the names of the characters I should not have known that he owed me the cheque he sent.—Henry Arthur Jones.

One film producer . . . told me with some delight that when he had finished with a certain play nothing whatever remained of it but the title. The kinema needs to outgrow this state of affairs.—W. Somerset Maugham.

The years have gone on, and have found Ornstein out, as they find out all the young fellows—every large town is full of them now—who are geniuses at sixteen, mediocrities at twenty-six, and nonentities at thirty. Nothing is easier than to make a sensation when you are young and your hair is at once a mane and an aureole; the difficulty is to keep it up when the hair begins to fall out.—Ernest Newman.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A chamber concert was given on May 22 in the Duke's Hall, the programme of which included some items of more than ordinary interest. It opened with a 'Hymn' composed by Klengel for twelve violoncellos (specially written for the funeral of the late Arthur Nikisch), and played by ten students and two past-students. Later in the programme came two movements from Sir Charles Stanford's Sonata for clarinet and pianoforte—the clarinet part being admirably played by Mr. Patrick Purcell, who also played the clarinet in the first movement from Brahms's Quintet for clarinet and strings, which brought the concert to a close. The other items included songs by Parry, Henschel, Massenet, and Puccini, Bach's Suite in E major for violin (Mr. Jean Pougnet), and pianoforte pieces by Mr. Reginald King (Macfarren Scholar) and Schumann, and a recitation from The Trojan Women by Euripides.

A successful meeting of the R.A.M. Club took place on Saturday evening, May 27, when the members and their friends filled the Duke's Hall. An excellent performance of music was provided, which included Bach's Fantasia in D, a group of pieces by Thomas Morley, John Bull, and Couperin, all played in the most delightful manner by Mr. Harold Samuel, a group of French songs in the first part and a group of English songs in the second part, beautifully sung by Miss Amy Evans and as beautifully accompanied by Mr. Harold Craxton, and a series of recitations with musical accompaniment by Stanley Hawley contributed by Miss Lena Ashwell, the pianoforte part being played by Miss Norman Parker. During the evening Dr. Richards, the president, on behalf of the members, thanked those who had so greatly contributed to the success of the evening by their performances, and reminded all present of the rapid approach of the Centenary celebrations, in which the Club would take a prominent part.

A recent event of exceptional interest was the complimentary dinner which the professors of the R.A.M. gave to Mr. Tobias Matthay to celebrate the completion of fifty years' continuous connection with the R.A.M.—as student, sub-professor, and professor. A large gathering of professors, with Sir Alexander Mackenzie in the chair, met for this purpose on Wednesday evening, May 31, at Paganini's Restaurant. In proposing the health of their guest Sir Alexander referred to the fact that in early years the Academy had helped Mr. Matthay, who in more recent years had helped the Academy. Since the time when he, the chairman, was a scholar at the R.A.M. the advance in pianoforte playing by the Academy students had been very great, and to that advance their guest had in no small degree contributed. Unlike many other reformers Mr. Matthay had lived to see, and he believed also to derive some benefit from, the fruit of his labours. He asked their guests' acceptance of an Address signed by the professors of the R.A.M. which expressed something of the feelings of his colleagues towards him. Mr. Matthay in a speech full of interesting reminiscences referred to his early student days, when Beethoven was regarded as a dangerous revolutionary and the parents of pupils objected to their children studying his music. He also disclosed the fact of his great disappointment when after his period as sub-professor at the R.A.M. he was appointed a professor of the pianoforte instead of harmony, to be a professor of which was at that time his great ambition. Later in the evening he proposed and Mr. Stewart Macpherson replied to the toast of the R.A.M., while the healths of Sir Alexander Mackenzie and Mr. Corder were proposed by Mr. J. B. McEwen, who has recently become a member of the Committee of Management.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

There have been two private dress rehearsals of opera in the Parry Theatre this month at each of which the following works were performed: A Scene from the Pickwick Papers, by Charles Wood, and The Shepherds of the Delectable Mountains, by Vaughan Williams. The rehearsals, which took place on Friday, June 16, and Monday, June 19, were managed, as has now become the custom with operatic work at this institution, entirely by College students. M. J.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

Mr. R. Arnold Grier has been appointed organist to the Royal Choral Society. Mr. Grier, who is organist of St. Peter's, Ealing, was born in 1888, and was open scholar at the Royal College of Music from 1907 to 1910. He has acted as sub-organist to the Royal Choral Society since 1908.

Music in the Provinces

BEDFORD.—The Apostles, performed by Bedford Musical Society at the Corn Exchange on May 18, was a revelation to the music-lovers of the neighbourhood who, it is said, have been talking about it ever since. The performance corrected the current notion that The Apostles is for 'crack' choirs only, and that it will never be popular with audiences. Under Dr. Harding the work was performed to admiration, the choral singing being not only technically sound but very expressive. The solo parts were sung by Miss Elsie Suddaby, Miss Dily Jones, Mr. John Adams, Mr. Reginald Herbert, Mr. Edward Dykes, and Mr. Harold Williams.

BRISTOL.—On May 30 Sir Hugh Allen opened the new club rooms of the Bristol Music Club, and among the pieces of chamber music performed were Schumann's Phantasietücke for pianoforte and strings, a Nocturne by York Bowen, and a Rhapsody by John Ireland for pianoforte.

CHATHAM.—At a charity concert on May 24 the Royal Engineers Band played selections from Eugène Onegin and Percy Fletcher's incidental music to Cairo. Lieut. Neville Flux conducted.

EDINBURGH.—At a chamber concert on May 18 concerted music by Beethoven, Saint-Saëns (Trio in F), Schumann, and Debussy was played, and the violoncellist introduced a Bach Suite in E flat for violoncello unaccompanied.

EXETER.—At the May meeting of the Chamber Music Club an Irish tone-poem for two pianofortes, May Moll, by Arnold Bax, a Sonata by Mozart for the same combination, and César Franck's Sonata for violin and pianoforte were played, and three Elizabethan songs for mixed voices, by Vaughan Williams, were sung.—On May 30, Dr. H. J. Edwards was presented with a silver salver and cheque by the Very Rev. the Dean of Exeter, on behalf of members of the Oratorio Society, in recognition of his services as conductor for twenty-five years, and as a token of the esteem in which he is held. The occasion was Dr. Edwards's resignation of the post, which has brought general expressions of regret.

FALMOUTH.—At the Roseland chamber concerts on May 27 and June 1, Bach's Sonata in G for violoncello and pianoforte, a Sonata by H. Eccles for the same instruments, Brahms's Pianoforte Trio in C minor, and a Basso ostinato for pianoforte were played, and among the vocal solos was Hadow's Irish peasant song.

HARROGATE.—At the symphony concert on May 18 Miss Flora McGill was the pianist in Schubert's Pianoforte Concerto, Mr. Howard Carr conducting. The orchestra also played Balfour Gardiner's Shepherd Fennel's Dance and Une Fille Slave by Glazounov.—On May 25 the Bach Brandenburg Concerto in F, Ernest Farrar's Lavengro Rhapsody, and a Hornpipe by Norman O'Neill were played.—On June 1 the Overture was Mackenzie's Britannia; Mr. Arthur Haynes was the soloist in Boëllmann's Variations Symphoniques, and the programme included a Suite arranged by Mottl from Gluck's operas.—On June 10 Frederic Lamond gave a recital of Beethoven's early and middle period of pianoforte works, playing, in addition to three Sonatas, the Fantasie, Op. 77, and Andante Favori.

LEEDS.—The Hymn of Praise was performed on May 18 by the Woodhouse Lane Choir, Mr. H. H. Plant being at the organ and Mr. J. Tinney conducting.

MONTGOMERY.—The second annual county musical Festival was held at the Pavilion, Newtown, on May 18, under the direction of Mr. J. M. Nicholas, county organizer of music. The programme included Bach's Blessing, Glory, and Wisdom and Schubert's Unfinished Symphony in the afternoon, and Elijah in the evening.

NEWTOWN (MONTGOMERY).—A choir of twelve hundred voices, drawn from every town and village in the county, sang Elijah on May 18, with full orchestra, the conductor being Mr. J. M. Nicholas, county organizer of music.

OXFORD.—On May 29 the London Chamber Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Anthony Bernard, played in Christ Church Hall five Ayres for the Theatre (Purcell), a Bach Concerto in D minor (with Dr. H. G. Ley at the pianoforte), Holst's Suite in C, and two Dances by Debussy. The Cathedral Choir, conducted by Dr. Ley, sang Madrigals.—St. John's College Musical Society secured the English Singers for the Eights Week concert on May 30. The programme included two Purcell duets (My Dearest and Fairest and Sound the Trumpet), Madrigals and ballets, and the Liebeslieder of Brahms, with Mr. P. T. Taylor and Mr. H. M. Havergal at the pianoforte.—Keeble College concert on May 31 included B. J. Dale's setting for chorus and orchestra of Christine Rossetti's carol, Before the paling of the stars. Four of Vaughan Williams's arrangements of folk-songs for unaccompanied chorus were sung.—On June 2 Pouishnov gave his first public recital at Oxford, the principal item being the Concerto in D minor of Friedemann Bach. The pianist also played a Tamhourin by Rameau, Moussorgsky's Hopack; and a piece of his own, When it rains.—At Queen's College concert on June 2, Eglesfield Musical Society sang Madrigals, including Stanford's Heracitus, Bring from the craggy haunts, Springtime of the year (Vaughan Williams), and Shenandoah (arranged by Dr. R. R. Terry).—The last of the subscription concerts on June 8 brought Madame Suggia, who played a Bach Suite and a Sonata by Sammartini, with Mr. George Reeves at the pianoforte.—At a pianoforte recital on June 9, Miss Eleanor Spencer included in a modern group a C major Prelude by Prokofiev, pieces by Rhéne-Baton, and some early music by Scriabin.—In Queen's College Chapel, on June 11, the choir (conducted by Mr. Maurice Besly) sang a programme of unaccompanied anthems, including the Bach chorale, Jesu, Jesu, Thou art mine, music of alternate invocation and responsive encouragement by Arcadelt and Stanford, Besly's In the hour of my distress, O vos omnes (Morales), and a carol, Here is the little door, by Herbert Howells.

PLYMOUTH.—Miss Marie Novello gave a pianoforte recital on June 3, playing a Refrain de Berceau, the Bird Song by Palmgren, a Pastorale e Capriccio by Scarlatti, and a Gavotte by Sgambati.

The Festival of the London Sunday School Choirs takes place at the Crystal Palace on July 8. The junior and senior choirs total nine thousand performers.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

LADY MARTIN, widow of Sir George Martin, on June 14, aged sixty-eight. She was a daughter of Thomas Murray Cockburn, of Dalkeith, and married Sir George Martin in 1879. Lady Martin was buried in the crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral, where her husband lies.

ULRIC E. DAUBENY, who died on May 1; a valued contributor to this and other musical journals, being especially well-informed in regard to the instrumental side of the art. His most recent book deals with 'Orchestral Wind Instruments,' and was published by Reeves in 1920.

IRELAND

The Vatican Choir paid a visit to Dublin on May 18, and gave two concerts. La Scala was packed on both occasions. The programme was the same as given in London.

The Æolian Musical Society produced Coleridge-Taylor's Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast and Death of Minnehaha in the large concert-room of the Rotunda, Dublin, on May 18, under the conductorship of Mr. Thomas H. Weaving. The choir was good, especially the ladies. Mr. W. F. Cope's annual concert at the Abbey Lecture Hall, on the same date, bore testimony to his powers as a choir trainer.

The balance of the funds subscribed for the Marchant Memorial has been allocated to provide a gold medal, to be known as the Dr. Marchant Medal, to be given annually to the chorister of St. Patrick's Cathedral who displays undoubted talent for musical interpretation.

On May 26 the Dublin University Choral Society gave the concluding concert of the season, the principal items being Gade's Erl-King's Daughter, Sullivan's O Gladsome Light, and Mozart's Symphony in E flat, under the conductorship of Dr. G. H. Hewson.

The annual Choral Festival of the diocese of Kildare and Glendalough was held in St. Brigid's Cathedral, Kildare, on June 8, when a choice programme was gone through under the direction of the Rev. T. W. E. Drury.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

Our winter season wound up with a series of six symphony concerts, with programmes drawn exclusively from Beethoven. The scheme consisted of all the Symphonies, some Overtures, the Violin Concerto (M. Zimmermann), and the Emperor Concerto (M. Andriessen). The last of these concerts, the receipts of which went towards the orchestral pension-fund, contained the 'Ninth' with Mesdames Peltenburg and Reidel and Messrs. Urlus and Denys as soloists.

Much to our regret the Italian Opera Company had to return to Italy on June 1. Its contract with the Paleis Theatre had expired, and no other theatre was available at the time. The Company is, however, expected back here in July, and it will appear in the Kurhaus Theatre at Scheveningen.

Only two more events have to be recorded this month. In the first place, we have received the news that our splendid 'Apollo' male choir, under the energetic directorship of M. Ferdinand Roeske, has scored an almost unheard-of success at Zurich. According to the Swiss papers, musicians and the press seemed to have been unanimous in their verdict as to the unrivalled qualities of this choir. Mention has furthermore to be made of the annual musicians' congress, which this year was held at Haarlem. Its importance lay in the first production of two new works of our most prominent Dutch composers. The first, William Pyper's String Quartet, No. 2, although not quite free from turgid moods, is by far the best work which this composer has brought forth. His new Quartet, at all events, seems to contain a promise which we seriously hope is going to be fulfilled. From a purely technical point of view, Henri Zagwyn's new Pianoforte Trio may be said to rank higher. In this work, on the other hand, a lack of originality of thought and decision of style are felt as serious drawbacks. Both works met with a very favourable reception, part of their success being due to the performers, viz., the members of the Dutch String Quartet and the pianist, M. de Vogel. Between the two chamber music pieces nine songs by Madame Wegener-Koopman were heard, of which the compositions based on two English nursery songs were by far the best. For Rabindranath Tagore's poems the talent of the composer proved insufficient. The songs were ably interpreted by Madame Koolhoven-Eyre Ashe.

W. HARMANS.

GERMANY

THE MECCA OF CHAMBER MUSIC

For the first time since the war the Verein Beethoven-Haus has celebrated a five days' chamber music Festival, again proving that Bonn has become 'the Mecca of chamber music.' In coupling Max Reger's Quartet in D minor, Op. 74, No. 1, with Mozart and Bach, the Busch Quartet showed that in spite of Reger's overladen contrapuntal style and disregard of the classical form all that which a few years ago was pointed out as illogical seems now well ordered and consequential.

The second evening was devoted to Schubert. On the third the Rosé Quartet interpreted Schönberg's Quartet in D minor, a work of the composer's first period, less startling in its discords than some of his later works. It was followed by Windsperger's Quartet in G minor, which is also an early work full of simple and beautiful melodies and natural dance rhythms.

The fourth day formed the culminating point of the Festival, with Beethoven's Variations in C minor and Sonata, Op. 111, played by Elly Ney, and the Quartet, Op. 135 and the second Rasoumowski played by the Busch Quartet. The final programme included Brahms's sunny Sextet in B flat major.

As a festival gift the Drei Masken Verlag, Munich, published a facsimile edition of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 111, giving a glimpse into the Werkstätte of this titan among composers.

THE BRAHMS FESTIVAL AT KASSEL.

This Festival was an event of importance. Thousands of listeners filled the great concert hall of the Stadthalle on four consecutive evenings. The programme covered the four Symphonies, the two Overtures, the Haydn Variations, important chamber works, songs, the German Requiem, and other choral works. Robert Langs and Abendroth shared the honour at the conductor's desk. The State Orchestra assisted, and the choral works were beautifully sung by the Stadtische Konzert-Chor, the Kassel Teachers' Singing Society, and the a cappella Choir.

FRANZ SCHREKER AT ESSEN

A year ago Ferdinand Drost introduced Schreker to the Rhenish Westphalians with a very successful performance of the opera Der Schatzgräber. The sequel has been a review of the entire artistic work of this much-discussed composer. At the first orchestral concert Drost conducted two works of Schreker's first period—a Tanzspiel for grand orchestra and an Intermezzo for string orchestra in nine parts. Maria Schreker, the wife of the composer, sang excerpts from the youthful opera Flammen and Der ferne Klang, and Schreker conducted his Chamber Symphony for twenty-three solo instruments, which proclaimed him a master of counterpoint. A morning performance devoted to operatic excerpts of a dreamy, lyrical character, with pianoforte accompaniment, proved that Schreker's strongest music is inspired by scenic action. His proper sphere is the stage, and as operatic composer he scored an enormous success. For months past Kapellmeister Drost had prepared this success by intense study with soloists, chorus, and orchestra, so that the highest point of perfection was attained. On the last evening Schreker read the poem of his new opera, Irrelohe, with considerable success. I have just received a handy book by Rudolf St. Hoffmann (published by E. T. Tal & Co., Vienna), dealing with Schreker's position as poet and composer. It is both a character sketch and a guide through his operas, and shows the way to an understanding of this remarkable man.

THE SCHUBERT FESTIVAL AT NEUSS

In the whirl of musical festivals it is a pleasant surprise to find one dedicated to the memory of the hundred and twenty-fifth birthday of Franz Schubert. The programme of this, the first Schubert Festival on a large scale, included the Unfinished, B flat, and C major Symphonies, and the Mass in E flat, and took four days to carry out.

Lovers of Schubert are herewith reminded of a new musical novel, Franz Schubert's Lebenslied, ein Roman der Freundschaft, von I. A. Lux (Grethlein & Co., G.M.B.H., Leipzig). This is without exaggeration the very best musical novel ever written. It is written by an artist who knows that Schubert was neither a sentimental dreamer nor a drunkard.

NACHMITTAGE FÜR LAUSLICHE MUSIKKULTUR

Herr Jos. M. H. Lossen has added a new factor to the musical life of Darmstadt by arranging concerts for a small circle devoted to modern music, interpreted by eminent artists. The programme of the first concert comprised pianoforte compositions by Courvoisier, Joseph Haas, August Reuss, Strasser, Hermann Unger, and Bodo Wolf. Walter Georgii (Cologne) was the pianist.

BÉLA BARTÓK

The tale of Blue-Beard has earned the attention of Béla Bartók, the Hungarian composer, whose new version under the title of Herzog Blaubarts Burg was produced at the Frankfurt Opera House for the first time. The poem, by Béla Balazs, is preceded by a spoken prologue of a bard, bearing reference to the castle of the Duke where the action of the drama takes place. Fair Judith follows the Duke into his sombre home to share the fate of three former wives, who still inhabit the castle as shadows. This meagre plot is clothed in a gorgeous garb of dissonances, behind which however lurk a host of beautiful sounds and melodies. The opera was well staged, and was ably conducted by Herr Eugen Tzenker, but the audience was not enthusiastic.

Far more applause greeted Bartók's dance play, Der Jol-geschmützte Prinz, a play wherein a prince wins a maiden's love by a wooden figure representing himself.

F. ERCKMANN.

NEW YORK

Every spring, when the concert-halls and the Metropolitan Opera House are closed for the summer, managers who have something unique to offer in the musical line, but who would not dare to promote attractions in competition with the standard ones, venture to bring their novelties before the music-loving public. The chief offering of these adventurous managers this year was a Russian Opera Company—composed entirely of Russians, singing only Russian opera in the Russian language. This Company was organized four years ago in Russia, in the usual way, by an entrepreneur who engaged ninety-six men and women to fill the positions of principals, orchestra, chorus, and ballet, pledging their salaries according to their work and their abilities. Starting on tour through Siberia, they were not long on their way before they decided to run the Company on Soviet principles, with no head but a governing committee chosen by themselves, and this small communism is still in existence living from hand to mouth, sometimes with a fat treasury and sometimes nearly penniless. After wandering through China and Japan, they went to Java, where they were immensely successful, and then to Manila and other ports of the Far East, where they nearly starved. Returning to Tokio they finished their appearances on the other side of the Pacific with money in their pockets; but as it seems to be a Soviet principle 'never to work unless you have to,' they idled in Japan until starvation was again facing them. The committee was called and someone suggested—America! There was no money, but a steamship company agreed to take them to Seattle if they would pledge their scenery, costumes, and personal baggage for passage. Thus they arrived on our Pacific coast absolutely in pawn, and there they were fortunate enough to find an American manager who undertook to take them on a ten months' tour in the United States, ending at New York.

Almost in the beginning of their tour they committed an indiscretion in California. Although they considered themselves to be a Company without a star, yet one of the women singers, Ina Bourskaya, ranked above the others in artistic merit and had in former times and at other places given such sensational performances of Carmen that it was decided to depart from their all-Russian programme and to have her appear at San Francisco as Bizet's heroine. What was the result in this wide-awake country? She was immediately engaged by both the Chicago and Metropolitan Opera Companies for next season, the Metropolitan stipulating that she should not sing at New York until she appeared under its management. It has been said by someone that if 'Calvé was the World, and Farrar the Flesh, then Bourskaya was certainly the Devil' as Carmen! So we have something to look forward to.

Deprived of its 'star,' the Russian Opera Company opened at the New Amsterdam Theatre to a large and enthusiastic audience. Everybody went out of curiosity. Many never went a second time, though the smaller audiences were often enthusiastic. Some of the voices were fairly good, especially the basses and baritones, but most of them were badly trained—or untrained—and the orchestra was rough and unbalanced. The scenery was absurdly scanty and poor, and the costumes equally so—the same scenes being often used in different operas, the same costumes worn in different rôles. Yet the acting was often quite good, and sometimes a bit of characterisation was remarkably well done, while the whole Company continually showed its never-flagging zeal and sincerity, giving us glimpses of the real way the Russians live and comport themselves in their daily lives.

The chief interest in the appearances, however, was in the production of works never heard before in this country. Among the other operas given, four had never been heard here. Russulka (or The Mermaid), by Dargomizky, given on the opening night, was so uninteresting that it was not repeated. Rimsky-Korsakov's The Czar's Bride proved to be one of the best in the repertoire—the music full of folk-song reminiscences and the composition superior to Snegurochka but inferior to Cog d'Or. Rubinstein's The Demon was very dull, and a disappointment to those who forgot that Rubinstein, although a great musician and pianist, did not rank high as a composer. The opera is a curious mixture of Faust, Mephistopheles, &c., with almost nothing to be said in its favour or of its individuality. The fourth novelty, Cheruvichik (or Christmas Eve), by Tchaikovsky, was perhaps the most successful of all. This gay little comedy, with its witch in league with the devil, was vastly amusing, and we could but wonder how it came to be written by the disciple of pessimism. Of the four operas that we have heard before at the Metropolitan Opera House—Boris Godunov, Snow Maiden, Eugène Onegin, and Pique Dame—there is little to be said: the productions by this Russian Company cannot be compared in any way to the sumptuous performances at the Metropolitan. For a few touches of Russian flavour that the great house did not realise or visualise there were a thousand sins of commission and omission by the travelling Company. The audiences grew thinner and thinner, and the four prospective weeks were shortened to three. It has always been a question with this Company, 'Where next?' The 'next' this time has been its removal to a small theatre in Second Avenue, in the very heart of the district peopled by the Russian Jews. There, at prices suited to the purses of its listeners, surrounded by its compatriots, this strange little band of Soviets may sing for some time to come in this great cosmopolitan city of New York. M. H. FLINT.

PARIS

This month the Concerts-Pasdeloup come in an easy first so far as performances of new works are concerned. The range covered by the association extends from charming, unpretentious things, such as the little Suite Ames d'Enfants by Jean Cras, the Esquisses Symphoniques by Marcel Orban, and the songs Dédicées and Le Roseau by Jacques Pillois to the Fresque Symphonique for pianoforte and orchestra (in which Lucien Lambotte, a Belgian composer, has had the remarkable idea to utilise three of Liszt's Etudes for pianoforte, prefacing them with an Ode Élégiqne of his own, dedicated to Liszt's memory); to the Poème de l'Univers with which the gifted Siamese composer, Eugène Grassi, ventures into regions not dissimilar to those which attracted Scriabin, but displays a spirit altogether different from the Russian's; to Georges Migot's curious Agreslides, a set of three tone-pictures which are good music, but whose character hardly justifies the composer's endeavour to present them as an outcome of an altogether new conception of musical art; and—last, but not least—to Schönberg's five Orchestral Pieces, which gave the signal for the most extraordinary uproar witnessed at Paris since the appearance of Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps.

At the Concerts-Colonne the nearest approach to a novelty consisted of part of the incidental music to George Sand's Claudie, written more than twenty years ago, but seldom heard since. At the Concerts-Lamoureux we heard a good Légende for viola and orchestra by Florent Schmitt, Liapounov's Rhapsody on Ukrainian Motives for pianoforte and orchestra, charming Inscriptions Champêtres for female choir by André Caplet; and at the Conservatoire an impressive, classically-built orchestral sketch, Cimetière, which is part of a descriptive Suite by Gustave Doret, and Respighi's Fontaines de Rome.

The contemporary music societies have been as active as usual. 'L'Œuvre Inédite'—an institution for which the Guide du Concert is responsible—continues doing much excellent spade-work and provides a useful opening for débutants. It is impossible to give a full list of the novelties which it has been instrumental in introducing. At the Société Musicale Indépendante the most noteworthy items were an amusing Sérénade for 'cello and pianoforte by Laurent Ceillier, and Lili Boulanger's songs Clairières dans le Ciel. A further insight into the output of this composer—who during her short span of life succeeded in creating a deep impression in French musical circles—was afforded by a performance of her 129th Psalm and other works of hers at the Salle des Agricultures. There is no doubt that her imagination was of no common quality, and that she had the gift of expressing herself convincingly.

The variety of interests of which concert-givers here are capable is well-evincd by the following little list, compiled from the wide choice of the programmes which daily invited attention: a concert of Polish music (Moniuszko, Niewiadomski, Szymanowski, and half-a-dozen other composers represented) given by Turzanski; another given by the 'Œuvre Inédite' (works by Rozycki, Robozinsky, Szymanowski, and Tansman—the last-named quite interesting); a concert given by the Yugo-Slavia Choir at the Lyceum, with a programme partly Yugo-Slav and partly Russian, besides a dash of Smetana; Tchecho-Slovakian songs at the Société Nationale; other Tchecho-Slovakian works at one of the concerts of the Revue Musicale; a concert of Armenian choral music at the Salle Pleyel; a highly interesting concert devoted to works by Honegger and Opol Ygouw at the Salle Erard; two concerts given by Madame Olenine d'Alheim, both brimful of interest; at the Salle Gaveau, a concert at which Jean Wiener, Maria Freund, and the String Quartet, 'Pro Arte,' introduced things by Stravinsky, Schönberg, and Haba (a Quartet in which quarter-tones are used, and, I fear, misused); at the Sorbonne, a lecture by Henri Prunières, with examples by Goossens, Lord Berners, Bartók, and a dozen others; at the Salle Gaveau, a concert of British music given by the Association France-Grande-Bretagne; at the same hall, a concert of works by Louis Vierne, an earnest and capable composer who deserves far wider a notoriety than he enjoys as yet. It is impossible to deal with all these events, to say nothing of all those which I have not even space to mention. Elsewhere, new bow instruments are being displayed under the title 'Nouveau Dixtuor.' Some of these are most fascinating, and were I to discuss them as they deserve to be discussed, this one topic alone would more than exhaust the space to which a mere correspondent from abroad may lay claim. A. BOLD.

SWITZERLAND

THE ZURICH FESTIVAL

The first cycle of the International Festival performances at Zurich commenced with Othmar Schoeck's Venus and ended with Tristan und Isolde. The second work, Friedrich Klose's dramatic symphony Ilsebill, which contains much beautiful and interesting but not very original music, scored a great success with the assistance of Marie Lorentz-Hollischer of the Vienna State Opera and Karl Melzer, a lyrical tenor of Zurich, as the fisherman. An equally laudable performance of Reznicek's Ritter Blaubart was accomplished by the members of the Zurich opera, with Karl Schmid-Bloss in the title-role. By way of contrast with this blood-thirsty drama the ever young and graceful Fliedermaus enforced its citizen-right in the frame of an otherwise serious Festival. The next day brought the Festival to a climax with the performance of Tristan under the masterful guidance of Herr Bruno Walter. Emmy Kruger was Isolde and Kurt Taucher Tristan.

The second cycle of the Festival was devoted to British dramatic art. Bernard Shaw's charming comedy You never can tell and Galsworthy's humorous play The Pigeon were very successfully given by the members of the London Everyman's Theatre.

The third part of the Zurich Festival was supplied by members of the Paris Opéra-Comique, under Albert Wolff, who performed Carmen in the original form with dialogue instead of the recitatives (which the composer wrote after the completion of the opera). Finally, Charpentier conducted his Louise and achieved a signal success, mainly owing to the singing of Madame Vallendri.

F. ERCKMANN.

VIENNA

NEW STRAUSS WORKS

Of all contemporary German composers, chief interest still centres in Richard Strauss, although, of course, he is no longer the leader of our extremists. This place has long since been relinquished by him to men like Arnold Schönberg and his still more radical followers and adherents. So far from being a revolutionary, Strauss is now the pet composer of the broad masses to whom music is frequently more a matter of entertainment, even of sensationalism, than of deep or noble emotion. Yet each new work of Strauss still attracts the connoisseurs and the crowds. His Deutsche Motette, recently heard here for the first time, is a difficult work, written for solo quartet and sixteen-part mixed chorus a cappella. It abounds in contrapuntal treatment of the most complicated kind, which puts performers and hearers to an equally difficult task. The Motette is in fact quite orchestral in character, and its effectiveness would probably be enhanced by giving it an orchestral setting, without the aid of words which are but loosely related to the music and remain unintelligible. Effectiveness and melodic swing also are the principal characteristics of Strauss's new Hymns, based on two poems by Hölderlin. Barbara Kemp, a slightly overrated operatic soprano from Berlin, sang them for the first time—at an orchestral concert directed by Max von Schillings, the Berlin conductor—with more pedantic accuracy than genuine enthusiasm. There is very little that is deep or great in these songs; they are just a mixture of pseudo-passionate and sometimes perfumed melodic bits which are apt to make the judicious grieve.

PFITZNER AND REGER

Quite a different type of artist is Hans Pfitzner, whose compositions—all too little recognised and, least of all, understood by his pan-German partisans who make him a political rather than an artistic issue—command respect, even love, for their uncompromising adherence to a true idealistic loftiness of purpose. His beautiful cantata, Von deutscher Seele, which Furtwängler produced here, was a striking demonstration of Pfitzner's lovable qualities—hampered as they are at times by a surplus of those pondering, philosophical tendencies which are so strongly characteristic of the 'deutsche Seele' in general. The deep earnestness of Pfitzner, more clearly evident in each successive work he produces, has long since won him a place commensurate to that of Max Reger, who, to be sure, surpassed Pfitzner by his wonderful knowledge of form and marvellous contrapuntal craftsmanship, as well as in productiveness. Of this the three days' Reger Festival held here this season gave an astonishing demonstration. Reger's immensely difficult Violin Concerto, long considered 'brittle' and 'ungrateful' by the violinists of our time, was recently played here by Mrs. Mary Dickenson-Auner, the English violinist, with an admirable command of its enormous difficulties both as regards style and technique.

BARTÓK AND KORNGOLD

To Mrs. Dickenson-Auner also fell the distinction of being chosen by Béla Bartók for the first performance anywhere of his new Violin Sonata, which is still in MS. This composition, which has since been performed in London as well, created a deep impression here by virtue of its strongly personal and national touches. An equal share of admiration fell to the lot of Mrs. Dickenson-Auner and to her partner, Eduard Steuermann, a Viennese pianist from the Schönberg group, who, in their interpretation of this piece, displayed remarkable technical resources and admirable interpretative powers. In spite of the heated discussion it has everywhere evoked, this Bartók Sonata must be considered the most important addition to violin literature in recent years, though it may not agree with the musical palates of average concert-goers, who still prefer the more obvious musical nourishment contained in such works as Korngold's Suite from Much Ado about Nothing, which formed the pleasing dessert in the local programmes of that kind of violinists, Fritz Kreisler, and of several minor gods of the bow. Korngold's talent is beyond dispute, but one would wish him to free himself from his present desire for the easy laurels of the 'child prodigy,' and to separate his ways from that clique of unconditional admirers who still encourage him in his quest of public favour, regardless of its cost.

SINGERS AND SONGS

In spite of slackening public attendance, caused both by the advancing season and by adverse economic conditions, song recitals and aria concerts still continue to draw crowds to our concert-halls. The latter variety, though by far the most popular with the superficial masses, call for little critical comment, even if they are frequently the vehicle for such remarkably beautiful voices as those of Selma Kurz, Alfred Piccaver, and other favourite stars from the Staatsoper. The majority of these artists depend in their programmes on the great classics of song and on but few acknowledged modern writers. Special praise, therefore, is due to Marie Gutheil-Schoder for devoting an entire evening to songs by young Viennese composers. Her voice, not always beautiful in itself, is perfectly trained, and controlled by an artistic seriousness of purpose which commands respect. Among the first to sing Schönberg and Mahler in our concert-halls, she still advocates the cause of the young and aspiring composer. Her programme, besides Schönberg and Mahler, comprised songs by Alexander von Zemlinsky and Rudolf Réti, both somewhat incoherent but decidedly interesting, as well as two grateful lyrics by Franz Mittler, and four strongly dramatic and none too radical songs by Karl Horwitz. The same songs by Horwitz also figured in the programme of Louise Weigl-Pazeller, along with some rather 'pleasing' examples by Karl Wiener and Rudolf St. Hoffmann, and others by Paul A. Pisk, the latter being a very talented if uncompromising exponent of the radical 'atonal' school.

PAUL BECHERT.

THE ENGLISH FOLK-DANCE SOCIETY

A Festival of folk-song and dance will be held under Mr. Cecil Sharp's direction at the King's Theatre, Hammer-smith, from July 3 to 8. At the invitation of the League of Arts the Society undertook the organization of two country dance parties in Hyde Park on Saturday, June 17.

Stanford's Phaultrag Crohoore and Songs of the Fleet, with Mr. Leonard Rogers as soloist, were well sung by the St. Agnes (Kennington) Choral Society on May 18, conducted by Mr. Eustace Belham.

Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast was performed with excellent effect by Burgess Hill Choral Society on May 23, under Mr. H. Graves, with Mr. Herbert Orbell as tenor soloist. Madrigals and part-songs went to the making of a good programme.

The Glastonbury Festival School studies Greek drama from July 29 to August 12, Hellenic dancing, Alceste (to Mr. Rutland Boughton's music), and Blow's Venus and Adonis, from August 14 to 25. Public performances take place from August 26 to September 2.

The members of the Willesden Green and Cricklewood Choral Society have presented their conductor, Mr. F. W. Belchamber, with a silver rose bowl as a token of appreciation of his work for the Society during the past twenty-five seasons.

CONTENTS

	Page
The Royal Academy of Music, 1822-1922 (Illustrated)	469
Our Decadence. By Rutland Boughton	474
On Editing Elizabethan Songs. By Philip Heseltine	477
The Blackbird's Song. By Alexander Brent-Smith	480
Music and Communism. By C. D. Graham	481
Instrumentation: Some Strange Survivals. By Ulric Daubeny	482
Occasional Notes	484
The Handel Festival at Halle. By E. Van der Straeten	487
(Illustrated)
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvo-coressi	490
Songs and their Words	495
London Concerts	496
The Apostles at Canterbury	500
Opera in London	500
Church and Organ Music	502
Royal College of Organists	502
Chamber Music for Amateurs	502
Letters to the Editor	505
Sixty Years Ago	510
Sharps and Flats	510
Royal Academy of Music	511
Royal College of Music	511
Royal Choral Society	511
Music in the Provinces	511
Obituary	512
Music in Ireland	512
Musical Notes from Abroad	512

Music:

The Isle. Part-Song for Mixed Voices. By ERIC FOGG... 491

THREE EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. Royal Academy of Music.
2. 'It's oh! to be a wild wind.' Part-Song. By Edward Elgar. Arr. for S.A.T.B. by the Composer.
3. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

A LCOCK, W. G.—"O perfect love." Hymn Tune. On card. 3d.

B ENNETT, W. STERNDALÉ.—"God is a Spirit." Arranged for Boys' Voices (s.s.), with organ accompaniment. (No. 68, Novello's Chorister Series.) 2d.

B OYLE, I.—"The Transfiguration." Anthem for the Feast of the Transfiguration or for general use. 9d.

B YRD, W.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D minor (transposed to F minor). Edited by GEORGE J. BENNETT. (No. 1069, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 6d.

C AREY, FLORENCE.—"Save us, O Lord, waking." For use at Evening Service. (No. 1068, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

D UNHILL, T. F.—The Chiddingfold Suite. For String Orchestra. Score, 10s.

E LGAR, E.—"Yea, cast me from heights." Arr. for S.A.T.B. (No. 1396, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

— "Whether I find thee." Arranged for S.A.T.B. (No. 1397, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

— "After many a dusty mile." Arranged for S.A.T.B. (No. 1398, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.

— "It's oh! to be a wild wind." Arranged for S.A.T.B. (No. 1399, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

— "Feasting I watch." Arranged for S.A.T.B. (No. 1400, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.

F OGG, ERIC.—"The Isle." Part-song for Mixed Voices. (No. 953, The Musical Times.) 2d.

G ERMAN, EDWARD.—"The Willow Song" (Traditional Melod.), from "Othello." Tone-Picture for Orchestra. Full Score, 7s. 6d.; String Parts (5), 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts, 8s. Arrangement for Pianoforte Solo, 3s.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

H ILDYARD, L. D.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in D. 6d.

Ö HR, F. N.—"A Slumber Song." Part-Song. Arr. for T.T.B.B. (No. 582, The Orpheus.) 4d.

U NN, W. F.—Sanctus in E. 2d.

P ARRY, C. H. H.—Elegy. For Organ. 1s. 6d.

P EPPER, WILLIAM.—Three Hymns for Festival and General Use. 3d.

S CHOO L MUSIC REVIEW, No. 361, contains the following music in both notations.—"Swift as a bird." Chorus from "William Tell," arranged for School Choirs. Music by ROSSINI. 2d.

S CHOO L SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

Book 268. Folk-Songs for Schools. Collected and arranged by CECIL J. SHARP. Set VII. 1s.

S HARP, CECIL.—The Country-Dance Book. Part VI. 5s.

— Country-Dance Tunes. Sets 10 and 11. 3s. each.

S MART, HENRY.—"The day is gently sinking." Hymn. (No. 1072, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 1½d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

B ARLOW, REV. J. H.—The Bach Chorale Book. A Collection of Hymns set exclusively to Chorales harmonized by J. S. BACH. Selected and edited. 7s. 6d. net.

C LOKEY, J. W.—"Woodland Idyll." For Organ.

F ORSYTH, CECIL.—"The Dark Road." Arranged for Organ.

H ARRIS, CUTHBERT.—Madrigal. For Organ.

H ELDT, PAUL.—Soliloquy. For Organ.

P EEL, DUDLEY.—"Temple Bells." For Organ.

V INCENT, C.—Prelude in G minor and major.

W ARD, F. E.—"An Ocean Rhapsody." Arranged for Organ.

W ARREN, ELINOR RENNICK.—"God, our Refuge." Sacred Solo. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

— "Others." Sacred Solo. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

F OR SALE.—PIPE ORGAN, four Stops. Cheap. Perfect order. 4, Palanza Terrace, New Burlington Road Bridlington.

F OR SALE.—Rogers Two-Manual PIANO, with Pedal Attachment, radiating concave, stool. Condition as new. £120. Miss Wyon, Frensham, Surrey.

B ARGAIN.—Student's two-manual Pedal ORGAN. Seven rows reeds. Stops as in pipe organ. £90. New. Seen London. "J." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

W ANTED for a Baptist Church in S.E. London. a CHOIR-TRAINER, to take weekly (Friday) rehearsals of the choir, and occasional special services on Sunday. Knowledge of Anglican Chants desirable. Applications, stating qualifications, experience, and salary required, to be sent to H. de Russett, 10, Tressillian Crescent, Brockley, S.E. 4.

C OMPOSER.—An author with libretto wishes to work with a composer of romantic and comic opera. Address, "Jester," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

C HOIRMASTER and ORGANIST WANTED for Camphill U.F. Church, Glasgow. Salary, £120. Applications, with copies of testimonials, to Sam B. Wilson, 9, Queen's Park Avenue, Crosshill, Glasgow.

O RGANIST and CHOIRMASTER of important Church desires change. Long experience. Mus. B., F.R.C.O. Apply "W. R.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

AUG 15 1922

No.
954

Price
6d.

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

AUGUST 1, 1922

Directors—
W. BERRIDGE
C. R. GALLARD

THE

WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES

LTD.

HAVE NOW REMOVED TO THEIR FORMER PREMISES

ADJOINING WIGMORE HALL.

OVER 20 ADDITIONAL MUSIC STUDIOS

Electric Lift. Central Heating. Lavatories and Comfortable Lounges on each floor.

GRAND PIANO IN EVERY ROOM

32-40, WIGMORE STREET, W.-1.

The Name of

J. & J. HOPKINSON

*Stands for the HIGHEST ATTAINMENTS
in THE WORLD OF MUSIC*

REMARKABLE FOR THE EXQUISITE QUALITY OF TONE

J. & J. HOPKINSON, LTD.,

44, FITZROY ROAD, PRIMROSE HILL,
LONDON, N.W.-1

(ONLY ADDRESS).

Registered

Trade Mark.

"In no way can the general refinement of life in this country be more effectually furthered than by the restoration of music to its proper place in the scheme of our common education."

The Rt. Hon. H. A. L. FISHER.

The Educational Scheme of The Gramophone Co. embodies the issue of records specially for school use, such as the following:—

ENGLISH FOLK DANCES

(Arranged by CECIL J. SHARP)

VICTOR MILITARY BAND

10-inch Double-sided Records, 4/- each.

- | | | | |
|--------|---|--------|--|
| B 1189 | { (1) Ruffy Tufty (2) Parson's Farewell
(1) If all the World were Paper (2) Mage on a Cree | B 1190 | { Gathering Peasoods
Sellenger's Round |
| B 1191 | { Kirkby Malzeard Sword Dance (The Girl I left Behind Me)
Flamborough Sword Dance (Three Jolly Sheepskins) | | |
| B 1192 | { The Old Mole
Jenny Pluck Pears | B 1193 | { Three Meet (The Pleasures of the Town)
The Butterfly |
| | | B 1194 | { Goddeses
Hunsdon House |

ELIZABETHAN MADRIGALS

(Edited by EDMUND H. FELLOWES)

THE ENGLISH SINGERS

10-inch Double-sided Records, 5/6 each.

- | | | | |
|-------|---|-------|---|
| E 231 | { Now is the Month of Maying
Morley
The Silver Swan ... Gibbons | E 232 | { Sing we at Pleasure ... Weelkes
Lullaby, My Sweet Little Baby ... Byrd |
| E 233 | { Since First I Saw Your Face ...
(a) Flora Gave Me Fairest Flowers ...
(b) On the Plains, Fairy Trains ... | | { ... Ford
... Wilbye
... Weelkes |

INSTRUMENTS OF THE ORCHESTRA

12-inch Double-sided Records, 7/6 each.

Without announcements of the names.

- | | |
|--|-------|
| Strings—Celesta—Harp—Wood-wind—French Horn | D 555 |
| Brass-wind—Percussion | D 556 |

With announcements of the names.

- | | |
|--|-------|
| Strings—Celesta—Harp—Wood-wind—French Horn | D 557 |
| Brass-wind—Percussion | D 558 |

In addition, our general list contains a large number of records of music eminently suited for scholastic work. "His Master's Voice" Records can be used for Rhythmic Training, Picture Music, Form, History and other developments of musical art. A special educational catalogue containing over 500 of these records has been issued and can be obtained on application.

Every music teacher should possess a copy of "Learning to Listen by means of the Gramophone" (Percy A. Scholes). Price 3/- net. Obtainable from all "His Master's Voice" accredited dealers.

THE GRAMOPHONE COMPANY, LIMITED,

Education Department,

363-367 OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

THE LONDON STRING QUARTET

C. WARWICK-EVANS
THOMAS PETRE

H. WALDO WARNER
JAMES LEVEY

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

AUGUST 1 1922

BRITISH PLAYERS AND SINGERS

VII.—THE LONDON STRING QUARTET

Exquisite instrument of exquisite music, the string quartet! The four various voices of four equal minds must sing with a surface-play of animated rivalry which, however, is anchored in a radical unity. Mutual faith, trust, dependence, have nowhere else in mankind the ideal illustration afforded by a first-rate string quartet; a team wherein the thrown-off phrase is always infallibly caught, to be as elegantly thrown forth again, and the communal movement persists relentlessly while this or that individual gambols. It is like a game of ball played by cherubs as they effortlessly fly!

If music generally is the expression of the ideal world, then the string quartet speaks for some particularly sublimated corner of that ideal. The ideal string quartet would at first glance seem unapproachable in this world of fallible matter. How shall sixteen strings of gut and wire preserve utter justness of tunefulness, any falling from which is straightway declared in their thin, transparent harmonies? How shall four mortals drop Adam's heirlooms of individual perversity and unbrotherly dissension for this cause, when for no other known cause can they be dropped? The brothers Goncourt wrote together harmoniously, but they were only two. This quatuorvirate—four in one and one in four—is possibly humanity's as yet most fruitful grasp at the Perfections.

THE LONDON STRING QUARTET

It is of a piece with the rest of modern English musical history that for long we looked on while others occupied this field, and that in the writing and in the playing of string quartets it has only lately occurred to us to put forth some strength and (with distinction) to win some considerable ground. Purcell's String Quartets are not published. Between him and Parry and Stanford what was there? (Onslow composed quartets, but they are forgotten, and then, he was half a Frenchman.) The composers seem to have arrived before the executants of rank. With the 20th century the trickle of English chamber music became a flood, and after a few years there were parties of English executants to play it.

Now there are half-a-dozen distinguished English quartet parties. None will feel slighted if the London String Quartet is put at the head of them. It is the L.S.Q. which so far has been able to give the most undistracted attention to the arduous field, and has succeeded to the satisfaction of both worlds. The London String Quartet—

James Levey, Thomas Petre, H. Waldo Warner, and C. Warwick-Evans—is a Quartet that has reached the ideal of doing nothing in life but this, eliminating the usual teaching and orchestral work. And it has been the first to win regard for English chamber music in foreign parts—at Paris and in Spain, Holland, and Scandinavia, then (and most resoundingly) across the breadth of the United States. It happened to be Mr. Waldo Warner who amiably spoke of the beginnings and of the career of the Quartet for the purposes of these pages, but such are the united intentions of the happy band, that he may be considered as speaking for all four.

Violoncello and viola were the first to put their heads together for the making of the L.S.Q. :

'It was in 1908 [said Mr. Waldo Warner], and Warwick-Evans was leader of the Queen's Hall Orchestra violoncellos and I was first viola in the New Symphony Orchestra. The idea was Warwick-Evans's—the idea of a string quartet that should be worked up to the pitch of excellence of a solo virtuoso. He first spoke to me, and I was all for it.

'Music has been my life-interest ever since I can remember a thing. As an infant I cried for music, I am told, and at three years old I played the accordion to the entertainment of my father's friends (this was at Northampton, where I was born). We came to London when I was a small boy, and at fourteen I entered the Guildhall School of Music—I was under Alfred Gibson for violin and Orlando Morgan for composition. I worked at the Guildhall for about twelve years. It was quite by chance that later I took to the viola. At a music school at Beckenham I was asked to give viola lessons when, though of course I knew the clef, I had hardly held a viola in my hand. Not long afterwards I was—through my good friend the late John Saunders—invited to be principal viola of the "New Symphony."

'There is no other pleasure in music like quartet playing, I have always felt. Compare it with the drudgery of orchestral rehearsals! In 1908 I was enthusiastic, and (although there have been much hard work and hard struggles in the meantime) I am as enthusiastic now, fourteen years after. Petre, whom Warwick-Evans found, was the first of the violinists to come in, and then, after a little, Albert Sammons was invited to lead: then we started to work. We made up our minds to slog—slog—to the point of exhaustion. We decided it was no use exhibiting ourselves in an unfinished state, and we rehearsed four times a week for nearly two years before we gave a concert.

'From the beginning we have always held that there should be no "boss" in the Quartet. We have always been on an equal footing, and if anyone disagrees with tempo here or phrasing there he speaks out. The point is discussed, and the decision made, if necessary, by voting. I do not think that any of us in 1908 treasured illusions about any tremendous material rewards awaiting good quartet playing—we did it for pleasure, no doubt. Really to-day—when we are not “doing badly”—there are moments when it seems that mine is an oddly exceptional life, to be paid for what I most enjoy doing!

‘When we played at the first concert, January 26, 1910, at Bechstein (Wigmore) Hall, we called ourselves the “New” Quartet. The programme was: Dohnányi in D flat, Tchaikovsky in D, and a Fantasy Quartet (No. 1) of my own. We fetched the newspaper critics first go-off, and their compliments were our reward for the previous two years of preparation. Our next concert, in June, 1910, was of Debussy in G minor, the first of Beethoven’s Rasoumousskys, and a Fantasy of Balfour Gardiner’s. We early saw that “New” would soon be a super-annuated name, and Warwick-Evans suggested calling ourselves the “London”—a bold suggestion, but it gave us something to live up to!’

THE L.S.Q. IN WAR-TIME

‘The war came and, of course, affected us a good deal. Warwick-Evans and I could not serve for reasons of health. Petre joined the Army, and was in France. His place was temporarily taken by Wynn Reeves, then by Herbert Kinsey, and then by Edwin Virgo. But, of course, Albert Sammons’s departure was the chief change. It had been foreseen for some time. He was winning such a great name as a solo violinist that it was clear he would not always have enough time free for quartet practices—and practices, hard, long, and above all regular, are the prime secret of quartet playing. If rehearsals are dropped only for a week the ensemble suffers. Even when the L.S.Q. has been touring in America, travelling all day and giving a concert nearly every night, we find occasion to rehearse a little daily. Albert Sammons was also, in the war, a good deal engaged in playing in the Grenadiers’ Band, and could not always be free when he wanted.

‘In the first year of the war (May, 1915) we began our chamber music “Pops,” which were meant to be a revival in a modern spirit of the old St. James’s Hall chamber concerts. There was something in the air of war-time London favourable to chamber music. Many seemed to have found it necessary as a temporary escape from reality, and the same people came again and again. By May, 1917, we had reached the fiftieth of the series. They were carried on during the first summer after the war, but then there was a change.

The spirit of the time turned in favour of all the more showy gaieties. The last of our “Pops,” on July 17, 1919, was the hundred and seventeenth.

‘Half way through the series Albert Sammons had gone, naturally with the regrets of us all, and at the fifty-seventh “Pop.,” on July 14, 1917, James Levey, our present splendid leader, took his place for the first time. He is a Londoner, and was a pupil of Ferdinand Hill. At this first concert he played at only three days’ notice.’

THE L.S.Q. ABROAD

Early in the L.S.Q.’s career, visits were paid to Amsterdam and Paris. The Quartet has now given six concerts at Paris, and has been three times to Spain and three times to Scandinavia. Mr. Waldo Warner was asked for his views on his foreign audiences:

‘The Parisians [he said] make delightful audiences, so keen and so cordial, only there is this little peculiarity—it never seems to occur to anyone to pay for concert tickets. It is taken for granted that (at least for chamber concerts) free tickets will be liberally scattered. English friends to whom I have spoken of Spanish audiences have nearly always been surprised at the musical enthusiasm and connoisseurship that have so struck me there. Spaniards go to concerts in extraordinary numbers. At one Barcelona concert we had an audience of four thousand five hundred—five hundred of them standing. And the Spanish audience is singularly “on the spot”—and makes you feel it. For instance, I remember we were playing Schubert’s Death and the Maiden Quartet, and there is a passage in the Finale where the first violin has a descending, unaccompanied solo—decrescendo, decrescendo—like this [and Mr. Waldo Warner whistles]:

and when at the bottom of the descent the other strings come in with the principal D minor subject, we make a point of playing it pppp! This seems to have been something new at Barcelona, and there was such a general gasp and murmur that I for one thought there must be a mishap of some sort in the hall, perhaps a threat of fire!’

Mrs. Elizabeth Coolidge, of Pittsfield, Massachusetts, celebrated for her encouragement of music, introduced the L.S.Q. to America. She invited the party to her annual Festival at the ‘Temple of Music,’ near Pittsfield, in September, 1920, and they played Frank Bridge’s E minor (Bologna) Quartet, Beethoven in E minor, and Mr. Waldo Warner’s Folk-song Fantasy. This was followed by a New York concert, instantaneous success, and engagements all over the country, as well as in Hawaii.

In the summer of last year Mr. Waldo Warner won Mrs. Coolidge's annual chamber music prize of a thousand dollars with a Pianoforte Trio; a prize which in previous years had been won by Malipiero with his Rispetti Quartet, and by Ernest Bloch. Mrs. Coolidge, by the way, is now opening her competition every second year, while in alternate years she is commissioning works of chamber music. She has requested compositions of Mr. Eugène Goossens and Miss Rebecca Clarke. Mr. Waldo Warner's Coolidge Trio is about to be published by Ricordi. Mr. Warner is the composer of some hundred songs and part-songs, an opera, The Royal Vagrants, produced at the Guildhall School, two musical plays, two Orchestral Suites, three Fantasy Quartets, (published by Cary, Novello, and Ricordi), and a Quartet in C minor (Ricordi), Pixy Ring, a Suite for string quartet, and three Pianoforte Trios.

The American success of 1920 meant renewed engagements all over the United States, and also in Hawaii last winter, and a return there in the coming season.

'Before crossing the Atlantic, we are to go again to Spain, and after the American tour we go on to Australia, and so shall be away from home for eighteen months.'

HOMAGE TO BEETHOVEN

And what of the music they play? Mr. Waldo Warner can admire many masters, Mozart and Brahms, Schubert and Debussy, but, as befits a true 'quatuorvir,' his divinity is Beethoven.

'It was Mr. Simpson (of Methven & Simpson, Edinburgh) who first suggested that we should give a week of playing all the Beethoven Quartets. That was in 1920. After Edinburgh we gave the cycle in London, and then at Stockholm, Christiania, and in America—in all ten cycles, including three in London.

'I think I shall never get beyond my awe at the architecture and the wealth of the Beethoven Quartets. I am not a Beethoven idolater to the point of not seeing that he sometimes wrote poorish music. Possibly even some of the movements of the Symphonies are not so lastingly great as they might have been. But as for the Quartets, one never seems to come to the bottom of their wonders. They are inexhaustible. And so far from "familiarity breeding contempt," my feeling is that the more one works at them the more one may, and one can go back to a quartet one knows as well as anything on earth and still quake almost at the idea of pretending to rise to the immensity of the thought that is in this music. Beethoven, more than anyone, makes his executants feel small! Even the Op. 18 Quartets ask for as much thinking about as anything written by earlier or later composers. As to the late Quartets, when I hear people decrying them I reflect that I, too, at one time thought the C sharp minor unattractive. Isn't it really a question of knowing them? I still am not quite clear about the Grand B flat Fugue, but I have never heard it apart from playing it. My wife—and she has heard nearly every performance the L.S.Q. has given, and is a great judge of quartet-playing—tells me that it grows on the listener, that it really does "come off."

The London String Quartet has played a great deal of English chamber music, and notably has made works by Mr. Frank Bridge and Mr. J. B. McEwen known far and wide.

'Bridge in E minor and G major [says Mr. Waldo Warner] and McEwen's Biscay and Threnody Quartets have really become favourites. We gave the first performance in London of Dame Ethel Smyth's Quartet.

The repertory of the London String Quartet has comprised the works of Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Brahms; one quartet of Boccherini; and, in modern music, works by Frank Bridge, three string quartets, pianoforte quartet, pianoforte quintet; Dyson, string quartet; J. D. Davis, two string quartets and Variations on the Londonderry Air; Walford Davies, Peter Pan Suite; Delius, string quartet; G. Dorlay, string quartet; Elgar, string quartet, pianoforte quintet; Percy Grainger, Molly on the Shore; Balfour Gardiner, string quartet; Goossens, string quartet and small pieces; Armstrong Gibbs, two string quartets; Holbrooke, two string quartets, quintet, sextet, pianoforte quartet and quintet; Julius Harrison, quintet for pianoforte, harp, and strings, clarinet quintet; Herbert Howells, pianoforte quartet; Arthur Hinton, pianoforte quintet; Ketèlbey, quartet; Levine, quartet; J. B. McEwen, four quartets; Norman O'Neill, quartet; Cyril Rootham, string quintet; Ethel Smyth, quartet; J. Speaight, quartet and small quartet pieces; H. Waldo Warner, four quartets and Pixy Ring Suite; R. Vaughan Williams, quintet and On Wenlock Edge song-cycle, and pieces by Donald F. Tovey, Wolstenholme, Haydn Wood, Sir Charles Stanford, Arensky, Debussy, Dvorák, Dohnányi, d'Erlanger, Fauré, Franck, Glazounov, Grieg, Ravel, Scontrino, R. Strauss, Schönberg, Smetana, Svendsen, Steinhammer, Schafer, Tchaikovsky, Turina, Hugo Wolf, Wolf-Ferrari, Guy Weitz, Saint-Saëns, and Stravinsky).

C.

Dr. G. J. Bennett, of Lincoln, has been elected to the Court of the Worshipful Company of Musicians (London). At present the only professional member of the Court is Sir Frederick Bridge. Dr. Bennett will be a valuable member of this ancient Company.

STUDIES ON THE HORN

BY W. F. H. BLANDFORD

NO. I.—THE FRENCH HORN IN ENGLAND

Why was the 'French horn' so called? The obvious answer—because it was invented in France—has, since 1870, when Rühlmann contested this view of its origin, been so far in doubt, that the 11th edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica denies to the French any share in the development of the horn except that of devising an improved style of playing. Treating as a fable the story that Count F. A. von Sporck (1662-1738) met with the newly-invented horn at Paris, and introduced it in 1680 into Bohemia, the birthplace of artistic horn-playing, it alleges that he merely introduced the improved style, to be applied to an already familiar instrument. But a review of all the published and unpublished evidence cannot be undertaken within a small compass; and it must suffice to say that, whatever antecedent history the horn had, the large body-encircling hunting or 'compassed' horn, as it was sometimes called, which will be here termed the trompe, really did spread from France late in the 17th century. The story told of von Sporck is no 'fable'; for his Life, published in 1715, explicitly states that the 'so-called Waldhörner' were unknown in Bohemia before he introduced them.

It is proposed here to give some account of the horn in England.

Clearly we need not look for the trompe before 1680; but its immediate predecessors had some musical value, and might have found their way over. Yet neither Pepys (who let little of musical interest escape him), Evelyn, nor Roger North, so much as mentions them. Arrive the horn did, perhaps some years before the century closed. In his London Spy (part 6, April, 1699), Ned Ward refers to 'My Dame Butterfield's Invitation to her Essex Calf and Bacon, with her six Brass Horns to accommodate Sportsmen with the delightful Harmony of Hunting.' Here we have the trompe in its proper sphere—for use in the chase and for sportsmen to tootle on as a recreation. So were its forbears treated in Mersenne's time, and to such uses was it confined in France for another half-century—for their rare appearances in French music, such as Lulli's La Princesse d'Elide (1664) or Morin's La Chasse du Cerf (1708), were merely to give 'local colour' to hunting subjects. Hunting men of Ward's day were not literary, and the horn may have been an unheralded guest among us long before Dame Butterfield collected her half-dozen. A possible introducer was James de Gastigny, Master of the Harthounds and Buckhounds to William III. from 1689 to 1698.

To 1699 also belongs the fine horn by William Bull figured in F. W. Galpin's book. This has early features—a large bore and a very small bell (6½-in. diameter). Such a bore is not suited by a modern horn mouthpiece—it requires one that is constricted at the base of the cup, as in the trumpet. This type of mouthpiece, which is proper to all trompes, and the small bell give a 'brassy' tone; and the tone of Bull's horn, especially with its curious ivory mouthpiece, is very unlike that of a modern instrument. This horn stands in F; it is three-coiled, and therefore inconveniently small for a 'compassed horn.' It may have been intended for producing the delightful harmony of hunting rather than for the chase itself. A similar horn, drawn too small, is seen in use in Plate II. of Hogarth's Rake's Progress (1735).

Early English trompes are uncommon, although the instrument was popular in the field—at least for stag-hunting—during the first half of the 18th century. Besides Bull, John Harris, a famous trumpet maker, and probably Bull's successor, made them. In the accounts for payments for the Royal Buckhounds are entries for 1717:

To a person to teach several huntsmen to sound the French horn, £7 6s. John Harris for ten brass French horns and mending two others for H.M. huntsmen, £26 10s.

Taking the horns at £2 10s. each this was a good price, considering the value of money at that time, for it is actually more, as a nominal sum, than the cost of a good trompe some twenty years ago.

Though the Royal hunt was contented with brass horns, all sportsmen were not. When Sir William Morgan, of Tredegar (who adopted as his 'supporters' two huntsmen properly accoutred and wearing trompes) wanted silver horns he got them from Vienna. These horns, for particulars of which the writer is indebted to Lord Tredegar, were made by Johannes Leicham Schneider in 1725, and are decorated on the bell-rim with engravings of hunting scenes and Sir William's crest and arms. These horns are also in F (by estimation), but having a 9½-in. bell are of a more modern type than Bull's horn.

The trompe's elaborate code of fanfares and signals was better suited to the ceremonial of Fontainebleau and other princely hunts, and to the great forests of the Continent, than to the more straightforward methods of the English hunting-field. It died out in England about the end of the 18th century, being last heard with the Royal Buckhounds, and with the theatrical hunting establishment formed by the seventh Earl of Barrymore at Wargrave, about 1787, which included four mounted negroes dressed in scarlet and silver, and equipped with trompes.

The recreative use of the horn, especially for open-air duet playing, was prominent during the 18th century, and led to the manufacture of models intermediate between the trompe and the proper concert horn. The frontispiece of an English instruction book, referred to later, shows two performers standing on a terrace and playing a duet from a reading-desk in front of them. The horns used are small, without crooks, and are held horizontally over the arm, on the adjoining sides of the players, so that the bells nearly touch. Some of these horns were very closely coiled, and represented a type that went back to the beginning of the 17th century, and was the precursor of the trompe. Such is a horn in E flat in the writer's possession, which bears no mark to indicate the maker or country of origin, but which may safely be dated at about 1700-20. It is coiled in eleven complete circles, so as to measure only seven inches across the coils; its bell has the same width (6½-in.) as that of Bull's horn. Its tone, although small, has the true horn quality with a modern mouthpiece, and the instrument speaks freely over the entire compass.

The bell of this horn is detachable by a screw connection, an unusual feature, the object of which is linked up with another problem. The inventory made in 1768 (Bach-Jahrbuch, 1905) of the instruments of the Cöthen Capelle, which Bach directed from 1717 to 1723, comprises 'A pair of hats containing A horns.' Light is thrown on these mysterious instruments by Mattheson (Critica Musica, Hamburg, 1722), who states that one Gleichmann, of Ilmenau, kept for sale 'English Cors de Chasse, concealed in hats which can be put on and worn.' It is not too far-fetched to recognise in this compact little horn, which, when unscrewed, can easily be carried in the pockets of an overcoat, the handiwork of the unknown English maker of Bach's pair.

★ The record for the earliest use of the horn in the orchestra proper is held by R. Keiser, who in Octavia (Hamburg, 1705), employed two Cornes de chasse thereby testifying to the French origin of the instrument. Handel, Keiser's associate, is credited with introducing the horn to English music in his Water Music (1715), but unrecorded instances of such open-air employment had assuredly preceded it. His players must have been skilful, and he is unlikely at that period of his career to have imported foreigners. He did not use the horn in the orchestra until Radamisto (1720), and here he had been anticipated. In 1717 J. E. Galliard used 'hunting horns' in his Pan and Syrinx, produced at Lincoln's Inn Theatre; the parts were an afterthought and not in the original score, but Galliard's autograph manuscript (Add. MS. 31588), in which the horns are written an octave above the actual sounds, renders it certain that they were actually employed.

These early parts are for horns in F, the key of Bull's instrument; probably no others were then available in England.

With the rise to dominance of Handel from 1720 we enter familiar regions. Notation was standardised, and the horn treated as a transposing instrument—a German practice that did not until late take root in Italy, where all sorts of queer devices were adopted. Thus in L. Leo's Sta. Elena al Calvario, we find in separate movements parts for :

Corni in F, written in the bass clef an octave too low ;

Corni in D, written in the alto clef in actual sounds ;

Trombe da caccia in D, similarly written ;

Corni in D, written in the treble clef an octave too high ;

all with key-signatures. Incidentally, this is not an isolated instance of corni and trombe da caccia being found in the same score. Both instruments are treated alike, and it is a puzzle to say what difference, if any, existed between them.

Handel's horn parts, being accessible, need not detain us long. He writes for horns in G, F, and D, rarely in other keys (in Atalanta in B flat alto ; in Giulio Cesare in A ; in L'Allegro in E flat). Sometimes he permits himself the luxury of four horns, as in his Concerto in F for strings and wind, and a Sinfonia in Giulio Cesare, where he is so modern as to use two horns in G and two in D, the parts for the former being very trying. ★ The difficulty that Handel's parts present to modern players arises from the fact that in his time methods taken over from the trumpet were applied to the horn, and the low register was neglected—its cultivation was due to the Bohemian school of players. Handel's compass for both horns rarely, perhaps never, exceeds two octaves (c' to c'''), a contrast to the solo part of Weber's Concertino for horn which, with ad libitum notes, covers four octaves less one tone (F sharp to c''').

Exactng horn parts were no prerogative of Handel or Bach. Thus, Maurice Greene produced in 1737 an operetta Florinel, in which he wrote for 'French horns' in F a ritornello of thirty-four bars, mostly unaccompanied, of great vivacity and quite up to the Handelian standard :

RITORNELLO TO BASS ARIA, 'BENEATH THAT SHADE'

Florinel (1737).

MAURICE GREENE

(Add. MSS. 5325 & 15080.)

French Horns.

(In the copy from which the transcript was made the horns in F are written as above in the actual sounds.)

At the first Norwich Festival, the same players undertook both horns and trumpets. For men so trained Handel's parts must have presented few terrors ; but nothing is known of these ancient heroes with the exception of a shadowy 'Mr. Charles,' and 'Cato, a Black,' in the service of Sir Robert Walpole, and afterwards of the Earl of Chesterfield, who gave him as a present in 1738 to the Prince and Princess of Wales. Cato, who was 'recon'd to blow the best French Horn and Trumpet in England,' found a good home, for he became head gamekeeper of Richmond Park, and his likeness, armed with a large trompe, is preserved in a portrait group that belonged to the late Sir Walter Gilbey.

The accounts of the Royal Buckhounds show that the term 'French horn' goes back to 1717, and several rather later instances exist in manuscript. The earliest recorded example in print is in an advertisement of a concert in 1724 quoted by Burney ; and it will probably be found to date from the arrival in England of the instrument.

The earliest parts were played on 'hunting horns,' but proper concert horns with crooks, enabling the key of the instrument to be changed, were soon introduced. Such horns appear to have originated at Vienna before 1718 ; and Bach had a set at his disposal at Cöthen, if the inventory of the Capelle can be trusted.

★ In France the concert horn was not introduced until 1750, when it was employed by the foreign players introduced by Stamitz to the concerts of La Pouplinière.

A pair of horns bought by Sir Samuel Hellier in 1735, which have more than once been exhibited, still exist. These, though marked 'Iohn Christopher Hofmaster, in Piccadilly, London, 17,' may be suspected to be Viennese, like Sir William Morgan's trompes, Hofmaster being an agent for sale, and the blanks in the date being left for him to fill up. If so, the horns were made shortly before 1730.

These horns are a right- and left-handed pair, as was customary until hand-stopping abolished left-handed horns. The double ring of body-tubing is small, to facilitate holding the bell upwards in the position then adopted in orchestras; this renders them inconvenient for hand-stopping, by cramping the position of the right arm.

Like Viennese instruments of 1718, each of these horns possesses six assorted crooks: four are cylindrical and two conical, which, used singly or in combination, give approximately all keys from C alto down to D; for keys below D three crooks are required, and as extra 'tuning pieces' may be needed, an ill-balanced and perilous assemblage of tubing is arrived at.

Strange to say this model, with its clumsy system of crooking, was still being made in the 19th century, to which period must be assigned a horn, one of a right- and left-handed pair, marked 'Clementi & Co., London' (1800-10). This horn, in the writer's possession, reproduces every feature of the Hellier horns, except that it is furnished with a tuning-slide. It bears the initials of the 'Whitby Pink Band,' and the date of purchase, 1832, when a provincial band was contentedly using horns of a century-old design.

Contemporary French instruments, by Raoux and others, were constructed on a greatly-improved model, and possessed a separate crook for each key in general use; but these were also based, with improvements, on German or Austrian instruments brought into France by the virtuosi who visited or settled in the country, and retain one curious trace of their origin, the crooks being marked with the German symbols, so that the E flat crook is always 'Dis.' The best French instruments, especially between 1815 and 1840, have never been excelled, and are still sought for and used, with the addition of valves, when obtainable in good condition. Their popularity defeated any attempt at competition by English makers; and it is only within the last thirty years or so that good horns, made on the French lines, have been produced in this country.

England has, however, been credited by the French with the valuable invention of the tuning-slide, for about 1780 horns so furnished were called cors à l'anglaise. No evidence has so far been found in support of this, however.

Hand-stopping, which gave the horn its period of glory as a solo instrument, was devised by Hampel about 1750-60, and known in France by 1765, if not sooner. Shortly afterwards it reached England, for it is mentioned in W. Tansur's Elements of Musick (1772), before Spandau's well-known performance at the Opera House in 1773 took place. Apparently its first exponent in England was Puncto (J. V. Stich), greatest of all horn-players, for Burney (The present State of Music in Germany, &c., London, 1773) relates that in 1772 the Electoral band at Coblenz included:

M. Ponta, the celebrated French horn from Bohemia, whose taste and astonishing execution were lately so much applauded in London.

Burney also observes:

Mr. Spandau, who has since been heard with such satisfaction in England, I found at The Hague. In his performance on the French horn he has contrived by his delicacy, taste, and expression, to render an instrument, which, from its coarseness, could formerly be supported only in the open air, or in a spacious building, equally soft and pleasing, with the sweetest human voice.

This comment sheds a vivid light on the greatness of the debt that music owes to the Bohemian players, to whom alone the credit for this transformation is due.

It cannot be said that England produced many first-rank artists on the hand-horn, possibly for want of efficient training. In the last century, not a few positions were filled by foreigners, headed by Puzzi, who was so eminent as to appear in the orchestra adorned with white kid gloves to play his one important passage, leaving the rest of the parts to be undertaken by humbler persons. The horn-player of to-day must feel acutely envious if he realises the position to which some of the soloists attained a century ago. To take a concert programme of 1836—and there are many such—the vocalists were Mesdames Malibran and Grisi, Messrs. Rubini, Tamburini, Lablache, and others; the instrumentalists were Schulz and Herz on the pianoforte, de Beriot on the violin, and Puzzi on the horn, and there was a full orchestra. Puzzi played a work of his own for the first time. His compositions are mostly of the 'Air with Variations' type, of no musical value; and there is little doubt that, as taste developed, the poverty of the horn's repertoire contributed—equally with its limited means of expression—to its effacement as a solo instrument.

The chief English players were Edward Platt (1793-1861) and Charles A. Harper (1819-1893), who in succession played principal horn at the Opera and elsewhere after Puzzi's withdrawal. Platt was gifted with a tone that Costa is said to have regarded as unequalled, yet he was the victim of a scathing criticism from Fétis, who, in his Curiosités Historiques de la Musique, alleged against him uncertainty as a player and incapacity as a teacher. Against the former charge may be cited two lines from an early Punch which state that

Horn of Platt
Came in pat.

When valves came in the art of hand-stopping declined, and for forty years it has been abandoned more completely here than in any country except Italy. The hand-horn was an imperfect and very difficult instrument, and also suffered from the defect of not being readily transportable on account of the arsenal of crooks that accompanied it. Yet it had qualities that might have saved it, as on the Continent, for special occasions. Thirty years ago a great authority on instrumentation wrote in correspondence:

I know that our orchestral players set their faces like a flint against the hand-horn, and I think it is a great pity and a great loss to the orchestra for our older music.

So advanced a musician as Ravel has, in his Pavane pour une Infante défunte, written an important part for it, but whether his intention of thus obtaining a particular tone-colour has ever been realised in any English performance of the work is doubtful.

The history of the valve-horn is too large a field to enter on. But we must not omit the name of Charles Claget (or Clagget), who produced the first, albeit imperfect, valve-horn in 1788. His history has been fully told by Mr. Galpin and Dr. Grattan Flood (Musical Opinion, December, 1918), to whose writings the reader is referred. For years past composers have confined themselves to the horn in F, and the student is taught that this is the most effective key of the instrument. It is not generally known that the practice of pushing this over-worked instrument to the limit of its capacity is slowly displacing the horn in F for the performance of the more exacting modern parts in favour of the horn in B flat—or, abroad, C alto. Even horns in F alto have been designed and used. If this tendency is not checked the horn will degenerate in tone-quality, as the trumpet has degenerated, until it becomes a shadow of its old self.

The English musician has never shone in compiling 'Methods,' and our contributions to the teaching literature of the horn are inconsiderable. The earliest instructions, presumably by 'Mr. Charles,' are contained in The Muses' Delight, or Apollo's Cabinet (Liverpool, 1754, &c.), and consist of a page of text followed by three pages of hunting calls. Most issues also contain Twelve Duettos for two French Horns or two German Flutes, composed by Mr. Charles.

A separate work is New Instructions for the French Horn (published by Longman, Lukey & Co., London, between 1772 and 1779), to the frontispiece of which reference has been made, 'lifted' from its predecessor part of the instructions and all the hunting calls. It is remarkable for the pretentiousness of its preface and the skill with which all difficulties of exposition are shirked. One paragraph, beginning 'Should you want to make the Cromatic tones,' ends, after giving valueless advice:

Mr. Ponto and many others, famous on this instrument, constantly uses this method, by which means the half-tones are expressed, which is not to be done by any other method; but it is deemed by Judges of the Horn that the principle beauty, the Tone, is greatly impaired thereby.

In spite of the adverse opinion of the 'Judges of the Horn,' the practice has left one legacy of which all players, even though unable to stop a single note, can avail themselves—that of holding the hand in the correct position in the bell. This assuredly would never have been adopted otherwise, and if it is neglected, as is sometimes the case, the horn tone loses its veiled beauty, and is at once vulgarised into something approaching the Handelian blare, from which, in spite of certain modern tendencies, may music be for ever preserved.

This work was reprinted by Monro & May after 1820, but was then out of date. From that time translations of foreign methods have, with negligible exceptions, been our sole stand-by.

KORNGOLD, STRAUSS, AND OTHERS: 'SUBJECTIVE' CRITICISM

BY PAUL BECHERT

The Vienna daily papers have recently been the scene of a heated controversy between Dr. Richard Strauss, director of the Vienna State Opera, and Erich Wolfgang Korngold, composer of the opera Die tote Stadt, with Dr. Julius Korngold, musical critic of Vienna's most important daily, the Neue

Freie Presse, for the latter's assistant. What might otherwise be considered merely an unpleasant chapter of the city's voluminous musical chronique scandaleuse, assumes more than local importance from the prominence of the two composers concerned in this battle, and even more, perhaps, from its peculiar accompanying circumstances, which may warrant the interest of the English musical public.

Erich Wolfgang Korngold's sudden rise to musical prominence, some twelve years ago, is still fresh in the memory. Let it be stated from the outset that his early fame was due not only to his talent—which was, and still is, remarkable in one so young—but chiefly to a rigorously-conducted advertising campaign waged on his behalf by the larger portion of the German press in general and of Vienna in particular, a campaign made possible by the influential position occupied by the young composer's father. The over-zealous paternal love of Dr. Korngold allied him with the most enthusiastic proclaimers of his son's genius, and was the subject of many good-natured pleasantries among the musical profession from the very beginning of the young man's career. As time passed, however, these tended to become less tolerant than bitter and caustic. It was soon discovered, and, in fact, publicly proclaimed—in one of the very few Vienna journals that succeeded in preserving its independence from Dr. Korngold's all-pervading influence—that, in passing critical judgment on the work of conductors, composers, instrumentalists, or singers,

Dr. Korngold does not ask, 'How does this or that artist conduct, compose, play, or sing?' His question is, 'What attitude does he or she take towards Erich Wolfgang?' Composers and artists, even new books on musical subjects, are being viewed by Dr. Korngold solely from this angle.

The trend of public opinion then prevalent may best be judged from the following dialogue, which is supposed to have taken place between two well-known instrumentalists, and which was at that time widely circulated in Viennese musical circles:

A.—'What will you play at your next concert?'

B.—'Young Korngold's Sonata.'

A.—'Is it grateful?'

B.—'No, but his father is.'

Along with previous works by Erich Wolfgang Korngold, Die tote Stadt, which was produced at the Vienna State Opera in 1921, shared the fate of being heralded by Dr. Korngold's paper, in innumerable notices and criticisms, as an unprecedented triumph. The facts are that it was but mildly successful, and that there were many who found it to be a rather crude work replete with a more or less effective theatricalism. (The verdict of Vincent d'Indy, which was published recently in the Musical Times, expressed similar views in unmistakable terms. A Frankfort critic who dared to pass a frank judgment on this opera was placed on the 'black list' by Dr. Korngold, and publicly attacked in several newspaper articles by his son.) Die tote Stadt soon disappeared from the repertoire of the Vienna Opera, owing to waning interest on the part of the public. Whatever performances of the work were yet intended by the management of the theatre were endangered by young Korngold himself, who attempted to influence the casting of certain rôles of his opera—a procedure which was entirely beyond the privilege generally granted by the State Opera even to more successful composers. Moreover, those singers who did not succeed in fulfilling Erich Korngold's ideas as to the interpretation of his rôles, came under the criticism of Dr. Korngold, conducted in so palpably personal a manner as finally to evoke a declaration on the part of several artists that henceforth they would not appear in the cast. The main difficulty, however, arose from young Korngold's insistence upon personally directing all performances of his opera—a proposal which was declined by the management, not only in view of the aspirant's limited gifts and insufficient experience as a conductor, but also in order to avoid further conflict with the regular conductors of the theatre. The breach between Strauss and Korngold became acute when, in the course of a rehearsal for his opera, the latter made a speech to the orchestra in which he violently attacked director Strauss in his own theatre. These efforts to alienate the members of the orchestra from their own chief—a step probably without precedent—were strongly resented by the players, and their rebuke completed the defeat of the Korngold family. From that day, Dr. Korngold's public attacks upon Strauss, in the Neue Freie Presse and elsewhere, became even more heated. The adherents of Strauss, for their part, in a series of widely-read newspaper articles have missed no opportunity of accusing Dr. Korngold of abusing his official position for the furtherance of his son's private interests, and the journalistic controversy which ensued is still proceeding.

This open rupture has precipitated a conflict which had been anticipated by the musical profession for some time past. It is the ultimate and inevitable outcome of what Vienna had for years become accustomed to calling the 'Korngold scandal'; but also, incidentally, it has revealed what but few courageous people had heretofore dared to term the 'Strauss scandal' of the Vienna State Opera. There can be no doubt that the advent of Richard Strauss, so far from ushering in the anticipated 'golden age' for that theatre, has been a severe disappointment and disillusionment. Strauss is principally a composer, and no one could justly expect him to forsake, in building the repertoire for his theatre, the sacro egoismo of the creative artist. It is but natural that his energy—yea, his very heart—should go out to his own operas, even to the detriment of other modern composers who should find, but have failed to find, a place in the repertoire. The difficult post now occupied by Strauss at the Opera requires a man of profound theatrical experience, of infinite enthusiasm, and of iron energy, which could not justly be expected in a composer whose chief interest must needs favour his own creations. All respect for Strauss's one-time genius as a composer cannot exempt him from the statement that, under his directorship, the once perfect ensemble of the State Opera has undergone a deplorable process of disintegration; that his preference for sensational guest-singers has had a demoralizing effect even on the more conscientious among the artists, besides necessitating exorbitant admission fees which bar our best citizens from attending the performances of a State theatre whose enormous deficit they are called upon to defray; that this, like all previous seasons, has resulted in very little productive work; that Strauss has been absent from his directoral post for the larger portion of the season, for the benefit of his extensive and lucrative foreign tours; and that, most painful of all, the one and only novelty produced this season (and produced on an unprecedentedly lavish scale) was Strauss's own ballet The Legend of Joseph, which is of very doubtful value, while all other novelties were again and again postponed.

These facts being in substance the content of Dr. Korngold's attacks, his strictures should be worthy of endorsement. He weakens his cause, however, by discovering and publicly proclaiming Strauss's shortcomings only at the very moment when his son's rupture with Strauss had become manifest, and thus strengthens the impression, which had been prevalent for several years, that his criticisms are influenced by private grievances and idiosyncrasies, while creating mistrust of his critical frankness, which so often has revealed bias towards his son and towards the artists who belong to the clique surrounding Erich Wolfgang. Viennese musicians were but recently amused, or grieved—according to their individual temperament—by the abrupt change of Dr. Korngold's critical attitude towards a certain young conductor of the State Opera whom he had for years declared to be devoid of talent and experience, but whom he suddenly discovered to be 'conscientious' and other complimentary things—exactly two days after that same young conductor had saved from cancellation a performance of Die tote Stadt, by stepping in at short notice to replace another conductor who had refused to expose himself to Dr. Korngold's critical judgment in so 'dangerous' a task. Incredible as it may seem, Dr. Korngold does not shrink from occasionally writing reviews on performances of his son's operas, and his son is probably the only composer whose work he has never been known to disparage.

There is behind all these unpleasant things—which might otherwise be dismissed as mere gossip and ephemeral sensation—an aspect which lends a more than passing importance, and which touches the very problem of musical journalism in general. It is only human, perhaps, that Dr. Korngold's love for his son should be stronger than his sense of duty towards the public as a musical critic. Yet the lesson in his case is obvious. Every sort of criticism will, in a sense, be 'subjective,' and will necessarily be more or less consciously influenced by personal sentiments which, however noble in themselves, will prove pernicious when applied to the thrice dangerous and difficult vocation of a musical critic. The fact may be worthy of mention in this connection that Dr. Korngold's predecessor on the Neue Freie Presse was none other than Eduard Hanslick, who has gone down in history as the most violent, if unsuccessful, adversary of Richard Wagner, and as the enthusiastic apostle of Johannes Brahms. Hanslick's contrasting attitude towards these two masters was, in fact, more than a mere coincidence. Being a member of the circle centring around Brahms, he was bound to look askance at the growing fame of their 'Gegenpapst,' Wagner. Hence all his hatred, his venomous sneers at the Bayreuth master, which came nigh to destroying Wagner's life-work. Wagner, indeed, was a genius who would ultimately find his way to recognition, despite all adverse circumstances. But many composers, conductors, instrumentalists, or singers, break down on their path, arrested by a malicious, ill-willed, yet omnipotent critic whose word is gospel with the thoughtless mass, and in whose hand is placed the power to withhold, by one reckless word, the very livelihood of a struggling artist. Dr. Korngold's case is a symptom, and not an isolated instance, though perhaps a particularly typical one. Nor is its importance confined to Vienna alone. His methods have been experienced by too many foreign artists—not excepting the company of English artists who visited Vienna recently—to warrant their being any longer ignored by the musical world at large. The Hanslicks never die out.

Since writing the above the Korngold case has taken another surprising development. The Vienna Sonn- und Montagszeitung has added a sensational document by publishing a sworn affidavit from Moritz Rosenthal, the pianist, which more than corroborates the substance of my remarks so far as Korngold's protean gifts as a critic are concerned. Rosenthal, who surely is above suspicion, by virtue of his supreme and truly international reputation, proves by quotations from Dr. Korngold's criticisms that he had enthusiastically praised his (Rosenthal's) work up to the day on which he refused to play Erich Wolfgang's then new Pianoforte Sonata (which was to have been called the Rosenthal Sonata). Rosenthal further states that Dr. Korngold had attempted to incite other critics against him, and quotes Leschetizky, Godowsky, and other prominent artists, as witnesses for his firm belief that Dr. Korngold's practices are such as to tend 'seriously to injure the reputation of both the musical public and critical fraternity of Vienna.' P. B.

Occasional Notes

In response to a memorial from an influential body of musicians and others, the Archbishops of Canterbury and York have appointed a Committee on Church Music, the terms of reference being :

'To consider and report upon the place of music in the worship of the Church, and in particular the training of Church musicians and the education of the clergy in the knowledge of music as a branch of liturgical study.'

The members of the committee are: Lord Beauchamp, the Bishop of Ripon, Bishop S. M. Taylor, Archdeacon Gardner, the Rev. Maurice Bell, the Rev. W. H. Frere, the Rev. A. S. Duncan-Jones, the Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Sir Hugh Allen, Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Prof. Walford Davies, Mr. Harvey Grace, Miss E. C. Gregory, Dr. Henry Ley, Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, Lady Mary Trefusis, Major Trevilian, and Mr. E. G. P. Wyatt. Lord Beauchamp will act as chairman, and Mr. Wyatt as hon. secretary. Correspondence for the committee should be addressed to Mr. Wyatt, at Rustington Hall, nr. Littlehampton.

The Times of July 14 contained a leading article on Church music, with special reference to the formation of this committee. Concerning the points in the committee's terms of reference, 'the training of Church musicians' and 'the education of the clergy in the knowledge of music as a branch of liturgical study,' The Times says that here

'... the Archbishops place a finger on the source of such evils as exist in the present state of Church music. Too few musicians have a clear conception of what is required to adapt their art to the purposes of popular worship, and too few clergy have the necessary knowledge of music itself or of its historic place in the services of the Church to be able to guide the efforts of their musical colleagues. Hence comes that conflict of opinion between parson and organist which is apt to end in the defeat of the best aims of both, and produce a result the very reverse of edification in the minds of the congregation.'

The fact is, the responsible parties have made the fatal mistake of pretending that Church music and the Liturgy can be kept in watertight compartments. There will be no Church music problem when everything that is sung and played is made to justify itself, either by its liturgical necessity or by its fitness, on the score of beauty and dignity, to be associated with the Liturgy. Let no one hastily complain that this is to narrow the field of choice. On the contrary, the field will be wider, for a repertory built on such principles would contain all the best work of modern Church composers, as well as a larger proportion of old music than is usually the case at present.

As The Times points out, one of the greatest difficulties in the matter arises from the fact that practically all church people agree as to the necessity for some kind of music in corporate acts of worship. If none but musicians wished for music in church, there would be no bad Church music; the variety would be merely that of different kinds of good. But too often the less musical folk, and even those who admit themselves to be unmusical (the 'I-know-what-I-like' section), have the biggest say in such matters, backed up by those who frown on the introduction of anything unfamiliar. ('I-like-what-I-know.')

The committee has a difficult task, and its findings will no doubt cut across a good many susceptibilities. But those findings will at least have the merit of being arrived at by a body that is representative :

'The spirit of worship [says The Times] is a popular concern, and in the past the people's part has been too often forgotten by the dignified clergy and the Doctors of Music who serve in "quires and places where they sing." It is satisfactory, therefore, to notice that representatives of the parochial clergy, the parochial organ-loft, and the laity are included, and it is to be hoped that in the course of its deliberations the committee will not forget to call for the evidence of the men and women who occupy a pew in the nave.'

Among all that has been written round the Royal Academy of Music Centenary, we do not remember seeing a reference to a small but interesting and very human link with Charles Dickens. When Dickens was about ten years old, his sister Fanny, who was two years his senior, became a pupil at the Academy—evidently through the kind offices of a relative or friend, for the family was in dire poverty at the time. Forster, in his Life of Dickens, speaking of this, says :

'He [Dickens] has told me what a stab to the heart it was, thinking of his own disregarded condition, to see her go away to begin her education amid the tearful good wishes of everybody in the house.'

At that time the Dickens family was living at '... a small mean house, with a wretched little garden abutting on a squalid court [in Bayham Street, Camden Town], about the poorest part of the London suburbs then.'

While Fanny was thus in clover, Charles was earning a few shillings a week sticking labels on bottles at Warren's blacking factory. Evidently Fanny went to the Academy as a boarder, for later on when the family fortunes fell so low that Dickens senior—the original Micawber—became an inmate of the Marshalsea Prison for debt, young Charles, who was at large (in the blacking factory, and in a wretched room at Camden Town, with a penny loaf and a pennyworth of milk for breakfast, and with other meals—when there were any—to scale), used to adjourn to the prison on Sundays to spend the day with his parents, escorting Fanny to and from the Marshalsea.

'I was at the Academy [he told Forster] at nine o'clock in the morning, and we walked back together at night.'

Fanny was surely the only R.A.M. student who has spent her week-ends in prison.

The boy moved across to the south side of the river, as he wished to be nearer his parents:

'A back-attic was found for me at the house of an insolvent court agent, who lived in Lant Street in the Borough, where Bob Sawyer lived many years afterwards. A bed and bedding were sent over for me, and made up on the floor. The little window had a pleasant prospect of a timber yard, and when I took possession of my new abode I thought it was a Paradise.'

Forster gives only one more reference to Fanny at the Academy:

'When the family left the Marshalsea they all went to lodge with the lady in Little College Street, who has obtained unexpected immortality as Mrs. Pipchin, and they afterwards occupied a small house in Somers Town. But before this time, Charles was present with some of them in Tenterden Street to see his sister Fanny receive one of the prizes given to the pupils of the Royal Academy of Music. "I could not bear to think of myself [he said in after years] beyond the reach of all such honourable emulation and success. The tears ran down my face. I felt as if my heart were rent. I prayed, when I went to bed that night, to be lifted out of the humiliation and neglect in which I was. I never had suffered so much before. There was no envy in it."

Is there any record at the R.A.M. as to Fanny's prize? It would be interesting to know in what direction her talents lay. However, the thing that sticks in the mind is the picture of an uncared-for small boy, outside the Academy in Tenterden Street at nine on Sunday mornings, waiting to take his sister to rejoin the family circle in jail.

It has rained R.A.M. programmes during two weeks of July. By way of contrast let us glance back a hundred years and look at the programme of the first students' concert (or 'Exhibition,' as it was quaintly called), given at the Institution in 1822. Here it is:

AN EXHIBITION

by Students of the Royal Academy of Music

PART I.

- SYMPHONIA Haydn
Two Pianofortes, C. S. Packer and T. M. Mudie;
Oboe, H. A. M. Cooke; Violins, H. G. Blagrove,
C. A. Seymour, R. Fowler, and D. Smith; Viola,
W. H. Phipps; Violoncello and Double-bass,
Ch. Lucas and T. W. Cooke.
- PSALMO Marcello
Sung by the Female Pupils of Madame Regnaudin.
- GRAND DUET Hummel and Cramer
Two Pianofortes, Misses Chancellor and Price, pupils of Mr. Beale.
- AIR (Creation) Haydn
Miss Porter, pupil of Madame Regnaudin.
- FANTASIA Bochsa
Harp, Miss Jay, pupil of Mr. Bochsa.
- QUARTETTO Zingarelli
Misses Chancellor, Porter, Watson, and Collier.
- FANTASIA—Oboe obbligato Vogt and Bochsa
Oboe, H. A. M. Cooke; Violins, C. A. Seymour and H. G. Blagrove; Viola, W. H. Phipps; Violoncello and Double-bass, C. Lucas and T. W. Cooke.

PART II.

- INTRODUCTION AND POLACCA Viotti
With Orchestral Accompaniments
Violin, H. G. Blagrove, pupil of Mr. F. Cramer.
- DUET Dussek
Two Pianofortes, C. S. Packer and T. M. Mudie, pupils of Mr. Potter.
- PSALMO Marcello
Sung by the Female Pupils.
- DUET Bochsa
Two Harps, Misses Jay and Morgan, pupils of Mr. Bochsa.
- CHORUS Ionelli
'Ve sento, oh Dio' (La Passione)
Sung by the Male Pupils of Mr. Crivelli.
- INTRODUCTION Bochsa
To the Grand National Anthem, God save the King!
Two Pianofortes, Three Harps, Oboe, Violins, Viola, Violoncello, and Double-bass. Composed for this occasion. The solo part in God save the King
by Miss Smith. The Trio by Misses Atkinson, Watson, and Porter.

One is not surprised to find no English music in the list, but it is astonishing that out of the ten composers represented only one is of the first rank. Bach, of course, had not then been dug up, but one would have thought it impossible to compile a programme of the kind without including something of Mozart and Beethoven. And where was the English idol, Handel?

The current number of Music and Letters more than maintains its high standard. There may come a time when folk will say that this quarterly, like Punch, is 'not so good as it was'; at present the verdict must be 'better than ever.' An astonishing field—Bach, Wilhemj, Moussorgsky, Pace in Music, the Harpsichord, Music in Public Schools, Song Translations, &c., &c.—is covered by a team that includes Ernest Newman, M.-D. Calvocoressi, Hubert J. Foss, Herbert Bedford, Arthur Somervell, Nellie Chaplin, Dr. Grattan Flood, and the Editor himself.

Every summer since 1914 the question goes round, 'Will there be "Proms."?' And every year somebody has it 'on good authority' that the shutters are going up at last. But the 'Proms.' refuse to be killed, either by rumour or by economic difficulties, and August 11 will see the twenty-eighth season start, with Sir Henry Wood and Mr. Robert Newman once more in charge.

Poor old London has shown her 'apathy' to music by making possible for over a quarter of a century a series of concerts that has a parallel nowhere else, at home or abroad. At a moment like the present, with its frantic S.O.S. on behalf of orchestral concerts and such scare headlines as 'Are Orchestras to be disbanded?' a careful study of the whole 'Prom.' season would probably yield instructive information. Very useful would be an analysis of the average attendance at the different types of programme; a list of works falling fl— or, rather, let us say, works yielding the best returns at the refreshment bar; the number of listeners waiting for the second part of the programme, with a subdivision into those who leave after the first item and those who wait for the songs; and figures showing the attendance in promenade, balcony, and circle on given evenings, side by side with the music played. This last information would probably support the view that there should be a larger proportion of cheap seats at the average orchestral concert. The stalls are rarely full, but the cheap seats are often uncomfortably crowded. However, as the Morning Post neatly puts it, 'The marvel of the "Proms." is that they are both cheap and enduring. It may be paradox, or it may be cause and effect.'

The list of soloists for the forthcoming season is, as usual, a strong one. We have not space to quote from it. It must suffice to say that it includes practically everybody who is somebody, as well as the customary fringe of those who hope to be somebodies some day. There are fourteen first performances, eight being of native works. The list of additions to the repertory is perhaps more interesting than that of the novelties. Some of these additions will receive their second performance so far as London is concerned, and none have so far been heard sufficiently for their undoubted merits to make full impression. Among such works are Goossens's Four Conceits, Bax's November Woods, Ireland's Symphonic Rhapsody, the Ballet from Holst's Perfect Fool, Ernest Farrar's Pastoral Impressions, Frank Bridge's Summer, and Respighi's Fountains of Rome. We hope the season will be as successful as usual. May there be 'Proms.' so long as there is a Queen's Hall to hold them!

A contemporary (a musical one, too) reproduces a photograph of 'the famous pianoforte on which Wagner composed most of the Ring music, and also completed Siegfried and Die Meistersinger.' The old kist of whistles on which Handel 'composed The Messiah' thus suffers eclipse.

We have received No. 1 of the P. R. Gazette, the official organ of the Performing Rights Society. The new journal (which will be issued quarterly) sets forth the Society's aims, with the principle of which no one can quarrel, seeing that they are based on the sound precept that the labourer is worthy of his hire—even when he happens to be a mere composer. We note, however, one statement that is likely to lead to misapprehension. On page 5 of the Gazette appears a 'List of some members . . .

whose works are controlled by the Society.' The obvious inference is that all the works of the composers named are controlled by the P.R.S., whereas, of course, the only works on which the Society can charge a performing fee are those which happened to be the member's own property, present and prospective, when he joined the Society. As the statement is liable to affect adversely the very large number of works by these composers, the performing rights of which are held by publishers and others who do not belong to the P.R.S., we hope that a future issue of the Gazette will make the matter clear.

From Punch:

Immediately afterwards the Papal Bull of Appointment was read, after which the choir chanted the Te Deum Laudanum.—Scots Paper.

Which we trust had a soothing effect on the Bull.

As the bridal party entered the church the choir sang Lead us, O Heavenly Father, and to the strains of the same inspiring hymn the procession moved up the aisle to the knave of the church.—American Paper.

Isn't this a little unfair to the Bridegroom?

Mr. Tertius Noble is now on a visit to this country, and has been saying interesting things to a Yorkshire Post representative. Bearing in mind the recent successful tour of the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir in the United States, we were not surprised to read that 'Canada is doing marvellously in this respect [choral singing]. Some of the finest choirs I have ever heard are in Canada. They have had competitive festivals in Alberta for fifteen years, in Saskatchewan for nine years, and the latest in Manitoba, where the Winnipeg Festival is four years old. I have adjudicated at three of those festivals. At the first there were 1,500 competitors; at the second festival 3,000; this year over 6,000. The standard was as good as at Morecambe, Blackpool, Keighley, or Kendal.'

Mr. Noble finds America a long way behind this country in the appreciation of choral music. However, he prophesies that within twelve months there will be competition festivals in the States, after which things will improve.

We were glad to see Mr. Noble saying a good word for the choir boy, and especially for the London youngster. Mr. Noble said

' . . . he found the New York boy was splendid as a chorister if well trained. He found the New York boy was level with the London boy intellectually and musically, and in saying that he had said everything, for there was no one who could beat the London boy for singing. The Yorkshire boy was very fine indeed, but he had heard finer singing from London boys than anywhere else, except New York. They turned out splendid soloists. They were temperamental, and sang much more like women than boys. They had a big range, and every one of his choristers could go from low B flat to top C—two octaves and a note. He could do it with London boys, but with no others.

More news from over the way:

London, June 17.—A bust of the late Gervase Elwes, the composer, . . . has been placed in the foyer of Queen's Hall.—Musical America.

The Propaganda Committee of the Federation of British Music Industries has hit on yet another way of reaching the public ear. As the provincial papers that publish the Committee's weekly articles now cover the country pretty thoroughly, an assault is to be made in other quarters by means of short paragraphs and anecdotes. As the Journal points out, many good yarns can be got from the actual experiences of music-dealers and others in the trade. It gives the following story as a sample :

'A certain suburban dealer called at a house and told the mistress thereof that he had come to tune the piano. "Oh," said the lady, "I think there must be some mistake. I have never written to say that my piano wanted tuning." "No, you haven't," was the reply, "but your neighbours have."

The Journal says that this is a true story, and we are willing to believe it, because we live next door to that kind of piano.

A few months ago Mr. Ernest Newman wrote in the Musical Times complaining of the misleading way in which concert performers quoted critics' notices. Mr. Percy Scholes gave a bad case in the Observer a few weeks ago. He wrote of Mr. Alfred O'Shea, a new tenor :

'I do not think much of the new "Australian tenor," O'Shea, who took the Queen's Hall one afternoon this week. God has given him an almost perfect voice, but he has, as yet, no style in his use of it, and is thoughtless and sentimental.'

This appeared a few days later in Mr. O'Shea's announcement of a forthcoming recital as :

'God has given him an almost perfect voice . . .'

—to say nothing of an almost perfect nerve.

BRITISH MUSIC SOCIETY: ANNUAL CONGRESS

The Annual Congress of the British Music Society was this year a rather more modest event than in previous years. There were no great orchestral concerts at Queen's Hall, but merely on Friday and Saturday, June 30 and July 1; two debates (a public one and one for members only); on Friday evening a military band concert at the Albert Hall (with free admission); on Saturday evening a banquet; special music at several Churches on the Sunday; and a concert of the London Contemporary Music Centre on the Monday, for members who cared to stay for it. The debates were held at Æolian Hall, the banquet at the Waldorf Hotel, the concert (by invitation of Lord and Lady Howard de Walden) at Seaford House. The Churches which provided special music were Southwark Cathedral, Westminster Cathedral, and All Saints', Margaret Street. The general impression remaining in the mind of one who was present throughout, is one of genuineness. The poor attendance at certain orchestral concerts in the past had suggested that the Society had over-estimated the support on which it could count; elaborate public functions have appeared to be showy beyond their solid value, and debates announced with lavish lists of eminent speakers have disappointed by the plentiful absences of the very people one had gone to hear. The change this year is a symptom of health. The Society after a few years of experiment on the grand scale, is getting down to fact. Not display but hard work at details of organization is what is called for during the next year or two, and great hopes of future expansion may reasonably be built on this realisation of things as they are.

At the first debate (an open one) the subject was 'A Musical Public and how to Encourage it.' Sir Ernest Palmer was in the chair. The speakers included Adrian C. Boulton, Eugène Goossens, jun., Harold Bauer, Vladimir Rosing, Francis Toye, Mrs. Ella May Smith (president of the Women's Music Clubs of America), Dr. Bates (of Norwich), and Percy Scholes. Each of these treated a special point. Has there been preserved a record of the suggestions made? Some of these would be worth further debate by the council of the Society. There is always a danger of a lack of any practical result from a carefully-organized debate, because its organization has not extended beyond the moment of its closing. As an example of a possibly fruitful field for effort, it is not at all certain that Mr. Edwin Evans's suggestions for the more systematic arrangement of concert announcements might not be carried out were the council of the Society to consider them further, and officially to urge the result of its consideration with the editors of the London Press. The second debate—upon the affairs of the Society itself—is hardly matter for report here; but it may be said that the active discussion carried on by members from all parts of the country showed a valuable practical interest. Lord Howard de Walden presided on this occasion.

The banquet was a particularly successful event. Lord Howard de Walden again presided. There were many distinguished guests, representing various branches of music and the sister arts. The toasts were proposed and replied to by Mrs. Balkwill, the secretary of the Society, Lord Howard de Walden, Lady Howard de Walden, Sir Hugh Allen, Lady Maud Warrender, and Roger Fry. The speaking was of an unusually high order, and the greatest good feeling pervaded the whole of the proceedings.

At the concert of the Contemporary Music Centre two new works were performed—Ravel's Sonata for violin and violoncello, played by Miss May Mukle and M. André Mangeot (a startlingly novel and very successful piece of work), and Rupert Erlebach's Folk-song Sonata for violoncello, played by Miss May Mukle and Mr. Maurice Jacobson (an unpretentious and attractive piece that served to introduce an as yet almost unknown composer). In addition there was sung by Mr. Norman Notley, Butterworth's song-cycle Love blows as the wind blows (second performance). The accompaniment for this last, for string quartet, was played by Messrs. André Mangeot and Kenneth Skeaping and Misses Rebecca Clarke and May Mukle.

A practical point in closing. Readers who see a prospect of developing centres of the British Music Society in their own districts during the coming season should note its address: 3, Berners Street, London, W.1.

(The military music concert is discussed at page 559 by another writer.) P. A. S.

indiscriminate employment of certain tricks of composition, or demur at some of his statements—as for instance, in regard to Berlioz's 'suffering' because 'he did not rely upon absolute music'—there is no doubting the extraordinary competence and point of Sir Charles's lecture. The historical worth of Mr. Jeffrey Pulver's paper on 'The Viols in England' is also considerable, and Mr. Van Den Borren's lecture on 'The Genius of Dunstable' is not only valuable in itself, but also for the remarks it called forth from Dr. Terry, who took a leading part in the discussion. Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson's study on 'The Relation of Church Music to the Musical Life of the Nation' reflects the wide experience, judgment, and observation of its author, and the brief papers 'A Corelli Forgery?' by Mr. F. T. Arnold, and 'Hand Development for the Performer,' by Mr. R. J. Pitcher, fully bear out the promise of their titles. The volume closes with an Appendix consisting of the report of the committee appointed in 1919 to consider the question of the preservation and cataloguing of small collections of printed and manuscript music. B. V.

FOR ASPIRING PIANISTS

When such an authority as Mark Hambourg sets out to give advice on the subject of pianoforte playing he may be assured of a wide hearing. We may safely predict, therefore, a big demand for his little book How to become a Pianist (C. Arthur Pearson, London, 3s. 6d.). Aspiring students who expect to be shown 'short cuts' and an easy path to fame will, however, be disappointed. The key-note of the book is 'hard work.' Says Mr. Hambourg:

'I am constantly seeing advertisements by teachers of "how to play the pianoforte in five minutes by correspondence!" But I know by my own experience that after thirty years of continuous study there are still many problems in pianoforte playing that I cannot solve.'

From the first steps of the child beginner the author will have no toying with the business. Systematic and concentrated practice is insisted on from the beginning, so that it may become a habit and continue naturally throughout life.

Contrary to the teaching of some modern authorities, Mr. Hambourg starts straight away with the training of the fingers by means of five-finger exercises. The first month of the average child beginner of from six to ten is taken up with simple finger exercises, with the object of acquiring and thoroughly establishing a correct position of the hand. The word 'rotation' does not occur anywhere in the book!

The correct playing of scales and apeggios is fully treated, and is illustrated by diagrams. The writer is very emphatic on the importance of scale playing. In the chapter with the significant title 'Can you play a scale?' he refers to students who '... rely on so-called musical feeling, charming touch, and other elusive qualities, which have been "enthused" over by their supporters! Thus they fritter away valuable time in chase of shadows, instead of settling down under a severe and accomplished master to genuine hard study of scales and other exercises.'

And again,

'Learn to play scales carefully, tunefully, exactly, rhythmically, smoothly, and eventually quickly, and arpeggi evenly, clearly, and elegantly before embarking upon the performance of the great works of pianoforte literature. Many cast up their eyes to heaven in an inspired way while playing, hoping, I suppose, thereby to make up for lack of practice on earth! But heaven cannot help them if they have not learned to play scales and arpeggi properly.'

Advanced students will find some useful practical hints in the chapter dealing with the playing of thirds, sixths, and octaves. The subject of fingering is briefly treated, and by means of musical examples the author illustrates some of the principles on which he bases his own fingering. On the subject of pedalling one or two sentences are perhaps misleading. Thus we are advised that when applying the pedal 'it should never be banged on, but pressed down gently and gradually.' Gently by all means, but surely not gradually! In the majority of cases it requires a swift, sharp movement, avoiding, of course, any violence or jerkiness. Again, we read that the pedal should never be taken directly on the first beat of the bar, but in syncopation with that beat. Although this is in the main true, there are occasions, as in the case of detached chords or notes, where it is usually advisable to depress the pedal simultaneously with the playing of the notes.

Some other points dealt with are 'Playing in public,' 'How to make the pianoforte sing,' 'How to choose and care for a pianoforte,' 'Some common mistakes and how to avoid them,' 'A specimen lesson on the first movement of the Moonlight Sonata of Beethoven,' while at the end of the book, under the title of 'The daily pianist,' is an abridged compendium of five-finger exercises, scales, thirds, arpeggi, and octaves as practised by the great pianist himself. G. G.

New Music

CHURCH MUSIC

Choirmasters who are finding a use for the Church music of the English polyphonic composers of the 16th and 17th centuries should note that William Byrd's setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D minor has now been published (Novello), under the editorship of Dr. G. J. Bennett. Suggestions for Decani and Cantoris, and for varying degrees of loudness, &c., have been added, and the music has been transposed up a minor third, which, according to high authority, as Dr. Bennett reminds us, corresponds to the pitch of Byrd's period. The writing is mainly harmonic in style, and would present no difficulties to a choir containing the necessary voices for six-part work (S.A.A.T.T.B.).

A composer whose real worth we are only just beginning to realise is John Blow (1649-1708). He was no mere imitator, but was constantly experimenting. Modernists can appreciate some of his bold, rugged effects, which were formerly looked upon as crudities. A very fine example of his work is the anthem, Lift up your heads, for six voices and instruments. This has recently been published (Novello), under the editorship of Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, for the Blow Commemoration Service held in Westminster Abbey on July 3, 1922. Blow was very fond of using the augmented triad, and examples both in root position and first inversion occur in this anthem. The work opens with a symphony of sixteen bars, which is introduced again before the final section. Although in six parts, this is really only the case with regard to the solo voices (S.S.A.T.B.B.). Here, again, the writing for the voice parts is usually for three voices, the other three responding, and the two sections occasionally overlapping—or, more rarely, combining in five- or six-part harmony. The writing throughout is bold and straightforward in style, and the alternation of verse parts with vigorous outbursts from the choir (S.A.T.B.), which is a feature of the work, should be strikingly effective.

From the same publishers, and also edited by Mr. Nicholson, come two other works by Blow—a setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in F (transposed to G), for four voices (S.A.T.B.), and the anthem Let Thy hand be strengthened, composed for the coronation of James II. The latter is for four voices, is quite short, and of only moderate difficulty. The Evening setting is mainly contrapuntal in character, and, like all music of this kind, requires on the part of the singers a nice appreciation of the actual meaning of the suggested bar-lines. By means of occasional accents and dotted bar-lines, the editor has done his best to prevent faulty accentuation, and to secure an intelligent rendering. The service may be sung unaccompanied—indeed, it would gain largely in effect by such a method.

Another of Bach's cantatas—the beautiful Bide with us—has been published in Welsh (Novello). Of interest to organists is the fact that the third movement of this work—a choral for soprano, with obbligato for violoncello piccolo and continuo—was transcribed by Bach as an organ prelude.

A useful evening anthem for choirs of moderate attainments is H. A. Chambers's O Lord, the Maker of all thing (Novello). It is tastefully written, and the melodic interest is not confined to the soprano part.

Sterndale Bennett's familiar anthem God is a Spirit, from The Woman of Samaria, may now be obtained in a two-part arrangement for boys' voices, with organ accompaniment (Novello). In its new form it should be highly appreciated where boys' voices only are available.

The same publishers have issued also Bishop Wordsworth's hymn, The day is gently sinking, music by Henry Smart, and a setting of Save us, O Lord, waking, for use at close of Evening Service, by Florence Carey. The latter is a welcome improvement on the sickly effusions which generally do duty as Vesper hymns. G. G.

SONGS

Images à Crusoe were finished by Louis Durey in 1918, and were published for medium voice with accompaniment of string quartet, flute, clarinet, and celesta (or harp). J. & W. Chester have now brought out an edition arranged by the composer for voice and pianoforte. They are a setting of poems by Saint-Léger Léger. Both lyrics and music are singularly arresting and original. Throughout the seven numbers the words are sung in a kind of melodic-speech which is somewhat similar to, but more flexible and musical than, that of Pelléas and Mélisande. The voice is sustained by a rich and varied accompaniment. It is picturesque, humorous, and sombre as suits the occasion; full of crystal-clear, resonant sonorities, many of which, however, will not please the ear of those who have not followed the trend of present-day music. In some of the numbers, more especially the first, the mingled timbres of the flute, clarinet, and other instruments are needed for more fully underlining the subtle distinctions of the various sounds that are depicted as haunting Crusoe's waking dreams. For in this song his thoughts are intent on his exile from his island. And he longs to hear

The sonorities of the wide spaces under the firmament, the strange music that makes itself audible within the hollow temple of the ears of solitary human beings, and which resembles the wave-like undulations of shells or the amplified clamour of tides in the depths of the sea.

These sonorous images cannot be so explicitly defined on a keyboard instrument. The attempt, however, is interesting. No. 3 (Association), No. 4 (Visitation) are picturesque evocations of Crusoe's island in the light of dawn and at close of day, and No. 5 (The Parrot) is full of humour.

Shells and The Great Orme (Augener), by D. M. Stewart, are more off the beaten track trodden by the average song-writer than the many vocal excerpts that issue from publishers' printing-presses with such amazing rapidity. They are both melodious without being hackneyed, and will give pleasure to ballad-concert audiences.

An anonymous 16th century lyric, No. 1 of Two Songs (Stainer & Bell), Come, lovers, follow me, has been set to music conformable to its period by Edward C. Bairstow. And Ben Jonson's delightful little poem So sweet is she (Stainer & Bell), with music anonymously composed in 1614, has been charmingly arranged by the same composer.

For singers and audiences requiring easy, simple, melodious airs and accompaniments the following can be recommended: Music, when soft voices die, by Henry Tiltman (Stainer & Bell); A Chinese Night, by R. O. Morgan (Enoch); Our Lady's Children, by Richard H. Walthew (Stainer & Bell); and The Vow, by F. W. Massl-Hardman (Augener). L. L.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Two pieces by Arnold Bax, Country Tune and A Hill Tune (Murdoch), are characteristic and original. The first has, here and there, a folk-song lilt, occasionally a hint of the lumbering gait of the old-time villager, and its atmosphere is one of repose and simplicity such as are still to be found in remote country places.

A Hill Tune is a graceful, lyrical composition. The poetic content is well sustained from start to finish, and intensified towards the close. It is an idyllic little tone-poem, resembling a sonnet in form and metrical counterpart.

Richard H. Walthew's Miniature Sonata (Stainer & Bell) has the charm of complete simplicity consistently maintained throughout its three movements. It is an excellent piece for children who are acquiring an intuition of the poetic faculty in the interpretation of music, and whose teachers can place grace of rendering on a higher plane than mere showy technique.

James Lyon's The Water Mirror (Winthrop Rogers), though less original than the Miniature Sonata, will serve a similar purpose, as will also Harry Farjeon's Ballet of the Trees (Winthrop Rogers). This Ballet has been published in two separate editions: one complete with twelve numbers; another one with only four numbers—'Dance of the Trees,' 'Beech-Tree Dance,' 'Silver Birch Dance,' and 'Weeping-Willow Dance.'

Rhené Baton's Au Pardon de Rumengol (Durand) is a series of descriptive pieces reflecting 'Dawn on the Breton pilgrims' route,' a 'Procession emerging from a Church,' and other episodes of a Brittany 'Pardon' or 'Pilgrimage.' Its interest consists in the inclusion of Breton folk-songs which are quaint and interesting. The pieces are easy to execute and interpret, and present no harmonic difficulties.

Edward German's Willow Song (Novello) is a tone-poem treating the beautiful old air 'A poor soul sat sighing.' Written for orchestra for the recent Centenary of the Royal Academy of Music, it has now been arranged by the composer for pianoforte solo. The melody has been cleverly elaborated. The piece is effective and not difficult. L. L.

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Six Divertissements for pianoforte, by Eduard Poldini (Augener), provide capital teaching material for elementary pupils. They are mostly tuneful, light-hearted pieces, particularly Nos. 3, 4, and 5 (Birds of Passage, The Lilliputians' March, and Barcarolle). No. 1, Little Mice at Play, is a simple little waltz, which is chiefly concerned with the upper half of the keyboard. No. 2, The Knight's Accolade, is short and easy, with the indication Solenne. No. 6, Rainy Weather, will interest young players with nimble fingers. The pieces are published separately.

Among the best of Augener's recent publications for pianoforte must be placed three compositions by B. Burrows. Two Pictures (1. Twilight; 2. By the Stream) are tastefully-written works which would appeal to pupils of about the Higher Division or Intermediate standards. On Shadowy Waters—transcribed for pianoforte by Alex. Roloff—is more difficult, and is perhaps, in places, somewhat overloaded with notes. Under one cover appear a Sarabande, Gavotte, and Musette, of only moderate difficulty, by Isador Epstein (Augener).

From the same publishers come three new numbers of their Album series. Of these, the best is Ethel Boyce's The Silver Thames, containing three numbers—Dragon Flies (a sparkling little piece requiring a light touch), The singer in the boat (simple and expressive), and Feathered Spray (a gay, quick movement affording excellent staccato practice for both hands). Three Miniatures, by Horace Gilbert, comprise a Minuet, Rêverie, and Scherzo. They are tuneful and moderately easy. Leonard Butler's Flower Sketches are five in number, and are gracefully written and quite easy. The last of the set, To a rambler rose, is the most difficult, and will probably prove the most popular.

Under the title of The Child Heart (Ashdown) Alec Rowley has provided two books of pianoforte duets founded on British nursery rhymes. These may be warmly recommended. They are admirably varied in style and treatment, and give valuable practice in rhythm and phrasing. It should be pointed out that the pupil's part is by no means confined to the five-finger position. The hands also are frequently playing different notes and different rhythms. Youngsters will appreciate the humour of some of the numbers, while teachers will be grateful to the composer for the very interesting 'secondo' part. G. G.

STRING MUSIC

Maurice Ravel is one of the composers who attract attention from the outset. His art can claim to be new: but it arose out of the ashes of a school which, at any rate, had reached greatness. Will the new art, with its unbridled freedom and curious limitations, ever attain an equally high goal? So far, it looks as if the present leaders' task should be that of the prophets, not of the liberators. Perhaps they point the way through which others will reach the promised land. Or, maybe, a still newer art will find a short cut of its own. There is certainly no finality in Maurice Ravel's 'Sonata for violin and violoncello, in four parts,' which has just been published by Messrs. Durand, Paris. It is full of many things that are good in themselves and intensely stimulating. But it does not rise very high. Some of it suggests the laborious struggle rather than the easy flight of fancy—toilsome avoidance of common terms instead of the delights of a new, characteristic idiom. We feel as if it were far less easy to move in this world without laws than it used to be under the old regime of tradition, for all its restrictions and conventions. Of course liberty is a good word, and an inspiring one. But words are not deeds. And perhaps an apt criticism of this music is to say that it protests too much. Every bar proclaims that it has no connection with 'next door'—and yet it is possible to be consistent in inconsistency. It has happened before that a new freedom has turned out to be only a new responsibility, and ease has become care.

Mr. Francis J. Morgan's Sonata for pianoforte and violin (Goodwin & Tabb) is of course infinitely more modest. It is so reticent as to be hardly clear and articulate at times. It lacks, above all things, unity of style and individuality. But allowance should be made for a composer who apparently knows his limitations. Unlike the majority of modern composers, Mr. Morgan is so considerate as to suggest a cut (ad libitum) in the first movement which reduces it to almost one-half its length. That is obviously the spirit that makes for staunch friendships between composers, performers, and audiences.

R. Vaughan Williams's Phantasy Quintet (Stainer & Bell) for two violins, two violas, and 'cello is an excellent specimen of this composer's art, an art which has some pretty obvious limitations yet is perfect of its kind. It finds in the string orchestra or the quartet its most perfect medium, for the coarser percussion instruments or the heavier wood and brass can never adapt themselves easily to the finer shades of Dr. Williams's musical ideas. In this Quintet the five instruments assume the pontifical aspect of an ideal organ, or outpace the wood instruments at their own game, or move in a solid harmonic phalanx in their own peculiarly easy and graceful fashion—all the resources of string music are exploited by one who understands its genius uncommonly well.

The Quintet consists of a Prelude, Scherzo, Alla Sarabanda, and Burlesca. Characteristic is the absence of the classical Adagio and first movement. Dr. Williams is not a partisan bent on reviving archaic or quasi-archaic forms. The cast of his talent is itself remote from that of the classics of the last century. There is no need to provide a specially peaceful Adagio or a song of thanksgiving, because there is no restless, stormy first movement to contrast with it. His mood is always one of meditation. He is fond of dances and of movement, but he views these things from the standpoint of the poet and the scholar, not of the realist like Berlioz, for whom almost any dance ends in bacchanalian riot. The Scherzo of the Quintet is lively enough, but it never rises to irony or tragedy like the great Beethoven scherzi; the Burlesca is a jest, but a jest that never goes beyond the limits of courtly politeness. No other composer sets more definite boundaries to his art, but no one else has found within those boundaries equal distinction and refinement. That is the reason why the finest of all combinations—the string quartet or quintet—suits this music to perfection.

Of the new editions of old music we have received, mention must be made of Messrs. Augener's issue of Wieniawski's popular Faust Fantasia, revised by M. Emile Sauret. Vivaldi's Sonata da Camera in E minor has been adapted to string orchestra and pianoforte by Mr. James Brown for the Polychordia String Library of Messrs. Stainer & Bell.

B. V.

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

SOME H.M.V. RECORDS

The main interest in the Rienzi Overture to-day is historical. It is well worth an occasional hearing for the sake of the passages in which we hear Weber leaving off and Wagner beginning, so to speak. Here is a good record of a performance conducted by Albert Coates (12-in. d.s.). The pompous brass passages are particularly successful. An even better 12-in. d.s. gives us a couple of extracts from Hänsel and Gretel, the 'Dream Pantomime' and the 'Witches' Ride,' played by the British Symphony Orchestra under Adrian C. Boult. Scriabin's Rêverie and Rimsky-Korsakov's Dubnuska make an un-hackneyed pair. Incidentally, they show us the kind of scoring that best suits the gramophone in the present stage of its development. The Scriabin complexity is rather beyond it, and we do not get all the fever and fret that we know is there. The Rimsky-Korsakov, on the other hand, is remarkably clear. With its stirring rhythms and vivid orchestration, this is one of the best orchestral records I have so far heard. It is played by the Albert Hall Orchestra, with Goossens in charge. Liadov's Kikimora (Symphony Orchestra and Albert Coates) is vague in its opening, the music being low and quiet, but it becomes exciting later on. On the other side is Debussy's Gollywog's Cake-Walk. I suppose this jolly piece ought to be more effective on the orchestra than in its original pianoforte version, but I don't think it is. The performance seems to suffer from a dragging-out of the mock sentimental middle section. After all, the effect lies so much in the harmony and rhythm that no very marked slowing-up is needed. A good record, but those of us who have heard the piece well-played on the pianoforte will feel a little less than satisfied.

Chamber music is not a strong department this month, only one record coming up for judgment—the Assai Agitato from Schumann's Quartet in A, Op. 41, No. 3, played by the Flonzaley party (12-in.). The harmony of the opening detached chords is not clearly defined, but there are excellent results later, when the instruments get busy with polyphony.

The violin records are poorish, chiefly because the repertory of good short pieces is small compared with that of the pianoforte. Here is Thibaud wasted on Vieuxtemps's Strenité, Op. 45, No. 5 (10-in.). Kreisler has something of greater musical value in Grieg's To Spring, Op. 43, No. 6, but that is an arrangement of a well-known pianoforte solo, and I fancy that most of us will prefer it in its original form. This record would be better if we heard the pianoforte part more clearly. The harmonic scheme is vague at times—a serious defect, because so much of Grieg's effect depends on his harmonic sauce piquante.

A transcription that is probably an improvement on the original is Rachmaninov's pianoforte solo version of Kreisler's Liebesleid, finely played and well recorded. The lack of originality in the music reminds us that Kreisler, the violinist, is streets ahead of the composer of the same name. However, Rachmaninov's laying out is so effective that the music sounds a good deal better than it is.

The only pianoforte record for review (a 12-in. d.s.) gives us a startling contrast. On one side is the popular Rustle of Spring by Sinding, played by Irene Scharrer. The many who will want this attractive example will not be put off by the fact that on the other side is a group of three pieces by Purcell from the Harpsichord Suites, transcribed very judiciously by A. M. Henderson. The first of these pieces—a jolly Prelude in C—will make friends at once. The second (a delicate Sarabande) and the third (the well-known Minuet in G, to which Mr. Henderson has added a Trio from another Suite) would be better with a little more tone. On my gramophone they are a trifle on the faint side. Miss Scharrer plays the Minuet at a slower pace than one would expect. By the by, in saying that this piece is well known I forgot that when Cortôt played it as an encore at Queen's Hall recently it proved to be anything but familiar. It was received with delight, but hardly anyone knew what it was, and I was astonished to hear well-known musicians making inquiries about it. Had it been by Couperin or Bach of course they would have known. Yet it has been published in this country for at least twenty years, in a Purcell volume edited by Ernst Pauer. We are so apt to blame publishers for the oblivion into which our old music has fallen that it is only fair to remember that musicians themselves have a good deal to answer for.

A capital addition to the madrigal records is a 10-in. d.s. of Bateson's Cupid in a bed of roses and Wilbye's Stay, Corydon, thou swain, well done by the English Singers. The balance is good, and even the most complicated and rapid passages come out clearly. The words have to be taken on trust, as indeed they have to be more or less in a concert performance of this type of music. The best way to enjoy such records is to regard them as a kind of vocalised chamber music. Dull must be the ear that fails to be caught by music so full of life and energy as this.

Here are a couple of Caruso records. A 10-in. shows him pouring out his voice (too lavishly at times) on Cottrau's L'Addio a Napoli, a terribly conventional affair. It is a pleasure to turn to the companion record—a 12-in. one of our old friend 'Ombra mai fù,' from Xerxes. Those who know this only in the form of the well-worn Largo should make a point of hearing what Handel really wrote—a fine tenor air. Caruso puts immense fervour into its long-held notes, and the record should rank as one of his best and most popular. Incidentally it reminds us of the great store of good things in the neglected operas of Handel. Some day these works will be discovered as the Cantatas of Bach have been.

Other operatic records are of Emmy Destinn in the 'Air de Lisa,' from Tchaikovsky's Pique Dame (12-in.) and Edna Thornton in a couple of solos from Samson and Delilah—'Fair Spring,' and 'O Love, from thy power' (12-in. d.s.).

Operatic duets are as a rule not attractive, but here are two exceptions—Frieda Hempel and Pasquale Amato in 'Figlio! mio padre!' from Rigoletto, and Lucrezia Bori and Giuseppe de Luca in 'Vado, corro,' from Don Pasquale (both 12-in.), two dashing affairs, especially the latter, in which both soprano and tenor do brilliant work in the florid line. These two records gain a good deal from the fact that the accompaniment is better defined than usual. The music of the Donizetti duet is about as shallow as can be, but we forget its poverty in the brilliance of the performance. We are apt to rail at this old operatic school, but the chances are that if we had enough tip-top coloratura singers to give them the performance the composers had in view they would draw the town. But there is no half-and-half; brilliantly sung they are champagne; otherwise, swipes.

Chaliapin is not at his best in Beethoven's In questa tomba. I suppose this is a fine song, since so many good judges say it is. Those who differ from the good judges will not be converted by this performance of Chaliapin's. He is better suited in Moussorgsky's Still is the Forest, but there is some want of clearness in the quieter passages. Both these records are 12-in.

Finally, here is a 10-in. d.s. of Rosina Buckman singing Stanford's Cuttin' Rushes and Quilter's Fairy Lullaby. The gramophone has done such fine work in popularising good instrumental music that we may reasonably look to it to do the same office for good songs. But it can never do this until there is a marked improvement in two respects—the words must be clearer and the accompaniment must be a real accompaniment, not a background so vague that the harmonic basis and the melodic figures come through only in snatches. Such shortcomings in records of royalty ballads matter little, because the royalty ballad is generally popular before it is recorded. Moreover, the words of such songs are generally futile and the accompaniment footling. Now, the words of the better class song are often unfamiliar, and, being poetry instead of mere rhymed commonplace do not always carry their meaning on the surface. And the accompaniment of such songs is usually not less important than the voice part. Therefore records of art songs (I dislike the term, but there is no other, and everybody understands it) must give us the words and a proper balance. At present they rarely give us both, and sometimes neither of these constituents. (This record of Miss Buckman, for example, leaves much to be desired in both respects.) So far as balance is concerned, we may expect the experts to solve the difficulty; as for the words, the singers and the recording angel must fight it out between them. I used to think the fault lay with the gramophone, but since I have observed that some English singers' words come out well when they are singing Italian, and that they give us songs without words when the text is English, I begin to have my doubts. And when I recollect further the distinctness with which comic songs are recorded, the doubts disappear.

Mention above of what the gramophone has done for good music reminds me that the H.M.V. Company has sent for notice a copy of its 1922 catalogue. This differs from its predecessors in being one complete list in alphabetical order instead of a series of classified lists. Copious cross-references are given, and the result is a catalogue in which one may find what he wants in a few seconds, despite the enormous scope. (The book runs to about four hundred pages of small type!)

I am asked to state that informal demonstrations of the educational use of the gramophone will be held daily from 3 to 5 p.m., from July 31 to August 25 (except on Saturdays and Sundays), at the Education Department of the H.M.V., 363-367, Oxford Street, London, W.1. I understand that the records recently made by Prof. Walford Davies for school use will be a prominent feature, so teachers should seize the opportunity.

London Concerts

MADAME SUGGIA AT QUEEN'S HALL

Madame Suggia has seldom been in better form than she was on June 22, when she gave a memorable concert at Queen's Hall with the co-operation of Sir Henry Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra. Her playing was exceedingly beautiful. It proved, besides, that Madame Suggia, in spite of her southern origin, must be classed with the women players whose goal is purity of tone and purity of conception, and not with the termagants whose energy is more forceful and overbearing than that of any male performer. Even in the most passionate phrases of the Dvorák Concerto there was a certain restraint—almost shyness—which prevented the player, perhaps, from exploring all the emotional depths of the music, but at the same time kept the whole performance at a high level of dignity. The same quality was apparent in the Bach Sonata and in Elgar's Concerto. It is certain that this great work has never before made so deep an appeal to a London audience. The performance recalled the effect produced last autumn at Hereford, when Miss Harrison was the soloist and the composer conducted. It provided yet another instance of the gradual, inevitable growth of appreciation of Elgar's music. Had Elgar written nothing but this Concerto, its popularity would now equal probably that of the Enigma Variations. But it represents the last period of his art, and accordingly we must possess our souls in patience and wait until the time is ripe. The first manifestations of Elgar's genius—the Variations and Gerontius—are now accepted as beyond discussion. It will not be long before the second period—the period of the Symphonies and the Violin Concerto—secures an equal hold on the public's affections. Then will come the turn of the Cello Concerto and the chamber music. In the meantime it is important to recognise that only through such interpreters as Madame Suggia can the period of our apprenticeship be shortened. Certainly the Concerto played by her was a revelation to those who have not had the opportunity to study it as it must be studied, or had not heard the remarkable Hereford performance.

B. V.

MUSIC AND THE ARMY

It was a great idea on the part of the British Music Society, the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Federation of British Music Industries to organize a concert of military music at the Albert Hall, to further the three objects which may be called the leitmotifs of the evening. These were to demonstrate the possible influence of the Army on the musical life of the nation, to encourage composers to write seriously for the military band, and thirdly to secure a better appreciation of military music and musicians. The two essays in the programme-book on 'The Military Bandmaster and his Band' and 'The Standardisation of Pitch,' dealt with their subjects comprehensively, and should be studied by all who are interested in them.

The band of Kneller Hall on this occasion consisted of a hundred and sixty-five performers, and its playing reached a high level. It must, of course, be judged by the same standard as that which we apply to the students' orchestras of the Royal Academy and the Royal College.

The music specially written for military band—some of it composed for this quantity—was all of interest, as showing that there is no need for Army bands to depend entirely on 'arrangements.' Lieut. B. Walton O'Donnell, conductor of the band of the R.M.L.I., contributed three Humoresques, which were lively and amusing, and went to prove that military music can indulge in modernity. They would probably have been even more effective if played by a smaller band. Next came Holst's Suite in F, written in 1911, and using familiar folk-songs. How much better is such music than arrangements of the latest musical comedy banalities!—and it is quite as light and understandable by the man in the street, while having many touches which appeal to the musician. This was conducted by Lieut. H. E. Adkins, of Kneller Hall. Dame Ethel Smyth conducted her own Overture to The Wreckers, and had a great ovation. The playing of Bach's St. Anne's Fugue and Fugue in G minor had many excellent points, the part-playing being particularly good. A small choir also sang some folk-songs arranged by Holst. In listening to these we had to remember that the young singers were at an age when the male voice is not at its best, and that playing a wood-wind instrument is not a good preparation for singing.

The number of our young composers present showed what a lively interest is being taken in the subject of military music, which was no doubt largely stimulated by this concert.

For the purpose of record it may be added that the band was composed as follows:

Flutes and Piccolos ...	10	1st Horns ...	6
Oboes ...	6	2nd " ...	6
E flat Clarinets ...	7	3rd " ...	5
Solo B flat ...	13	4th " ...	4
Ripieno ...	7	1st B flat Cornets ...	14
2nd B flat ...	12	2nd " ...	10
3rd " ...	10	1st Trombones ...	7
E flat Alto Saxophone ...	4	2nd " ...	6
B flat Tenor " ...	4	Bass Trombone ...	1
1st Bassoons ...	7	Euphoniums ...	7
2nd " ...	5	Basses ...	12
Timpani ...	2

A. K.

THE GARDE RÉPUBLICAINE

On Verdun Sunday, July 2—two days after the Kneller Hall concert—the band of the Garde Républicaine, under Capt. Guillaume Balay, M.V.O., gave a concert at the Albert Hall in aid of the Verdun Fund. It was an admirable opportunity for contrasting French and British styles of playing, and the constitution of the two kinds of bands. The tone of the French band is famous for clarity and sweetness, and the crispness and neatness of its performance is masterly.

This was specially notable in Coronation of the Muse of the People, by Charpentier—which is the groundwork of the pageant music in Act 3 of Louise. Technically, the playing of Dukas's L'Apprenti Sorcier was astonishing: one could hardly imagine wood-wind players reproducing rapid string passages so finely. Capt. Balay's own Cette méprisable petite Armée (This Contemptible Little Army) is very effective, and was most effectively performed. The pianissimos were extraordinary. The composer is an authoritative conductor with an exceptional sense of rhythm. The playing of Saint-Saëns's Ballet music from Henry VIII. had an irresistible lilt, and a musician on this side of the Channel will always find piquancy in Saint-Saëns's treatment of English tunes, and be amused by the idea that Scotch music was prevalent at a Tudor Court.

A. K.

THE ORIANA SOCIETY

The concert of the Oriana Society on June 27, at Æolian Hall, has become historic—not so much because of any of the performances, but because Mr. Kennedy Scott impatiently turned to the audience and apologised for the singing of the choir. Such incidents are rare in this country, except when Pachmann confides to the audience his opinions of his own playing, and this episode has led to much discussion. It has been compared to the occasion when, after the first performance in England of Till Eulenspiegel, at the Crystal Palace, Sir August Manns spoke to the audience, and had the work played over again; but the analogy does not hold. He did not criticise the orchestra, but said (I was present) that he thought it a pity so much rehearsal had been given for one performance. He had conducted it once for the audience, and now would have it played for himself. The Oriana programme was of the familiar kind, and some of the singing was admirable. The singing of Hebridean folk-songs by Miss Patuffa Kennedy Fraser, who accompanied herself on the Irish harp, was delightful. The beauty of these songs makes a stronger appeal every time they are heard.

A. K.

HAROLD SAMUEL

Mr. Harold Samuel's Bach playing is remarkable, as we all know, but perhaps even more remarkable is the fact that in the middle of a season when complaints of a slump in concerts rend the welkin, he should have been able to fill first Æolian Hall (on June 24) and then Wigmore Hall (on July 5) to overflowing with Bach programmes. The second concert was fixed only after the great success of the first. At this the principal feature was the fine performance of the Toccata in C minor, and his playing of the Goldberg Variations at the second was masterly with its combination of poetry and dignity. Mr. Samuel has now gone to South Africa—partly as an examiner for the Associated Board and partly to give some concerts. It will do South Africa good—as it has done London good—to learn about Bach from him.

A. K.

EUTERPE

The new band of Euterpe String Players, led by Miss D. Walenn, and conducted by Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, was launched at Æolian Hall, with some Oriana singers to help, and is clearly going to be a fresh source of delicious music in London. How well Mr. Kennedy Scott knows where to put his hand on a good thing, and also how to arrange his choice in telling order! At this first concert there were Bach and Arnold Bax, Vaughan Williams and Byrd, and the disposition of them was beautifully harmonious. The Euterpe concerts will be as little to be missed as the Oriana, and the freshness of their music is now better worth stressing than certain insecurities in the execution by these players (nearly all women) on this first night, when Mr. Kennedy Scott was no whit for tempering the keenness of his sense of right pace; first night or no, it was justness, not mercy. Chief offering to Euterpe this night was Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on a Theme of Tallis, not now for the first time admired, but now admired in the fuller light thrown by more Vaughan Williams music of similar rare truth and starry poetry. C.

A BATCH OF SINGERS

Mr. Alfred O'Shea, a tenorising youth from Australia, sang several times at Queen's Hall, and may congratulate himself on having been one of the 'catches' of the season. He sang airs from Italian and French operas, and also numbers of Irish ditties—naturally, with a name like that and with such an ingratiating McCormackian voice.

His singing at first go-off is singularly captivating. It is supple and sweet, and not often does a young singer manage so to convey the happy spirit of idle youth. He is at the beginning of the way towards becoming an artist; he is using his voice properly already. He knows how to 'spread' his voice in the best traditional style, and he obtained remarkable messa di voce effects—for instance, at the end of Salut, demeure; a difficult trick, of which Mr. O'Shea is master. A beautiful young voice, then; and a certain natural youthful charm. But after the third or fourth time of hearing, it was only too plain how such singing can cloy in the absence of a felt intellectual quality. The young man gives an impression of having been to Italy and of having, by a facile imitative faculty, there picked up an agreeable manner of singing certain pieces. Beyond that there is as yet no hint of original character in his singing.

His career as a successful tenor is pretty safely assured. I can picture him in a few years trollying with unction and grace such parts as the Duke in Rigoletto, much after the fashion of McCormack (but, I hope, with nothing of McCormack's tendency to nasal tone). At present, in spite of his name, he is far from any mastery even over the Irish folk-songs which his easy-going public so hotly applauded; characterisation, vividness, and even verbal accuracy were wanting. It is worth while being strictly critical with a singer of such gifts, for there is a possibility that he may become a really great singer.

Mr. John Charles Thomas, baritone, sang twice at Æolian Hall (June 26 and July 6), and was placed among the most successful of new-comers. He comes from America, and success must be an oft-told tale for him. He has the art and the artfulness of pleasing with facility. He twangs the sentimental chord with elegance; in possession of charming gifts, he condescends to use them to appeal to simple, and even, we may say, to silly minds. Meanwhile other listeners can only vacillate between submission to the charm of this truly 'golden' voice and exasperation that silliness can make any claim on its services.

The voice is one of those rare, beautiful baritones which embrace both the lyric and the dramatic styles, and there is body enough in it to create most telling climaxes. Mr. Thomas makes quite good use of parlando effects, but in fact everything he does shows a practised actor's judgment. Still, was there not a trace of exaggeration in his posturing on the platform? It would not have seemed exaggeration if the music had been worthy the effort. Mr. Thomas can open and shut his tones cleverly, but sometimes his high notes are marred by the 'glottis stroke,' a trick he may have picked up from Caruso, who abused it. The secret, of course, of his technical excellence is his remarkable breath control. He keeps back a large store and draws on this reserve most sparingly. He phrased the Pagliacci Prologue at his second concert like a master 'cellist, and one has to admit a thrill at the flood of tone culminating in a high A flat which many tenors might have envied. How near the compass of a true dramatic baritone is a tenor! The singing of Reynaldo Hahn's Le ciel si bleu, si calme could hardly have been bettered. But at both concerts there was also music worse than any English singer would have the effrontery to produce at a West-end concert. Indeed a certain setting of Masefield's Sea Fever deserved to be heard as a curiosity of bold badness in music. It came from Boston, Mass.

Mr. Augustus Milner, baritone, began his recital at Steinway Hall on June 20, with some Schubert, and the choice of The Erl-King and The Spectral Self was wise, for he is a highly dramatic singer, and a most interesting interpreter of songs that admit of ruggedness. His voice is as yet not suited to songs of reflective beauty such as Like art thou to a flower. It would appear as though Mr. Milner strives excessively after frontal tone; an admirable quality, but one that incurs monotony when the deeper palatal resonances are excluded. Penetrating power and incisiveness are then gained at the expense of sonority; the singing becomes harsh and metallic, and this is precisely Mr. Milner's fault. Tone should not come like a bullet from a gun, directly from the vocal cords to the teeth. It must be amplified and 'warmed' in the mouth, and that is an absolute condition of really beautiful singing; but Mr. Milner's tone can set one's teeth on edge.

Miss Elsa Murray-Aynsley, who was heard at Wigmore Hall, may be expected to sing in a few years really well. Her upper tones are already admirably free, her voice is a naturally beautiful instrument, and she makes due use of her 'resonance chambers'; but she has not the physique to be able as yet to give an entirely successful vocal recital. Her voice often sagged, and the resulting breathiness spoiled much of her work, particularly in her open register. She sang in Russian as well as the more usual languages, and her diction was reasonably clear and fairly distinguished.

Miss Sue Harvard and Miss Barbara Maurel were new-comers from America, both singers of merit; both had fine moments, but were alike in inclining towards sentimentality, however different otherwise. Miss Harvard's sentimentality lay in the use to which she put her voice, Miss Maurel's rather in the actual

TO DR. HUGH BLAIR, AND THE CHOIR OF HOLY TRINITY, MARYLEBONE

The God of Abraham praise

ANTHEM FOR HARVEST OR GENERAL USE

Words by T. OLIVERS

Music by HAROLD E. WATTS

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Maestoso con moto $\text{♩} = 96$

ORGAN

SOPRANO
The God of A - braham praise Who

ALTO
The God of A - braham praise Who

TENOR
The God of A - braham praise Who

BASS
The God of A - braham praise Who reigns en - throned a - bove, The God of A - braham praise . . Who reigns en - throned a - bove, The God of A - braham praise . . Who reigns en - throned a - bove, The God of A - braham praise . . Who reigns en - throned a - bove, The God of A - braham praise . . Who Tempo 1mo.

days, And God . . of . . Love, and God of Love: Je - ho - vah, Great I

God of Love, and God . . of Love: Je - ho - vah, Great I

days, And God of Love, and God of Love: Je - ho - vah, Great I

days, And God of Love, and God of Love: Je - ho - vah, Great I

Tempo 1mo.

Am, By earth and Heaven con - fest; We

Am, By earth and Heaven con - fest; We

Am, By earth and Heaven con - fest; We

Am, By earth and Heaven con - fest; We bow be - fore the sa - cred Name For ev - er, . . ev - er

bow be - fore the sa - cred Name For ev - er, ev - er

bow be - fore the sa - cred Name For ev - er, ev - er

bow be - fore the sa - cred Name For ev - er, ev - er

rall. Andante sostenuto

blest. The God of Abraham praise.

blest. The God of Abraham praise.

blest. The God of Abraham praise.

blest. The God of Abraham praise.

rall. Andante sostenuto $\text{♩} = 72$ mp Man.

SOPRANO SOLO (OR FULL)

mp

The

good - ly land we see, With peace and plen - ty blest; A p Ped.

land of sa - cred lib - er - ty And end - less rest; There milk and hon - ey flow, And oil and wine a - bound, And trees of life for . . . ev - er grow, . . . With mer - cy . . .

senza Ped. Ped.

CHORUS espress.

crown'd. The good - ly land we see, With peace and plen - ty blest; A

The good - ly land, With plen - ty blest; A . .

The good - ly land, With plen - ty blest; A

The good - ly land, With plen - ty blest; A

Voices only (ad Lib.)

land of sa-cred lib-er-ty And end-less rest; There milk and hon-ey flow, And oil and wine a-bound, And trees of life for ev-er grow, With mer-cy crown'd. The good-ly land we see, With peace and plen-ty blest; A . . land of lib-er-ty And see, With peace and plen-ty blest; A land of lib-er-ty And see, With peace . . and plen-ty blest; A land . . of lib-er-ty And land we see, with plen-ty blest; A land . . of lib-er-ty And

Org. (Man. & Ped.)

end-less rest. A-men.

end-less rest. A-men.

end-less rest. A-men.

end-less rest. A-men.

Solo ppp Sr.

(Continued from page 560.)

vocal quality. Miss Harvard's voice was rather hard at times of stress, Miss Maurel's was rather monotonously sensuous. The former has enough volume and quality for opera if only she would rely on its natural carrying power and depend less on sheer physical effort. Then she might get rid of a slightly stilted expression with which she marred two songs by Wolf, The Gardener and Homesickness. Miss Maurel sang some Debussy beautifully, including the Nuit d'Etoiles and the Chevelure. It was curious that she was best in songs that might have been expected to tax her most.

There were some original examples of the American ballad with which—presumably in the name of patriotism, since it cannot be a concern of art—our American visitors almost invariably mar their programmes and irritate the critic.

Miss Amy Evans, Mr. Fraser Gange, and Mr. Harold Samuel were heard, together with the band of the Grenadier Guards, under Lieut. G. F. Miller, at a charity concert at Queen's Hall, and it is an opportunity to praise Miss Evans as one of the best of our sopranos. She allies sonorous tone with a ringing delivery, and her voice is even throughout its range. Mr. Gange's mellow baritone was muted almost to extinction owing to a cold. The band played Gustav Holst's Suite in E flat (Chaconne, Intermezzo, March), which, together with the Suite on English Folk-songs in F, is surely the most generous and notable offering ever made to the military band.

Miss Lucy Nuttall, whose recital was at Æolian Hall, holds the affection of a large public by means of a rich contralto voice with just the rolling, cavernous kind of tone suitable for the Lost Chord and Hatton's Enchantress. Unfortunately she does not quite successfully dissociate herself from this popular style when she sings finer lyric music, and in the narrow intimacy of a London concert-room there were apparent certain faults which would be negligible enough in more happy-go-lucky conditions. This singer's audible indrawing of air after nearly every phrase spoiled the effect of much sound work. Much as the friction of a gramophone needle vitiates for many the gramophone's musical effect, so this laboured respiration took away our comfort in listening to Miss Nuttall's beautiful voice. Owing to too constricted attack there was dubious intonation in some upper notes. But nevertheless, Miss Nuttall is a singer well worth hearing. The interesting programme was almost wholly of English music, and included Dr. Arthur Somervell's cycle on Browning's James-Lee's Wife.

Miss Dorothy Robson at the same hall sang some Wolf and Debussy, as well as traditional songs of the North and Celtic folk-songs. The voice was bright and flexible, but its natural flow seemed to be checked by absorption in detail. No doubt a singer cannot be too conscientious, but conscientiousness should be concealed under an illusion of spontaneity, and it is precisely this illusion that Miss Robson has still to learn to create.

Miss Marcia van Dresser was heard at Wigmore Hall, and must be thanked for singing so much English music. But while she is an all-round reasonably accomplished singer, she is never stirring. Everything was well done up to a point, yet we were left too tepid to believe that she was ever at the heart of a song. Her singing struck us as impersonal; the lack was the greater pity, as the voice is of excellent quality, firmly controlled and ductile enough to express any emotion if the impulse were there. Her serenity in the old English Weary my lot was likeable, and two other delightful old songs, Go from my window (Morley), and Shepherd, thy demeanour vary (Thomas Brown), were successfully sung.

Mr. Paul Reimers gave concerts at Æolian and Wigmore Halls. He has a voice of demi-character. Is he to be classed as tenor or baritone? Not that this particularly matters. But there is equally in his singing an ambiguous personality. At moments he is fully impressive; at others he is over-sentimental. There are moments of excessive confidence when he displays the singer to the exclusion of the artist. He ranges too freely, too abruptly, between emotional extremes, and this makes his singing jerky—but as this was far more tryingly noticeable at his first concert, nervousness may have had something to do with it. His second concert made one incline to modify such aspersions, though the same faults were apparent in the first group. In the old English Have you seen but a white lily grow? the serenity was disturbed by over-emphasised aspirates. But Wolf's Elfin Song and Biterolf and Schubert's Lied in Grünen were truly successfully sung, and showed that Mr. Reimers is at his best in the lighter German songs.

H. J. K.

PRESENTATION TO SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

The Duke of Connaught, president of the Royal Choral Society, recently made a presentation to Sir Frederick Bridge at a meeting in the Royal Albert Hall, as an expression of gratitude for Sir Frederick's great services to the Society during the twenty-seven years of his conductorship. The address was inscribed in an album, and the gifts were an antique cabinet and a purse. The Duke of Connaught spoke of the continuity and high standard of the Society's work. The Earl of Shaftesbury conveyed to His Royal Highness the warm appreciation of the Society for his presence. Sir Frederick Bridge urged the Society to be as loyal to its new conductor, Mr. H. L. Balfour, as it had been to him. Sir Hugh Allen and Mr. Balfour also spoke, and the proceedings ended with Auld Lang Syne.

Opera in London

CLOSE OF THE BRITISH NATIONAL COMPANY'S SEASON

On June 24 an end was made to what we all like to regard as an historic season of opera in English at Covent Garden by the British National Company. It has made patent to all some things which were previously only apparent to a few. But before entering into that side of the matter I must first complete the record of the season by setting down what further operas were performed in addition to those already named in previous notices.

First there was Puccini's La Tosca, Englished to Tosca, which told us some things we knew and others we did not. Among the latter was that Mr. Percy Heming makes a very good Scarpia. He certainly gave the part with much distinction. The Tosca was Miss Beatrice Miranda, and the Cavaradossi, Mr. William Boland, both familiar impersonations. Next on the Puccini list—and let me remark in passing how unreservedly popular his operas are—was La Bohème, with Miss Maggie Teyte as Mimi. It was a pleasing reading, and the acting was good, but it lacked the element of individuality found in her Butterfly. The next phase revealed a curious state of affairs, for it made it perfectly clear to everybody that the 'old' operas, the erstwhile mainstay of the English companies, Faust and Tannhäuser, are terra incognita to the members of the British National Opera Company.

This, in my humble opinion, is rather a drawback, for they are both good operas, highly popular and thoroughly representative of a definite stage of the development of the operatic form. I deplore their departure from the répertoire, for departure it is unless the Company can get hold of someone to tell them how they should be played. It is because the word has been lost that so many representative works have disappeared from the general bill of opera of both British and foreign interpretation in this country.

My own view of the matter is that a company of this description should make it its business to represent all forms of opera, just as a literature course should take in all authors of all periods, and not restrict itself to Rudyard Kipling and James Barrie. It is evident that the Company must earn the reputation it has gained. Its season has shown us that there is a large present-day public for opera in English (at cheap prices), that Royal patronage will be readily given, and that the Press is ready to extend its most cordial and considerate help. I know the difficulties in the way as well perhaps as anybody on the active list, but those difficulties have been overcome in the past, and can be overcome in the future. But they must be faced. F. E. B.

ORPHEUS AT WARWICK

After the last Warwick Pageant it was decided to organize a performance of opera in the open-air, but it was not possible to carry out the idea until this year.

Chiefly through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. H. Marsh, the tenants of Warwick Castle, and the energy of Mr. Blackall, the conductor of the Leamington and Warwick Choral Society, Gluck's Orpheus was duly given, and it was only natural that Mr. Louis N. Parker should be chosen to be the chief organizer of the whole. The principle he adopted was to elaborate the movements of the choruses and to write explanatory verses. The death of Eurydice was enacted in dumb show during the playing of the Overture, on which the funeral ceremonies followed naturally. At the end we had the wedding ceremonies, which offered Mr. Parker ample scope for his genius for devising masques and pageantry (he particularly asks us not to call this a pageant), the music for which was taken from other works of Gluck, chiefly from Iphigenia.

The final dress rehearsal, to which the Press was invited, took place on July 13. There was luckily only one shower during the afternoon, but the effect on the whole was very much interfered with by the absence of sun, which, however, burst forth in the first Act just at the moment when Eros brought the message of comfort to Orpheus. When they fell on Eros, as he, or she, was speaking, the sun's rays produced a dramatic effect which no human agency could have rivalled. The spot in the grounds chosen for the performance was ideal, for the various processions emerged from behind groups of trees, or came up a sloping bank from the river itself, which faced the audience. Mr. Parker made the best use of these possibilities. In the background was a white temple, in front the altar, which was removed after the funeral; and to the spectator's right was a bench on which Orpheus and Eurydice sat during the Masque, much as Theseus and Hippolyta in A Midsummer Night's Dream.

The whole effect of the processions with their many-coloured garments was delightful. Perhaps the most impressive was the funeral of Eurydice, and the episode of the stag hunt, which formed part of the Masque. The final tableau, when the marriage procession wound its way through arches of roses to the temple in the background was admirable. The passing of Orpheus into the nether-world, too, was beautifully done. The actors entered into the spirit of the scene with great gusto, especially some children in wigs of fearsome colours, who tried to torment Orpheus, and four handsome young ladies, who used their whips wherewith to coerce the spirits of the underworld, with uncommon zest. The shrieks of the spirits were, if anything, a little overdone. They had forgotten that the voices in the underworld were thin. Homer, who ought to know if anybody, remarked that they were 'like smoke.'

The question may be left for future discussion as to whether Orpheus is altogether the best possible choice, or whether an opera, in which the spectacle is more of an essential part of the whole, would not have been preferable.

Anyway, it was a delightful performance. The choral singing was uncommonly good, but on the occasion when I heard it, the orchestra wanted more rehearsal. There were two lambs in the Elysian fields, who attracted too much attention to themselves by their gambols—as is the way of prima donnas.

The soloists, Madame Winwood Russell as Orpheus, Miss Enid Finch as Eurydice, Miss Claire Davis as Eros, and Miss Netta Westcott, who recited Mr. Parker's verses sonorously, deserve great praise. The dancing was extremely good, and would certainly have been better if the grass had been drier.

A. K.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

On Saturday, July 22, the President, Dr. Charles Macpherson, presented the diplomas to the recently-elected Fellows and Associates. The hon. secretary (Dr. H. A. Harding) commenced the proceedings by announcing that for the Fellowship examination there were 79 candidates, and 19 passed; for the Associateship examination there were 150 candidates, and 31 passed. The Fellowship Lafontaine Prize was awarded to Mr. B. J. Maslen (Bath); the Fellowship Turpin Prize to Mr. T. P. Dean (London); the Associate Lafontaine Prize to J. E. Allott (Norristhorpe), and the Associateship Sawyer Prize to L. Harding (London).

The President then proceeded to address the meeting as follows:

How often do we hear the remark, 'So-and-so has got into a regular groove'! The expression has ever been used—though of course, with palpable injustice—about some of our organists. When is this phrase applicable and when not? If we intend the word 'groove' to mean the same as 'stagnation,' then it is rightly applied; but the application of the phrase is not fair when it is in connection with the maintenance of some particular tradition which continues to flourish in the sun-light of common-sense. It is the lack of common-sense that frequently induces stagnation and 'grooviness.' Anyone who observes nature will have grasped the obvious fact that there is no standing still; there is always growth or decay. When anything decays or stagnates, its proper functions cease. In our own art, too, there can never be any standing still. We cannot make a melody by hanging on to one note; there must eventually be movement to another note. And what is true of a melody is equally true of the whole history of music. It is only when our mental attitude towards this history becomes frozen and fixed that we are likely to get into a groove. Nearly all advance in music has resulted from experiment; there is nothing more provocative of 'grooviness' than the giving up of experiment. The organist who invariably starts his in-going voluntary by treading on a low pedal-note while his anxious fingers are feverishly engaged in pulling out a more or less suitable selection of manual stops, is certainly in a groove. If he would only couple a 4-ft. manual stop to the pedals and use it as a solo, he would find that the experiment would prove to be a good mental antidote; though prospective candidates for Fellowship must not imagine that their extempore test is safe for a pass if they use this particular combination. Enterprise is closely allied with enthusiasm. If we think our work uninteresting it is bound to fail; but if we approach it with mental interest we are certain to become enthusiastic, and be anxious to find out the causes of failure. Then will follow a desire for experiment. Let us take one practical example. Most of us who are choirmasters—perhaps 'choir-servants' is a better term—know that bad rhythm and pace are more often the cause of disaster than wrong notes. (It is often the case at our own examinations here.) There is no doubt that this sense of rhythm and pace can be acquired by practice. Many years ago I tried the following experiment with the boys at St. Paul's. They were told to shut their eyes; then, after counting out loud a bar of four beats, they had to go on beating quietly four bars at the same pace. At the end of two bars there were nearly as many variations as boys. Then the experiment was repeated with each half of the boys in turn, so that they could watch the result for themselves. After a few repetitions there was a marked improvement in the unanimity of time. The boys who hurried were classified and practised, as also were those who dragged the pace. It is a strange thing that this primitive instinct of rhythm is so often under-developed in those who profess and call themselves musicians, while the reverse is frequently the case in others who do not claim to be musical. A well-known scientific man told me that he had made experiments upon a number of his colleagues, chosen at random, to see whether they could count aloud thirty in thirty seconds. At first there were errors of as much as five or six seconds, but eventually these were reduced to such small fractions as a fifth of a second, duly certified by a stop-watch. Whether this result was due to the presence of a sense of rhythm or of pace does not concern us, but it is evidently possible to improve our sense of pulses recurring at equal intervals of time. Little simple experiments such as these ward off staleness and freshen the mental atmosphere. Of course it does not follow that all experiments are equally useful, or even desirable. When I was a youth I remember that in a certain house there was a remarkably fine orchestration upon which I once tried a fell experiment in sound. The pieces were performed by inserting two cylinders into the musical churn, one for the bass the other for the treble. The depth of degradation and cacophony was reached by using the treble of the Tannhäuser Overture and the bass of the Hallelujah Chorus. The experiment did not meet with the unqualified approval of the other inmates of the house. A more successful, and, at times, a not hopelessly unmusical effect, was obtained on a pianola by adjusting the roll of the Hebrides Overture so that the bass part was on the right and the treble on the left. It was instructive to find how the piece in its topsyturvydom retained many of the characteristics of the original. Indeed, we were all surprised at the unexpected musicality of some of the passages. So much, then, for these antics, the first of which was entirely a hideous joke, and the second almost suggestive of an unexplored side of musical thought not without an appeal to the imagination.

As real aids to imagination those mechanical contrivances of modern times, the pianola and the gramophone, are no longer to be treated with contempt. It is at least possible to listen to note-perfect performances; and this has a certain inspiration of its own, for some students have the greatest difficulty in learning a new piece before they have heard what it should sound like. One of our well-known composers and successful teachers, Mr. J. B. McEwen, is a firm believer in both the pianola and the gramophone, so much so that he has one of each in his teaching room at the Royal Academy. His own Biscay Quartet has been reproduced on the gramophone with considerable success. Then there is the possibility of hearing all kinds of instruments. I have never had the pleasure of hearing Mrs. Gordon-Woodhouse perform on the harpsichord except through the medium of the gramophone; and the experience thus gained of hearing Purcell and Byrd was not to be despised, for the sympathy of the performer, the tone of the harpsichord, and the real beauty of the music were so evident and unmistakable that one felt prompted to take off his hat to the magical box of sounds. I think—with all due deference to the super-high-brows—that any organist who finds himself shut out from the chance of hearing the actual performance of good music may choose many much worse things than a gramophone in order to save himself from getting into a groove—provided that he choose the right kind of records. He will not do himself much good if he invests in nothing but fox-trots, though one or two of these will do him no harm. No one pretends that these reproductions are as good as the originals, but for those who would otherwise never hear the pieces performed they are certainly of great educational value. It has often been pointed out that many of our candidates here fail through deficient ear-training. A great deal of their paper-work is the result of rule-of-thumb principles, entirely without imagination and altogether mechanical. Perhaps in their studies they have never taken the trouble to test their head-work at the keyboard. The actual performance of music is its only safe test. Many candidates fail in their extempore playing because they have but the faintest notion what their next chord is going to sound like. The student who goes on mechanically spinning out certain badly-worn progressions on paper without having the least idea of their effect, is really treating music as only a second-rate science, and he is unlikely to get much farther than the front-door mat. It is appalling to find how many students there are who cannot string a few chords together musically on the pianoforte. They can write their exercises with few or no mistakes, but they become paralysed if they are set to do anything at the keyboard. I should like to see a small book of mental exercises for harmony students—provided the author did not ask me to correct the proofs—on practical lines, with mental exercises somewhat of the following description. Hum any note; then imagine it first as the root of a major common chord, then of a minor one. Next, imagine it as the major third of a common chord, then as the fifth of a minor one. Start with the note again, first regard it as the minor third of a common chord, then as the fifth of a major one. The next step should be to imagine these chords taken in any order, always provided that there is some degree of respectable movement between the outside parts. Experiment should be made at the keyboard in order to fix all the effects in the mind. Indeed this kind of experiment should begin at the keyboard, and be repeated mentally. If this exercise be properly carried out it will, for example, be a great help towards the practice of modulation—not 'muddle-ation,' as it often is—because it will soon be apparent that each note on the keyboard belongs to the common-chord of three major and three minor keys—six different keys; and if the exercise be extended to include dominant sevenths, then it will be seen that each keyboard note is a root, a third, a fifth, or a seventh of one of these chords, and as such belongs to four major keys and their attendant tonic minors. It would be possible to suggest further lines of experiment for sharpening the musical wits; but we have not sufficient time at our disposal for this purpose. A suggestion has been made to me by one of our distinguished members. Many organists are in a position to give small lectures of instruction to their congregations. Why not speak to them about the construction of the organ? It would be a most interesting subject for those who know nothing about stops, or pedals, or any of the characteristics of the instrument. Anyhow, here is a subject that would help the organist to impart some useful knowledge even to so limited an audience as the choir only; and the effort would be worth the organist's while if there is the least chance of his getting into a groove. We have heard a great deal lately of a musical event of national importance, and one which marks a stage in the history of music in this country. I refer, of course, to the Centenary of the Royal Academy of Music. It is not possible to forget that the Principal of the Royal Academy, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, is one of our former and most distinguished Presidents, and were it for that reason alone we could not do less than offer to him our most sincere and affectionate greetings. Under his fostering care and guidance the Academy has become the prosperous institution it is. It has turned out many men who have been of great service to our own College, and the Royal College of Organists has a close connecting link in the Goss Scholarship which is held by an organ student at the Academy. Whatever may be the feelings of kindred institutions or of individuals, there remains the fact that the Royal Academy of Music has held the banner of music aloft—sometimes, it must be confessed, with faltering hope—for a hundred years. It has fought many a battle for those who now directly or indirectly reap the benefit; and that is no small achievement. It is good to think that any success attendant upon this Centenary Celebration is less of a personal character than of one which redounds to the credit of music all over the country. It concerns the nation more than the individual. There would not be much to boast of were a smaller view taken of the situation. To-day we have the pleasure of an innovation. Dr. Alcock is going to play the pieces set for next January's F.R.C.O. examinations. I am sure there are not many of us who envy him the job beforehand, though I am equally certain that after he has performed his task we shall all envy him. In conclusion, I should like to thank all my colleagues—who have made my term of office as President such a pleasant one—for all their kind help and warm friendship. When unexpected difficulties have arisen, the right persons have always appeared to solve them. Though I am preceded—and shall be followed—by my betters, I venture to hope that my tenure of the presidentship may not be noted for any grave neglect of duty.

The Distribution of Diplomas then took place :

ASSOCIATES

J. F. Allott, Norrithorpe (Lafontaine Prize).	W. W. Hewitt, Lincoln.
A. Barkus, Reading.	J. A. Horner,
C. V. Berry, Worksop.	Milngavie.
F. Bevers, Batley.	A. J. Hutton, London.
Miss L. A. Bransden, London.	P. W. Kimber, Brighton.
V. Brook, Pontefract.	R. MacCallum, Hillhead.
D. H. Brown, Hounslow.	W. E. Masser,
A. J. Bull, Newcastle-on-Tyne.	Caversham.
D. J. Chapman, Mus. B., Eccles.	A. J. Murray, London.
O. Le P. Franklin, Taunton.	S. T. M. Newman,
T. A. Fulton, London.	Clifton.
J. H. Fussell, Dursley.	C. E. W. Rabbetts,
L. Harding, London (Sawyer Prize).	Parkstone.
F. A. Herbert, Shrewsbury.	J. A. Saunders, London.
	W. E. Shepherd, Ripon.
	A. R. Thomsett, London.
	R. Tolson, Londonderry.
	G. G. Uren, Camborne.
	S. H. Way, Windsor.
	W. L. Wilson, London.
	J. K. Zorian, Romiley.

FELLOWS

W. Barlow, Droylesden.	W. Dunwell, Leeds.
A. R. Brittain, London.	D. J. S. Fdeson, London.
A. E. Danby, Atherton.	E. J. Fairclough,
T. P. Dean, London (Turpin Prize).	Peterborough.
E. Douglass, Alverstoke.	J. Fletcher, Wisbech.
	K. G. Harwood, Colchester.

FELLOWS—continued.

Miss V. Henry, Port Talbot.	W. E. Ogden, London.
J. T. Huggard, Dublin.	Miss M. J. Prier, London.
C. A. Marks, London.	S. Thorne, 1iverton.
B. J. Maslen, Bath	H. Uttley, London.
(Lafontaine Prize).	W. G. Webber, London.

After the President had presented the Diplomas, Dr. W. G. Alcock, M.V.O., played the Fellowship organ pieces selected for the next January examination, 1923, viz. :

1. Choral Prelude—'I give to thee farewell' J. S. Bach
2. Toccata and Fugue—'The Wanderer'
(Fugue only) ... C. Hubert H. Parry
3. 'Sposalizio' ... Liszt (arr. by E. H. Lemare)

After cordial votes of thanks to the President and to Dr. Alcock, the proceedings terminated.

We append the Reports of the Examining Boards :

FELLOWSHIP PAPER-WORK

The work on the whole has vastly improved, resulting in a much larger number of passes. The unsuccessful candidates will do well to note the following weaknesses :

There was a sad lack of style and variety in the 5th species of counterpoint; the use of syncopation in this species was often ignored altogether. The modern counterpoint was lacking in design, with an uncertainty of tonality.

The Fugue Subject was a straightforward one, and the Answer obvious, but many of the candidates not only answered it wrongly, but rambled into remote keys. The four-part writing where the fourth voice entered was as usual weak and erratic; it was the cause of several failures.

The Neapolitan 6th indicated by the melody was seldom treated properly, and the chain of harmony in this test was not always musically.

In the Composition test there were instances of poor settings of the words; the music was not suitable, and in some cases did not fit the words. There were evidences of very elementary ideas as to vocal part-writing.

The examiners again exhort the candidates to read the questions very carefully before attempting to answer them.

WALTER PARRATT (Chairman).

J. FREDK. BRIDGE.

F. J. READ.

THE FELLOWSHIP ORGAN-WORK

It is gratifying to report a better standard than usual in the playing of both pieces and tests, especially the extemporization. This is one of the best tests of a candidate's musicianship. The playing of it has improved in form, phrasing, and in keeping to the text. There are still many candidates who could be successful if only they would control themselves sufficiently to observe the most obvious things. Some of these things they overlook in preparing their pieces, as for instance the mark Tranquillamente, ♩ = 104 in Dvorák's Légende. This section was more often played as a flurried Presto than at the proper pace; thus its character was entirely altered. Other obvious points are those which they overlook in the examination-room. Nervousness is no excuse for these. For instance :

Note Values.—The fourth complete bar in the score-reading test, though the easiest, was the one most often played incorrectly, and numerous candidates failed to get pass marks for extemporization because they did not correctly read the note-values of the given theme.

Accidentals.—In the score-reading and sight-reading tests the inability of some candidates to carry an accidental in their mind through a short bar was past belief, even where the omission made the music hideous.

Key-Signatures and Time-Indications in the Tests.—The examiners have already commented on this at previous examinations, but improvement can still be made.

E. C. BAIRSTOW (Chairman).

ALAN GRAY.

CHARLES MACPHERSON.

Digitized by Google

ASSOCIATE PAPER-WORK

Strict Counterpoint.—The four-part example, with the third species in the bass, was rarely worked in a satisfactory manner. The selection of chords was frequently bad, diminished triads in their root positions being introduced in several workings. The tonality was often quite vague until the final cadence was reached, and there were many awkward and unmusical leaps in the individual parts.

Melody.—In the harmonization of the melody the modulation which the melody more than suggested was not made. When the under parts were of a free character they were not always skilfully introduced and combined.

Figured Bass.—In many workings the melodic outline was angular and unmusical, and insufficient attention was paid to the natural progression of the parts of the opening chords, which should have been fairly obvious. The figuring was not always strictly followed, suspensions and unessential notes being occasionally incorrectly interpreted.

Modulation.—Some candidates worked this in four parts, instead of three as required. The progression to the new key was frequently crude and unmusical.

Fugue.—Many of the answers revealed a considerable amount of ignorance of the chief rules dealing with the nature of Fugal Answers.

Questions.—The answers were far from good. Sometimes a candidate wrote upon matters which had little relation to the question asked, and sometimes it was obvious that he had not taken the trouble to read the question with ordinary care before answering it.

FREDK. G. SHINN (Chairman).
STANLEY MARCHANT.
GEORGE J. BENNETT.

ASSOCIATE ORGAN-WORK

Pieces.—The noticeable faults were: Lack of rhythmic flow and poor interpretation generally. Attention seemed to be concentrated chiefly on accuracy of notes. The observance of tempo, even when indicated, left much to be desired.

Score-Reading.—There was little appreciation of the right pace. Readings were very halting as a rule. The key itself was in some instances wrong—E major instead of A major!

Transposition.—Frequently there was no realisation of the key required. Few candidates seemed to look ahead—the chords were spelt out as they came.

Accompanying.—As a rule the sight-reading was lamentably weak, especially with regard to time-values of the notes. There was little phrasing in the chromatic passages, and the feeling for harmony was inaccurate. No one could have sung to many of the renderings of this test.

H. L. BALFOUR (Chairman).
E. T. SWEETING.
EDGAR T. COOK.

[A full report of the annual general meeting will appear in the September issue of the Musical Times.]

HOMAGE TO DR. JOHN BLOW

The service, commemorative of Dr. John Blow, held at Westminster Abbey on the evening of July 3, was another sign of the willingness of this age to do homage to the old masters of music of our race. It was graceful of Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, who now sits at the organ where John Blow was from 1668-1679, and 1695-1708, thus to revive public interest in his predecessor at the Abbey. A good deal of the music has been lately disinterred (three-fourths of Blow's work is still in manuscript), and it was heard with lively respect and a pleasure that was enhanced by all the suggestions of the scene, and the persistent thought that here were the same walls that in the swaggering Restoration days had known this music brand-new.

They were days of frivolity, revolution, and adventure, and such a spirit clearly does not make for sublime religious art. Blow perhaps caught now and then a reflection of the period's pompous showiness, and certainly was an adventurous harmonist, but he had a fund of solid character. His music tells us as much; and it is still some way off the 18th century's Laodiceanism.

Blow lived through two or three revolutions, and revolutions, unfortunately, never have done music any good. It would have been better for Blow's music and ours, if not for Blow and us, if there had been no sharp Cromwellian sundering of traditions, and if Charles II. had never gone to France. A Restoration musician like Blow had had the thread of the golden past cut, and snippets of new-fangled foreign fads were offered as the beginning of a new fabric. Blow was, we feel, a sturdy mind to have contrived any so substantial style amid such upheaval. Even so, we observe this style now looking backwards for support, now plunging into anticipations.

The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, on July 3, were from a Service in F, just printed from a British Museum MS., and Mr. Nicholson points, in his Short Account of John Blow (Novello, 1s.), to a certain similarity to the well-known Service by Orlando Gibbons in the same key. The first anthem was the imposing and typical I beheld and lo, a great multitude. Other anthems were Lift up your heads, the singularly touching Save me, O God, and a Coronation Anthem (James II.), Let Thy hand be strengthened (just printed for the first time), which is of a most decisively assured style and fresh dignity. The motet, Salvator Mundi, Mr. Nicholson well calls 'a striking example of Blow's originality and daring harmonic experiments.' It has been edited by Dr. R. R. Terry from a MS. at Christ Church, Oxford.

The service was rendered by Mr. Nicholson's 'special' Westminster Choir and the British Symphony Orchestra.

C.

THE GREGORIAN ASSOCIATION

The fifty-second anniversary of the Association was kept on June 29. At the morning service, held at St. John's, Red Lion Square, a carefully trained choir of twenty voices provided a finished reading of the Missa de Angelis, according to the authentic version of the Vatican Gradual. In the evening a choir of seven hundred voices gathered under the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral for the annual Festival service. A vast congregation filled the nave and transepts, and overflowed on to the screens at the east end of the building. The singing of the choir was marked by its flexibility and ready response to the indications of the conductor, Captain Burgess. The austerity of the Gregorian chant was relieved by the verses in falso-bordoni sung during the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis. These were the work of Soriano and Vittoria. A pleasing contrast was heard in the Motet Sacerdotes Domini of William Byrd. This simple, manly piece of Tudor Church music was sung in a measured and straightforward manner, and was all too short. The Archdeacon of London was the preacher, and the service concluded with a procession round the Cathedral. Before and after the service, Mr. B. Herrick Edwards, organist of the Association, played the following organ music: Allegretto Grazioso and Allegro Marziale, Frank Bridge; In-Voluntary in C, Postlude on Martyrs, and Postlude on London New, Harvey Grace; Grand Chaur on the fourth Gregorian Tone, Wolstenholme; Postlude on Cum Jubilo, Sewell.

Mr. S. Royle Shore gave a course of three lectures on 'Practical Plainchant' at University College, Reading, on May 30, June 6, and June 13, Mr. Gustav Holst being in the chair. The lecturer ended with a strong appeal to the authorities of the College on behalf of the study of ecclesiastical music in all its branches. He pointed out that plainchant had been ignored by practically all our great teaching institutions, despite the influence of its rhythm and tonality on modern composers.

THE ORGAN

As is usual with this admirable quarterly the current (July) issue is very strong in the matter of illustrations. There is a fine page plate of the North case of the St. Paul's Cathedral organ, a drawing of the East Front of the instrument as it was from 1697 to 1826, and a page plate of the present keyboard. There are also illustrations of the Schulze organ at Armley, the new instrument at King's Hall, Blackburn, and a portrait of Marcel Dupré. What an album of organs and organ-cases one will be able to compile from this magazine in a year or two! The writers in the present number include the Rev. Andrew Freeman ('The Organs of St. Paul's Cathedral'), Dr. G. A. Audsley ('The Audsley System of Stop Control'), Dr. T. E. Pearson ('The Schulze organ at St. Bartholomew's, Armley'), John Matthews (a commonsensical article on the playing of Bach), J. Stuart Archer ('Marcel Dupré'), Dr. A. Eaglefield Hull ('Some English Organ Tutors'), C. F. Abdy Williams ('The Positive'), &c. Specifications, reviews, and correspondence, make up a journal that, being read, becomes a part of one's library.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL ORGAN

The main part of the Great, Swell, and Pedal organs have been completed recently, and were opened on Sunday, July 2—the day known as 'Verdun Sunday'—by Marcel Dupré, who played at the High Mass, and gave a recital, being heard again at a second recital on the following day. Absence from London prevented us from being present. We hope to take an early opportunity for hearing the new instrument. Meanwhile we are glad to hear a good report of the part so far available. A complete specification and a description of the organ, written by Mr. J. Stuart Archer, appeared in the Musical Times for May, 1921.

WHITEHAVEN RURIDECANAL CHOIR FESTIVAL

The annual Festival was held at St. Bees' Priory Church on July 7, when choirs representing various parts of the Deanery combined forces. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Calkin in B flat, and the anthem was Elvey's Praise the Lord. Mr. F. J. Livesey, who has done much to enhance the standard of Church music at the Priory Church and also in the district, was at the organ. A large congregation attended, and the service was much appreciated.

NATIONAL UNION OF ORGANISTS

The Quarterly Record announces the arrangements for the Congress to be held at Glasgow on September 12, 13, and 14. There is an inviting list of fixtures, apart from the meetings and dinner—e.g., a recital by Mr. Herbert Walton in the Cathedral, a sail through the Kyles of Bute to Arran, a smoking concert, a motor drive round the city, and visits to places of interest. Inquiries concerning the Congress should be addressed to Mr. Councillor Brook, hon. secretary, N.U.O., 19, Berners Street, W.-1.

The Festival of the Three Choirs of Winchester, Chichester, and Salisbury Cathedrals took place at Winchester on July 13. The Evening Canticles were sung to Stanford in C, and the anthems were Prendergast's Come unto Him (sung in memoriam John Vaughan, Canon of Winchester, who died on July 11), Adrian Batten's Lord, we beseech Thee, Gibbons's Hosanna to the Son of David, Wesley's Thou wilt keep him, and Vaughan Williams's Lord, Thou hast been our refuge. Organ music was played by Dr. W. G. Alcock (Harwood's Requiem Aeternam, and Sonata in C sharp minor), Mr. Arnold Goldsbrough (Bach's Prelude in C, 9-8), Mr. Cuthbert Osmond (Parry's Prelude on Christe, Redemptor omnium, and Stanford's Prelude on Gibbons's Song 22), and Mr. P. Dore (Introduction and Fugue from Reubke's Sonata). Dr. William Prendergast conducted, and Miss Hilda Bird, assistant-organist at Winchester, accompanied.

Dr. Crotch, the first Principal of the Royal Academy of Music (we can't get away from the R.A.M. these days!) was buried at Bishop's Hull, Taunton, the spot being marked by a stone erected by the professors of the institution. Wherefore the Centenary was observed at Bishop's Hull Parish Church on July 16, when all the chants for the day were by Crotch, his anthem, Be Peace on earth, was sung, the organist, Mr. C. E. Juleff, played voluntaries on themes by Crotch, and the vicar made suitable references from the pulpit.

A War Memorial organ was dedicated at Leighton Buzzard Wesleyan Church on June 29, Mr. Fred Gostelow giving a recital. His programme included Faulkes's Overture in E flat, Bach's Fugue in D, Guilman's Funeral March and Hymn of Seraphs, Driffild's Toccata in F minor, and Chopin's Funeral March. The organ was built by the Sweetland Organ Co., Bath.

Dr. E. C. Bairstow gave a recital of English organ music, at York Minster, on June 27, playing Stanford's Fantasia and Toccata, Harwood's Requiem Aeternam, Frank Bridge's Andantino, Vaughan Williams's Prelude on Rhosymedre, Macpherson's Fantasy-Prelude, Samuel Wesley's Prelude and Air, and S. S. Wesley's Choral Song and Fugue.

Mr. Harry Wall, on leaving St. Paul's, Covent Garden, to take up another appointment, has been presented with a handsome bookcase and address from the congregation, and a mounted walking-stick and umbrella from the choir, as tokens of their appreciation of his seventeen years' work as organist and choirmaster.

Mendelssohn's Psalm 13, 'Lord, how long wilt Thou forget me?' was sung at High Pavement Chapel on June 25, under the direction of Mr. C. Blyton Dobson. Madame Dorothy Trueman was the soloist.

The Staffordshire Sentinel announces that the University of Edinburgh is about to confer the degree, of Mus. Doc., honoris causa, on Mr. Alfred Hollins.

ORGAN RECITALS

Dr. H. G. Ley, Exeter Cathedral—Overture to 'Orlando,' Handel; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Fantasia on 'St. Anne's,' Parry.

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Chaconne, Purcell; Variations on 'Gala Water,' Stuart Archer; Toccata, Rheinberger; Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Bach.

Mr. Richard B. Hamilton, All Saints', Hoole—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Barcarolle, Sterndale Bennett; Preludes on 'Rockingham' and 'Melcombe,' Parry.

Mr. Ambrose P. Porter, St. Matthias', Richmond—Choral No. 2 and Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; 'Resurgam,' Harvey Grace; 'Que la Lumière soit,' Doyen.

Mr. H. C. Warrilow, National Institute for the Blind—Introduction and Fugue (Sonata in G minor), Merkel; Festival Toccata, Wolstenholme; Overture, 'Ruy Blas,' Mendelssohn; Overture in C, Hollins.

Mr. Harold Helman, King's Hall, Stoke-on-Trent—Third and fourth movements of 'Scheherazade,' Rimsky-Korsakov; Méditation, Hägg; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; Sarabande, Bourrée, and Prelude on 'Come now, Saviour of the Gentiles,' Bach.

Mr. B. D. Hylton Stewart, All Saints', Hertford—Sonata in F sharp, Rheinberger; Theme with Variations, Noble; Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach.

Mr. Louis H. Torr, St. Laurence, Southampton—Andantino, Franck; March in E flat, Salomé; Fugue in G minor, Bach.

Mr. C. F. Waters, St. Saviour's, Croydon—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Preludio (Sonata in C), Rheinberger; Prelude in E flat, Bach; Choral Melody, Waters; Overture, 'Egmont.'

Mr. John Connell, Johannesburg Town Hall—Prelude to 'Gerontius'; Concert Overture in C, Hollins; Sonata in F sharp, Rheinberger; Toccata in F, Widor; The 'Schenley' Overture, Lemarc; Marche Pontificale, Widor.

Mr. H. S. Middleton, Truro Cathedral—Prelude and Fugue in A flat, Macpherson; Prelude in G minor, Noble; Rhapsody, Harvey Grace; Pæan, Harwood.

Miss Molly Sims, St. Vedast Foster, E.C.—Five-part Fantasia, Kyrie, Bach; Fantasia Toccata, Stanford; Postlude, Gade; Lamentation, Guilmant; 'Angel's Farewell' from 'Gerontius.'

The Rev. E. H. Melling, Llanidloes Parish Church—Prelude in B minor, Bach; Invocation and Grand Chœur, Guilmant; Nocturne, Melling.

- Mr. H. J. Timothy, St. Vedast Foster, E.C.—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Mendelssohn; Two Romances, Henselt; Romance, Elgar.
- Mr. James M. Preston, St. George's, Newcastle-on-Tyne—Prelude Pastorale, Liapounov; Rhapsody No. 2, Howells; Postlude on the 'Old 100th,' Harvey Grace; Introduction to Act 2 of 'Dylan,' Holbrooke.
- Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. Mary's, Haverfordwest—Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Toccata, d'Evry.
- Mr. A. Yould, Wokingham Parish Church—Soliloquy (Sonata No. 2), Lyon; Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; March, 'Ariane,' Guilmant.
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Crystal Palace—Fugue in D, Bach; Caprice, Guilmant; Con moto maestoso, Bertram Hollins; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne.

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. G. F. Austin, organist and choirmaster, St. Paul's, Petersburg, Virginia.
- Mr. Harry Wall, organist and choirmaster, St. Matthew's, West Kensington.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players.

- Young violinist wishes to meet good accompanist (lady or gentleman) with view to mutual practice. Lewisham.—W. Y., c/o M. THOMPSON, 8/9, Talbot Court, E.C.3.
- Hammersmith Orchestral Society. Advanced amateurs (all instruments, strings and wind) desirous of gaining experience with a symphony orchestra playing the best classical and modern music are invited to apply for membership. Rehearsals begin September 14. HON. SEC., 20, Castelnau Gardens, Barnes, S.W. 13.
- Violist would like to join quartet, &c., in S.W. district.—Address, 'VIOLA,' 6, Hauberk Road, S.W. 11.
- Accompanist, experienced, moderate sight-reader, offers his services to an amateur or P.S.A. Orchestra.—'REX,' 4H, Halton Mansions, Canonbury, N.1.
- Young gentleman (pianist) is desirous of meeting 'cellist (lady or gentleman) for mutual practice at Bristol. Clifton district preferred. A love of classics a sine qua non.—Write, R. A., c/o Musical Times.
- Pianist (gentleman) desires to meet a violinist and 'cellist (either sex) for mutual practice.—H. C. LIGHTEN, 5, Churston Avenue, Upton Manor, E.
- Keen lovers of music are cordially invited to join the East London Orchestral and Choral Society. Patrons: Madame Elsa Stralia, the Mayor of Stepney, Isador Epstein, Esq., &c.—For full particulars please write SECRETARY, E. L. O. S., 98, Whitechapel Road, London, E.1.
- Wanted for trio, 'cellist for mutual practice, standard, Beethoven, Gade, Hurlstone trios.—Apply SEC., 17, Curzon Street, Wolverhampton. Also members wanted for new Y.M.C.A. amateur orchestra.—Apply, Y.M.C.A., Lichfield Street, Wolverhampton, or above address.
- Pianist (twenty) would like to meet instrumentalist (male) for mutual practice. Pendleton district, Manchester.—H. B., c/o Musical Times.
- Young soprano and bass-baritone anxious to meet contralto and tenor for studying four-part songs, &c. North London preferred.—W. E. WHITE, A.R.C.M., 2, York Terrace, Cedar Estate, Enfield.
- Gentlemen wanted to join mixed octet for unaccompanied music at mid-day recitals in City.—ERNEST W. PETTIT, St. Lawrence Jewry, Gresham Street, E.C.2.
- Amateur instrumentalists, strings and wind, required for West London Co-Operative Orchestra. Rehearsals resumed September 2. Apply to Hon. Sec., Mr. C. MATHIE, 32, Micklethwaite Road, Fulham, S.W.6.
- Lady pianist wishes to hear of good musical society for coming season (London or near Richmond).—E. L., c/o Musical Times.

Wanted, violinist and clarinettist, amateurs, with view to small dance orchestra. F. DONALDSON, 59, Arica Road, S.E.4.

Pianist (good) would like to meet two violinists, 'cello, and viola for mutual practice. Acton district.—C. W. C., 14, Milton Road, Acton, W.3.

Amateur instrumentalists, all parts, are cordially invited to join the Cross Gates (Leeds) Wesleyan P.S.A. Orchestra. Rehearsals at Cross Gates Wesleyan Church on Mondays, at 8 p.m.—Applications for membership to F. W. P., 15, Chestnut Avenue, Cross Gates, Leeds.

Young violinist (lady) wishes to meet good accompanist with view to mutual practice.—D. L., 37, Bagshot Road, Bush Hill Park, Enfield.

Young vocalist would like to meet pianist for mutual practice, also a vocalist (lady or gentleman). S.E. district preferred. And would like to join a musical society in London.—C. B., 34, Rockbourne Road, Forest Hill, S.E.23.

Violinist (gentleman) would like to meet pianist for mutual practice one or two evenings weekly (Wallington, Sutton, or Croydon districts). Must be enthusiastic; same sex. Large library of dance, musical comedy, and light music.—F. PRIDDEY, 54, Manor Road, Wallington, Surrey.

Violinist (lady), still studying, would like to meet pianist for mutual practice, with a view to playing at concerts, &c.; or would join amateur orchestra. Knowle, near Birmingham.—FAIRFAX, c/o Musical Times.

[Will C. M. M. kindly send her address? It has been mislaid, and letters await her.—ED., M.T.]

Letters to the Editor

TRINITY COLLEGE EXAMINATIONS IN INDIA

SIR,—I have spent some years in Calcutta as organist of the Cathedral, and therefore feel that I am justified in expressing an opinion on the letters from Mrs. Everett and Dr. Horner on the Trinity College examinations. The examinations themselves appear to me to be excellent; and they are admirably conducted by examiners of high reputation. But I am quite certain that the wholesale and indiscriminate examination by a College at home of pupils at centres abroad (or at any rate at Calcutta) is not only not of educational value, but is definitely detrimental to any real musical advance in the centre. When I was a teacher at Calcutta almost every pupil I had was simply obsessed with the idea of passing a Trinity College examination. The examinations became to me a sort of dreary hill of Parnassus up which I had to conduct young ladies with weariness and pain till I left them at the summit enveloped, as it were, in the full glory of the Licentiate halo. During this mountaineering feat one's eyes could scarcely ever stray from the path, one could never pause to look at the view, to envisage distant valleys, mountains, or plains, because there was not time. Besides, it was not business. Business was to get to the top of the hill in the shortest possible time. Once at the summit the pupil herself became a licensed guide to the mountain, and henceforth she could conduct others up the same path. In short, the examinations were an excellent stimulus to endeavour; but they took the very soul out of music. We can hardly blame Trinity College of Music for this state of things. If people clamour for examinations (and having once been bitten by the examination virus, they do) then it is only to be expected that the demand should be met, and I think that Trinity College meets it with a good brand.

But my sympathies do go out to Mrs. Everett and her little band of talented musicians at the Calcutta School of Music who, in the face of many difficulties, are fighting the battle for music in an unmusical city, and also, be it remembered, in a temperature which is somewhere about ninety degrees in the shade for a large part of the year. They are introducing a real atmosphere of music into the city by organizing chamber concerts, running an orchestra, giving lectures, and generally showing themselves to be a live body of musicians. Completely out of touch with them are the numerous holders of the Trinity College diploma, who, teaching on the narrowest and most uninspired lines, are able to attract to themselves pupils, and often really musical pupils, by holding out the bait of a Trinity College diploma.

It cannot be too strongly stressed that there are in Calcutta and other large Indian cities hundreds of children domiciled in the country who ought to have the same opportunities for learning music as have English children, but who, through lack of proper teaching are really musically starved. Stereotyped examinations with diplomas attached to them only tend to increase the number of inferior teachers. Enthusiastic local efforts on the right lines should, in time, increase the number of good ones.—

Yours, &c.,

HEATHCOTE D. STATHAM.

St. Michael's College,
Tenbury.

July, 12, 1922.

'THE BALLAD IN AMERICA'

SIR,—Mr. Sorabji evades the point of my reply to his criticism of American ballads and song recitals. My contention was, and is, that he made a bad mistake in referring to Charles Wakefield Cadman, distinguished living American composer, as a ballad-monger. Mr. Sorabji should have noticed that I did not defend the songs of Carrie Jacobs-Bond or any other composer of cheap, sentimental music. I consider Mr. Sorabji to be a composer of serious intent, whether I agree with all of his music or not, and I could only surmise that his low estimation of Charles Wakefield Cadman was caused by either insufficient acquaintance with this composer's works or mere prejudice against American musical affairs. Cadman's three most popular songs, I hear a Thrush at Eve, At Dawning, and From the Land of the Sky-Blue Water, are pure, and free from the commonplace, and I can only ask Musical Times readers to test this for themselves. The songs are obtainable in London, and there are McCormack and Alma Gluck gramophone records of them.—Yours, &c.,

56, Mayall Road,
Herne Hill, S.E.24.
July 16, 1922.

JOHN FIELDER PORTE.

'LEIPSIC' OR 'LEIPZIG'?

SIR,—I note with satisfaction that in the account of the Handel Festival at Halle your correspondent makes use of the English spelling of the neighbouring city, celebrated through J. S. Bach. The spelling of this name in the German form of 'Leipzig' in English newspapers or books has always struck me as savouring of affectation. 'Leipsic' has been established for centuries as the English spelling. It is used by both Burney and Hawkins (1773-76): it is so spelled in the anonymous musical Dictionary of 1827; Flügel's Wörterbuch, 1879, gives it as the English form of Leipzig, and it is thus used in Baedeker's Guides. The last two books, by the way, are published in the town itself, and their editors 'ought to know'!

To be consistent we should nationalise all foreign names when writing of the places in English script. Thus we should use Koeln, Hannover, Braunschweig, for Cologne, Hanover, Brunswick; Genova, Livorno, Napoli, for Genoa, Leghorn, Naples. We should expect the French to give up their Douvres, Londres, the Italians their Parigi, Marsilia, Londra, Lipsia (Leipzig).

A small matter, perhaps; but I have a craze for preserving the English language so far as possible.—Yours, &c.,

C. F. ABDY WILLIAMS.

South Mead, Milford,
Lymington.

'OUR DECADENCE'

SIR,—I am a constant reader of your journal, and have perused with considerable interest, but some bewilderment, Mr. Rutland Boughton's article in your July issue on 'Our Decadence.' As a non-musician, but a sincere lover of the art, I must confess, with all respect, that I am unable to follow Mr. Boughton's reasoning in the ninth paragraph of his article, particularly the concluding sentences. He says:

'Now I firmly believe that the spirit informing the music of Beethoven is, work for work, a greater spirit than that which informs the music of Mozart. But it is the spirit of passion, egoism, rebellion, and severance; and it tends to dissolution even in its creativeness.'

How can music which exhibits the bad qualities just named be greater than music which is, admittedly, free from such blemishes? Mr. Boughton believes that music went astray after Mozart's death, and that the present cult of cacophony and the ultra-modern movement, headed by Stravinsky, owe their existence to the bad example set by that misdirected genius, Beethoven! Now, if I am not mistaken, it is just Stravinsky and his followers who utterly repudiate Beethoven's methods, asserting that he wrote no music; they would relegate all his works to the lumber-room, avowing themselves worshippers of Mozart! Possibly, like many professing Christians, their faith does not always appear to conform to their practice.

I possess a little book on Beethoven's works by a distinguished English professor of music, who doubtless knows what he is writing about and has studied his subject critically. In the final chapter, entitled 'Beethoven's Music as a Whole' he says:

'Like all great creators, Beethoven came not to destroy but to fulfil: in what one might call the legal sense of the words, he neither abandoned nor invented anything. . . . But with all this access of feeling Beethoven preserved throughout his life the sense of the supreme importance of form—not as meaning mere mechanism, but rather that balanced unity of design without which all artistic expression of emotion is but aimless and wasted hysteria.'

The same writer also alludes to the 'formal perfection' of this composer's works. In my opinion, this point of view is diametrically opposed to Mr. Rutland Boughton's conception of Beethoven's art, hence I am frankly puzzled. Speaking personally (and I do not think mine is an isolated case), I never come away after hearing a genuinely great work of Beethoven's finely performed without feeling mentally refreshed and invigorated, or without a deepened conviction that there is indeed a 'Divinity that doth shape our ends.' Mr. Boughton asserts that Beethoven's music is passionate from the outset. If it is admitted that Beethoven, like Shakespeare, held the mirror up to Nature and Man, then the reflection should be a true and faithful one. Passion exists side by side with other nobler and more spiritual qualities, in its due proportion. I am thus constrained to think that any decadence in modern music may be traceable not so much to a master of the past, but rather to the present influences of our materialistic and machine-ridden age.—Yours, &c.,

'PERPLEXED.'

Pall Mall, S.W.1.

July 17, 1922.

SIR,—It must have surprised other readers beside myself to read in Mr. Rutland Boughton's article on 'Our Decadence' in your last issue, the statement that Beethoven sought self-expression rather than the service of art; and this made, seemingly, an adverse criticism. We had thought that self-expression through the medium of art, and the service of art, were synonymous, and that a man might be a good craftsman and have excellent taste, but if his work did not express some part—if not the whole—of himself, it could hardly be called good art.

The question arises, 'What is the self?' It is difficult to answer, but as soon as we consider the matter we see that the self must be much more complex than is ordinarily assumed. There seem to be various levels of consciousness, some of which are exclusively individual, others not so, but ever-widening as we penetrate further, till at length is reached by some few that region where all limits seem to have been passed—the self is felt to be limitless, and universal consciousness is attained.

Now, apart from matters of form, a work of art is good if it is the genuine expression of even the most individual or the most superficial part of a human being; but it is not great unless it expresses something in him deeper, more comprehensive, than that. The supreme works of art, and they are but few, express the universal element in man.

Most musicians, I should think, would agree that Beethoven produced works that could be placed respectively in these three categories—the good, the great, and the supreme.—Yours, &c.,

ARTHUR PHILLIPS.

210, Harrow Road, W.2.

July 7, 1922.

THE THREE CHOIRS FESTIVAL

SIR,—The pleasures of 'grangerising' have appealed to collectors in every walk of life, and though anathema to lovers of books there is no dispute that a work which lends itself to extra illustration is made remarkably interesting through the addition of prints, documents, autograph letters, and other matter which may relate to the subject concerned. Among such collectors was the late A. M. Broadley, who spared no pains in time or money in extra-illustrating books which interested him; and his library, when dispersed a few years since, bore witness to the energy with which this had been pursued. Among the books thus treated was The Origin and Progress of the Meeting of the Three Choirs, the edition by Mr. C. Lee Williams and Mr. H. Godwin Chance, published in 1895, being selected. As the result of some years of labour this single volume was extended to twelve by the addition of over eleven hundred portraits, engravings of musical and topographical interest, autograph letters, original music, programmes, and much other matter relating to the music meetings which it would be practically impossible to gather again.

A. M. Broadley had more than a passing interest in the Festivals, for he was a great-great-grandson of Dr. William Hayes, the musician, who was born at Gloucester and did so much for music in the city of Oxford. For thirty years Hayes was closely associated with the Gloucester meeting, conducting there on several occasions. In a specially printed introduction to these volumes Broadley sets out the chief facts of the career of Dr. Hayes and of his three sons—Thomas, Philip, and William—two of whom achieved fame in the musical world. It was the relationship to his distinguished ancestor that led Broadley to form the collection, which at the sale of his library in December, 1917, was acquired for the Gloucester Public Library through the generosity of a good friend, Alderman Edwin Lea.

It is impossible to do more than give a general idea of the great interest of these volumes. The aim of the collector was to insert a portrait or print of the singers, composers, and places referred to in the text, and he was singularly successful in adding autograph letters from a large number of distinguished musicians and others who are mentioned. There are engravings of Gloucester, Hereford, and Worcester, the homes of these meetings; of Oxford for the association with William Hayes, who became organist at Magdalen College and was in great measure responsible for the establishment of the Music Room there; and of Cheltenham, Exeter, Malvern, and of London theatres, with which some of those who took part in the Festivals were connected.

Portraits are naturally the more numerous. They include many good engravings, some in mezzo-tint, as well as photographs of performers and others long since passed away, and of others still living. Among names selected at hazard are those of Dr. Boyce, Dr. Burney, Charles Wesley, Handel, Gounod, Jenny Lind, Philip Bisse, John Braham, Madame Catalini, Mozart, Purcell, Rossini, Dr. Croft, Philip and William Hayes, Maria Linley, and François Cramer.

The autograph letters number nearly three hundred, and include those of Philip Hayes (to Dr. Arnold), Jenny Lind, Thomas Linley, the composer (to Sheridan), Mario, the vocalist; and others on various matters written by Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, John Braham, Charles Burney, Cherubini, William Crotch, Mrs. Delany, Grisi, Mary Linley (mother of Mrs. Sheridan), Sir George Smart, and Charles and Samuel Wesley. One written by George III. from Cheltenham, and referring to his attendance at the Worcester Festival of 1784, is appended:

'Cheltenham, August 4th, 1784.

'MY DEAREST SOPHIA,—The account this Day of Mary is so charming that it has quite put me into Spirits and prepared me for going to-morrow after Dinner to Worcester, where I shall remain till Friday Evening that I may attend the three Mornings at the Cathedral the Musick of my Admiration Handel.

'Yesterday Evening Lady Reed with all her Curtsies left this place but not without inviting Your Gentleman to come as Connoisseur to visit her Mackaws, Parrots, and Parroquets. Tell Gooly that she is not forgot for Sestini's Songs are played in honour of her on the walks and Dear Mr. Hunt enquired very kindly of the Colonel after Her.

'I ever remain,

'My Dearest Sophia,

'Your most affectionate Father,

'GEORGE R.

'P.S.—It is not right to tell stories out of Schools or I could mention that the Gentleman is the admiration of all the Ladies and that on the walks He is ever talking to some Lady or other not known by those who have been here some time, indeed I believe the Knowledge of His coming has brought them from all parts of the Island.'

Among the original documents are some of early date. One is a bill in the autograph of Dr. Blow for expenses of the choristers of the Chapel Royal attending the funeral of Queen Mary II., in 1695:

'February, 1694-5. For ye Funerall of her late Matie., Dr. John Blow, Master of ye Children of his Maties. Chapple craves allowance (vizt.)—

For ye Tenn Children of his Maties.

Chapple.—For 60 pairs of waxt leather shoes att 3s. 6d. p. pair ... £10 10s.

For Ralph Allison, John Pennington, Alexr. Gerrard, 3 Chapple Boys gone of—For 6 pr. of shoes att 4s. 6d. p. pair ... £1 7s.

For John Webb, his Maties, Towle Keeper—For 2 pr. of wax leather shoes att 4s. 6d. p. pr. ... 0 9s.'

One of the volumes contains much material concerning William and Philip Hayes, with biographical notes, copies of compositions, views of places with which they were connected, and records of gatherings of their descendants, arranged by Broadley. The note now made presents only a very slight survey of the richness of this book, the possession of which is a matter for congratulation to all interested in the History of the Three Choirs.—Yours, &c.,

Gloucester.

ROLAND AUSTIN

July 10, 1922. (Librarian, Public Library, Gloucester).

PARRY MEMORIAL FUND

SIR,—It has been decided, with the consent of the Dean and Chapter, that the tablet to the memory of Sir Hubert Parry in Gloucester Cathedral shall be unveiled during the forthcoming musical Festival. It will take place on Wednesday, September 6, at 3.45 p.m., in the course of the Festival performance. Lord Gladstone has kindly undertaken to unveil the memorial, and Dr. Herbert Brewer informs me that he has revised the afternoon programme as follows:

2.30 p.m.: (1) Symphony in D ... Brahms
(2) New Work ... Bantock
(3) Motet ... Bach

Unveiling of the Tablet, with short address by Lord Gladstone

(4) 'Blest Pair of Sirens' ... Parry

Sir Hugh Allen, at the request of Dr. Brewer, has consented to conduct Sir Hubert Parry's work.

The erection and unveiling of this tablet completes the first part of the Memorial represented by this Fund. The committee has further undertaken the publication of the score of Parry's last Symphony, '1912,' which is to be performed at the Leeds Festival in October, and also proposes to found a Scholarship for a chorister in Gloucester Cathedral similar to that recently founded as a memorial to Dr. Charles Lloyd. The Parry Memorial Fund is not yet closed, and I shall be grateful if those who intend subscribing but have not yet done so will send me their subscriptions before the end of August.—Yours, &c.,

NORAH DAWNAV

(Hon. Treasurer Parry Memorial Fund).

12, Cheltenham Terrace, S.W.3.

July 18, 1922.

'INSTRUMENTATION: SOME STRANGE SURVIVALS'

SIR,—Wagner's method of writing his horn parts is not to be admired, but the statement in the late Mr. Daubeny's interesting article in your July issue that 'Wagner's crook changes are impossible to accept seriously' calls for some qualification. As Richter said, Wagner never understood the valve horn; and, indeed, generally he displayed a lofty contempt for the mechanism of the individual instruments. But he was not quite a duffer at instrumentation. When he changed the key of his horns and trumpets he very seldom intended a change of crook. In a long note to Tristan he explains his ideas as regards the horns. He assumed that his players would use horns in E along with those in F, and would transpose into one or other of these keys passages written in other keys. Should the cornists, however, prefer other crooks, they were at liberty to use them, provided always that they arranged that notes marked with a + be taken as closed notes. Unfortunately, few appear to have digested Wagner's directions, because so often in performances of the opera we hear these notes with a + above given as both closed and brassy, which is the meaning attached to the + in The Mastersingers and The Ring. In Tristan the + means simply a closed note, and nothing more.

Wagner was always anxious to make his scores easy for the reader. To that end he varied the order of his instruments. For instance, the cor Anglais, when serving as a third or fourth oboe, is written immediately below the oboes and above the clarinets. At other times it is written below the latter instruments. In Act I of Siegfried the first violoncellos are placed above the violas—and so on. (In the miniature score of Tristan this varying order has been abolished completely, and in those of The Ring it has of necessity been slightly modified.) Wagner altered the keys of his tubas in the last three numbers of The Ring for the convenience of the score-reader, the keys remaining—as in The Rhinegold—in the separate parts, and there is no doubt that his peculiar method of noting his horns and trumpets was with the same object. Rightly or wrongly, he fancied that the part was easier to read, was more horn-like and more 'clean,' as Strauss says, when noted in D, thus:

than if noted in G, the key marked at the head of the Introduction:

but he certainly never imagined any change of crook.

The earliest orchestral example of this sudden change of key that I know is in Donizetti's La Favorita, where, on page 258, the valve trumpets are in C for bar 6, and, without any rest, in A for bar 7. It is not without interest to recall that Wagner arranged La Favorita for pianoforte.

Mr. Daubeny found an excuse for the distribution of the horns in Tannhäuser—two natural and two valve—in that it was nearly eighty years ago. But the same combination was used by many French composers till about the end of last century. Saint-Saëns has this disposition in Samson (1877) and in his C minor Symphony (1886), and doubtless in later works. It is not generally realised how long the French clung to the natural horn, with its greater powers of slurring and its more human appeal. Even the text-books seem ignorant of the fact that Gounod's Faust and Bizet's Carmen and L'Arlésienne were written for four natural horns.—Yours, &c.,

TOM S. WOTTON.

St. Leonards, July 1, 1922.

'PLAYER-PIANO PROJECTS'

SIR,—I was greatly encouraged by the long and soberly approving account of my invention in the Musical Times of May from the pen of Mr. Rorke (whose big little book is becoming known in America). 'Praise from Sir Hubert!' May I reply to the reviewer's doubts as to one or two aspects of a practical nature?

Mr. Rorke's point that the perforations of the roll might interfere with the printed musical notation is well taken. By examination of a large number of rolls I find, however, that the difficulty is avoided if the music texts are printed at the extreme upper or lower edge of the roll. They can thus stand clear of the cuttings in the sheet.

As to the placing of descriptive notes on the roll: Mr. Rorke thinks these should be limited to a brief analysis of structure—the rest to be got from books. The answer is that people will not stop to look up data in books, but if printed on the roll they will read it. The cost of printing words and texts in an edition of any size is negligible. Finally, as to reading the music texts, it is thought that few are able to do this. I have found that there are forty persons who can follow a music text which they are hearing for one who can read and play it. Mr. Rorke's remark that the perforated roll 'makes one a tourist and a sightseer of the musical world, but the musical notation makes him a citizen,' is a delightful simile and hits the nail on the head.—Yours, &c.,

St. Mark's Chapel, CARROLL BRENT CHILTON.

288, East 10th Street,

New York. June 9, 1922.

BEETHOVEN'S 'JARRING A FLAT'

SIR,—Writing in your July number, Mr. Rutland Boughton permits himself to make the following remark: 'Some of Beethoven's ineptitudes[!] were probably due to carelessness,' and mentions in support of his extraordinary contention 'the jarring A flat' in the Eroica Symphony. Mr. Rutland Boughton is, then, apparently quite ignorant of the historic fact that the famous 'jarring A flat' in the sublime first movement of the Eroica was no error on Beethoven's part, and that he purposely put it there in order to produce the most wondrously humorous and entrancing effect to be found in the entire range of music.—Yours, &c.,

ALGERNON ASHTON.

22a, Carlton Vale, Maida Vale, N.W.6.

July 10, 1922.

A LIVERPOOL SETTLEMENT

SIR,—May I be permitted to bring to the notice of your readers the musical activities which are at present carried on at the David Lewis Club and the Liverpool University Settlement at Liverpool?

The David Lewis Club is a working men's club functioning on somewhat similar lines to Toynbee Hall in London, and the University Settlement is a residential club of ex-University men (mostly from Oxford and Cambridge) interested in social work. In the hands of these associate members are the entertainments, the orchestras, the dramatic and choral societies. The orchestra has outgrown itself, and the formation of a new string band and a new choral society is projected, the idea in these two schemes being to take good music to the working-classes rather than to extract good music from them. Experience has shown conclusively that this type of audience appreciates good music done well, but prefers bad music done well to good music rendered badly. This scheme is an endeavour to put before a naturally appreciative audience orchestral and vocal music which, while not ultra-modern, is interesting and educational.

May I, Sir, ask those residents of Liverpool, Birkenhead, and the suburbs who are interested in choral and instrumental music to communicate with the Warden, the University Settlement, Liverpool?—Yours, &c.,

CHARLES P. D. CANNON

(B.A., A.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.).

The University Settlement, Nile Street, Liverpool.

July 6, 1922.

THE 'OLD VIC.'

SIR,—It is of course with great satisfaction that we have received the news of the generous donation which has been announced. It will, we hope, enable us to purchase the freehold of the southern end of the building which is now occupied by Morley College, and make the alterations required by the L.C.C.

But I hope our friends will not think us grasping, if I ask them not on this account to cease their efforts to obtain subscriptions for us. We are obliged by our foundation rules to charge our audience as low a price as possible for seats, and in consequence can draw a comparatively small income from our performances. If it were not for an allowance made us by the City Parochial Foundation we could not exist at all. With its help and by paying low salaries to our staff we have run at a small loss up to this season, when I believe we have practically balanced our accounts. This, however, has been effected partly by our having had one or two very successful performances and partly by our having raised the price of our seats, which we were very unwilling to do, and wish as soon as possible to discontinue. I am very anxious to put our affairs on a more satisfactory basis, and to obtain by means of subscription a small endowment fund. I think that the tributes that the press has paid us during the last six months justify me in making this claim. It seems to be universally allowed that under the remarkable management of Miss Baylis and the sound though bold production of Mr. Robert Atkins we have taken a peculiar position in the theatrical world. Miss Baylis, by the force of her personality has created an audience which cares for the play, cares for the paying, and cares for the players too. The West End will not support a Shakespeare theatre; our people will hear him the whole season through, and if anyone wishes to see what sympathy can exist between audience and actors let them come here and witness the welcome given to the actors on their return at the beginning of the season, or the farewell at its ending.

Many persons seem to desire to establish a continuous home for classical and especially Shakespeare drama. This we have practically become, and I am in hopes that the National Shakespeare Memorial Association, to which we have applied, will recognise our claim for assistance. I desire to obtain a small endowment fund in order that we may continue that work without scanting our staff of their just due on the one hand, or living in constant dread of running into debt on the other.—Yours, &c.,

W. P. HENINGHAM
(Chairman of the Governors).

DUPRÉ AND ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

SIR,—A statement on p. 401 of your June issue, complaining of 'M. Dupré's consistent neglect of English organ music when touring among us,' needs qualification. At a recital in Westminster Abbey, early this year, he not only played pieces by Purcell and Gibbons, but selected as the theme of his improvisation the notes sung by the sopranos in the first six bars of the final section of Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens (p. 17 of Novello's Vocal Score). To those of us present who recognised the melody, the significance of this graceful compliment to English music was evident.—Yours, &c.,

CATECHU.

London, W.6.

[We fail to see that our comment needs qualification. Nor can we regard M. Dupré's inclusion of a couple of short pieces by Gibbons and Purcell as 'a compliment' to English organ music, seeing that these pieces were written at a period when organs in this country had no pedal department, and were intended as much for the virginal and harpsichord as for the organ. If an English player went touring in France, and paid no more handsome tribute to French organ music than the performance of a couple of pieces by d'Aquin and Couperin, our friends across the Channel would use an adjective other than 'graceful.' And they would be justified.—ED., M.T.]

THE ORIGIN OF THE BATON

SIR,—In 1896 you published an interesting article on the baton. I have found an early reference in Amusemens Strieus et Comiques, by Charles Dufresny (1648-1724), reprinted in the Collection des Chefs d'Œuvres Méconnus, by Bossard (Paris, 1921). Speaking of the Opera, he says:

'Disons un mot des habitants naturels du pays de l'Opéra . . . ils relèvent tous du souverain de l'orchestre, prince si absolu, qu'en haussant et baissant un sceptre en forme de rouleau qu'il tient à la main, il règle tous les mouvements de ce peuple capricieux.'

The first edition of the Amusemens was printed in 1698, and published in 1699. It is extremely rare. Rouleau most likely was a roll of paper, and if so it anticipated by more than a hundred years its use in London, although it seems to have been displaced by a stick on the Continent early in the 18th century.—Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM WALLACE.

11, Ladbroke Road, N.W.11.

May 29, 1922.

THE RAFF CENTENARY

SIR,—Mr. Algernon Ashton's letter to you under the above heading comes as a useful reminder that much can still be learned from the works of the much-neglected Victorians. Taste, it must be admitted, has changed considerably since Raff wrote, and it cannot be expected that musicians to-day should look upon his compositions with the enthusiasm that some of them deserve. But as studies in certain branches of composition they could do much good to the young composers of the present day—not so much as models to be copied as musical remarks made in understandable language. With the exception of the Cavatina, the amateur probably does not even know the name of any other of Raff's works. But Raff finds himself neglected in good company—Spohr, for example. Writing as a teacher of the violin, I think students of that instrument could do much worse than work at Raff's compositions, even if only as exercises in bowing, phrasing, and rhythm.—Yours, &c.,

JEFFREY PULVER.

24A, Carlton Vale, N.W.6.

NEW FIDDLES FOR OLD

SIR,—In my opinion the above heading (which you use in your review of my book, The True-Tone Violin) spoils what would otherwise be a quite nice article. I have always treated 'fiddles' as a very serious subject, and one that was not open to flights of fantastic imagination.

I am neither a necromancer, romancer, nor an Aladdin—just a plain, matter-of-fact man who sometimes makes fiddles, and who has dived pretty deeply into the subject, and spent more time and money to get at the root of the matter than I ever hope to get back. To come to the point, your reviewer says:

'If Mr. Farrell's violins confirm his theories and establish his claim, fame will come to him in his lifetime as it came not only to Stradivari, but to Vuillaume and to James Tubbs.'

Now, while not caring one jot about fame—which, in my opinion, is something a man usually attains after he is dead—I cannot wholly ignore your comments under the above heading.

To begin with: If I had been a man engaged on reviewing books on musical or kindred matters (as, for instance, the writer of the above extract), and a volume like The True-Tone Violin had been handed to me for review, after reading and digesting the subject-matter I would have said: 'Hello! this fellow is issuing a direct challenge to the whole of the fiddle world. I'll have to see further into this.'

To end with: I only wish to state that I am prepared for anything which is likely to come along, for as your reviewer pithily remarks, 'The proof of the pudding is in the eating.' &c.; and so long as the issue is left in the hands of unbiassed people who are competent to judge I am confident enough as to the result.—Yours, &c.,

W. J. FARRELL.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of August 1, 1862:

MEMORIAL WINDOW TO THE LATE VINCENT NOVELLO.—The project to erect a suitable monument in England to commemorate the musical labours of this industrious composer and editor, is to be carried into effect by the erection of an appropriate stained-glass window in Westminster Abbey, which is now being prepared by Messrs. Lavers & Barraud, of Endel Street, Bloomsbury. The Dean and Chapter of Westminster have most handsomely granted a site in the North Transept front for the window.

ORGAN APPOINTMENT.—Mr. W. Lemare has been appointed organist to the Chapel of Ease, Stockwell.

THE MUSICAL STANDARD.—The new musical paper will appear on Saturday, August 2, price 2d. Order of Arpthorp, 22, Bishopsgate-Street-Without, or through the newsmen. Apply early.

Sharps and Flats

Who can say how much of the old tragic feeling that has given us so many beautiful reflections on the misery and the pathos of life was due simply to bad teeth, bad eyes, bad cooking, and bad sanitation . . . ? Very often, one suspects, an artist has thought his work was the cry of a broken and contrite heart when it was only the wheeze of a broken and contrite stomach.—Ernest Newman.

Mere rapidity of notes, so loved by Thalbergian composers, produces no sense of motion because the harmonic centres, chiefly controlled by the bass or the implied bass, are slow-moving and without purpose. . . . Mere verbal fluency does not make a man's speech vital; it simply increases his capacity to bore.—Alexander Brent Smith.

The attempt to test choral music by the pianoforte is useless and even dangerous. Vocal writing is not at its highest to-day, and it needs consideration as a wholly separate art. To introduce the pianoforte is to introduce confusion.—Hubert J. Foss.

If that cheap programme [of the Mountain Ash Male-Voice Choir], that sobbing sentimentality, and that frequent flattening fairly represent Welsh musical taste of to-day, then God help Wales!—Percy A. Scholes.

I fled in horror after their third piece.—Ernest Newman.

Who can believe the Welshman is any other than a rhapsodist at heart? It is the failing of the Englishman to discomfort himself in music by the aid of formalistic and puritanical dogma. Let not the Welsh genius be curbed in these chains.—Samuel Langford.

Wales is longing for music. There is a national genius for music in Wales.—Prof. Walford Davies.

I am half Welsh.—Ernest Newman.

I have Welsh blood in me.—Percy A. Scholes.

If I had money I would plaster London from Hyde Park to Billingsgate to advertise my concerts. We ought not to be ashamed of publicity. I would not mind, to attract the public, going out at two o'clock in the morning and sticking bills on all the dustbins!—Eugène Goossens.

I am at an age when I like a quiet Sunday and prefer listening to music to any game I know.—Harry Gosling.

Good-looking conductors go much farther in their audiences' favour than do those . . . of lesser pulchritude. Perhaps what I am saying has largely to do with America (I hope so), the country in which I was born and in which I live. Certainly it does hold good here.—Walter A. Kramer.

The cinematograph seems to be retrograding, not advancing, and I notice a general air of boredom now among cinema audiences. . . . Its chief attraction now is that you can sit in the dark with your arm around the waist of your young woman—and very right, too—but that has nothing to do with art.—Hugh Walpole.

The music in St. Paul's Cathedral is sung too well. You think of the singing too much, and not enough of syllables which are almost part of our English being, and the distances are so great that you lose some of the words. And when they sing you feel too small to join in.—Hannen Swaffer.

Parisians have recovered from the musical apathy into which they had fallen after the war, when they applauded Ambroise Thomas and Schönberg indiscriminately. At that time, I was near despair. Now that we have likes and dislikes, we are alive again. Enfin, on commence à se battre.—Maurice Ravel.

All symphony orchestras have a deficit in America.—Walter A. Kramer.

On one occasion I got the Philharmonic String Quartet to play at my house, and at the end one of my guests exclaimed, 'How well those Hungarians play!' This shows the battle is by no means won.—Lord Howard de Walden.

Perhaps one of our faults in England is that too much virtuosity of utterance leads our composers to want to do the striking things they hear others of the modernists do, and to 'go them one better.' Mr. Goossens might write better Stravinsky than Stravinsky himself, but it is much better for him to write Goossens.—Ralph Vaughan Williams.

Many of us must look back a little wistfully to the social life of the Edwardian era, but for the musician there has been no age like the present.—Sir Landon Ronald.

Writers of programme-notes and others whose business it is to be analytical are perpetually faced with the frying pan of flowery description and the fire of cold-blooded dissection in order to reveal a lifeless skeleton. God forbid I should solve their problems for them, but it is a pity that the intelligent listener should grow to imagine that a composer picks a form out of his drawer as one might pick a jelly mould off the kitchen mantelpiece.—Hubert J. Foss.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

THE CENTENARY CELEBRATIONS

The Centenary Celebrations of the Royal Academy of Music have been considered from every point of view but that of a small over-worked body, the musical critics. A long and bad season had thoroughly tired them out when the Academy suddenly thrust about twenty-five important musical events at them in one feverish fortnight. It was a strain on their sense of duty to keep on saying 'good old Royal Academy of Music' through it all; but on the whole they kept it up, because they couldn't help it. The quality of the stuff thrown at them would not be denied. The Academy could draw upon any amount of fine music, all of its own, and a host of British players and singers to air it. After the event, having surveyed programmes, performances, and audiences, the most grudging critic had to admit the necessity for giving twelve chamber concerts, three orchestral concerts, six performances of opera, and two of drama, a reception-plus-masque, and a service at St. Paul's, as well as a specially splendid prize distribution and a banquet.

THE CHAMBER CONCERTS

The term 'chamber concert' covered events that in the outer world pass as 'recitals.' They lasted, in unbroken series, from Monday afternoon, July 10, to the following Saturday evening. All were held at Aeolian Hall. The first displayed pianoforte music as written by Academy composers of all times. Nine pianists played, and Mr. Tobias Matthay lectured. That evening a whole programme did much-needed justice to Mr. John B. McEwen's compositions. Here was a stack of music of which—except perhaps the Biscay String Quartet—the public knows next to nothing. One could see why. His music does not shout from the hill-tops; nor could it have been written by a self-advertiser. It shows a man who loves the Art of composition with a big A, and for those who are ready to forego excitement and take measured delight in fine quality and the expression of a kindly nature and wise intellect—for all this is spelt out in Mr. McEwen's music—the evening was one of prolonged satisfaction. The Spencer Dyke Quartet were the chief performers.

The next ten events must be summarized. They mingled the new and the old, the good and the very good. As a matter of history the new works are here recorded in a breath:

- Pianoforte Solos Morfydd Owen
 Prelude in E minor; 'Glantaf';
 'Nant-y-frith'; 'Little Eric.'
 Songs (unaccompanied) Harry Farjeon
 'Five tunes of a Penny Piper.'
 Pianoforte Solos Harry Farjeon
 Three Preludes; Two Free Fugues.
 'Sing-Song Cycle' Harry Isaacs
 Two movements from Pianoforte Sonata
Thomas Marshall

The Friday evening concert was a pianoforte recital by Miss Winifred Christie, and the two Saturday concerts were given by students.

OPERA AND DRAMA

The operas were The Yeomen of the Guard (July 10 and 18), The Cricket on the Hearth (July 12 and 19), and Nadeshda (July 14 and 22). The directors were Mr. Cairns James and Mr. Henry Beauchamp, both Hon. R.A.M. The Yeomen we all know and love. Sullivan, the brightest star of the R.A.M., shone bravely. To know all about The Cricket on the Hearth read the Musical Times for July, 1914. Nadeshda, we found, contained a good deal that mattered besides 'O my heart is weary.' The first series of performances revealed talent of a high order in Miss Olive Groves (Elsie Maynard and Nadeshda), Miss Dorothy Pattinson (Phoebe), Mr. Edward Jones (Shadbolt and Caleb Plummer), and Miss Isobel McLaren (Tilly Slowboy).

The dramatic programme (directed by Mr. Acton Bond, and given twice) was Shakespearean—four excerpts. The present writer is not a dramatic critic, but he ventures the opinion that Miss Isobel McLaren, who was Juliet for a few minutes, is an actress of the first order.

THE SERVICE AT ST. PAUL'S (JULY 17)

This function, which the Duke of Connaught attended, was very impressive, and, within the limits of propriety, highly picturesque. Of course it was a feast of fine music. With so much to record, the luxury of comment must be foregone. First came an hour of organ music, as follows:

- Introductory March Paul Corder
 Choral Prelude, 'Winchester New' John E. West
 Barcarolle from fourth Pianoforte Concerto
Sterndale Bennett
 Andante Cantabile from Sonata in D minor
Battison Haynes

Interspersed with this was orchestral music. Sir A. C. Mackenzie's Benedictus was conducted by Sir Henry Wood, and Mr. Frederick Corder's Peace (for harp and horns) was conducted by the composer.

This was the Service music:

- 'Arise, O Lord God' H. W. Richards
 'It is a good thing' J. B. McEwen
 'And I heard' Reginald Steggall
 'I will sing a new song' Stewart Macpherson
 Antiphon No. 1 Hubert S. Middleton
 Psalm cxlvii. (based upon the 8th tone)
Stanley Marchant
 Psalm cxlviii. Leslie Regan
 Psalm cl., set to chant in C George Macfarren
 Antiphon No. 2 Hubert S. Middleton
 'This is the day which the Lord hath made'
George J. Bennett

- Hymn, 'Praise, my soul' John Goss
 'Comfort, O Lord, the soul of Thy servant' W. Crotch
 Solemn Thanksgiving Te Deum *Charles Macpherson

The Bishop of London, in an address, said that music had always been associated with religion. It was right that the Academy should celebrate its Centenary at St. Paul's, for there had been music ever since there had been religion. The Christian religion had been the spring of the most beautiful music in the world.

At the end, Sir A. C. Mackenzie's Coronation March was played by the band of H.M. Welsh Guards, under Lieut. Andrew Harris.

THE RECEPTION

This was an evening of great doings at Queen's Hall. The catalogue was varied; thus: Item, the R.E. String Band, playing in the guests, conducted by Lieut. Neville Flux; item, Motet in fifty parts, Sing unto God, by Frederick Corder, conducted by the same, sung by ladies' choir of two hundred; item, address of congratulation by Royal College of Music, delivered by Mr. George Macmillan and Sir Ernest Palmer; item, Sir Alexander Mackenzie's reply; item, a few words from the said A. C. M.; item, a Masque.

The Masque was portentous. Mr. Louis Napoleon Parker, a wit, wrote it. Music was put to it by W. H. Bell, F. Corder, Alan Bush, and Arthur Sandford. It had best be dealt with synoptically.

The music starts. Enter row of young men in evening dress. Immaculate, but no uniformity in the matter of white waistcoats. They form railing behind which girls assemble. Slowly enter two more young men and two more young women, eloquent with suppressed intentions, but nothing to do at present. Dancers follow—major, minor, and minima. Arrival of 1922 (Miss Phyllis Neilson-Terry), dragging on 1822 (Miss Julia Neilson). 1822 wonders where she is and what it's all about. 1922 says she started it, and it's all her doing. Thus they talk:

1822.— In eighteen-twenty-two

My girls and boys were ten of each.

1922.— So few?

1822.—To quote old Crotch, I 'sought their moral good,
 And taught them how to earn a livelihood.'

Further highly-pointed dialogue, as thus:

1822.— You cannot mean

Plays acted on a stage—a public scene!

1922.—That's what I do mean.

1822.— Worthy Dr. Crotch

Against such things was ever on the watch.

Respectability was our chief factor.

How could a music teacher be an actor?

The two young women (vide above) now have their chance. Complimentary rhymes to Sterndale Bennett, Macfarren, John Francis Barnett, Sullivan, and Goring Thomas, who enter one by one, in portrait form, to quotations from their music. Patriotic note. Summer is i-cumen in. Arrival of students from foreign parts. Song of same. Homage to A. C. Mackenzie. Much wild pageantry. God save the King.

THE ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

Concert No. 1—blank! One of the six hundred turned away, though urgent with flourished ticket, learns from one of the lucky ones that the King and Queen and the Duke of Connaught were there, and that everything proceeded as per schedule, excepting that Edward German, arriving to conduct his Willow Song, found the concert over. The said schedule ran thus: Overture The Naiades, by Sterndale Bennett; two Shakespeare songs by Eric Coates, sung by Miss Caroline Hatchard; The Pierrot of the Minute, by Granville Bantock; Concert Piece for pianoforte, by Tobias Matthay, also conducted by him; O vision entrancing, Goring Thomas, sung by Mr. Ben Davies; Romance for viola and orchestra by B. J. Dale, played by Mr. Lionel Tertis; recitations by Miss Lena Ashwell, to music by Stanley Hawley; two works by Edward German, not performed. Conductors: Sir A. C. Mackenzie and Sir Henry Wood.

Concert No. 2—Writer again on wrong side of door when the order is given 'no more to be admitted.' He hears that the new works were duly performed, and that Edward German's was tacked on. The new works were A Song of Greeting, for orchestra, by W. H. Bell; Tintagel, by Arnold Bax (new to London); The Song of Rosamund, by Montague Phillips (Miss Clara Butterworth); Poem, by York Bowen; and Judas Iscariot's Paradise, for chorus, baritone (Mr. Robert Radford, who can sing baritone), and orchestra, by Adam Carse.

Concert No. 3, by students—too late for present mention. It is regretted that the prize distribution (by the Duke of Connaught) and the banquet occur as this journal goes to Press.

* Composed for the Peace Day Thanksgiving Service at St. Paul's Cathedral, July 6, 1919.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The following is a short account of the College Jubilee celebrations recently held. A description (with illustrations) of the exterior alterations, and the new interior of the buildings, appeared in the June number of the Musical Times.

The celebrations began with a reception at the College on Wednesday, June 14, at which Lord Shaftesbury, the president, and Sir Frederick Bridge, received and welcomed the guests in the new entrance hall. Refreshments were served in the board room and library, while in the concert room, which has been so remarkably transformed, a small orchestra of College students played under the conductorship of Mr. Joseph Ivimey.

In the evening of the same day a very large and enthusiastic audience attended the concert given by the College Orchestra at Queen's Hall, when all concerned acquitted themselves admirably. The programme included works by Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Frederic H. Cowen, Albert W. Ketelbey, and Edric Cundell, all of whom conducted their own compositions.

On the morning of June 15 a conference of the secretaries of examination centres took place for the purpose of discussing the College work. A very useful and successful meeting resulted, after which a presentation of honorary diplomas to representative secretaries was made by Prof. J. C. Bridge, in the absence of Sir Frederick Bridge. The afternoon was devoted to a very enjoyable performance of Iolanthe, produced by Mr. Cairns James, professor of elocution at the College.

In the evening a dinner was held in the Connaught Rooms, Great Queen Street, W.C., when the Earl of Shaftesbury again received the guests, included among whom were the Countess of Shaftesbury, the Lord Mayor of London and Lady Mayoress, the Rt. Hon. Lord Lamington, Sir William J. Collins, Sir Frederic H. Cowen and Lady Cowen, Sir Alexander C. Mackenzie, Sir Landon Ronald, Sir Hugh Allen, Major Boyd Carpenter, Sir S. Russell Wells (vice-chancellor of London University), Mr. Clifford B. Edgar, Sir Charles Sykes, Sir Ernest Palmer, Sir Francis Farmer, Sir Frederick Bridge and Lady Bridge, Prof. J. C. Bridge, Dr. Percy C. Buck, Mr. Lionel Tertis, Sir Francis H. Green, Dr. C. W. Pearce, Prof. C. H. Kitson, Dr. E. F. Horner, Dr. C. Vincent, Mr. A. E. Drinkwater, and Mr. John Drinkwater.

THE U. G. M. AT CAMBRIDGE

BY ARTHUR T. FROGGATT

For the second time those members of the Union of Graduates in Music who were able to absent themselves from 'the trivial round, the common task,' spent an enjoyable thirty hours or so within the precincts of a great University; and the new departure so successfully inaugurated by Sir Hugh Allen at Oxford, was admirably continued by Dr. C. B. Rootham at Cambridge.

The Conference extended over two days—Tuesday and Wednesday, June 21, 22. The lady members were accommodated at Newnham College, and those of the inferior sex at St. John's. But all were welcomed by the Master of St. John's (and also by the president, Dr. Living, who is ninety-four years of age) in the College Combination Room, where tea was served. From this an adjournment was made to the head-quarters of the University Club, where Dr. Rootham gave an interesting address on 'Universities and the Musical Profession.' Emphasising the fact that in former times residence was an essential preliminary to graduation in music as in all other faculties, Dr. Rootham mentioned that in 1658 Oliver Cromwell requested the University to dispense with residence in the case of Benjamin Rogers, who was admitted Mus. B. in that year. The question of residence is confessedly a difficult one. Most musicians begin their career, even if they do not end it, as poor men. Sir John Stainer once said to me, 'The man I like to see coming up for his degree is the young fellow who thinks that a hood would nicely adorn his surplice.' And there is a good deal to be said from that point of view. On the other hand, it is an anomaly that a residential university should dispense with residence in the case of one faculty only. Such a course must inevitably tend to the depreciation of that faculty in the eyes of the university. It must also be remembered that, to meet the case of those who cannot afford residence, some universities exist for the purpose of examinations only; and in the case of one at least, residence for any degree is optional. At the same time, I venture to think that some of the colleges, both at Oxford and Cambridge, might do more to encourage musical scholarship than is at present the case.

With all that Dr. Rootham said respecting the advantage to the musician of a good general education, everyone must be in hearty accord. 'To know something of everything and everything of something' may be a counsel of perfection; but it should be the aim of the musician, as of every scholar, for so long as he draws breath.

It was a little difficult to follow Dr. Rootham when he enlarged upon the importance of scholarship to the graduate in music. As an illustration of his meaning, the lecturer stated that he possessed four editions of certain songs of Henry Purcell, and that not one of these editions was accurate. Now scholarship is defined as 'learning, knowledge'; and it is to be feared that most of us, for whatever learning or knowledge we may happen to possess, must be content to remain very dependent upon the labours of others. Only a comparative few can possibly have the opportunity of access to the manuscripts of the works they wish to study. Of course there are countless cases of misprint, or even of careless transcription, which an educated musician can rectify. But there are also countless instances in which a very extensive knowledge of the musical idiom of the composer or period would be quite insufficient to determine the probable accuracy of a given reading. For example, I happen to possess three editions of the Missa Papae Marcelli. No two of these three entirely agree; in many cases, I regret to have to confess, my 'scholarship' is unequal to the task of selecting the probably correct version; and up to the present time I have not had an opportunity to consult the original manuscript.

Another prominent feature of the president's address was a plea for the horizontal rather than the perpendicular method of teaching composition. (By the way, was it not the despised Macfarren who said, 'The modern student should master the laws of counterpoint, and so approach the fundamental or massive harmonic school by the path of history'?) Dr. Rootham said that the child should be encouraged to write a melody, and then add another melody above the first, and so on, instead of bothering about chords. This suggestion evoked considerable difference of opinion, although the lecturer declared that he had proved its success many times. There can, I think, be no doubt that far too much attention has been paid in the past to figured basses, and far too little to the harmonization of melodies; but one would have thought that such a book as Stainer's Composition primer had done much to remedy this error. The discussion was interesting. But do members of the U. G. M. need to be reminded, as they were by more than one speaker, that music must be taught by means of the ears as well as the eye?

Dinner in Hall was followed by a performance of music in St. John's College Chapel, which will undoubtedly rank as the outstanding feature of the Conference. The programme was as follows:

- Motet for six voices 'In Jejunio et fletu' ... Tallis
- Ground for strings 'The leaves bee greene' ... Byrd
- Kyrie from 'Missa Papae Marcelli' ... Palestrina
- Anthem for five voices and strings
- 'Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem' Purcell
- Motet for six voices 'Arise, O ye servants' Sweelinck
- Pastorale for string orchestra,
- Meditation on Psalm xxii. C. Armstrong Gibbs
- Motet for six voices,
- 'O Lord, look down from heaven' Battishill
- Motet for double choir 'Surrender of the soul' Cornelius

It is sufficient to say that the performance, under Dr. Rootham, was worthy of the music, the place, and the occasion.

At 8.30 on the following morning, the members of the U. G. M. were the guests of Dr. A. H. Mann, who had kindly invited them to breakfast in Hall at King's College.

At ten o'clock, in the room of the U. M. C., Mr. Arthur Bliss gave an address on 'The Musical Renaissance'—a title that was very misleading, the subject of the paper being something quite different—namely, the present condition of music in England. This condition the speaker evidently regarded as eminently satisfactory. He appeared to be under the impression that until quite recently executant musicians of English birth had very little chance of success. Coming to creative artists, he paid the customary homage to the memory of Henry Purcell—a homage which has been, perhaps, a trifle exaggerated. Purcell was undoubtedly a genius, but genius is a gift which has not been denied to some other English musicians, and if we say of Purcell that he was the greatest English composer of the second half of the 17th century, it may be that we have said enough.

Mr. Bliss attached great importance to the cultivation of folk-song, apparently regarding it as the principal means of musical salvation for this country. But here, again, some of us are inclined to think that folk-song has lately been worked a little bit too hard. It is true that a few composers seem to experience a trifling difficulty in the invention of melody, and in their case it is doubtless a convenience to be supplied with a melody ready-made. But we cannot help feeling, occasionally, that the peg is hardly strong enough to support all the clothes which are hung upon it. Mr. Bliss, who was obviously convinced of the absolute correctness of his views upon things in general, named the three men who, more than any others, had prepared the way for the present happy state of affairs—Parry, Stanford, and Elgar. The holder of the championship for the moment—until a greater than he should arise, was Dr. Vaughan Williams. The labours of these men had, fortunately, rendered it impossible that any self-respecting person could any longer listen to such a work as The Golden Legend. In the realm of extravaganzas, indeed, Sullivan having aimed low had succeeded in hitting the mark, but in all other respects was beneath contempt. By a quick transition (too abrupt to be termed a modulation) we were reminded how Rousseau had sought and found inspiration in the elevating and chaste lucubrations of Voltaire. After a few of the great masters, such as Haydn and Beethoven, had been called up for judgment and disposed of summarily, we were informed that music was still only a baby in the cradle, and that the more or less inarticulate noises with which she had hitherto regaled our ears were as nothing to the full tide of song which awaited us in the coming centuries. A peroration in praise of the steam engine followed, but I did not gather that the lecturer advocated its inclusion in the orchestra of the future.

This breezy paper naturally led to a long and very amusing discussion. Dr. Alan Gray, while expressing his agreement with most of Mr. Bliss's statements, put in a plea for Haydn, who, he thought, went deeper than Mozart. Another speaker wanted to know why music, which is as old as Genesis, is still only a baby. Others were desirous of learning the best method of inoculating their pupils with the latest virus. But, as is often the case on these occasions, while many addressed themselves to the subject of the paper itself, others were content with a comment on the remarks of the previous speaker whoever that might happen to be. A somewhat curious result of this was that we presently drifted back to one of Dr. Rootham's topics of the previous afternoon, namely, the best method of teaching composition. However, when Mr. Bliss, in closing the discussion, told us that Schönberg, at Vienna (where even the hotel-waiters love string quartets) always 'taught by line,' I think we all felt that the subject was closed.

An inspection of some of the musical treasures in the Fitzwilliam Museum filled up the interval before lunch, for which a return was made to St. John's College. A well-deserved vote of thanks to Dr. W. J. Phillips, the hon. secretary of the U. G. M., brought the formal proceedings to a close. Mention must be made, however, of a delightful organ recital, given by Dr. Alan Gray in Trinity College Chapel, and also of the doctor's exceeding kindness in showing some mediæval musical manuscripts enshrined in the College Library.

For the benefit of those members of the U. G. M. who were unable to visit Cambridge, and who happen to possess back volumes of the Musical Times, it may not be amiss to call attention to an illustrated article on St. John's College which appeared in December, 1904.

MY SINGING LESSONS

For years my friends had assured me that I sang rather well, and moreover they invariably implied that with proper singing lessons I might sing even better. At the outset of what I may term my singing career I was satisfied with the simplicities of hearts bowed down with weights of woe, but advancing by painful stages I eventually hazarded the great sob song from P. Pagliacci. My friends were moved; I could see that quite easily. It was of course inevitable that Briggs would laugh; but Briggs would laugh if my voice were really worse than it was. Briggs is just that particular brand of ass, but no one takes any notice of Briggs—as a rule. I could not refrain however from asking him on this occasion why he laughed when everyone else was so obviously moved. 'But you said "Laugh, Punchinello,"' he protested, his great innocent eyes wide open.

'Yes, but "I' Pagliaccio" [I know a little Italian] sang it with a lump in his throat and bitterness in his soul.'

'Oh, that was it, was it?' said Briggs, thoughtfully.

My friends were now more than ever insistent that I should take lessons, and with this intent I made three appointments with assorted singing-masters.

The first was portly, both of face and frame. I entered the room nervously, but he at once put me at my ease. He simply radiated the kinæsthetic sense! He pumped both my hands up and down vigorously until, completely out of breath, we both sank to the sofa. 'Breath control,' he panted, 'is the root of all tone. Tonicity—co-ordinal poise—muscular innervation—[he waved his hands flabbily]—all under the direct—'

He jumped up suddenly. 'Let me hear you sing.'

I sang. He pumped my hands again, and again we sank to the sofa. 'A magnificent voice! How much more magnificent might it be did you but study, my friend, with me! [which was poetry, though he hadn't such intention]. Your voice has depth,' he went on, 'but not enough. It has quality, but not too much. Your organ is not controlled. Let me hear you sing "Ah—so"!'

I sang 'Ah—so!' as directed, and then he asked me how I felt as I sang.

'Well,' I confessed, 'I feel as if I have a crick in the neck.'

'A perfectly natural feeling at the commencement, due to the probable juxtaposition of the Crico-Arytenoid and the Thyro-Arytenoid muscles. Anything else?'

'Yes; I felt a funny tickling sensation at the back of the throat.'

'Due to too much use of the Humerus muscles,' he countered readily. 'And now, try again. A word of warning first. Whatever you do, don't use the Sterno-Mastoid muscles or the Trapezius muscles!'

'I should never dream of doing so,' I replied.

'Depress the diaphragm, and send the tones over the Oral Pharynx so that they hit the hard palate,—So!' He sang with such suddenness and brassy vigour that I jumped. He smiled. 'Dynamic force, my friend. Now, are you ready?'

'What muscles did you say I was not to use?' I temporized, trying to collect myself.

He repeated the list, and I bellowed out a vigorous 'Ah!' . . .

'Control your breath!' he shouted. 'Control is everything. On control depends all tonicity—co-ordinal poise—muscular innervation.'

Again he sought the sofa, breathless. He just had time ere I reached the door to articulate 'My terms—*are—*are . . .'

My second singing-master was not so enthusiastic. He was angular, and looked sad. By way of preface, I told him that I was a little hoarse. He seemed to know all about it. 'Yes! You have been singing with too much so-called controlled tone. There is but one true method of voice-production. Nature's way! Consider the dog! How he breathes, how he barks. Consider the cow! How she breathes! How she intones! Consider the nightingale! How it breathes! How it sings! Do they know anything about control? They do not! There is no teaching in song. You just sing, as the cow barks, as the dog intones, as the nightingale warbles. Animals produce tone naturally. Why shouldn't we?' He glowered at me. I agreed hastily.

'Now, try and bark like a dog,' I barked!

'Now the cow.' I emitted a long and desolating cow-like sound. A fleeting smile lit up his mournful face. 'There! Did you notice how the tune was precipitated from your lungs into the fresh air?'

'But,' I protested, 'What would my friends say if I barked like a dog and moo'd like a cow when they asked me to sing?'

'Patience, patience! Having "placed" the voice on rational principles, we proceed to mould the voice! Yes! Mould the voice! Mould—' As I left, he murmured, 'My—terms—are . . .'

The third singing-master was a round little man with dramatic, black eyes and oily hair—obviously an Italian.

'Aha, Signor! You desire-a to sing, is it not?' He ran up and down a scale, and delivered himself of devious vocal pyrotechnics. 'So, eh? To sing is to live. Ah! Oh! Oo! Oh! Ah! Not to sing is no life, eh? La donna è Mob . . .' A few acciaccaturas and a further cadenza on his part, and I started my special sob solo. I had sung only a few phrases, however, before he took it up himself and sang my solo to its bitter end. He turned to me, 'There, what you thinka of that?' 'Fine,' I said, lamely; 'but I really wanted you to hear Mr.' 'But you must as I do, do. It is but the sole way. Ah . . . You heard people—they talk of natural methods, is it not so? A Via dolorosa! Others, they spik of breath control—another via dolorosa. There is but one way—that of imitation. Imitation first! Imitation second! Imitation sempre! When I trained Fagotti he hang on my very lips, and Signora Spinaccio, she hang too—no, she not hang, but say I have more voce in my new shoes than Signor — have in his whole head.'

'And yet Signor — has trained many famous singers,' I hazarded, humbly.

'Si! But how better much they have been had he not trained them?' he retorted, triumphantly.

I could not of course answer this, and so I suggested that I would nevertheless be contented if he would train me half as badly. I left him eventually with the familiar, 'My terms are . . . ' ringing in my ears.

When I reached home my wife said, 'You seem rather hoarse to-night.' 'Yes,' I said, 'I've almost had three singing lessons.'

KIM.

BIRMINGHAM REPERTORY THEATRE

A MOZART SEASON

The musical activities of Mr. Barry Jackson at the Repertory Theatre, Birmingham, arouse less attention in other parts of the country than they deserve. They may count for little in comparison with a season of grand opera at Covent Garden or the tour of a large organization from town to town. But their potentiality is great, nevertheless, for they represent the effort of a community to produce opera for itself. And the couple of years over which they are spread find Birmingham with the first opera establishment in the provinces—an establishment comprising orchestra, chorus, soloists, scenic artist, and scenic workshops, all of local derivation, while to these is now added a school for budding operatic singers. It seems certain, too, that Birmingham will not for long be allowed to stand alone; other cities, with possibly Liverpool leading the way in the matter of imitation, will doubtless follow suit.

The cessation of the dramatic season at the Repertory Theatre is now annually succeeded by a season of opera, but at intervals during the winter a week or two of opera allows the dramatic company a much-valued rest. What this means when summed up over a year will be gathered when it is stated that since June, 1921, thirty-five performances of Rutland Boughton's The Immortal Hour have been given, with something like eight of Donizetti's Don Pasquale, six of Mozart's Così fan tutte, and four of Cimarosa's Il Matrimonio Segreto. A Ballet based on music drawn from Scarlatti has also had a dozen performances—for ballet, under the direction of Mr. Leighton Lucas, is now included among the theatre's activities. A bridge between the dramatic and the opera seasons, indeed, was made this summer by a series of performances of Wormser's L'Enfant Prodigue, with Mr. Appleby Matthews at the pianoforte. In this Miss Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies was seen to special advantage, her musical sensitiveness enabling her to poise the rhythm of her gestures more successfully than her dramatic colleagues. Wormser's music, however, is to the modern ear worn-out; it was difficult to realise that a generation ago the work created something like a furore.

Mozart's Don Giovanni was the new production of the July season, and it had a revival of Così fan tutte for companion. It is Mr. Jackson's intention to add other Mozart operas to the repertory. In the tastefully designed little theatre—holding about five hundred—an orchestra of twenty or so players gave a finely-pointed and spirited reading of the Don Giovanni score. Mr. Appleby Matthews, like most of us when illusions ensnare us no more, has a special enthusiasm for Mozart's music, and is always found at his best in its handling. The staging of the work was on the model allowing of continuous performance employed in this theatre for Shakespeare productions. Mr. Paul Shelving (a designer of the primary-colour Lovat Fraser school) dressed the opera in the manner of 18th century Spain—with what authority as regards period I leave him to explain. Whether the costumes of that period were really so ugly in outline as he made them, or whether the singers did not know how to wear them, I cannot determine; they did not please my eye. As in other productions of the kind here, the dialogue was carried on in recitative supported by a dulcitone pianoforte in the wings, a method which makes stilted dialogue seem more stilted still.

With the singers at command, the features of the Repertory opera performances have been in the main perfection of articulation combined with an excellent ensemble. These were less evident on the first night of Don Giovanni than in previous productions, or than they will be when a cast including some new-comers to the stage settles down to its work. For one thing, circumstances combined to restrict the time for rehearsal; for another, Don Giovanni is the biggest proposition Mr. Jackson has yet tackled. Still, creditable work by Mr. Arthur Cranmer as the Don, Mr. Herbert Simmonds as Leporello, Mr. Charles Hedges as Don Ottavio, Mr. Samuel Saul as Masetto, Miss Doris Watkins as Donna Elvira, and Miss Eva Benson as Zerlina, promised well for future performances. The weakness of the Donna Anna robbed us of 'Non mi dir,' which is unforgivable.

Messrs. Cranmer and Simmonds, with Miss Watkins, were also mainstays in the Così fan tutte cast. To them should be added Mr. Geoffrey Dams, a reliable tenor whose voice is coming on well.

A. J. S.

Music in the Provinces

HARLECH.—The London Symphony Orchestra collaborated with the Festival Choir at the annual Harlech Festival on June 22. The selection included a proportion of Welsh items, and the centenary of Ieuan Gwyllt and Tanymarian was honoured, the latter being represented by the anthem Disgwylied Israel, scored by Mr. E. T. Davies, of Bangor College, and by Dyna'r Gwynioedd, with an orchestral accompaniment by the late Emlyn Evans. Other Welsh pieces were the vocal solos Y Dymhesti, Morfydd Owen's Gweddî Pechadur, Prof. Walford Davies's arrangement for orchestra of Lledrod, Bach's Dona nobis pacem, sung in Welsh as Dyryrini Heddych, and Prof. Walford Davies's arrangement of Caerllyngod. The Festival choir (consisting of nineteen choirs) sang Schubert's Song of Miriam in Welsh. The orchestra played, among other things, Elgar's Wand of Youth Suite and Brahms's Double Concerto for violin and 'cello, with Mr. Hubert Davies and Mr. Arthur Williams as soloists.

HARROGATE.—Conducted by Mr. Howard Carr, the Symphony Orchestra, on June 22, played Brahms's first Symphony, a symphonic poem, Out of the Mist, by Miss Lilian Elkington, and Tchaikovsky's Francesca da Rimini Overture.—At the symphony concert on July 13 Tchaikovsky's Overture on the Danish National Anthem, two tone-poems by Eric Fogg—Sea-sheen and Past the lilac clover field—Bach's Brandenburg Concerto in F, and Beethoven's Eroica Symphony were played.

MANCHESTER.—On June 27 Miss Dorothy Crewe gave a pianoforte recital, playing Bach's Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, a group of pieces by Scarlatti, and The Lament of the lover to the nightingale, by Enrique Granados.—On July 4 Madame Bella Baillie sang modern songs, including two by Strauss—Dream in the twilight and Devotion, and Eric Fogg's song from Tagore, One morning in the flower garden.

MONTGOMERY.—At the Conference of the Welsh National Council of Music, which concluded on July 10, members formed themselves into a choir for the occasion, and with the assistance of a string orchestra made a study of the St. Matthew Passion, using, for the first time, a special issue of the chorals in a Welsh translation. Prof. Walford Davies reported that a hymn and tune book for schools and colleges would be ready for issue in September, and the Council strongly recommended the adoption of a uniform pitch throughout Wales of C with 522 vibrations per second. Sir Henry Hadow gave an address on the aims of the Council, and also one on the ideals and work of the late Sir Henry Jones, who had much influence in the formation of the Council.

NEWCASTLE.—The Festival Choir, conducted by Dr. W. G. Whittaker, on July 9 collaborated at an open-air concert with the Musical Union orchestra and performed Holst's Turn back, O man, some Handel choruses, Rutland Boughton's Song of Liberty, and a Fantasia by S. Burke, St. Patrick's Prayer, on Irish hymn-tunes.

OXFORD.—In aid of Magdalen College Mission, an orchestra of local players, conducted by Mr. G. D. H. Warrack, on June 21 played Ravel's Ma Mère l'Oye and a movement from the G minor Bassoon Concerto of Saint-Saëns, with Mr. E. C. Sackville-West as pianist. Songs by undergraduates were heard with orchestral accompaniment. These included Mr. Warrack's The Shepherd and Tell me, my lute, Mr. Strickland-Constable's For Music, Mr. D. E. Cox's The passionate shepherd to his love, and Mr. P. A. Browne's Sturm mit seiner Donneschlagen.

RHONDDA.—The Cymric Orpheus Choir, of which the conductor is Mr. Tom Morgan, has accepted an invitation to tour the United States, and will sail on October 4.

SELBY.—On June 24 the first annual Festival of the Selby and District Association of Church Choirs was held in the Abbey, over four hundred singers taking part. Mr. Walter Hartley, musical director, was the organist. The Canticles were sung to Tours in F, and The heavens are telling was the anthem. A band played the Egmont Overture, and also Dr. Naylor's Fanfare for trumpets and drums.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

EDWARD GEORGE CROAGER, at Vancouver (B.C.), on June 30, of pneumonia, whilst examining for the Associated Board. Born in London in 1861, he was chorister, and pupil-assistant to Mr. F. A. W. Docker, at St. Andrew's, Wells Street; organist and choirmaster at the Church of the Annunciation, Quebec Street; St. Mark's, North Audley Street; St. Paul's, Avenue Road, N.W.; and, finally, Christ Church, Brondesbury. Also organist to the Handel Society and music-master at Clapham Common College, and St. Paul's School, Kensington. He conducted the Amersham Choral Society for eight years, and the West Hampstead Choral and Orchestral Society for fourteen years. He was a musician of lofty ideals and untiring energy in the cause of good musical art.

WILLIAM EDWARD GREEN, on June 24, at the age of seventy-nine. He had conducted the Portsmouth Temperance Choral Union since its inauguration in 1880, and both he and his choir had for many years occupied a prominent position in Portsmouth music and in the Festivals of the National Temperance Choral Union at the Crystal Palace.

CHAMBER MUSIC AT CALCUTTA

People who go as far afield as Calcutta expect to hear a not very high standard of music or performance. Yet their expectation would be agreeably reversed. Excellent work is being done by the Calcutta School of Music both in teaching, and giving those who have come from England and elsewhere the opportunity for hearing, the best. Success is due to the work of the director, M. Ph. Sandré, and the untiring efforts of the hon. secretary, Mrs. S. M. Everett. Only those who have lived in the East are aware of the difficulties which attend musical performances by reason of the effects of the climate on the instruments, and, incidentally, the performers themselves. All the more credit is, therefore, due to those who take part in such performances. At a series of six chamber concerts (one each month, commencing November 22, 1921), the following music was performed: String Quintet, Op. 39, in A, Glazounov; Pianoforte Quintet, Op. 44, Schumann; String Quartets, Op. 12, in E flat, Mendelssohn; Novelletten, Frank Bridge; in A, Borodin; Op. 76, in D, Haydn; Op. 135, in F, Beethoven; Pianoforte Quartets, Op. 25, in G minor, Brahms; Op. 15, in C minor, G. Fauré; two Violins and Pianoforte, Partita in G, J. S. Bach; Concerto in D minor, J. S. Bach; Pianoforte Trios, Phantasy in A minor, John Ireland; Op. 99, Schubert; Trio in one movement, Arnold Bax; Op. 70, No. 1, in D, Beethoven; Violin and Pianoforte Sonatas, Op. 100, in A, Brahms; in D, Mozart; in G minor, Tartini; in A minor, John Ireland; Violoncello Solos, Kol Nidrei, Max Bruch; Spinnerlied, D. Popper; Oriente, Arensky; Sonata in D, Locatelli; Pianoforte Fantasia in F minor, Chopin.

On March 17, 1922, the following were again performed in St. Paul's Cathedral, before a large and appreciative congregation: String Quartet in F, Op. 135, Beethoven; String Quintet in A, Op. 39, Glazounov.

MUSIC IN IRELAND

On June 22, the forty-eighth annual meeting of the Belfast Philharmonic Society was held, under the presidency of Mr. Harry M'Keag, High Sheriff. The report showed an increased financial deficit of £54 9s. 5d.—mainly due to the unfortunate state of affairs in the city. Mr. Godfrey Brown's services as conductor were highly praised. Sir Charles Butt, the able hon. secretary, is one of the surviving foundation members of 1874.

On June 26, Mr. Joseph O'Mara's Opera Company, now in its tenth year, opened a two weeks' engagement at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, with Mr. W. J. C. Hekker as conductor. The battle of the Four Courts necessitated closing down on June 30, but the season was announced to be resumed on July 17.

The new Irish opera, Truth, na maoile, by Mr. Geoffrey Molyneux Palmer, which was to have been performed on July 11, during Oireachtas Week, under the direction of Mr. Vincent O'Brien, has had to be postponed owing to the disturbed state of Dublin.

On July 10, a new organ was unveiled in Hamilton Road Presbyterian Church, Bangor (near Belfast), as a memorial to those of the congregation who had fallen in the Great War. The ceremony was performed by Mr. Justice Wilson, after which an interesting organ recital was given by Mr. Thomas H. Crowe.

The pageant of Alceste was a great success when performed by the Norwich Handel Society on July 13, under the direction of Mr. Ernest Harcourt. The principal parts were played by Miss Cletheroe (Calliope), Miss Winter (Glauco), Mr. Sidney Broad (Apollo and Charon), and Mr. D. C. Cletheroe (Helicanus). About sixty young dancers, trained by Mrs. E. J. Moore and Miss Bowles, took a graceful part.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

Since the middle of June the fashionable concerts at the Scheveningen Kurhaus have again been in full swing. As in the two previous years, Prof. Schnéevoigt has taken charge of the Hague Residency Orchestra at this seaside resort. This time he is assisted by a young Austrian conductor, Herr Ignaz Neumark, to whose task the popular concerts are assigned. The first concert saw the introduction of two soloists hitherto unknown to our musical public, namely, the violinist Mlle. Hedwig Fassbänder, from Zurich, and Miss Harriet van Emden, an American young lady of Dutch descent.

The railway strike having debarred Fräulein Grete Hinterhofer (by the way, one of the most promising young Austrian pianists) from presenting herself in time for the next concert, M. Charles van Isterdael was found ready to fill the gap. Despite the short preparation, he gave an excellent reading of Lalo's fine Violoncello Concerto. The symphonic poem, En Saga, by Sibelius, was heard on the same evening. The best of these concerts was that at which Carl Flesch played Brahms's Violin Concerto. It is needless to enlarge upon the performance of that magnificent artist.

Not much need be said of the other concerts, inasmuch as the scheme did not move outside the wonted trail. Prof. Schnéevoigt obviously keeping his trumps until the height of the season, which is being delayed by unfavourable weather conditions. These, on the other hand, prove to be very beneficial to the summer symphony concerts in the Concertgebouw at Amsterdam, the concerts there continuing to draw big audiences. M. Dopfer has this time devoted a series of six concerts to the works of the Romantic school of the last century. The scheme embodied various Symphonies by Schumann and Mendelssohn, which have come to suffer undeserved neglect.

The engagement of guest-conductors has this year been on a very limited scale, only one extra concert having been conducted by Prof. Abendroth, of Cologne, who chose Strauss's bombastic Alpen-Symphonie as his pièce de résistance. Quite a novel departure from the customary line of events has been a concert conducted by Herr Johann Strauss, the grandson of the famous 'Waltz-king' and nephew of the composer of Die Fledermaus. Needless to say the programme was of the Strauss genre, and the concert was so popular that it had to be repeated. For his annual summer concert in the Church at Naarden, on July 1, M. Schoonderbeek had chosen the Ode aan de schoonheid by Bernard Zweers and Wolf-Ferrari's La Vita Nuova. Together with the Concertgebouw orchestra and a fine choice of soloists (Mesdames Dora Zweers de Louw and Hermine Scholten, and Messrs. Jacques van Kempen, J. Ph. Caro, and Herman Weir), M. Schoonderbeek and his well-disciplined choir earned an undoubted success.

W. HARMANS.

BERLIN

Politics is an evil tune. Berlin musical life is under the spell of politics and of the general crisis, and it is impossible to speak of it as the expression of a special artistic will. Thanks to the 'valuta' only foreigners are able to pay the excessive fees for orchestral concerts. German artists, with Richard Strauss and Cläre Dux at their head, undertake concert tours abroad, to pocket the crowns of Scandinavia or the dollars of America, and Russian refugees cultivate their national music with more or less success. Three new concert-halls, called after Schwechter, Brahms, and Feurich, had to be opened to satisfy the demands of the concert-givers.

Musical interest is concentrated in the technical construction of musical instruments. A limited liability company has been started to finance an invention of a chemist and spiritualist of Bremen by the name of Phehaber, who claims by means of spiritual guidance to have at last discovered the long lost secret of the old Italian violin makers. Already in November, Nikisch's players had been provided with instruments improved upon by the new invention; leading artists are giving chamber concerts upon such instruments, and all agree that the quality of tone is quite as good as if the artists played upon their own valuable instruments! All this is done for the sake of art.

Berlin is at the present moment the city of the visiting conductor. Four of these Stabvirtuosen deserve special notice. Hugo Reichenberger, of Vienna, a man of strong personal impulses, introduced to Berlin a Symphony in D minor by Robert Heger, of Munich, a well-formed, honest composition with a leaning towards the classical. Franz von Hoesslin, of the Mannheim National Theatre, an exceedingly conscientious, nervous leader with a strongly personal note, conducted Beethoven's C minor Symphony and the Emperor Concerto, with Düscha Funke as pianist. Friedrich Quest, of Herford, made a very favourable impression. His reading of Bruckner's eighth Symphony showed him a master of the orchestral apparatus. Finally, Hermann Scherchen, now settled at Leipzig, and who is one of the supporters of the modern school, broke a lance in favour of Ernst Krenek, a pupil of Schreker. The Symphony, in one movement, is a boldly-conceived work of strongly creative impulses, and does not copy the futuristic stammering of the Schönberg school. There are elementary musical forces seeking after untrammelled development, yet this work, as well as Franz Petýrek's Variations for pianoforte on a Styrian melody—lasting half an hour—go to prove that the anarchism of our time has swallowed up two hopeful composers.

Altogether, the entire picture of Berlin musical life is one of haste and restlessness. With an excess of concerts, many of them superfluous, business is flourishing, and art, as has been pointed out before, is being cultivated in the smaller German towns only. The points of rest in all this hurry are the serial concerts of the various permanent orchestras, which live a real musical life. But even they are unable to settle down to systematic work and study. Conductors come and go. An exception is the orchestra of the State Opera, whose members have unanimously chosen as their head Wilhelm Furtwängler, a full-blooded musician, who looks upon music as an animate factor and not as a formula.

Considering the large number of first-class concert-halls of Berlin—among which the Philharmonic, the Oberlicht-Saal, Beethoven-Saal, the Nüntsterhaus, Bechstein-, Schwechter-, Brahms-, Blüthner-, Klindworth-Scharwenka-, Zeurich-, Sezessions-, and Hochschulsaal are all well-patronised—it seems superfluous to add any more. Yet new opera houses and concert-halls are constantly added to the old stock, the latest being the August Förster-Saal in the Keith-Strasse, i.e., Berlin W.W., built and owned by a firm of pianoforte makers of Löbau of Saxony. It was opened by Frederic Lamond, who played compositions by Reger, Beethoven, Brahms, Chopin, and Liszt with his accustomed mastery.

The abundance of music showered upon Berlin year by year, regardless of principle, school, or style, is bewildering and inartistic. Yet in spite of all this wealth of output the city by no means stands at the head of German musical life. Compositions that, owing to the support given to music by princes and principalities, were formerly produced in comparatively small towns, often find their way to Berlin months and years later. Music is decentralised in Germany, and that is well for art.

BEETHOVEN'S OP. III

As a birthday gift to the first great Beethoven Music Festival at Bonn since the war, the Drei Masken Verlag (Munich) has issued a facsimile edition of Beethoven's last Pianoforte Sonata, Op. III. It always fills one with feelings of awe when the eye rests on the handwriting of the master, but especially in the case of this last work, which he himself never heard with the outer ear.

RUDOLSTADT AND DONAUESCHINGEN

He who will drink at the font must wend his way to Munich, Rudolstadt, Meiningen, Halle, Dresden, Herford, Donaueschingen, and other towns too numerous to mention. The various music festivals given at such places have ever been powerful declarations of spiritual activity in the domain of art, comprising five and more days with an abundance of choice compositions, performers, and singers of intelligence and ability, gigantic orchestras with conductors of world fame—altogether a musico-cosmos of brilliant colour, which even a terrible war could not vanquish! It was a happy thought of the organizers of the Rudolstadt musical Festival to condense the matter as regards choice and order of compositions, and give an historical festival with the advantage of presenting the great masters in the midst of lesser lights. Bach and Handel did not occupy the centre, but formed glorious corner-stones for a group of Thuringian predecessors and contemporary composers. The first presentation comprised a 'Collegium musicum' at the court of Rudolstadt during the 18th century, giving an intimate picture of Rudolstadt court music with its eminent representative Th. Heinrich Erlebach in the foreground. In the second concert the Berlin Madrigal-chor under Prof. C. Thiel sang old and new madrigals and songs. The third concert was devoted to music by various members of the Bach family, and the final evening grasped as a ripe fruit of Saxon music Handel's powerful tragedy Saul, conducted by Ernst Wollong. Among the artists Natterer and the Natterer Quartet, Reinhard Lindenberg (solo violoncello), Volkman (organ), and Seiffert deserve special mention. While at Rudolstadt the programmes were mainly filled with treasures of the past, the Donaueschingen Musikfest was devoted to the younger generation.

When Rudolf Peters (pianoforte) together with Frau Möckelbosch (violin) submitted his Sonata, Op. 9 (Simrock, Berlin), he stepped at once into the midst of the musical life of Germany. Born in 1902, he played at the age of twelve at Bonn before the leading men of the first Mittelrheinische Musikfest some Sonatas of his own composition, and created no small sensation. Disdaining the applause of the world, his father gave him time for development, with the result that one of the first publishing firms of Germany, i.e., Simrock, has published five of his first seven opus numbers. The young composer follows consciously the lines laid down by Brahms and Reger. He speaks their language, and does not even hesitate to repeat their phrases in more or less modified form. At the same time a perusal of the above works convinces us that Peters has no need to borrow from others. With the skill of a master of counterpoint he leads a personal subject through the breadth and length of a sonata.

A NEW COMPOSER

At the fiftieth birthday of Paul Graener, Lotte Sauer (pianoforte) and Curt Liersch (violin), of the Dresden State Opera, played the composer's Sonata in C major (Bote & Bock, Berlin), with considerable success. Graener is the successor of Max Reger at the Conservatorium at Leipsic. He stands at the head of such who carry on the traditions of Richard Strauss, Puccini, and Debussy. His String Quartet, Op. 54, is forcing its way into the repertoire of the leading German quartets, and the Variations on a Russian Volkslied, Op. 55, achieved a great success at the tenth Gewandhauskonzert.

OLD TREASURES UNEARTHED

Amidst all that is new and beautiful or otherwise, old musical treasures are being steadily unearthed, proving what the world has lost through carelessness since music has become a fine art. At a recent concert of the Dresden Tonkünstlerverein three charming manuscript works were submitted. These were Compositions for a mechanical instrument by Mozart, arranged by the composer for flute, oboe, and viola, and discovered by Schwedler, a flute player, of Leipsic; a Sonata in G minor by Handel, for two violins and figured bass, arranged by Prof. Hans Sitt; and a Concertante by Haydn for oboe, violin, viola, violoncello, and pianoforte, discovered by Prof. E. Lewicky. It is hoped that these valuable finds may soon be published.

Dr. Erich H. Müller (Dresden A 20 Wasastrasse 14), who is preparing the publication of all the letters written and received by Gluck, requests those who are in possession of such documents, to either lend him the originals or to furnish him with faithful copies. F. ERCKMANN.

VIENNA

The past season, which has been the longest and the most strenuous in the city's history—from the view-point of the overworked critic—has at last come to an end. It has brought an innovation into the musical life of Vienna by giving prominence to foreign music and foreign musicians who, thanks to the 'valuta' misery of our State, were able to effect Vienna débuts at a cost which appears insignificant when calculated in foreign currency. In addition to the season of British music which was dealt with at length in the June issue of the Musical Times, hardly any of the nations failed to be represented in this season's Vienna concert repertoire. Critical consideration of such numerous events must therefore needs confine itself to a short and concentrated review.

INTERNATIONAL NOVELTIES

One of the most surprising experiences of the season has been the invasion of Darius Milhaud, of Paris, with a number of compositions originating from the circle of 'the Six.' All were novelties to Vienna, but those who had come to hear music of a 'revolutionary' sort, or manifestations of a strongly personal and novel style, were astonished to hear, for the most part, fluctuating harmonies—or disharmonies—recalling a mixture of absinthe and sugared water. Among the works by Milhaud, Poulenc, and Satie which formed the programme of this 'evening of contemporary French music,' the only really impressive numbers were the grotesquely humorous songs from La Bestiaire sur Cortège d'Orphée, by Poulenc. On the whole, the concert was an argument for the theory that the young Paris composers of to-day are still strongly under the influence of Debussy and his impressionist school—of the very Debussy whom the 'Six' had originally set out to conquer.

Debussy and his methods, after all, are not so dead as some of his 'conquerors' would like us to believe. We found strong traces of his style also in the work of Ernest Bloch, the Swiss-American composer whose Deux Poèmes for orchestra were conducted here by Oscar Fried, from Berlin, in a rather restless manner. As to Swiss composers in general, it appears that they have not as yet developed a musical school which is distinctly their own. Their music, or that portion of it which we had an opportunity for hearing this season, clearly reflects the international structure of that happy little country which permits the French national element to dwell peacefully side by side with the German population. Dr. Volkmar Andrae, who conducted his scholarly Symphony here with good success, also Friedrich Klose and Hans Huber (we heard the latter's Böcklin Symphony), in their compositions pay homage to the genius of a Brahms, Wagner, and Strauss, while Gustave Doret, who conducted a number of his orchestral and vocal compositions, adheres to the French impressionists, as also does Ch. Chaix in a spirited Scherzo, which both in rhythm and orchestral colour, and even more so by the character of its main theme, called up memories of Dukas's L'Apprenti sorcier.

Some of the young Italians, on the contrary, in their music show a growing tendency towards the intellectualism which had heretofore been considered a monopoly of the modern German composers. With most of the Italian symphonic composers, melody, once the very inheritance of their race, seems taboo, and their desire for original effects leads them into extremes which verge on the ludicrous. The Two Tragic Preludes by V. Rieti were indeed tragic in their utter lack of inspiration: they created an impression of the unspeakable monotony and, finally, of a joyous hilarity which was hardly intended by the composer. The same audible laughter accompanied the performance of a confused symphonic poem, The Death of the Moon, by Edoardo Granelli, who was personally present to conduct this second-hand conglomerate of Mascagni and Leoncavallo. Alfredo Casella's rhapsody Italia, a brilliant and effective, if not a deep composition, was the redeeming feature of that programme. Vividness of orchestral colour also distinguished the Ballata delle Gnomidi by Ottorino Respighi, an impressionistic piece which served as a grateful vehicle for Fritz Reiner's brilliant gifts as a conductor. An entirely novel effect was introduced by a composition by Paolo Litt which Mayo Wadler, a splendid American violinist, presented at one of his Vienna recitals. This 'esoteric poem for dance, violin, pianoforte, and triangle,' entitled La desse nue, marks a departure by allotting, as it were, to the body of the woman dancer the rôle of an instrument in the chamber music ensemble. The experiment, though of a somewhat daring nature, is decidedly interesting, and the problem was admirably solved in the performance of this difficult piece.

Scandinavia also was strongly represented in this season's list of novelties. Besides the Swedish Rhapsody by Hugo Alfvén and Hampstead Heath by Paul von Klenau, both of which have been considered in my previous letters, a Lapland Suite by Monrad-Johansen, which Birger Hammer, a remarkable Scandinavian pianist, played here for the first time, was interesting music of an exotically descriptive kind. On the whole, however, the Scandinavian novelties which we heard did not reveal a distinctly 'national' style. The same holds true, in an even greater degree, of a new String Quartet entitled October, by Jens L. Emborg, and of a Symphony named Frühlingserwachen by Rud Langgaard, who, in this work, utilises whole passages from Brahms and Wagner. National colour is again conspicuously absent from the present-day musical output of Holland, if we are permitted to draw such conclusions from the pianoforte compositions and songs by Willem Pijper, Mortelmans, Alfons Diepenbroek, and Per van Gilsen, which Berthe Sroen, a Dutch vocalist, and Evert Cornelis, the fine Dutch pianist, presented in their joint recital. Yugo-Slavia, but recently liberated to political freedom, is seemingly just now engaged upon finding its own musical idiom. A String Quartet and some pianoforte pieces by Anton Dobronic, while reflecting the strife and struggle of his Yugo-Slav native country, were interesting and happy attempts at subjecting national, melodic elements to modern contrapuntal treatment.

The Philharmonic Orchestra has closed its season to depart on a much-heralded three months' tour of South America, under its regular conductor, Felix Weingartner. The Orchestra's last novelty for this season, a Lytic Overture, by Georg Széll, a young Viennese composer-conductor, was a melodious if none too original work. Originality in a striking degree, however, characterised a Suite from the opera Das Nusch-Nuschi, by Paul Hindemith, who is one of the most interesting and daring among the young German composers. It still remains to record the performances of two novelties whose authors belong to the fair and, in this case, weaker sex. The compositions referred to are Three Dance Pieces by a Dutch lady named Henriette van Lennep and a composition termed Rural Mood Pictures from Java, by an Austrian composer resident in Java, who modestly conceals her true name behind the pseudonym 'Linda Bandara.' Whatever interest fell to the latter piece was due to the fact that it employed, probably for the first time in a European concert-hall, two original Javanese instruments called Gambang and Gendher.

ANCIENT WORKS

Vienna recently witnessed what was virtually the first performance in our time of Beethoven's original version of Fidelio, presented in concert form. Comparison between the first reading of this opera and the form which has been generally adopted for purposes of performance, not only disclosed the truly fantastic demands which the original version put upon the singers, but also fully justified all changes which Beethoven ultimately adopted. Nor could we, on hearing Cherubini's rarely-performed Requiem, approve the judgment of Beethoven, who is known to have considered it a masterpiece. To our modern taste it is a dull and dreary work, and, at best, of purely historical interest. Rubinstein's biblical opera, The Tower of Babel, and the 137th Psalm, by Hermann Goetz, which were performed here in quick succession recently, are also, if anything, examples illustrative of a taste which is no longer ours, and the Peri's pilgrimage for paradise which is the subject of Schumann's oratorio, Paradise and the Peri, is almost as vain as is this work's quest for public favour. In spite of its many beautiful passages, this Schumann work lacks the strength and dramatic vigour whereby to hold the hearer's interest for an entire evening.

An ancient work which was yet, in a sense, a novelty, and whose performance has been a unique experience, is an Overture in C minor by Anton Bruckner which now, twenty-six years after its composer's death, received its belated première. This Overture, written by Bruckner more than fifty years ago, was recently discovered among his manuscripts; it is not to be counted with his greatest or most significant compositions.

SOLOISTS

The seventieth birthday of Alfred Grünfeld has been the occasion of a Festival concert which resulted in an unprecedented ovation for this most typically Viennese and most beloved among our pianists. Grünfeld's finished and indescribably graceful interpretations of Schubert, and particularly of Johann Strauss's sparkling Waltzes, are still unsurpassed, and enable him to hold his own even against a new generation of more 'brainy' pianists who are truly products of our time. Three of these new pianists have created veritable sensations at Vienna this season: Alexander Borowsky (who is a Russian), Eduard Erdman, and Walter Gieseking, radical modernists all three, and all three equally remarkable each in his own individual way. Borowsky is, perhaps, the most intellectual and Erdman the most temperamental among the three, and Gieseking the most polished. Carl Flesch's mastery as a violinist is still unsurpassed: he excelled in his wonderfully transparent reading of Beethoven's Concerto, and even succeeded in lending a seeming importance to a new Violin Concerto, Op. 27, by Ernst von Dohnányi, which is rather a harmless affair. Great success fell also to Alma Mödödie, the Australian violinist, while Willy Burmester's violin playing again confirmed the impression that his art is chiefly a matter of cold technique. An event of towering importance was the farewell appearance of Prof. Karl Straube who, at St. Thomas's Church at Leipsic, holds the position of 'Cantor' once occupied by Johann Sebastian Bach, and whose organ recital again rallied a large and enthusiastic assembly composed of Vienna's most cultured musical element.

GUSTAV MAHLER

One of the outstanding features of this season, as of several of its predecessors, has been the growing popularity of Gustav Mahler's Symphonies. Once the subject of wild animosity and heated controversy, both on musical and racial grounds, they gradually began to elicit the interest of a rather limited literary circle, and only in recent years have become standard pieces and drawing cards on the programmes of all Austrian and German orchestral organizations. Whatever may be said of a certain obviousness of Mahler's melodies, and even of an undoubted element of 'intermittent hysteria,' so to speak, inherent in his works and reacting in his passionate climaxes rapidly followed by deeply depressive passages, the sincerity of Mahler's music is just as unquestionable as his wizardry of orchestral craftsmanship. His first, second, and third Symphonies were heard here recently in rapid succession, conducted respectively by Nils Grevillius, from Stockholm; Bruno Walter, the unrivalled apostle of Mahler's compositions; and Anton von Webern, a disciple of Arnold Schönberg.

PAUL BECHERT.

Answers to Correspondents

H. N. C. E.—(1) The Choir organ is not always enclosed—in fact, boxed Choirs are still the exception rather than the rule in England. There is something to be said for the unenclosed Choir. A boxed Choir often sounds too much like the Swell, and so a means of variety is lost. On the other hand, the Choir organ is so often called on for accompanying a Swell solo stop that some means of obtaining nuance is necessary. On the whole, our view is that the Choir should be boxed, care being taken to give it individuality in the matter of tone-colour. (2) Certainly the tremulant should not affect the whole organ. If it does, it will soon affect the congregation! We know of no English organ afflicted with a tremulant so wholesale and devastating.

CONTENTS

Page

British Players and Singers. VII.—The London String Quartet (with Portraits)	541
Studies on the Horn. No. 1.—The French Horn in England. By W. F. H. Blandford	544
Kornold, Strauss, and Others: 'Subjective' Criticism. By Paul Bechert	547
Occasional Notes	549
British Music Society: Annual Congress	552
The Musician's Bookshelf	553
New Music	554
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	557
London Concerts	558
Presentation to Sir Frederick Bridge	568
Opera in London	568
Orpheus at Warwick	569
Church and Organ Music	569
Royal College of Organists	569
Chamber Music for Amateurs	574
Letters to the Editor	574
Sixty Years Ago	579
Sharps and Flats	579
Royal Academy of Music: Centenary Celebrations	579
Trinity College of Music	581
The U. C. M. at Cambridge. By Arthur T. Froggatt	581
My Singing Lessons	582
Birmingham Repertory Theatre: A Mozart Season	583
Music in the Provinces	583
Obituary	584
Chamber Music at Calcutta	584
Music in Ireland	584
Musical Notes from Abroad	585
Answers to Correspondents	587

The God of Abraham praise. Anthem for Harvest or General
Use. By HAROLD E. WATTS 561

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. The London String Quartet.
2. O, bring to the Lord. Anthem for General Thanksgiving or Harvest. By HUGH BLAIR.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BACH, J. S.—"Bide with us." Welsh Version by REV. G. WILLIAMS. Edited by E. T. DAVIES. 2s.

BLAIR, HUGH.—"Oh, bring to the Lord." Anthem for General Thanksgiving or Harvest. (No. 1099, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

BLOW, DR. JOHN.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in F (transposed to G). Edited by S. H. NICHOLSON.
(No. 1071, Novello's Parish Choir Book.) 6d.

—"Let Thy hand be strengthened." Anthem composed for the Coronation of James II. Edited by S. H.
NICHOLSON. (No. 1097, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 3d.

—"Lift up your heads." Anthem for Six Voices.
Edited by S. H. NICHOLSON. (No. 1098, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 6d.

BOYCE, ETHEL.—"On May morning." Four-part
Song. (No. 1402, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.

—"Sweet Echo." Four-part Song. (No. 1403, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.

COULDERY, C. H.—"Serenata affettuoso." For the Pianoforte. 1s.

IVIMEY, J. W.—"Good things and evil." Anthem.
4d.

LÖHR, F. N.—"A Slumber Song." Part-Song, arranged for T. T. B. B. (No. 582, The Orpheus.) 4d.

PARRY, C. H. H.—"The Maiden." Song for Tenor. (English Lyrics, Set 9, No. 6.) 1s. 6d.

RATHBONE, G.—"Weep you no more." Four-part
Song. (No. 1401, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 362, contains the following music in both notations—"Sweet Echo," from the music to "Comus," by HENRY LAWES.
Minuet from "Samson," by HANDEL. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice
Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

Book 269. Folk-Songs for Schools. Collected by H. E. D. HAMMOND.
Arranged by CECIL J. SHARP. 1s.

THOMAS, REV. J. DOUGLAS.—"O for a heart to praise my God." Hymn and Tune. Card. 1d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2386. "O peaceful night." Trio for Female Voices. EDWARD GERMAN ... 2d.

WATTS, HAROLD E.—"The God of Abraham praise." Anthem for Harvest. (No. 954, The Musical Times.) 2d.

WILLERTON, ALBERT.—"Beyond the darkness."
Song. 2s.

WILLIAMS, C. LEE.—"Song of the Pedlar."
Arranged for S.S.A. (No. 475, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c.) 4d.

WILLIAMS, GERRARD.—"Her hair the net of golden wire." Part-Song for T. (or A.) T.B.B.
(No. 583, The Orpheus) 3d.

WILLIS-DIXON, A.—"Lullaby." Part-Song for S.A.T.B. 2d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

ANDREWS, MARK.—"The Highwayman." Ballad for Soprano Solo, Male Chorus, and Orchestra.
$1 (4s.).

LEMARE, EDWIN H.—Twelve Short Improvisations. For the Organ. In two Books. Book I.
$1 (4s.).

MATTHEWS, H. A.—"Consolation." For Violin,
'Cello, Harp, and Organ. $2.50 (10s.).

GLASTONBURY FESTIVAL

AUGUST 2—SEPTEMBER 2.

ALCESTIS: New Music-Drama by Rutland Boughton, the libretto being adapted from Gilbert Murray's version of Euripides.

August 26, 28, and 30, at 7.30.

August 29, 31, and September 2, at 2.30.

VENUS AND ADONIS: Mask by John Blow
(1648-1708), preceded by the Ballet from Gluck's Orpheus.
August 29, at 7.30; August 30, at 2.30; Sept. 1, at 7.30.

THE TRACHINIE (Sophocles), in English, or August 12, at 2.30 and 7.30.

LECTURES on matters relating to Greek Drama. On August 2 (Mr. Lowes Dickinson), August 9 (Mr. R. W.
Livingstone), August 16 (Mr. F. W. Cornford), August 23
Professor Gilbert Norwood), and September 1 (Mr. Bernard Shaw).

PRINCIPAL SINGERS AND PLAYERS:

ASTRA DESMOND, ARTHUR JORDAN, STEUART WILSON,
FREDERICK WOODHOUSE, CLIVE CAREY.

KATHLEEN DAVIS, GRETTE DON, COPLEY CLARK,
ARCHIBALD COOPER, SHEERMAN HAND.

JOSEPH EASTMAN, HUGH MELLOR.

PENELOPE SPENCER, CHRISTINA WALSHE.

JULIUS HARRISON, AND RUTLAND BOUGHTON.

Tickets (8s., 5s. 9d., and 3s., including tax) and full programme from the only Booking Office, Goodall's Library, Glastonbury.

JOHN RIDDING (Baritone), retired from Opera and disengaged for Oratorio, Orchestral Concerts, Ballads, &c.
244, Kennington Park Road, S.E.11.

ORGAN MUSIC FOR SALE. List free. Hollins
Lemare, Guilman, Batiste, Quef, Faulkes, &c. Lacey, 25
Kingsmead Road, S.W.2.

ORGANIST (many years' experience), can deputise
August 15—September 18. London or country. State terms
"Organist," 23, Stobart Mansions, Camberwell.

TWO—Manual and Pedal ORGAN for SALE.
by the Smith American Organ Company. Hand and foot blowers, and power can be attached. 20 Stops and Couplers.
Bargain for quick sale. Mere House, Gravelly Hill, Birmingham

No.
955

Price
6d.

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

SEPTEMBER 1, 1922

SPENCER PIANOS

GRANDS ▽ UPRIGHTS ▽ PLAYERS

Sole Agents

MURDOCH MURDOCH & CO

Piano & Player Piano Experts

461 & 463 OXFORD STREET

And at BRIGHTON · PORTSMOUTH · SOUTHAMPTON
POLKESTONE · DOVER · CHATHAM
BIRMINGHAM · CAMBRIDGE

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN

LTD.

PATENT THREE COMPARTMENT TOP LID FOR GRAND PIANOS

We have already fitted over

1000 PIANOS

by most of the leading makers with this New Device.

Kindly send for Booklet giving particulars.

CECILIAN HOUSE,
65, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON.
12, Park Row, LEEDS.

THE GREAT ENGLISH PIANO

—
ACTUAL
MANUFACTURERS.

Factories:
LEIGHTON ROAD,
KENTISH TOWN, LONDON.

—
Proprietors of the
JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'
TUNING CONNECTION.

THE INSTRUMENT DE LUXE OF THE PIANO WORLD

—
GRANDS,
PLAYER PIANOS,
UPRIGHT PIANOS,
DETACHABLE PARTS.

—
SHOWROOMS:
56-60, WIGMORE STREET,
W.1. LANGHAM 1418.

ESTEY ORGANS ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.

Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317.

Telegrams: "ESTEY OX. LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.

- 12 -

RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W. 1.

TWELVE NUMBERS NOW READY.

Historical Songs and Ballads of Ireland

ARRANGED BY

HERBERT HUGHES.

SILENT, O MOYLE
KITTY OF COLERAINE
THE DEAR LITTLE SHAMROCK
THE WIDOW MALONE
THE WIND THAT SHAKES THE BARLEY
RORY O'MORE

SHE IS FAR FROM THE LAND
THE LOW-BACKED CAR
GENERAL MUNROE
THE WINDING BANKS OF ERNE
THE BARD'S LEGACY
ERIN, THE TEAR AND THE SMILE

Price, 2s. each net.

METZLER TRIO SERIES

(Trios for All.)

FOR PIANO, VIOLIN, AND VIOLONCELLO. PRICE 1s. NET, EACH TRIO.

(Extra parts may be had for 1st violin, 2nd violin, 'cello, bass, and harmonium, price 4d. net, each.)

20 celebrated familiar numbers easily arranged for Cinemas, Restaurants, and for use in the HOME CIRCLE.

METZLER & CO. (1920), LTD.,

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

142, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON. W.C.2.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

SEPTEMBER 1 1922

MUSIC IN THE DOMINION:

A TALK WITH DR. VOGT

We have lately had the pleasure of spending a good deal of time in the company of Dr. A. S. Vogt, the principal of the Toronto Conservatoire of Music, and at one of our meetings we drew from him some particulars that will we think interest—and perhaps, surprise—readers, especially those who still think of the Dominion as a vast semi-civilised potentiality rather than as the great and progressive country it is.

Dr. Vogt was at first diffident about being interviewed, saying that he had occupied a considerable amount of space in the Musical Times of November and December, 1912. We pointed out, however, that a good deal has happened since 1912. Thousands of native-born Canadians saw England for the first time during the war, and thousands of English people have since made the Dominion their home. The domestic, social, and Imperial ties between the two countries are thus stronger than ever. Moreover, during the past few years musicians on this side have been constantly reminded of the great development of musical activities in Canada, and have been struck by the fact that these activities tend by their nature to become yet another powerful link between the two nations.

Dr. Vogt agreed, and was emphatic in his view that outside these shores there is no finer or more sympathetic field for British music and musicians than Canada. He went on to say that at present Canada's wide general interest in music showed itself chiefly in the development of large teaching centres: 'These big schools spring up in response to an unmistakable demand. Canadians are able and willing to pay for the best in this way, and the schools are staffed by teachers of the first rank. Many of these are native-born Canadians who have studied here in England or on the Continent. Of late years Canada has attracted many leading musicians from the British Isles, the United States, and—instrumentalists especially—from the Continent.'

We asked Dr. Vogt how Canada fared in the way of bogus colleges, with their caps and gowns and lavish diplomas?

'I should say we are less hampered than you are,' he replied. 'One or two concerns of the kind are making a bit of a push, but I fancy our public as a whole is less liable to be taken in than yours appears to be. But we have the advantage, having got a bit in front with good sound local examinations. The syllabuses and results are of a very high standard; the pianoforte playing is of special excellence, as is the case in the United States, by the way. In fact, I have an impression that in the practical and technical departments of music Canada and the States are if anything a trifle ahead of England. This is not surprising, for the tendency in a new country is naturally towards efficiency in such directions rather than in creative work. The latter is the last thing to be developed, and in the matter of composition and the teaching of various branches of theory you have the pull, decidedly.'

We asked the Doctor for some particulars of the Toronto Conservatoire, saying we had read in the American supplement to Grove that it was the largest and best equipped in the Dominion, and one of the foremost in America.

'Well,' he replied, 'it isn't for me to contradict that! As to its being the largest, I don't want to lay too much stress on that point, because English folk are apt to think that size counts for too much on our side of the Atlantic. Still, the Toronto Conservatoire must plead guilty to a roll of about five thousand students. Three thousand of these are taught under our own roof, and the remainder are attached to branch establishments. But I hasten to explain that one reason for our large numbers is to be found in the fact that we have preparatory departments, and so are able to undertake the oversight of very young pupils. This is not the case with your teaching institutions, I believe. Our professors at Toronto number one hundred and twenty five. The importance of the Conservatoire was recognised by the Government of Ontario a couple of seasons ago, when in accordance with the terms of an Act of Parliament, the institution was acquired by the State University. It is now directed by the Faculty of Music of the University, which consists of Dr. Albert Ham, Dr. F. A. Mouré, Mr. H. A. Fricker, and Dr. Healey Willan (three of these being from the Old Country, as you know), with myself as Dean.'

'What other large teaching institutions have you?'

'Two important schools are the Canadian Academy of Music and the Hambourg Conservatoire. The former has for principal Mr. Frank A. Welsman, and the latter is directed by Boris and Jan Hambourg. Both institutions are very active and successful.'

Bearing in mind some recent remarks of Mr. Tertius Noble on the development of choral music in Canada, we asked Dr. Vogt for his views.

'Choral music,' he replied, 'is a branch of the art in which Canadians seem to excel. The interest is deep and general, and wherever there is a fine choir, one meets with what I may call North of England enthusiasm. This strong bent towards choralism is of course the result of British influence. The English are a race of choralists, and wherever they go they carry the tradition just as they carry their games. I have a very high opinion of Canadian voices. The sopranos are especially good, the normal tone being remarkable for clarity and brightness. The men's voices have a quality and resonance that I have heard equalled nowhere but in England.'

He went on to speak of the Mendelssohn Choir, of which he was the founder and first conductor. It was pleasant to hear his generous praise of his successor: 'Fricker has done splendid work with it. The Choir's recent tour through the States was a brilliant success. Here is a brochure containing the opinions of leading critics. You had better extract a few. I am sure Fricker's old friends will be delighted to see them, and anyway your readers will be interested in the fact that so very English a form of music-making has made such an impression in America.'

Here are a few quotations from the record of the tour:

I may perhaps speak with authority, for I lived in the North of England for fifteen years, and during that period adjudicated at all the great festivals of the North. Under such conditions I know what 'standard' is in the finest choral singing. As far as I can see, there is no finer chorus than the Toronto Mendelssohn Choir anywhere.—T. TERTIUS NORLE.

If the extent to which choral music is practised in a community is an evidence of that community's musical culture (and that conviction has been uttered by great musicians and accepted as truth by many critical observers) then the metropolis of the United States ought to stand abashed in the presence of Toronto, Canada.—H. E. KREMBIEL.

Such singing has never been offered by any New York choir—not, at any rate, in forty years. . . . Palestrina's Surge Illuminare and Bach's Sing ye to the Lord. . . . thrilling music, thrillingly sung.—HENRY T. FINCK.

In Mr. Fricker the organization possesses a director quite able to preserve all that his predecessor developed and to add something of his own. . . . It is a delight to hear a chorus of such fresh, vigorous, unworn voices, singing with such a range of dynamics, such a finesse in nuance, such a keen appreciation of musical character, and such military precision.—W. J. HENDERSON.

Immense power without a suspicion of stridency. . . . a pianissimo that is nearly soundless, yet has the vibrancy and still immensity of an organ pedal.—DEEMS TAYLOR.

The listener sits in a maze of admiration.—FRANK H. WARREN.

Columns could be filled with such praise from American critics, mingled with their regrets that New York has no organization fit to compare with the Toronto Choir.

We questioned the Doctor as to the inception of the Choir.

'I founded it in 1894,' he replied. 'We mustered about a hundred and fifty voices to begin with, and we aimed almost entirely at a cappella singing.'

'Why Mendelssohn?' we asked.

'I may reply, like Alice, "Why not?" he said. 'At that time Mendelssohn was very much the fashion, and we used not only his name, but his music as well, during a good many years including one of his works in every programme. From the start the Choir has been splendidly supported in every direction. Apropos of choirs, I must mention that the men's chorus generally acknowledged by the leading American critics to be the finest in the Continent is the Winnipeg Male-Voice Choir.

This body is conducted by Mr. Hugh Ross, a Royal College of Music student who came here about a year ago on the recommendation of Sir Hugh Allen. He is more than maintaining the already high prestige of the choir. Last year they made a brilliantly successful tour in the States, and plans are in hand for a tour which will take place this winter, and will include New York, Boston, Toronto, Detroit, and Philadelphia.'

'What of the competition festival movement?'

'It is developing in a remarkable way, especially in the Western provinces. The festivals at Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta have been carried out on a scale almost equal to the largest of your Northern festivals. Winnipeg this year—its fourth season—had a programme of five full days—morning, afternoon, and evening sessions. Saskatchewan and Alberta, though older meetings, are not quite so large, but are very flourishing. The Regina (Saskatchewan) meeting filled four days and Lethbridge (Alberta) three.'

'Are the schemes comprehensive?'

'Very. We have all sorts of solos and ensemble classes, vocal and instrumental, including in some cases brass bands. Altogether this competitive movement is very much alive, and its possibilities are immense.'

The Doctor went on to speak with enthusiasm of the high repute in which present-day British composers are held in Canada. 'The Imperial spirit is very strong,' he said, 'and we are proud and delighted at the high status of British music to-day through the works of such men as Elgar, Bantock, Delius, Holst, Goossens, Bax, Ireland, Vaughan Williams, and others.'

Dr. Vogt had some interesting things to say in regard to choralism. Comparing our English choirs with those on the Continent, he said he could not avoid the conviction that even in our finest organizations there was apt to be some weakness on the interpretative side.

'So far as beauty of tone, ensemble, and discipline are concerned,' he said, 'English choirs need fear comparison with none. But isn't there a tendency to regard those virtues as the end, instead of the means? I remember how staggered many of you were at the International Festival held at Paris in 1912, when the prizes for the chief mixed-voice and male-voice contests were won by choirs which, owing to shortcomings in the matter of tone—and even of intonation—would have been out of the hunt at any big choral competitions in England. Yet the verdicts were arrived at by men of such standing in the musical world that, even when allowance is made for the widely different choral traditions of the two sides of the Channel, they could hardly be questioned. After this Paris Festival I spent some months in Europe, hearing the best choirs, and the conclusion that forced itself on me is one that I hope to be able to express without giving offence to any of my English friends. I felt, and still feel, that as a rule the conductors of the chief choral bodies on the Continent are better all-round musicians than the conductors of English choirs of the same standing. Notice that I say "as a rule": I am not forgetting some brilliant exceptions in this country. But my experience has been that the prominent Continental choral conductor is almost invariably experienced in the direction of orchestral and operatic performances as well, whereas too many of your best choral conductors are choral conductors and little else. It seems to me that there can be no question as to the gain in a choir's musicianship and interpretation when it is conducted by a fine all-rounder rather than by a fine specialist. I believe this gain is felt largely, too, in the tackling of extremely difficult music. For example, during my wanderings on the Continent, I had the privilege of being present at a rehearsal of the Prague Société des Instituteurs-Chanteurs, a male-voice choir that made a great impression at Paris by its vivid singing and amazing variety of tone-colour. The personnel of this body is of a special nature, it is true. The members all belong to the teaching profession, and every one is a good musician. But none the less I felt both at Paris and at Prague that much of their success was due to the musicianship of their conductor. As to the musicianship of the singers, let this little bit of evidence be given: at the rehearsal which I attended, the choir sang together for the first time Reger's To the Sea. The copies had been distributed at the previous rehearsal, and the members had been expected to prepare it individually. They sailed through it together for the first time in a way that suggested a performance rather than a try-over! Now, this same piece proved too hard a nut for some of the best choirs at the Blackpool Festival that year, and I remember the smallness of the entry for this particular class was ascribed to the formidable nature of Reger's music. Yet on the score of mere beauty of tone the Prague singers could not approach the choirs I heard at Blackpool. I am sure the lack in England is reading ability and all-round musicianship. You have many men who are choir trainers by the grace of God, so to speak—men with an instinct for tonal beauty and a genius for leadership. But these qualities can never make up for deficiencies in the matter of wide musical training and experience. Tell your readers that these comments come not from a carping critic, but from a warm admirer of English choralism.

We asked Dr. Vogt as to his musical experiences in England during his present visit.

'I've had very few,' he replied, 'owing to my stay here being in the "off" season. But I had the good fortune to be present at the opening concert of the "Promenade" season, and I must say that I congratulate the old country on the fact that, despite tempting offers from our side of the water, she still retains the services of Sir Henry Wood. I am convinced that in the matter of beautiful tone his orchestra can hold its own with the intensively-rehearsed and generously-subsidized orchestras in the States. The fact that Sir Henry has carried on through all the difficulties of the past eight years is a tribute to his personality no less than to his musicianship. I hope London is as proud of him as she ought to be.'

We are glad to be able to assure the Doctor that she is.

SIGNIFICANT CHORDS

BY ALEXANDER BRENT SMITH

Ernest Pontifex, the misfortunate hero of 'The Way of all Flesh,' once remarked that he did not care for Beethoven, whereupon he was put in his proper place by Miss Skinner, who confessed that, for herself, one simple chord of Beethoven was happiness.

Commenting upon this passage, Mr. Ernest Newman says:

'Miss Skinner was to be envied. The rest of us would give something to be able to find complete happiness in a simple chord of Beethoven—to say nothing of Scriabin or Schönberg.'

Of course Miss Skinner was absurd and gushingly sentimental, yet, in an entirely different sense, there are a few chords for which one lives. Generally these significant chords depend upon their surroundings, but sometimes they stand like the Sphinx—isolated, obvious, yet inscrutable. The most significant chord that has ever been struck has been heard only once, and then by a poet whose testimony to its power must stand for all time. She says that it sounded like a great Amen. I have studied a whole library of musical text-books, not excepting Prout's, and have failed to find any single chord which could be said to sound like an Amen, be it ever so great or ever so small.

But if this chord be lost there are fortunately others still left for us to listen to with wonder. There are two in particular which always excite me, though I know that they are coming. And the inexplicable thing about them is that though I know that they are coming, and what they will sound like when they do come, yet I am always a little surprised when they actually arrive. This unexpectedness is very similar to the experience of reading lamp-signals by night, when at each re-start of the distant lamp the light appears to come from a slightly different position, although you know that you have kept your gaze rigidly upon the same spot during that brief interval of darkness.

To return to these two chords. The first occurs in Wesley's Wilderness. It is the chord which ushers in 'the redeemed of the Lord':

Ex. 1. ALTO.

The un-clean shall not pass o-ver it,

SOPRANO.

But the re-deem-ed shall . . walk there.

Notice what has gone before: the tenors and basses have sung, 'And a highway shall be there; it shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it.' Then, a chord of the dominant seventh of B major in an inversion. That is all, but it opens new worlds for the redeemed to walk in. The other isolated chord which of itself can lead us into a new world, occurs in the St. Matthew Passion. It is a world very different from that which Wesley's chord reveals. It precedes the words, 'And they were exceeding sorrowful':

(No. 15. Edition by ELGAR and ATKINS.)

Ex. 2.

be-tray . . Me. And they were ex-ceed-ing sor-row-ful.

Immediately before it is a slowly-resolving cadence in C minor. Then this shudderingly cold chord of B flat minor, unaided by the help of the natural horror of cor Anglais or bass-clarinets, takes us at one step into a musical antarctic emotion. These powerful isolated chords are very few, and do depend of course upon the context; but I firmly believe that if the first-mentioned chord were played in a room full of musical folk, ninety-nine per cent. would know whence it came.

There are many chords, simple in themselves, which mar or make the phrases in which they occur. Perhaps the ugliest chord ever penned is the chord which disfigures the word 'Saints' in the hymn, There is a land of pure delight, where Saints immortal reign (No. 536, A. & M.). This hymn labours under many disadvantages. In the first place it is called 'Beulah,' in the second the words are not exactly crystalline in their clarity, as the lines

O, could we make our doubts remove,
Those gloomy doubts that rise, so eloquently testify. And then, to crown all, this rakish chord is wedded to the word 'Saints'—oh, Dr. Garrett and Isaac Watts, D.D.!

Mendelssohn has left innumerable specimens of amiable harmonic atrocities. No one can really enjoy the so-called Funeral March from the Songs without Words, because he knows that some hideous chord like a tailor's waxen dummy with an imbecile smile will confront him before he reaches the longed-for end.

Of the chords that make the passages in which they occur there are many notable examples. There is one in the Introduction to Act 3 of Die Meistersinger, a few bars before the curtain rises:

Ex. 3.

There is another in Verdi's Otello; it is easily found at the very end of the opera at the word bacio:

Ex. 4.

un al-tro ba-cio

These two chords, by their position in the phrase, plumb the opposite extremes of human emotion, the one being the conquest of self, the other the climax of passion. And just as it seems impossible to make the first-mentioned chord too passionless, so it seems impossible to make the second too sweet and luxurious.

It was thus, then, that Wagner and Verdi used harmony—to reinforce by intellect what was there by inspiration. In doing so they proved that harmony so used never grows stale, because it is the complement of a deeply-felt emotion; and from this we may draw the conclusion that harmony which is born of a desire to astonish quickly fails in its purpose, and soon falls away into the featureless desert of the commonplace.

MEDTNER
BY ALFRED J. SWAN

It is by a roundabout process that Russia is coming to her classical tradition in music. She passed through the revolutionary period some fifty years ago, when her music was almost in its 'teens, and when Borodin and Moussorgsky, under the influence of Balakirev, went their rampant way independently, and in open disregard of established laws. As a set-back to the revolutionary spirit came Rimsky-Korsakov and Tchaikovsky, the one a nationalist, the other a pure-blooded romantic. And only the next generation has lavishly provided the classical tradition that was lacking. Is it not a wonderful phenomenon that the Russian-Netherlander, Tanéïev, should be a contemporary of ours? (He died in 1915.) Glazounov, the last of the nationalists, who has all the massiveness and coherence of a classic, is alive even at this day. Scriabin himself, by nature so fitted to become an impressionist, has all through his stupendous harmonic evolution strictly adhered to the classical form. The impressionist movement of Western Europe coincided with the rise of classicism in Russia, and has therefore had little or no effect on the Russian school. Neoclassicism, on the contrary, found a rich and fruitful soil. This movement—which, though classic in form and character, is tinctured with all the richness and exuberance of modern harmony—has deeply affected the progress of Russian music, drawing in its trail a number of greater and lesser talents. One of the most impressive of these is Nicolai Medtner.

Few biographical facts are generally known about him. Born in 1879 of a family long settled at Moscow, he studied the pianoforte at the Moscow Conservatoire under Safonov, and obtained the gold medal. He then toured for some years, giving concerts in Russia and Germany; but composition so much attracted him that he relinquished his career as a pianist, appearing henceforth chiefly as an interpreter of his own music. Since about 1910 he has been professor of the pianoforte at his Alma Mater.

There are certain outstanding qualities in Medtner that combine to make him one of the most striking figures in modern music. His style is firm, rigid, somewhat uncouth; his thought concentrated (note his favourite epithet concentrando), severe, ascetic, graphical, rather than steeped in colour, yet of haunting beauty and transparent purity; his rhythm invariably striking and characteristic. He will not swerve an inch from his chosen path; he is possessed of the ardour of a musical fanatic who sees his goal and strives for it regardless of all side-issues. The influences that have been at play in the formation of this fine artist can be traced easily. Schumann is undoubtedly Medtner's spiritual ancestor, though his severity and austerity hail from Brahms. Yet Medtner's own personality is so powerful that we see few actual points of likeness.

Medtner is not an orchestrator, and the larger concerted forms of composition are not his field. His work is for the pianoforte, pianoforte and violin, and for the voice. In his style there has so far been a slow and steady progress towards a consummate individuality, still greater refinement, penetration, and depth in every advancing opus, although we have the typical Medtner so far back as the songs of Op. 3 and Op. 6. With Op. 8 begins the series of Fairy Tales—a favourite term with Medtner. What a world of passion, epic force, fantastic beauty, and ardour do these fairy-tales reveal! What endless rhythmical and contrapuntal combinations! Thus the restless Op. 8, No. 2, with its rhythmically independent right and left hands:

Ex. 1. Op. 8, No. 2.

&c.

B

the fiercely syncopated Op. 9, No. 1, or the doggedly determined Op. 14, No. 2:

Ex. 2. Allegro marciale. Op. 14, No. 2.

&c.

In Op. 11 Medtner has combined three one-movement Sonatas, of which the joyous C major is already full of original accented figures, so typical of the later Medtner:

Ex. 3. Op. 11, No. 3.

&c.

With Op. 12 starts the series of Medtner's mature songs—songs that have no parallel in modern music for sheer depth and beauty, directness of appeal, and yet a uniform high level of taste and feeling. Pianist and singer are here of like importance, and the songs are as miniature duos with the melody interwoven in the two instruments, human and tempered. Op. 12 comprises three songs from Heine, the third being the deeply pathetic Bergstimme. The next opus (13) consists of two songs from the Russian poets, Pushkin and Byély. The latter is the Epitaph, noble, powerful, full of subdued passion, bursting out at the end with a piercing cry of pain. Op. 15 is twelve songs from Goethe, every one a masterpiece, full of novel rhythmical effects and great melodic originality. It contains the two songs, Meeresstille and Glückliche Fahrt, so frequently set by famous masters, yet equally if not more beautiful in Medtner's treatment. Op. 18 is again a series of Goethe songs, and Op. 19 is a set from Nietzsche. These songs mark fresh developments in Medtner's style of writing. He is becoming more lucid, transparent, and harmonious. Thus the perfectly simple and touching melodies of Mignon and Altes Mütterlein:

Ex. 4. 'Mignon,' Op. 18, No. 4.

Nur wer die Sehn - sucht kennt Weiss was ich lei - de! Al - lein und ab - ge - trennt von al - le Freu - - de &c.

Ex. 5. 'Altes Mutterlein,' Op. 19, No. 2.

In Son - nen glut, in Mit - tags - ruh liegt stumm das Hos - pi - tal . . &c.

The mood of despair is, however, not wanting, as in Versweifung or Das Veilchen, and it is not till the next series of songs, Op. 24, that Medtner has found his new self. He has now definitely turned to the Russian poets, and sets to music eight exquisite lyrics of Tutchew and Foeth. In these we hear for the first time distant echoes of Russian folk-song :

Ex. 6. Op. 24, No. 2.

Their garb is simple, yet of a depth and richness that are almost incredible in combination with such simplicity. Not less remarkable are the Pushkin songs, Op. 29. How beautifully and fittingly is the atmosphere of those 'Verses written at night during insomnia' reproduced in Medtner's music!

Medtner has already bestowed on us over sixty songs. Whether he writes more or not, his claim to be counted as one of the great song-writers is undeniable. He is the last of a great line—Schumann, Brahms, Wolf, Reger. He has frequently been called the Russian Brahms, and in regard to his work as a song writer the comparison is just. In many respects the two are wide apart, but there is about their songs the same distinction and rare nobility.

The meagre violin literature has been enriched by Medtner's Nocturnes (Op. 16) and Sonata (Op. 21). What a wealth of pure and sublime inspiration is poured forth in these works! The sweetly flowing first movement of the Sonata—a Canzona—the wild, exotic danza with its endless rhythmical ingenuity, and the broad epic dihyramb—again distinctly reminiscent of a folk-ballad sung by a blind minstrel—these three parts make the Violin Sonata a work of supreme value. Equally fine are the three Nocturnes, especially the grand No. 3.

Medtner himself is a unique pianist, so it is only natural that the bulk of his compositions should be for the pianoforte. After the earlier Fairy-tales mentioned above, come those of Op. 20 and the Novelles, Op. 17. There is all of Schumann's intense passion in the former, a series of superb climaxes and a fierce, almost unearthly, power; while the latter (especially No. 2) are remarkable chiefly for their rhythm. Then comes the Sonata, Op. 22, in G minor—a strange coincidence with Schumann, and by no means only outwardly. It is in one rapid movement, with a slower intermezzo. The lyrical fragments, Op. 23, are stern and grave, singularly colourless pieces, like etchings. The Sonatas of Op. 25 are rather too drawn out, and fail to speak a new word. The Fairy-tales, Op. 26, are, however, worthy preludes to the magnificent Sonata-Ballade, Op. 27, with its radiant first theme, one of Medtner's rare smiles :

Ex. 7. Op. 27.

Later pianoforte works of Medtner—another Sonata in A minor, Op. 30, and eight Fairy-tales, Opp. 34 and 35, were first heard at the time when the rapid progress of momentous events in Russia obscured the musical horizon. But as if to emphasise his aloofness from anything but his chosen path, Medtner intensified a hundredfold his concentrated interest in his own inward development. His creative powers have taken complete possession of his soul. The more difficult life's outward conditions became, the nearer famine and privation approached, the firmer was Medtner's resolution to proceed as if nothing had happened in his Fatherland. Innumerable difficulties lay in his way. He was isolated from the progress of music and art in the world; the very necessity for writing beautiful music seemed doubtful. In the midst of all this gloom he fell dangerously ill on the eve of the first performance of his new Pianoforte Concerto. For months he lingered between life and death—his one thought being the delivery of his last message to the public. But he did not die. Weak and tottering, in a state of feverish excitement he appeared in the concert-hall, an extra concert having been announced especially for him. And he played what is considered his sublimest work. The impression on those present was profound.

Since this article was written, Medtner has left Moscow. He is now living and working at Berlin.

MUSIC AT THE OBERAMMERGAU PASSION PLAY

The Passion Play of the villagers of Oberammergau in South Bavaria this summer again, after a lapse of twelve years, drew numbers of the devout of many nationalities to that agreeable spot on the fringe of the Alps. Such musical persons as may make this journey appear often to be unprepared for the large part that music takes in the Passion Play; and their surprise at this large part (for the music usually gets but the barest mention in travellers' eloquent tales of the spectacle) is only surpassed by their surprise at the sort of music it is.

The mediæval institution of the Passion Play owes its survival at Oberammergau first to the villagers' tenacious conservatism, and secondly to their judicious tempering of conservatism. In the course of centuries they have just so far modified their cherished institution as to enable it to live on successfully in a changed world. Thus, whereas in olden days the hardy peasant spectators witnessed the Play in the open churchyard, when Messrs. Thomas Cook & Sons started introducing myriads of pilgrims of the comfortable classes from England and New England a weatherproof auditorium was called for, and conservatism yielded to the point of allowing the construction of a roofed theatre wherein four thousand spectators can sit dry, though it rain all day on the players (the stage is open to the sky). But well before the advent of Messrs. Cook the conservative Ammergauers had had unwillingly to relinquish primitive elements of the Play. The pilgrim in 1922 may not count on a single shred of surviving mediævalism; the uncouth, simple-hearted grotesqueness of the sacred plays of the Middle Ages, as we to-day fondly imagine them, has been swept away. Quaint mediævalism lingered late in the mountain Passion Plays until, sometime towards the end of the 18th century, the quaintness was altogether out of tune with the Church authorities, and at one stroke all the Passion Plays were abolished. Tenacious Ammergau retained its Play only at the cost of radical reform. The text had to become unexceptionably evangelical; hence, after the restoration, the text of Weiss (1811). The present text (Daisenberger's) dates from 1860; but neither 1811 nor 1860 unfortunately represents at all a 'good' period in religious art.

Conservatism's rout, during the prohibition period (1770-1811), meant a chance for a wholly new music at the resumption. What the old music was no one to-day appears to conceive at all clearly. The Ammergau choirmaster and organist, amiable Herr Rochus Dedler (1779-1822), composed the new music, and this is, with trifling modifications, what we hear to-day. Whatever the praise that cannot be allowed to Dedler, at least he belonged to the place, and that, in the eyes of Ammergau, is three-fourths of virtue. He is not a Bach, not a Wagner, but that the Passion music should be by an Ammergauer is the main thing. Curious is this truculent exclusiveness, which does even in the 20th century allow the Passion Play to be a thing of that particular mountain valley and of nowhere else. Nothing at Ammergau was quite so touching as the scene of the village fathers fiercely rejecting the blandishments of a firm of American 'movies.' You may be unable to admire without reserve the Play itself, and still be won over to respect thoroughly the pretty little spirited local patriotism which preserves it all, in a vulgar age, from being a mere calculated lure for trippers. This is the excuse for the music. If the Passion Play were 'run' as an attractive international festival a dozen better substitutes could be found for Dedler's early 19th century music. But no doubt Ammergau will cling through thick and thin to this music, which after all harmonizes with a good deal of the other artistic elements of the representation—so German, so early 19th century.

At the Passion Play we see enacted the Entry into Jerusalem, Gethsemane, the Betrayal, the Trial, the Crucifixion, the Resurrection, the Ascension. The sublime story is, in contrast with the conciseness of the evangelists, here spread over eight hours of performance. The large stage beguiles the eye with its background of Bavarian hills, pine strewn, and shifting in colour as the hours pass. The moments of actual drama are comparatively brief. The music holds the field for long stretches. As a prelude to each dramatic scene a chorus (men and women) of forty ceremoniously steps from the wings and ranges itself in a single rank facing the audience. Its duty is to instruct us, by speech and song, in the episode we are about to see, and in particular to draw Old Testament analogies. These analogies are further brought home by tableaux vivants, very elaborate and the source of local pride, which are displayed on the inset stage, the musical commentary proceeding the while. The music is for chorus and soli (S.A.T.B.). The principal soloist is the bass, a sort of χορωγός. There is an orchestra of about fifty.

This orchestra gives the unprepared listener his biggest and only musical surprise of the day, with its Overture opening:

From this premise the rest follows naturally—a complete collection of all the little commonplaces of late 18th century musical idiom! Haydn, Gluck, and Mozart were no doubt the composers most respected by the Ammergau organist of a hundred and ten years ago, and he humbly raised his molehill on the pattern of those mountains. His humility is almost disarming, and we do not forget that he was writing for unskilled executants and for performance in the open air. In the ordinary way it is absurd to ask for any richness of content in open-air music, and if the performance were of, say, some classical subject, not intimately touching, we might feel plenty of toleration for pastoral music so mildly rococo and not offensive. But this Tragedy is not an Orpheus, an Iphigenia. It is not to be regarded with the detachment that might allow us to find in Dedler's poverty-stricken art a little historical interest, and the gap between the powerfully stirring effect of the stage-spectacle and this humble but persistently long-winded music is a drain on sympathy and patience. Above all the onlooker who is at all musical cannot get Bach out of his head, and indeed to the point of feeling that the best things in the Passion Play—the large sincerity, serenity, and pathos of the stage action—have been a million times more satisfyingly expressed by Bach in terms of music. Once come to know the St. Matthew Passion and Oberammergau is no place for you. This poor Dedler dared to attempt much what Bach did in interpolating meditative arias at crucial points of the sublime drama. How exquisitely the tension of pain is thus relieved in Bach's Passion Play no reader here needs telling. At Ammergau the musical platitude of these meditations (comparable to a very old-fashioned type of Three Choirs' Festival oratorio on some Old Testament subject) sets one saying, 'No more Ammergau for me—the Lent Passion Play at St. Paul's or St. Anne's, Soho, is good enough!' The close of it all is the most disconcerting. The infinite tenderness, the sweet, grave relaxation of Bach's chorus 'In tears of grief, dear Lord, we leave Thee,' must surely for all of us be the one conceivable right closing mood. Oberammergau ends on a chirpy little Hallelujah Chorus of the flattest inadequacy.

There was a competent orchestra this year at Oberammergau. The choir sustained all day an unflagging dignity. The tenor soloists were rather trying. There was an extremely fine young bass, Guido Diemer, on whom fell much of the work. C.

THE NURSERIES OF ENGLISH SONG—II.

BY FRANK KIDSON

By 1745 the fame of the London pleasure-gardens—Vauxhall, Marylebone, and Ranelagh—as musical centres, apart from their places in the fashionable world, had been firmly established. Vocal music became an item in the instrumental programmes, and, as stated in my previous article,* the best and most popular talent was engaged. This particular talent was quite ready to accept Vauxhall engagements, for there was very little opening for it elsewhere. Concerts, apart from the gardens, were not everyday functions as at present, and the theatre gave rather limited scope for professional guinea-earning.

In this matter we of to-day have to thank those bewigged proprietors of the garden leases for the encouragement they gave to English music. If we eliminate from the published music of the time all that had its first hearing at the public gardens, there would be very little left to show what English music was like in the 18th century.

Vauxhall and Marylebone had erected covered orchestras, supported by pillars at about 10-ft. from the ground, and singers and instrumentalists in all the finery of the period—lace ruffles, powdered wigs, silk or velvet coats, satin waistcoats and breeches for the male artists, and even gayer attire for the women—did their level best to amuse the crowd that clustered around.

The vocalists could have had no easy task to make their voices heard amid the hubbub of the gardens; the rustle of the trees, the calls for waiters, the gay laughter at the tea-tables, or the hilarity that conceivably accompanied the rack punch for which Vauxhall was famous—all must have militated against the 'light and shade' that is so effective in an ordinary concert-room, and killed anything like delicate singing. At the three principal gardens organs had been erected, and the tinkle of the harpsichord could be heard in the numerous pieces and 'lessons' for that instrument that every composer felt called upon to produce. How 'thin' these sound to-day! But we must realise the limitations of the spinet and harpsichord in regard to sustained tone. On wet days—and a wet day at Vauxhall was not an unknown misery—the music was performed in an elaborate 'rotunda,' as at Ranelagh; but this was a poor substitute for the open-air concert on a fine evening.

In the early days of Vauxhall singing, a popular item was T. A. Arne's pastoral, Colin and Phoebe, sung as a dialogue by Mrs. Arne and Thomas Lowe. This can be seen in Arne's Lyric Harmony, Book I. In the 'fifties Miss Stevenson, Miss Burchell, and Lowe were the fixed singers. They not only sang the modest ditty telling of the loves and jealousies of impossible pastoral people, but tackled elaborate cantatas, accompanied by heavy instrumentation. The musical director and composer for Vauxhall during this period was Dr. John Worgan, and many of his Vauxhall compositions as performed by the singers named can be seen in his Agreeable Musical Choice and like collections.

Thomas Lowe deserted Vauxhall in 1763 to take the lease of Marylebone Gardens, which in a few years brought him to bankruptcy. He then sang at Finch's Grotto Gardens.

Miss Stevenson and Miss Burchell were the chief exponents of the particular type of lyric that was so characteristic of Vauxhall and Marylebone. It sang of the simple love-making of artless and yet artificial maidens and equally artless and artificial swains who were shepherds by occupation. These were eminently 'swains,' because 'swain' rhymes so neatly with 'plain,' and everything occurred on 'plains.' The following example shows the type:

No nymph that trips the verdant plains
With Sally can compare:
She wins the hearts of all the swains
And rivals all the fair.

Another popular type was the 'Scotch' song. This was written by versifiers without the slightest knowledge of the Scots vernacular, and perfectly ignorant of the meaning of any but the most obvious of Scotch words. The composers played up by introducing into every bar a galvanic snap which was then considered the essence of Scots music. The one Vauxhall Scotch song which has survived to our own day is James Hook's Within a mile of Edinburgh town. This was founded on an earlier pseudo-Scotch song written by Thomas D'Urfey. Hook's song was sung at Vauxhall in the season of 1780 by Mrs. Wright. Its printed title when published being I won't buckle too. In this occurs the line 'Sweet lav' rocks bloomed.' Whoever penned the line was evidently under the impression that 'lav'rocks' were some kind of flower, and ignorant that they were really skylarks! In after years the word was altered to 'laylocks,' the early and correct form of 'lilacs.'

* See June number, page 394.

Then there were numberless lyrics singing the praises of particular beauties, with the name of the lady in the last line of each verse, thus :

While beaux to please the ladies write,
And bards to get a dinner by't,
Their well-feigned passion tell,
Let me in humble verse proclaim
My love for her who bears the name
Of charming Kitty Fell.

Other ladies celebrated in this kind of song are 'Nanny of the Hill,' 'Nan of the Vale,' 'Charming Bessy,' among many maidens equally inspiring to the Vauxhall poet. The authors of these effusions were writers who had got the trick of easy verse in conventional manner. Some were amateurs who doubtless were gratified if their verses got a hearing at the gardens, but it was necessary that a tame poet should be kept to supply goods to order. Samuel Boyce was an early representative, and John Cunningham wrote Vauxhall lyrics about 1760. The chief song of Cunningham's that survived a merely ephemeral existence was May Eve, or Kate of Aberdeen. This was set to music by Jonathan Battishill, and sung in 1761. It afterwards appeared in most collections of Scotch songs. Another occasional writer for Vauxhall was Robert Anderson, the Cumbrian poet. In the 'nineties of the 18th century, 'Mr. Upton' was the chief versifier, with, for coadjutors, a Mr. Richardson and a Dr. Houlton.

To revert to John Cunningham. At one time an actor and a playwright, he was poor enough to justify his existence as a poet even if his verses did not. He passed his last years—he died in 1773—at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, where he was seen by Thomas Bewick, the wood-engraver, who made a sketch of him unknown to the subject. The bundle in his hand contained a herring and some broken food. R. H. Cromek obtained this sketch from Bewick, and it is here reproduced.

Regarding the permanent directors and composers for Vauxhall, it is stated that James Worgan held that position from 1737 (when music was first introduced into the Gardens' programme) until 1757, when he resigned in favour of his brother, Dr. John Worgan. The latter held the position, with a break at about 1761, until 1774. James Hook composed songs for Vauxhall as early as 1769. He succeeded Worgan as permanent composer and director of the Gardens' music, and held the post until 1820. At a later date Sir Henry R. Bishop was composer and director to the Gardens. Sims Reeves's popular My Pretty Jane, the composition of Bishop, was first sung at the Gardens by Robinson. To trace all the musical events of Vauxhall down to the time when Kitty Stephens and Madame Vestris sang is a task beyond the limits of this paper. I can only say that as a nursery of popular English song it maintained its position until almost its closing time in 1859.

We have nothing to do with the Vauxhall accessories of firework displays, balloon ascents, acrobatic feats, and the like; my task is to show that Vauxhall and its fellow gardens did more for English music than is generally recognised.

Turning to Marylebone Gardens, I find equal evidence of musical progress, with William Defesch as first violin and general director of the musical performances. Defesch wrote some rather pretty vocal compositions in the style of the day. These were sung at the Gardens.

As I have said, Thomas Lowe assumed the management in 1763. After he had failed, Dr. Samuel Arnold ventured into the same thorny path, and came to grief as Lowe had done. F. H. Barthélemon, composer and violinist, had much to do with the Gardens in 1770, and about this time sundry musical burlettas or small operas were performed. But fireworks—as in the case of Vauxhall—came, and musical art had to take a second place. Concerts ceased in 1775.

JOHN CUNNINGHAM

(Author of many Vauxhall Songs)

Marylebone in its best days made no stint in the provision of the best talent. Singers and performers of the first rank came, and alternated between Vauxhall, Ranelagh, and Marylebone, appearing also at the theatres.

Hook was not absolutely tied to Vauxhall. In the season of 1772 he had a Scotch song sung by Mrs. Cartwright at Marylebone. As it is an excellent example of the ultra-Scotch snap which the English musician of that period considered essential to impart a Scots character, I reproduce it. The words are from Allan Ramsay's Tea-Table Miscellany, vol. ii., circa 1726, and are by William Crawford. It will be noticed that Hook uses some of the same phrases that he afterwards employed in Within a mile of Edinburgh Town:

SUNG BY MRS. CARTWRIGHT AT MARYLEBONE GARDENS

MUSIC BY JAMES HOOK, 1772.

round the ewes and . . lamb - kins play And mu - sic fills the groves, But my lov'd song is . .
then the broom So fair . on . . Cow - den .
knowes, For sure so sweet . . so soft a . .
bloom . . else . where there nev - er . grows. For sure so sweet, so soft a bloom Else - where there nev - er . grows. But . .
my . . lov'd song is . . then the . . broom So . .
fair on . . Cow - den . knowes, For sure so sweet, so . . soft . . a . . bloom Else - where there nev - er . . grows.

The composers for the gardens had the privilege of issuing their songs in book or sheet form, and the London music publishers made up books of Vauxhall and Marylebone songs by different composers. There was a series of songs composed by Dr. John Worgan published in the 'fifties of the 18th century.

The Thompson firm published yearly collections by James Hook in the 'seventies and 'eighties of the 18th century, and Bland & Weller issued Hook's Vauxhall songs—with a view of the Gardens—in the 'nineties. Dale did the same in the new century. These thin folio booklets of ten or a dozen songs are interesting as showing the taste of the town in vocal music.

As time passed, and fashions changed, the public gardens devoted themselves to more popular entertainments than were afforded by concerts of music. The excitement of balloon ascents, of seeing a lady dancing on a tight-rope amid blazing fireworks, public dancing, and a thousand-and-one similar features displaced the old order and pushed aside the simple ballads that Vauxhall and Marylebone had provided for the amusement of an earlier generation.

Then concerts under cover became frequent in more accessible parts of the town, and so the gardens lost their musical prestige.

But to revert to my thesis, the London pleasure-gardens were undoubtedly the nurseries of English music, especially of the vocal kind, and much as we moderns may despise the simple art that they put forth, we have really to be thankful that they existed to foster a national music culture.

STUDIES ON THE HORN

By W. F. H. BLANDFORD

II.—WAGNER AND THE HORN PARTS OF LOHENGRIN

(Continued from August Number, page 547.)

In the July number of the Musical Times an article by the late Ulric Daubeny, entitled 'Instrumentation: Some Strange Survivals,' drew attention, not for the first time, to the singular manner in which Wagner has written his horn parts in Lohengrin. In the Introduction to Act 3, as there stated, Wagner repeatedly alters the key of his horns, sometimes without allowing any rest whatever in the music during which the change of a crook could be effected. And the article went on to observe that the composer's 'written notation, of course, conforms to the so-called classic method,' which was hardly happily expressed, seeing that, when critically examined, it is found to be almost without a true parallel in any other composition whatever.

It is remarkable that any mystery should attach to the methods and intentions of a composer who died less than forty years ago, especially as Hans Richter, himself a horn-player, could probably have thrown light on them. Yet in 1897 Prout, citing a passage from Lohengrin in which the key of the horn is changed twice from C to D and back again on consecutive notes (The Orchestra, Ex. 156), observed:

We utterly fail to conceive why Wagner has adopted this impracticable notation, which is likely to confuse the player, and most certainly does not help the score-reader.

Now the commanding personality of Wagner in the domain of orchestration renders any departure of his from accepted practice worthy of study, and we shall therefore attempt to throw light on a problem which, so far as known, has never yet received adequate explanation.

Before considering the score of Lohengrin, it will be advisable to glance at Wagner's treatment of the horns in his earlier works. The introducer into the operatic orchestra of the valve-horn and inspirer of Wagner was Halévy, who wrote for two valve-horns and two natural horns in La Juive, produced in 1835. Wagner in his earliest operas (Die Feen being disregarded) employs the same combination; in the Overture to Rienzi—the rest of the score being unexamined by us—he uses valve-horns in G; in the Flying Dutchman in F, G, and A; and in Tannhäuser in E and F—all practicable keys—and he requires no changes of crook that cannot be effected during silent bars. The changes were, however, intended to be made, for the procrustean practice, which has bewitched composers and players alike, of fitting everything to the F-crook is of more modern origin. The parts themselves exhibit no special technical difficulties or eccentricities of notation, and prove that Wagner had from the start mastered the principles of writing for the valve-horn, which evidently he abandoned in Lohengrin of set purpose.

Tannhäuser was written at Dresden in 1843-44, and finally revised in 1846; its successor, Lohengrin, was written there in 1846-48. The first question to arise on the latter is as to the nature of the horns employed, for here the terminology of the score does not help us, as it indicates only Hörner, without stating Ventil- or Waldhörner. A perusal of the Prelude will, however, satisfy the reader that all four horns in the orchestra are valve-instruments. At the same time, we are inclined to think—it is impossible to be positive—that the 3rd and 4th horn parts in Act 1 were written for the natural horn, on account both of their general character and the use of crooks such as C and B flat bass, which find no proper place in the valve-horn's equipment.* If this be so, the change to valve-horns synchronises with the change in notation, which did not make its appearance until Act 2, and affords ground for the belief that after Act 1 had been composed Wagner's ideas on the subject of the horns underwent modification.

The method of writing with which we are concerned makes no appearance in the Prelude, where no change of key was required. The earliest example of it is in Act 2, Scene 1, on p. 244 of the full score,† where the brief interval of seven crotchets precedes a change of key from E to F. This is followed on p. 251 by the reverse change without any break, and associated with an enharmonic modulation:

Ex. 1. In F. In E. 14 bars omitted.

During the fourteen bars not quoted the horns are silent for the first four bars, and then resume in E, the quotation being continued with the fifteenth bar.

After Scene 1 the Act teems with changes of this class, including the example given by Prout. We add another taken from pp. 383-4 of the score:

Ex. 2. In E♭. In D. In E♭. In D. In E♭.

It is unnecessary to quote further examples from this Act, in which practically all these abrupt changes of key are associated with harmonic progressions, and holding-notes or short detached chords, rather than melodic phrases or figures.

In the Introduction to Act 3, on the contrary, definite melodic figures are associated with the changes of key. These changes occur nine times (not ten, as stated by Daubeny), the sequence being as follows, and the length of the rest, if any, preceding each change being given: G; E; (three crotchets) G; E; (two crotchets) D; (one crotchet) G; (three crotchets) E; (three crotchets) A flat; E; (one crotchet) D. No change of crook can possibly be made during any of these intervals, and such longer rests as occur in the parts do not precede changes. We give for reference two extracts. The first is the whole of the great unison passage, which is repeated, ending the first time with the bars marked (a), and the second time with the bars marked (b), which lead into a repetition of the opening phrase of the movement, and involve the fifth and sixth changes. The other example (No. 4) includes the seventh and eighth changes for the 3rd and 4th horns:

Ex. 3. In D.

Ex. 4. In E. In A♭.

Similar changes of key to those found in Act 2 also occur in the body of Act 3, but are less frequent. Examples will be found on pp. 688-9 and 803 of the score, and there are a few subsequent ones. In the Bridal March the third and fourth horns on the stage play in B flat (bass), a typical key of the natural horn; but their parts are adorned here and there with valve passages, possibly an addition to the first draft after the use of valve-horns had been decided upon.

The problem that Wagner's notation presents has now been sufficiently demonstrated, and we may proceed to consider such external evidence as may throw light upon it.

It is an obvious—but often unheeded—truth that the instrumentation of bygone composers must be judged in the perspective gained from a knowledge not merely of contemporary instruments, but (what is harder) of the technique, style, and aims of contemporary players.

To regard it solely from the viewpoint of modern taste and technique is to risk arriving at false conclusions. A closer regard for the historical method would have led to the omission from the article that prompted the present paper of the comment that ... in the score of Tannhäuser there appear side by side the vent (valved) and waldhorn (natural horn), frankly a sop arranged to stifle critics belonging to the older school.

A practice that Halévy and Wagner were the first to introduce cannot have been designed to stifle critics—not that Wagner was ever much of a sop-thrower—if only because, on the introduction of an innovation, two opposing schools of critics cannot yet have come into existence. And—paradoxical as it may seem—Wagner, the innovator, must to-day be ranged in principle, if not in practice, among the

* There is nothing to prevent a valve-horn from being used with a C or B flat bass crook, but in that case the mechanism must be disregarded and the instrument must function as a natural horn.

† The references are to the pagination of the miniature full score, which is more generally accessible than the original lithographed form. The horn parts, as far as collated, agree in both.

sympathisers with the older school, as his prefatory note to Tristan and Isolde, which will be set out in due course, sufficiently testifies.

When Blümel* and Stölzel brought out their system of pistons in 1816, they had at first no idea of endowing instruments with the power of playing rapid diatonic and chromatic passages in any key. Their more modest aim was to provide a means of instantly altering the pitch, as a substitute for the system of detachable crooks; and only after the pistons had come into practical use were the increased possibilities which they opened up realised.

The earliest piston instruments were defective in various ways, and, owing to abrupt turns in the wind-way, by no means equal in tone-quality to the natural instruments. These defects were gradually remedied by numerous inventions, and a perfectly satisfactory wind-way was given in 1828 by Blümel's invention of the rotary cylinder action, which has since remained the favourite mechanism in use in German-speaking countries.

(To be continued.)

Occasional Notes

At the centenary banquet of the Royal Academy of Music occurred two striking illustrations of the tendency of the exponents of the other arts to talk somewhat condescendingly of music. Although the remarks of Sir Owen Seaman, speaking with all the authority which Punch confers, were in perfect taste when he discussed the relations between song-writer and composer, and no one could possibly take umbrage at them, it was impossible not to notice that underlying his genial satire was a firm and reasoned conviction that the musician ought to be put firmly in his proper place. He made many jests at the expense of composers who distort poems to suit their music, but he omitted to say that many of the best contemporary musicians object to such distortion as strongly as he does, and that British music of to-day offers many examples of admirable adaptation of music to the text. He chose as an illustration one of the best-known passages of Atalanta in Calydon, and expressed the hope that no musician had set it to music. The musicians present were too polite to inform him that the lines have been set to music by Granville Bantock with most meticulous respect for Swinburne's text.

Another example of the patronising attitude was the speech of Sir Aston Webb, the president of the Royal Academy, who spoke of the quartet concert given in the National Gallery, and imagined, apparently, that he was paying the highest possible tribute to Beethoven when he said that some of his friends told him how greatly the music increased their appreciation of the pictures. It was, at best, a left-handed compliment, although obviously intended to be very flattering to his musical audience. He would probably have been both surprised and indignant if some of the musicians present had told him that they thought that pictures, however beautiful, distract attention from the music.

* Blümel is usually described as an oboe-player. Hoboist is the German term for a military bandsman, even if he confine his attentions to the bass-tuba, and is extended to any wind-bandsman whatever. Blümel was, in fact, a 'Berghoboist'—that is, a member of a mining company's band, and almost certainly a brass-player. Why should an oboe-player concern himself with the improvement of brass instruments? Bierey, also, who published the first account of this epoch-making invention, always figures as 'Captain Bierey' instead of 'Capellmeister.'

From time to time we receive reminders that there are still a good many musicians who regard the classical composers as having been infallible. A letter has reached us from a Welsh reader complaining that in the article on the London String Quartet in our August issue 'Mr. Waldo Warner permits himself to remark that Beethoven sometimes wrote poorish music.' We are sure that Mr. Warner does not pride himself on having made a discovery. He was merely giving the mildest expression to a view that has been held by every musician capable of judging—including Beethoven himself, of course. Our correspondent goes on, painedly: 'Perhaps Mr. Warner will kindly inform us on what grounds he introduced such a remark. I have not as yet come in contact with any of this so-called "poorish music."' If this is so, the writer can have but a very slight acquaintance with Beethoven's works. We advise him to refer to the Musical Times of February, March, April, May, and June, 1919, where he will find the subject pretty thoroughly discussed in articles and correspondence. In the June number he will be able to 'come in contact' with some examples of music so feeble as to deserve a much stronger adjective than 'poorish.' When he realises that these examples are taken from works written in Beethoven's prime he will perhaps do a bit of thinking. And if he will turn up also the Musical Times for March, 1920, he will find under the title, 'Beethoven, after a Hundred Years,' a very temperate discussion of the present standing of the composer's work. These articles are not anti-Beethoven; they are merely a plea for the exercise of a sane judgment. Does our correspondent hold that Shakespeare never wrote a poorish play or even a poorish passage? Yet Shakespeare is generally regarded as a greater genius than Beethoven. Homer was probably greater than either, yet what does the old tag tell us of his inability to be always as wide awake as he should have been?

Our correspondent is nothing if not thorough in his worship. Not only has he 'never come in contact with any poorish music' by Beethoven; he goes the whole hog and declares that he does not think Beethoven 'capable of writing anything that can be placed in such a category.' What! Not if he tried very hard? The amusing thing is that having thus burnt his boats the writer goes on to play for safety by saying 'Possibly we may trace some portions that may be termed indifferent, but to use Mr. Warner's remark is doing the greatest musical genius the world has seen a gross injustice.' We make the writer a present of the margin between 'indifferent' and 'poorish.' It is too small to argue about.

We recommend him to carry out the advice with which he ends his letter: 'Let us engage ourselves in studying Beethoven's works and cease these injudicious criticisms.' Let's, by all means. Nothing can be better for Beethoven's fame than a really discriminating study of his music; nothing worse than the blind acceptance of everything he wrote. No man so great as he was need ask to be saved from judicious critics, but he may well pray to be saved from his friends.

In our issue for January last we commented on a remarkable performance of The Messiah at Oundle School, in which every boy took part. We now learn that Mr. Clement Spurling, the indefatigable music-master, is preparing for a performance of the B minor Mass on similar lines. The choir will number about two hundred and forty boys, the orchestra will include forty boys, and the rest of the school (about two hundred and fifty) will be formed into an additional chorus, joining in at intervals and bringing out certain themes as canti fermi. This extra chorus is largely made up of broken voices, but we are assured by musicians who have heard this striking experiment that the effect is astonishingly good—always provided that the listener hears the choir in bulk and at a fair distance: voices that individually and at short range have a devastating timbre lose their terrors in the ensemble. We hear that most encouraging progress has already been made with the Kyrie and Credo. If there is any better way of helping our young people to get at the very heart of a masterpiece than this Oundle method we should like to hear of it.

Music of all sorts plays a prominent part at Oundle. At the mid-summer concert the programme included treble unison songs by Ley, Balfour Gardiner, &c., the first movement of Schumann's Quartet in F, Op. 41, two movements from Bach's Sonata in G for flute, violin, and pianoforte, Chopin's Scherzo in B flat minor, the Finale from Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, and vocal solos by Martin Shaw, Eric Cundell, and Cowen. The orchestra played the first movement of Mozart's G minor Symphony, and two movements from Quilter's Suite, Where the Rainbow ends, and joined the choir in 'The Dance' from Elgar's Bavarian Highlands. The choral items were Morley's Now is the month of maying and Vaughan Williams's Just as the tide was flowing. The correspondent whose wail on the subject of music in boys' schools appears on page 650 will read the above with watering mouth.

Honorary degrees of Doctor of Music have been conferred by Edinburgh University on Prof. Sanford Terry and Mr. Alfred Hollins. Everybody knows of Dr. Terry's scholarly work, especially in the Bach field, but few south of the Tweed are aware that he has played a big part in the competitive festival movement in Scotland. The first meeting of the kind held in Scotland was the Aberdeen and North of Scotland Festival, which owed its inception nine years ago almost entirely to the initiative of Dr. Terry. He is still a hard worker in its behalf, and takes great interest in the festival movement generally. Dr. Hollins's brilliant playing and improvisations have made his name familiar wherever organ recitals are popular. He and his gifted friend, William Wolstenholme, are the pioneers of the group of contemporary blind organists whose remarkable gifts are now being realised by the public—thanks largely to the work of the National Institute for the Blind.

The Peckham postman who won the £500 prize at a recent whist drive intends to spend a part of the sum on violin lessons for his son. Rightly, he is 'very keen that his instruction should be the best,' so he is 'going to put him under an Italian master at once.' Naturally; what do the mere English know about fiddling?

Odd, how hard the fetish of Welsh singing dies! The Daily Express, in a leading article on the National Eisteddfod, tells its readers that choral singing is an art 'in which the English race is hardly second to the Welsh themselves.' We advise our contemporary to send its leader-writer to Yorkshire, Lancashire, and the Midlands to see how very near the English are on the heels of the Welsh. He might also give a look in at (say) an Oriana concert, and make the discovery that there are even London choral bodies that can give good and often first-rate performances of music at which the best Welsh choirs would jib. Then, perhaps, when next he discusses choralism, he will think twice before he airily says, 'Of course the South [of England] cannot compete.'

There is room for such an organization as the International Society for New Music, a body which came into being at the Salzburg Festival. The preliminary steps, so far as England is concerned, are in the hands of Mr. Edwin Evans. Particulars of the aims and character of the Society will be found in Mr. Evans's account of the Festival, given on page 628.

The Gloucester Festival (September 3, 5, 6, 7, and 8) promises to be exceptionally successful, so far as public support is concerned. We hear that the stewards number three hundred and twenty-six (there were two hundred and eight at the 1913 Festival), and that the amount received for the sale of tickets so far (August 22) more than doubles that taken in the corresponding period of 1913.

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD

The Eisteddfod at Ammanford, which was held on August 7 and the five following days, was an almost unprecedented success; indeed, its success almost killed it. The Pavilion, although it held about fourteen thousand people, was over-full almost the whole time, and on one day an enormous audience congregated outside the enclosure. What would have happened if that occasion had not been particularly fine, we hesitate to think. An audience of such a size is apt to get out of hand, and indeed once or twice this one did get beyond the control of even the most experienced of stentorian conductors or stage-managers. It got very impatient of speakers, shouted down even a Cabinet Minister, and would scarcely listen to an adjudicator. It was only when choirs were singing that it was really silent. Another difficulty was that, partly owing to the size of the audience, the intervals between the items had to be prolonged, with the result that almost all the afternoon sessions had only just finished at about the time the evening concerts ought to have begun, although some of the competitions were held in other places; as a result the evening concerts began very late, and had to be curtailed. The control of the in-coming and outgoing crowds imposed an almost superhuman strain on the police, whose success, however, was a matter for admiration.

SIR HUGH ALLEN'S PRAISE

This Eisteddfod will be remembered chiefly for two things—the extraordinarily keen competition of male-voice choirs and the advance in the quality of the orchestral playing, which amazed even those familiar with conditions in Wales. Sir Hugh Allen is not in the habit of speaking without a full sense of responsibility, and he said most emphatically that the idea that orchestral playing in Wales was inferior was 'all humbug.' 'He was indeed,' he said, 'jealous of some of the orchestras he had heard.' He prophesied for one of the conductors, Mr. D. B.

Griffiths, of Aberpennar, that, given proper opportunities, he would develop into an orchestral leader of high rank. When we remember the very mediocre playing of last year (although that was a great improvement on previous years), it is almost impossible to realise that the same country could have produced a band like that from Aberpennar, which won the prize.

The test-pieces were the slow movement from Beethoven's seventh Symphony and Percy E. Fletcher's Rustic Suite. As it was decided by the judges that the Beethoven movement was too delicate a piece to be played in so large a hall, at the final competition only the Rustic Suite was heard. Most people were surprised at the award, because there is no doubt that at the preliminary test this piece was best played by Mr. Herbert Ware's orchestra, which won the second prize. The mystery was explained when the marks were published, and it was found that the Aberpennar orchestra had gained ninety-five marks for the Beethoven, and that Mr. Ware's band had gained more marks than the winning orchestra for the playing of the Fletcher piece. The playing of both bands was not only relatively, but absolutely, excellent. Both of the conductors, it is to be noted, are comparatively young—a fact not without its moral. Another significant fact was that whereas an entry of three or four had been the rule in the past, there were thirteen orchestras competing, and we have the word of the adjudicators for it that among the eight which did not play in the final test, none deserved to be called bad. The mere fact that the prize offered was slightly larger than had been usual in the past cannot alone be held to account for such a state of things.

THE MALE-VOICE CHOIRS

This competition lasted for close upon five hours without a break as the thirteen choirs sang. The adjudicators rightly said that it was a 'contest of giants.' Four choirs stood out among the rest, with only three marks between them, and between the fourth and fifth there was a little gap. It was pleasant to see the choir of Barclay's Bank from London, the only English choir that competed, among the chosen four; it owes its existence to the initiative of the enthusiastic Welshman who is its conductor. The test-pieces were Cyril Jenkins's setting of Sea-Fever, and Dr. Joseph Parry's Nazareth. The juxtaposition was piquant, since Mr. Jenkins has recently got into very hot water by his unsparing condemnation of Parry's music, which most Welshmen are inclined to worship indiscriminately. Speaking for myself, I can only say that if the rest of Dr. Parry's music is like Nazareth, it deserves all that Mr. Jenkins has said about it. This feeble mixture of Mendelssohn and Taff water—sugary in its sentiment and flippant in its exultation—is an echo of a past happily almost forgotten on this side of the border.

The fact that the London choir received top marks, 94, in Sea-Fever, in which Dowlais, the winner, only scored 88, has a moral—a moral enforced over and over again by adjudicators in all the competitions—that Welsh musicians as a class are still slow to grasp the significance of what is generally called modern music. It is for his constant efforts to remedy this defect, and for putting his theories into practice in his music, that Mr. Cyril Jenkins deserves, and will perhaps one day receive, the thanks of true music-lovers in Wales.

THE CONTROVERSIES

Here we are tempted to a digression in order to speak of one of the most striking features of the week, the lively controversies between the ultra-Nationalists and the Internationalists, which went on all the time. They culminated in a meeting of the Cymrodorion Society, at which Dr. Vaughan Thomas, of Swansea, hit out very freely. His remarks, and the discussion they evoked, deserve an article to themselves, but I will just mention that he went so far as to say that no one could appreciate Welsh music who did not know the Welsh language. What would the learned Doctor say if he were told that his opinions, say, on Tchaikovsky were worthless because he did not know Russian, or that only an Italian scholar could really appreciate Verdi or Puccini? In benighted England we are taught to believe that music is an international language. He objected to Wales being preached at, lectured, and prescribed for from London, and then proceeded to deal some hard blows to English critics, using the word in its widest sense. Poor, dull, stupid, old England, is, however, used to these amenities at the hands of her more nimble-witted Celtic sisters. Some of the Welsh patriots profess to be alarmed at the possible results of an 'invasion of Teutonism' and the onslaughts of 'the formalists.' (How beautifully free—in contrast, say, to the later Beethoven—is the form of Nazareth!).

PERNICIOUS BACH

One particularly misguided writer, who will probably live to repent it, even objected to the inclusion in the programmes of Bach's B minor Mass and Brahms's Requiem. Hearing him speak, one would imagine that Wales had suffered from a surfeit of Bach and Brahms; but, as a fact, this was the first performance in Wales of the Mass and (I believe) the second of the Requiem. He objected to the Latin words of the Mass. I am glad to hear that it is being translated into Welsh, for it is always good that people should understand what they are singing. It is urged that Wales could learn more from Tchaikovsky, Debussy, and Ravel. She might learn a good deal, but how can any one even begin to understand their true significance without knowing their predecessors? And how many people in Wales are there who know their Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, or Wagner? It is not their fault, but if they think it is an advantage they are vastly mistaken. They speak glibly of the 'Russian Five,' quite forgetting that at Moscow and Petrograd people had opportunities for knowing the best of all music, which are (unfortunately) denied to Cardiff and Swansea. One writer proudly said that a country which could produce a Walford Davies and a Vaughan Williams should take a front place among the musical nations of the world. I heartily agree, but then patriots should stop and ask themselves why these two composers have become famous. Is it not because they have taken advantage of their opportunities for absorbing the widest cosmopolitan culture?

Prof. Walford Davies being asked his opinion, very wisely said that 'Welsh music for the world is a nobler ideal than Welsh music for Wales.' It is difficult to see how it can be contended that such an ideal can be achieved by shutting out the music of the world from Wales, and heaving bricks at those who are trying to open the frontiers.

THE OTHER COMPETITIONS

I must pass over the other competitions lightly. The chief choral competition was full of interest. The test-pieces were 'The Lord, our Redeemer,' from the St. John Passion, Fleur de Lys by T. Hopkin Evans, and Cyril Jenkins's Ode to the West Wind, the first and third being sung to the accompaniment of the London Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Jenkins's piece is spirited and picturesque, and even the winning choir from Cwmamman did not quite get inside it. There was some very fine singing in the competition, but it was in this piece that the choirs were weakest. In the Bach, the singing of the florid passages was inclined to be too rigid. They are not mere exercises. The three tenors who sang Celeste Aida, and the three contraltos who sang 'He hath filled the hungry' (from Bach's Magnificat), all have splendid voices, but the Bach singing had the same fault, and the Welsh limitations in respect of modern music were notable in the otherwise excellent singing by the chosen sopranos, of Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Hymn to the Sun' from Le Coq d'Or. I have only space to mention the violin playing of the boy F. Bilbe, a scholar of Trinity College, London, who won both the junior and senior prizes, as he did last year at Carnarvon. He has a Welsh mother, and an English father of Spanish descent, with a name, he told me, derived from Bilbao. The boy and his sister, and another, also won the Trio prize. In the junior competition a little girl was specially commended. She was surely the tiniest player who ever faced so large an audience, and she played an early Mozart Sonata very prettily indeed.

THE CONCERTS

I must now pass on to the concerts. The chief features were naturally the performance of the B minor Mass, the first in Wales as already mentioned, and of Brahms's Requiem, and the modernity of the programmes played by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Sokolov, of Cleveland, Ohio, who will certainly make his mark when he is heard in London. The Eisteddfod Choir was drawn from the surrounding districts, the nucleus being the Ammanford Choir which had won at recent Eisteddfodau. It is proof of the true zeal which inspires the people that a local orchestra was specially formed to accompany the rehearsals (we wonder whether any of them objected to the Teutonic invasion). Mr. R. Gwilym Jones, who received most of his musical training at Manchester, conducted, and may be congratulated on a great achievement, which (in spite of the ultra-nationalists) cannot fail to have a lasting effect on music in Wales, for an audience of fully ten thousand listened to the performance.

Owing to circumstances already mentioned the Mass had to be given without a break, in order to get finished in time for the last trains, and the way in which the singers withstood the physical strain was astonishing. This was, however, not the least of their merits. The singing was throughout of a very high quality, and for the most part free from the defects which the adjudicators had censured in the competitions. The sonority of the basses in the Sanctus was worthy of Yorkshire, the sopranos were beautifully clear, and the quality of the tenors was admirable. Mr. Gwilym Jones is certainly a choral conductor of high rank, and has a fine conception of Bach. He is slightly inclined to deliberate tempi, but he explained that in such a vast building he thought that this was a fault on the right side, and probably he was right. There was a little weakness at the opening, the dramatic effect of the jubilant beginning of the Gloria being somehow missed, but the singing of the Et Incarnatus, of the Crucifixus, and the Resurrexit was in the highest degree thrilling.

In some ways the performance of Brahms's Requiem was even better, though here, too, there was a little weakness in the beginning, partly owing to the noise in the hall; but the singing of the second chorus was superb, though we rather missed the irresistible march of the basses in the orchestra. I hardly ever remember the great outcry, 'O Death, where is thy sting, O Grave, where is thy victory?' sung with more beauty of tone and more thrilling dramatic effect. The other important choral work sung was Cyril Jenkins's Freedom. Once again we have to record that the modern spirit of the work was not grasped. But, at the end of it all, we asked ourselves whether a chorus of villagers and miners in any other country could equal these achievements.

MR. R. GWILYM JONES

(Conductor of Ammanford Choir)

There is no space for detailed criticism of the orchestral performances, but mention of some of the principal numbers will show how much more advanced these programmes were than any heard in Wales before.

On the first evening the programme included Cyril Jenkins's symphonic poem, The Magic Cauldron, which puzzled the majority of the audience, though it did not fail to make its mark.

On the second evening the programme began with Strauss's Don Juan, which was enthusiastically applauded; Cyril Jenkins's Celtic Rhapsody (in which three beautiful folk-tunes are treated with great skill, but never lost sight of, as so often happens to the melodies when they are treated by modern composers); the 'Jupiter' movement from Holst's Planets, which made a great impression; and Eugène Goossens's Tam o' Shanter.

It was a pity that some of the items were omitted, owing to lack of time.

One swallow does not make a summer, nor do three concerts of modern compositions make the musical education of a whole people. These three programmes have, however, done something to show the Welsh people what modern music means. Nearly ten thousand heard each of these three concerts, and will no doubt discuss them among themselves during the winter.

IN LIGHTER VEIN

I am glad to note that even the Welsh papers hint that the eloquence of the Eisteddfod should have been curtailed, and it is quite possible that without the conductor's humour the audience would have got even more restless than it did. This humour is of a character which no Englishman could properly imitate. For instance: one gentleman came on to the stage at the opening session, and began his remarks by saying (in Welsh), 'Good morning, Eisteddfod 1922!' This would not seem to a slow-witted English audience very humorous, but nearly ten thousand strong men and fair women were convulsed with laughter. This shows the advantage of a reputation for wit.

A good story, however, was told by one of the conductors. He said he had been talking to an old woman of the neighbourhood who regretted the enforced absence of Mr. Lloyd George, and added: 'I am sorry to hear that he is looking so tired since he came back from the Gehenna Conference!'

A. K.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS

The season opened with the customary success on August 12. Audiences have been so large that one wonders if there is, after all, a desperate economic problem in connection with concert-giving. If crowds can be induced to attend Queen's Hall night after night (many of the audience paying 2s. for a two hours' stand) in summery weather, and with few special inducements in the way of famous soloists, how are we to account for the half-empty halls at so many orchestral concerts during the season proper? The answer to this question would be worth getting at, for it will probably solve the question that has been debated orally and on paper for some months past.

At the time of writing only two new works have been heard—Louis Aubert's Habañera for orchestra (August 15) and Monteverde's Sonata sopra Santa Maria for organ and orchestra (August 17). The Habañera proved to be a dull and turgid affair. The Sonata was a revival of considerable interest. To the average musician of to-day, Monteverde is now little more than a mere name in musical dictionaries, a milestone of the road of the art, a source of examination questions—anything but a composer. The Sonata is a lengthy treatment of a simple phrase, a setting of the words 'Sancta Maria, ora pro nobis.' Monteverde directs that the phrase should be sung, thus introducing a brief vocal passage into an instrumental work in a manner that seems to have fallen into disuse until the present day, when it has been resorted to by Vaughan Williams (Pastoral Symphony) and Holst (The Planets). Monteverde's harmony and the treatment generally proved to be so naive that one had to remind oneself that in his day he was a terrible fellow for innovations. The orchestra is in excellent form—probably it has never started a Promenade season so well. Its quality has been especially shown in the matter of accompaniment, and its admirable work in Concertos has been especially enjoyed.

H. G.

THE SALZBURG FESTIVAL

By EDWIN EVANS

INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER CONCERTS

On looking back, it seems almost incredible that one can have heard so much music in four days, but the programmes are there to vouch for it: fifty-four composers of fifteen different nationalities! If we include Strauss, who arrived later to conduct the Mozart operas, there were more than twenty composers present, and the executants came from about a dozen countries. Beginning at seven o'clock, not any of the evening concerts were over before ten, and the matinées, at the unearthly hour of half-past ten, made it difficult to keep luncheon appointments at one. Twenty hours of music!

The choice of works was not always wise, but was influenced by circumstances. Many more recent, more rarely heard, or otherwise more interesting works might have been included had performers been available to play them. Those who did attend worked very hard, but most of them arrived only a day or so before the first concert, and had to squeeze in rehearsals as opportunity offered. It is remarkable in such conditions that of all the music announced in the last edition of the official programme, only two concerted works and three songs had eventually to be omitted. If one of the former—the Bax Trio—happened to be English, the disappointment is tempered by the fact that, whereas these concerts were intended to review the latest, or at least recent development of chamber music in each country, this example is an early work dating from 1906. However, it is hoped that next year we shall see our way to send over a group of executants with a representative repertoire. This year the responsibility fell entirely upon Dorothy Moulton, who sang Bliss's Rout, Ethel Smyth's Odelette, Holst's songs with violin, songs by Bax and Gerrard Williams with pianoforte, and by Armstrong Gibbs and Goossens with string quartet. In the earlier part of the series when she also sang Joseph Marx's Pan trauert um Syrinx she was a little nervous, though she did not fail the respective composers. But in the extensive song group which she sang at the last matinée, she gave an impassioned performance which met with much appreciation. Dame Ethel Smyth and Arthur Bliss came to conduct their works. This constitutes the English contribution, unless we include Grainger's Molly on the Shore; the composer being now an American citizen the programme indicated New York as its source. America was also awarded Ernest Bloch, who was represented by his Schelomo, with the orchestral accompaniment reduced to a pianoforte, which may perhaps be one reason why it aroused less interest than his Violin Sonata. But the latter is a more concise and vigorous work, and had the advantage of a striking performance by Joseph Szigeti, who was in London before the war, and Carl Friedberg. The only hundred per cent. American work performed was a Violin Sonata by Leo Sowerby, a well-written but not overwhelmingly original example, finely played by an Italian violinist, Mario Corti, and the composer.

Great interest was aroused by the visit of the Société moderne d'instruments à vent, their chief contributions being a somewhat academic but attractive Quintet by Albéric Magnard, whose music seems a little out-of-date for such a scheme as this (I heard that its performance was made a condition by those who financed the journey of the French players, and was intended to commemorate the death of the composer in 1914); a melodious and somewhat rural-sounding Rhapsody by Honegger; and a militant Sonata by Milhaud which, coming as it did in the first programme, startled both the seasoned critics and the less sophisticated inhabitants of Salzburg, and gave them alarms which the later concerts proved to be, on the whole, unfounded.

Among other features must be mentioned the beautiful singing of Marya Freund, who sang the Italian examples, and those by Ravel and de Falla. It was she who sang Schönberg's Pierrot Lunaire early this year at Paris. The Viennese interpreter of that work, Erika Wagner, was also here, but any comparison one might have been tempted to make was frustrated by the fact that she was given much less interesting music to sing. Then there was Elisabeth Schumann, a charming singer from the Viennese Opera, due to appear later in the Mozart cycle. There were other singers, such as Felicie Hüni-Mihacsek, who took the soprano part in Schönberg's second Quartet, Andula Pecirkova, who made a charming but brief appearance in some Czechoslovakian songs, and Poul Wiedemann, from Copenhagen.

Pianists were numerous. At their head must be placed Walter Giesecking, whose playing of Ravel's Gaspard de la Nuit was splendid, and Jean Wiener from Paris, who introduced us to Poulenc's new Impromptus—much the best pianoforte work he has published—and rathered staggered the Viennese with Stravinsky's Pianoforte Rag-Music. By the way, Poulenc gave us a surprise by revealing himself as an unusually fine accompanist when called upon to assist Marya Freund in that capacity. Paul Weingarten also made a very good impression, but the others were hampered by the music they had to play. We could see that Fritz Malata was a good pianist, but who wants nowadays to hear yet another set of variations and fugue upon a theme by some classic? That of Guido Bagier displays just the kind of skill that one would be glad to take on trust—or on a diploma. The evidence of it is too wearisome.

Not only is the Amar-Hindemith Quartet a very excellent body of players, who did the fullest justice to works as varied as the Schönberg group (Schönberg, Webern, Wellesz) and Molly on the Shore, but Paul Hindemith, the viola player, is a leader among the younger German composers. They regard him as a 'modern of the moderns,' yet that scarcely describes him. He certainly writes with much freedom, while retaining much more of tradition than is usually implied by those words. What is more important is that his Quartet is a fine work, rich in thought and in texture, and consistent in form. Of all the music included in these concerts, it had the most unanimous praise, conservatives and progressives being for once agreed.

There were not many compositions so generally acclaimed, but the Holst songs may be reckoned with them. After Miss Moulton had sung these, there was an excited buzz of comment, and that which I heard would have made Holst quite embarrassed. Arthur Bliss's Rout came near to being an all-round favourite, but there remained some who were unmoved by it. Bartók's fine Violin Sonata would probably have gained the day had the performance been equal to that given by Jelly d'Aranyi in London. The two Quartets by Schönberg's pupils, Wellesz and Webern, met with a rather mixed reception. That of Webern had further the misfortune to follow Finke's Marionettes, a grotesque work provocative of much laughter which subsided reluctantly. In fact it overflowed into what followed, and nearly caused trouble. Webern's work is highly ingenious and concise, but rather spasmodic in its utterance. That of Wellesz is well-known in London.

But if the 'advanced' Viennese were not acclaimed by all, their more orthodox brethren, some of whom had a larger share of applause, were much less interesting. Their contributions actually included songs of the type that we would associate with a superior ballad-concert. For that matter, even the new Strauss songs which opened the series have a cloying sentimentality that impairs their merit. As for the special matinée of Viennese music, it proved the most tedious of all the concerts. The programme consisted almost entirely of songs, and although some were accompanied with strings, there was not enough resourcefulness to create variety. As if with intention, the more ambitious efforts of Rudolf Réti and an effective group by Paul A. Pisk were included in another programme, amid better surroundings.

Besides the major successes there were some works, not of a nature to cause excitement, but which were heard with quiet enjoyment. Of such were a Sonata for two flutes by Charles Kœchlin, which Louis Fleury, the chief of the French party, played with Pierre Camus; further, a pleasantly lyrical Sonata by the Dutchman, Willem Pijper. Among songs of all nations must be mentioned 'La Madre folla,' from Malipiero's Sette Canzoni, the Castelnuevo cycle, Stelle Cadenti, de Falla's new set of folk-songs, Arnold Bax's The Piper, and an unnamed Czech song, all of which found favour.

The International concerts began and ended in truly Austrian fashion amid convivial surroundings, and were productive of much cordiality. Such petty dissensions as there may have been concerned not the assembled nations, but Central European particularism, which measured with some jealousy the portions of programme-space allotted to each section. Things had not proceeded very far before it was decided that to separate without having made provision for the future would be lamentable. A small meeting was held at which the preliminaries of an organization were established. Then a much larger and more representative meeting took up the matter, devoting to it the greater part of a day. With general consent Mr. Edward J. Dent took the chair, and he displayed great tact in keeping the discussion on the international plane whenever there was a tendency to deviate into national channels. The initiative having been due in the first place to Vienna, there was at first an inclination to locate the headquarters of the new International in that city. Later, however, a suggestion gained ground that London was a more desirable centre, partly because the English are credited with an organizing faculty in which the Viennese do not excel, partly because the importance of London as a nexus of musical activities has come to be recognised, but most of all because London is more free than most other capitals from the tendency-squabbles to which Vienna is perhaps most of all addicted. There was a little disappointment, as is quite natural, among the original Viennese promoters, which was expressed by one of them giving an adverse vote and another abstaining. With these two exceptions the decision in favour of London was unanimous.

The plan is that in each country either an existing body, or one to be created for the purpose, shall draw to itself all those interested in new music, that is to say contemporary music, regardless of tendency. In England we have such a body in the Contemporary Music Centre of the British Music Society. These national organizations pledge themselves to mutual aid by the transmission of information, of books and music, of programmes, and of anything further that appears likely to spread the knowledge of contemporary music, and to publish through the musical press and otherwise such information as reaches them concerning the movement in other countries. Each of them will elect a delegate to the committee of the International Society for New Music, as the new concern is to be called. There will be an annual Festival, provisionally at Salzburg, but the locale is subject to change. Wherever it takes place it will be under the control of the International, which will, however, delegate to the local section the duty of technical organization. Thus the Austrian section will again carry out the arrangements for next year's Festival at Salzburg, but in accordance with the wishes of the International committee as communicated through the London head-office. Provisional delegates were appointed to initiate the necessary preliminaries in each country, the present writer undertaking that duty for England. Mr. Dent and myself further undertook to approach the British Music Society with a view of domiciling the headquarters of the International at its premises in Berners Street.

DAS SALZBURGER GROSSE WELTTHEATER

There was a brief respite—no more than two days—between the conclusion of the chamber concerts and the mystery play which was the first event of the Festival itself. Perhaps it was intended to enable the pressmen to catch up their arrears, but in one case at least it was insufficient. Then, on Sunday evening, August 13, Max Reinhardt produced Hugo von Hofmannsthal's work in the College Church of Salzburg. It is a stately building, very characteristic of its period, the turning-point of the 17th and 18th centuries, and of the baroque style which is the dominant note wherever one goes in this part of the world. Fischer von Erlach planned it soon after his return from Rome, a circumstance that is also plainly visible, though its Italian character is easily taken for granted in a town where everything, from the older private houses to the complexion and costume of the inhabitants, betrays an Italianate influence. There is a story that in building it Johann Ernst, of the house of Thun, known as the hunting Archbishop, was animated less by piety than by a desire to obstruct the view from the University buildings erected by one of his predecessors, the Prince-Archbishop Max Gandolph of whose fame he was jealous. Certainly the clerical potentate had visions of himself as a lesser, but not much lesser Louis XIV.

The one feature of the production that can be admired without reservation is the manner in which Reinhardt has utilised the resources and spaces of the building, and adopted a style of presentation which is curiously befitting. It is at the same time pompous and naive, just as it might have been if staged when the Church was newly consecrated. In other respects the heavy didactic 'morality' has little to recommend it. Hofmannsthal has taken a hint from Calderon, who in turn was indebted to medieval symbolism. The Deity commissions a play from the World. The characters of the King, the Rich Man, the Farmer, the Beggar, Beauty, and Wisdom, are allotted to six actors chosen from the unborn souls, and in the end the Beggar enters the Kingdom, whilst the Rich Man is refused admittance. The moral is that it is not the part that matters, but the way you play it. It should not take two and a half hours to drive that lesson home. Only one of the actors has a chance to distinguish himself, and of this Alexander Moissi, as the Beggar, availed himself up to the hilt. The music, by Einar Nilson, is not of any importance, and since this is a musical journal, that is all that need be said of the much-heralded mystery play.

THE MOZART CYCLE

There are festivals which go off with a bang, and finish up like a damp squib, and there are others which improve as they proceed. I much prefer the latter, to which the Mozart Festival belongs. That is not to say that the first of the four operas was badly done. It had many good points, but Così fan tutte was better, and the summit was reached in the Marriage of Figaro. In one sense this was a disadvantage, as several of the critics, including myself, sent luke-warm telegrams on the inauguration of the cycle, but since the pleasant little Salzburg Theatre was sold out night after night, it would not appear that we injured the prospects. Perhaps the presence of three singers from other theatres than the Vienna Opera was the source of weakness in Don Juan.

The two best performers, anyway, belonged to the Viennese Company. These were Frau Schöne, an exquisite Zerlina, and Richard Mayr, a burly Leporello and a fine character actor, who on this occasion sometimes allowed the histrionic demands of the part to impinge upon his intonation. It was, however, evidently a temporary lapse, for when he reappeared two days later as Figaro there was not a trace of the defect. The others all had good qualities, but did not combine them all in each individual. Herr Jerger was a more than presentable Don, but some of his notes were veiled; Fräulein Pauly, the Donna Anna, had a rich voice but a distressing vibrato. And so on down the list. The ensemble was good, as it must be with artists who sing Mozart, year in year out, in accordance with a fixed tradition, and Dr. Richard Strauss, who conducted, took a brisk tempo, which may have been somewhat trying to some of the singers, but in any case resulted in a spirited performance. German and Austrian critics even thought he was too merry with it. The stage setting was good: permanent wings with doors below and practicable loggias above, and a succession of very effective back-cloths, the whole designed by Alfred Roller. But the stage 'business' did not rise above the ordinary, and gave the impression that the stage-manager was a man of routine plus memory minus invention.

With Così fan tutte things took an upward leap. Six good voices, sure of every semi-quaver, balanced to a nicety, and again an exquisite soubrette in Frau Elisabeth Schumann, are the ingredients of a Mozartian feast. The voices were well matched in weight. In quality the ladies formed the richer trio of the two. But the difference in this respect was not such as to lessen one's enjoyment of this very delightful opera. Frau Hüni-Mihacsek, who appeared at the chamber concerts, and Fräulein Anday, a piquant Hungarian, were the two innamoratas, Herren Wiedemann and Kraus their swains, and Herr Manowarda the wily philosopher. Dr. Strauss again conducted, and certainly did not allow any loitering.

Of The Marriage of Figaro I can scarcely write save in superlatives. That is not to say that it obliterated other impressions of the same opera. I do not think Roller's setting of the first Act is as good as the one Rumbold did for Beecham, and though Nigel Playfair is apt to show little confidence in the music, and to fill in 'business' for fear the audience should tire of it, I consider many of his scenes superior to those stage-managed by Strangenberg. That is not the point. This production was confined within a narrower convention; but it was exquisitely presented, acted, and sung. There was not a real fault to find from beginning to end—no room for criticism, but only for enjoyment. The principal singers were Fräulein Rethberg as the Countess, Frau Schumann as Susanna, Frau Schöne as Cherubino, Herren Duhan as the Count, and Richard Mayr as Figaro, but even the smallest parts were equally well filled. The conductor this time was Franz Schalk.

In comparison The Abduction from the Seraglio proved somewhat tame, not because of any shortcomings in the performance but because of a too faithful adherence to tradition. If the 'correct' way of producing this opera is to dwell upon the romantic story of the magnanimous Selim and his noble captives, there is much to be said for a departure from correctness. As presented by Sir Thomas Beecham, with a strain of broad, and even 'low' comedy, it provides better entertainment. But Fräulein Selma Kurz, the famous Viennese coloratura singer, found as Costanza occasion to display her virtuosity at its best, and Frau Schumann was again charming as Blonda. The men sang well, but when it came to expressing the comic spirit they jarred a little upon one's memories of Robert Radford and others, who could be funny and (as the Americans say) 'get away with it.'

The programmes of the chamber concerts are subjoined:

AUGUST 7 (7 P.M.)

Five Songs	Sträuss
Sonata for flute, oboe, clarinet, and pianoforte	Milhaud
'Pan trauert um Syrinx,' for voice, flute, and pianoforte	Joseph Marx
Passacaglia for pianoforte	Felix Petyrek
'Rout'	Arthur Bliss
Sonata for violin and pianoforte	Bella Bartók

AUGUST 8 (10.30 A.M.)

Quintet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and pianoforte	Albéric Magnard
'La Madre Folla,' from 'Sette Canzoni'	Malipiero
Two Songs	Prizzetti
'Stelle Cadenti,' cycle of twelve short songs	Castelnovo-Tedesco
Six Improptus for pianoforte	Poulenc
Pianoforte Rag-Music	Stravinsky
'La flute de Pan,' for flute alone	Debussy
Sonata for two flutes	C. Kachlin
Three Greek Folk-Songs	Ravel
Five Spanish Folk-Songs	de Falla
Rhapsody for two flutes, clarinet, and pianoforte	Honegger

AUGUST 8 (7 P.M.)

Sonata for violin and pianoforte	Carl Nielsen
Four Songs	Ture Rangström
'Gaspard de la Nuit'	Ravel
'Sonatina in diem nativitatis, 1917'	Busoni
'Tantris,' from 'Masks'	Szymanowski
String Quartet	Egon Wellesz
'Marionettes,' for pianoforte	Fidelio Finke
String Quartet	Anton Webern
Sonata for violin and pianoforte	Willem Pijper

AUGUST 9 (10.30 A.M.)

(Viennese Matinée)

Song, with string quartet	Walter Klein
Three Songs, with violin and pianoforte	Ernst Kanitz
'Nachts,' Trio for viola, violoncello, and pianoforte	Hugo Kauder
Three Songs, with violin, viola, violoncello, and pianoforte	Egon Lustgarten
Five Songs, with pianoforte	Karl Horwitz
Four Songs, with pianoforte	Karl Alwin
Five Songs, with pianoforte	Wilhelm Grosz
'Stelldichein,' voice with string sextet	Karl Weigl

AUGUST 9 (7 P.M.)

Prelude	Joseph Marx
Three Preludes	Adolfo Salazar
Andalouse	de Falla
Valse	Egon Kornauth
'Odelette,' for voice and several instruments	Ethel Smyth
'Schelomo,' for violoncello and pianoforte	Ernest Bloch
String Quartet	Paul Hindemith
Sonata for violin and pianoforte	Ernest Bloch

AUGUST 10 (10.30 A.M.)

Serenade for two violins and viola	Zoltán Kodály
Four Songs, with violin	Gustav Holst
Song, with pianoforte	Gerrard Williams
Three Songs, with pianoforte	Arnold Bax
Sonata for violin and pianoforte	Leo Sowerby
Two songs, with pianoforte	Paul Schierbeck
'Sommer,' with pianoforte	Ebbe Hammerik
'Nod,' with string quartet	Armstrong Gibbs
Two Songs, with string quartet	Eugène Goossens

AUGUST 10 (7 P.M.)

Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Schumann, pianoforte	Guido Bagier
'Molly on the Shore,' string quartet	Percy Grainger
Six Songs, with pianoforte	Rudolf Réti
Three Songs, with string quartet	Paul A. Pisk
Songs, with pianoforte	J. Kricka
Songs, with pianoforte	N. Vycpalek
Second String Quartet, with soprano	Schönberg

Music in the Foreign Press

A PROTEST AND A PROPHECY

In the Revue Musicale (August) Lazare Saminsky, referring to a recent statement by Ansermet as to the 'thoroughly practical character' of Rimsky-Korsakov's teaching, writes:

As a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakov and of Liadov, his successor, I think I may, without wishing to appear ungrateful to the memory of my beloved masters, point out that if their teaching was at all practical, it was so only from the external, episodic point of view. They both were teachers of 'good taste,' arbitri elegantiarum, but their tuition was entirely founded on certain jejune and dangerous theoretical principles.

For instance, their method of teaching counterpoint originated in the current system of equi-balanced major and minor, which from the outset restricts the student's harmonic and polyphonic outlook, and deprives him of the wealth of polyphonic combinations with which the old modes are pregnant.

I should not mention the point but for the reason that it is one of the main causes of the present infirmities of the Russian school—which infirmities, when all is said and done, are common to practically all schools of to-day. What is needful is a cure for three evils: ex cathedra harmony, whether founded on chromaticism or on natural over-tones, or on fourths, or on any such intellectual principle; forged polyphony, purely orchestral, and conceived in defiance of its parent, the human voice; and the blind thirst for more colours and new colours to which we owe the irksome monotony of opulence and the disappearance of the capacity to express.

Harmony vanishes soon, but organic polyphony such as we find in Bach lives for ever. Yet the great historic cycle which started with Bach is obviously drawing to its close. The new polyphony and its Bach will come to us from the East. Already signs of it appear in the works of a few composers such as Gniéssin, Miaskovsky, and Pizzetti.

A NEW THEORY

In the July issue of the same periodical Maurice Touzé proceeds to show that the bounds of diatonic tonality are too narrow for the music of to-day, and that both the evolution from the Greek modes to the diatonic system through the modes of the Latin Church, and the evolution of melody throughout the course of centuries, point towards the advent of what he calls 'chromatic tonality.' Having led us thus far, however, he stops somewhat abruptly.

NEW INFORMATION ON OLD COMPOSERS

In the Revue Musicale (August) Henry Prunières retraces the history of Paolo Lorenzani's sojourn at the Court of France (1678-94), and describes the score of this composer's opera Nicandro e Fileno, which he recently discovered among the manuscripts preserved at the Paris Bibliothèque Nationale. In this score he finds a good deal to praise. Lorenzani, he says, provides a link between the style of Lully and that of Campra and Rameau.

In the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (April-May) Robert Sondheimer analyses in their various aspects Franz Beck's Symphonies.

In the Revue Musicale (August) G. de Saint-Foix gives many interesting particulars on Jean Schobert's career and compositions.

ON VARIOUS MODERN COMPOSERS

In connection with the second Kammermusikfest at Donaueschingen, the Neue Musik-Zeitung (July 20) provides a quantity of very useful information on the following composers and their works: Ernst Krenek, Richard Zoellner, Edmund Schröder, Rudolf Dinkel, Hermann Grabner, Bernard van Dieren, Reinhold Laquai, Hans Jürgen von der Wense, Felix Petyrek, Max Butting, Fidelio F. Finke, and Paul Hindemith.

The June issue of the Musikblätter des Anbruch is devoted to Russian musicians, and contains articles on the present tendencies by Dr. O. von Riesemann, Stravinsky by Ansermet, Kusnezsky by B. Schloezer, Moussorgsky and Prokofiev by M.-D. Calvocoressi, Music in Soviet Russia, the latest doings of Russian composers and performers who have emigrated from Russia, by Prof. Boris Zak, and other interesting contributions, among which an amusingly sarcastic little 'Guide-book on Russian Music,' by André Cœurvy, deserves special mention. It leaves unscathed practically none of the writers who have dealt with Russian music.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

The Musician's Bookshelf

A REAL APPRECIATION COURSE

If at present there is a slight revulsion against the 'musical appreciation' movement, the reason is to be found in the tendency of some of its practitioners to put last things first. For example, far too much importance has been attached to the hearer's ability to distinguish the tones of various orchestral instruments—even to his knowledge of their appearance and methods of tone-production—to his 'spotting' of motives, and so on. These are pleasant pastimes and byways of knowledge for the man in the auditorium, and there are times when he may find them even useful, but they are a long way off being generally necessary to his musical salvation. Indeed, they may often be a hindrance in switching his attention from the spirit to the letter. The fact is, really appreciative listening demands a measure of musicianship of a quantity and quality that cannot be got by the reading of books of facts, however interesting and accurate such books may be. The student, like the student of harmony or any other branch of musical science, must check and clinch his progress by the working of exercises. At a well-managed course of appreciation classes this can be done, but books on the subject are apt to lead to little more than the acquirement of a dangerous smattering. As we can't all attend classes there is room for a correspondence course, and here is the very thing—The Appreciation of Music, being one of the Special Courses of the Art of Life Movement, by Ernest Newman (28, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1). There are six lessons, dealing respectively with Music and the Man—Musical Form—Instinct in Musical Evolution—From Simple to Complex Form—The Poetic Content—A Survey of Musical History. The lessons are issued in six booklets of about thirty pages. Each ends with a recapitulation, and on it is based a test-paper. Mr. Newman covers an extraordinarily wide field, and his expository knack is at its best throughout. Here is no mere collection of more or less important or picturesque facts. Instead we have closely reasoned discussions of principles that derive from them: Mr. Newman is a teacher, not a 'crammer.' Though the course is designed for the amateur, there are not many rank-and-file trained musicians who would not be the better for it. They probably know all that Mr. Newman has set down, and more, but it would do them a world of good to see the conclusions at which they have arrived piecemeal during a long stretch of time set forth in an orderly manner. Indeed, it is extremely likely that Mr. Newman would readily admit that he himself derived as much benefit from the writing of these booklets as most students will from the reading of them.

H. G.

MAC-DOWELL

J. F. Porte's Edward MacDowell—a Great American Tone-Poet: His Life and Music (Kegan Paul, 7s. 6d.) is a useful compilation, giving as it does a complete chronological list of the composer's works, with publishers' names, and an account of the MacDowell Colony. As in his previous books of this type, Mr. Porte comments on the various works, and succeeds in giving us an idea of the character of the music, though he fails to convince us where criticism is concerned. He hedges far too much, for

(Continued on page 639.)

PART-SONG FOR MIXED VOICES

Words by Sir WALTER SCOTT

Music by JOHN POINTER, Op. 21, No. 4

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegretto

SOPRANO
Proud Mai - sie is in the wood, Walk - ing so ear - ly; Sweet

ALTO
Proud Mai - sie is in the wood, Walk - ing so ear - ly; Sweet

TENOR
Proud Mai - sie is in the wood, Walk - ing so ear - ly; Sweet

BASS
Proud Mai - sie is in the wood, Walk - ing so ear - ly; Sweet

(For practice only)
Allegretto ♩ = 126
f

Rob - in sits on the bush, Sing - ing so rare - ly. "Tell . . me, thou

Rob - in sits on the bush, Sing - ing so rare - ly. "Tell . . me, thou

Rob - in sits on the bush, Sing - ing so rare - ly.

Ro - bin sits on the bush, Sing - ing so rare - ly.

Copyright, 1922, by Novello and Company, Limited

bon-nie bird, When shall I mar-ry me?"

bon-nie bird, When shall I mar-ry me?"

p cres. "When . . . six braw
p cres. "When . . . six braw

gen-tle-men Kirk-ward shall car-ry ye." (With closed lips)
f pp

gen-tle-men Kirk-ward shall car-ry ye." f pp

p sotto voce Proud Mai-sie is in the wood, Walk-ing so ear-ly; Sweet
p sotto voce Proud Mai-sie is in the wood, Walk-ing so ear-ly; Sweet
p sotto voce Proud Mai-sie is in the wood, Walk-ing so ear-ly; Sweet p sotto voce Proud Mai-sie is in the wood, Walk-ing so ear-ly; Sweet

p

dim. mp

Rob - in sits on the bush, Sing - ing . . so rare - ly. . . "Who .

dim. mp

Rob - in sits on the bush, Sing - ing . . so rare - ly. . . "Who .

dim. mp

Rob - in sits on the bush, Sing - ing . . so rare - ly. . .

dim. mp

Rob - in sits on the bush, Sing - ing . . so rare - ly. . .

. . makes the bri - dal bed, Bir - die, say tru - ly!" . .

. . makes the bri - dal bed, Bir - die, say tru - ly!"

p

"The

p

"The

p

cres. pp

gray-head - ed sex - ton, That delves the grave du - ly. . . (With closed lips)

cres. pp

gray-head - ed sex - ton, That delves the grave du - ly. . . (With closed lips)

cres. pp

p pp sotto voce

(With closed lips) Proud Mai - sie is in the wood, Walk - ing so

p pp sotto voce

(With closed lips) Proud Mai - sie is in the wood, Walk - ing so

mf pp

"The glow - - worm o'er grave and

p

"The glow - - worm o'er grave and pp p

mf cres.

ear - ly, so ear - - ly. "The glow - - worm o'er

mf cres.

ear - ly, "The glow - - worm o'er grave .. and stone .. shall .

cres.

stone .. Shall light thee, shall light .. thee stead - y, . . The mf cres.

stone .. Shall light thee, shall light thee, shall light thee .. stead - -

mf cres.

grave .. and stone .. Shall light .. thee stead - y; The owl from the

f light thee stead - y, shall light thee stead - y; The owl from the

f glow - worm shall light .. thee stead - y; The owl from the

f

- y, o'er grave .. o'er grave .. and stone; The owl from the

f

[illegible]

The image shows a page from a musical score for the song "The Rose Tree." It includes vocal parts for two voices (Soprano and Alto) and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "wel - come, . . . proud la - dy, proud la - dy!" The music is in 3/4 time and features various dynamics such as mp (mezzo-piano), p (piano), and pp (pianissimo). The piano part includes a bass line and a treble line with chords and arpeggios. The score is written in a standard musical notation with a key signature of one flat (B-flat) and a common time signature of 3/4.

Sweet Rob - in sits on the bush,
 Sweet Rob - in sits on the bush,
 Sweet Rob - in sits on the bush,
 Sweet Rob - in sits on the bush, proud la - dy!" (Close lips)

rall.
 sing - ing so rare - ly. . .
 rall.
 sing - ing so rare - ly. . .
 rall.
 sing - ing so rare - ly. . .
 (Close lips)

(Continued from page 632.)

one thing. Thus, the reader would not expect the following dicta to apply to one and the same work :

'The first Pianoforte Concerto . . . hardly ranks as one of MacDowell's finest works, it having been written before he had attained, in any notable degree, to his mature impressionist style . . . brilliantly written, bold and original in harmonic treatment, and full of youthful fire and vigour . . . has a lasting white heat of inspiration . . . still remarkably brilliant and fresh . . . cannot now be considered as thoroughly representative of MacDowell . . . has a certain individuality . . . considerably more than a mere academic experiment . . .'

One would have thought that a combination of boldness, originality, fire, vigour, brilliance, freshness, and white heat of inspiration should be more than enough to save a work from being praised with such faint damns as 'something more than a mere academic experiment' and 'it has a certain individuality.' But Mr. Porte goes even farther, and ends by telling us that 'a two-page work from the Sea Pieces or New England Idylls is of greater artistic value than the whole of the Concerto in question.' If so, the Concerto is bad. On the other hand, if it possesses the qualities Mr. Porte says it does, it is one of the finest concertos in existence, and should be at once brought forward to take the place of the half dozen war-horses of which most of us are heartily tired.

Mr. Porte is similarly unhelpful when he delivers himself of such soft nothings as these :

Impromptu is interesting and musical.

Moto perpetuo is cleverly written and musical.

Burlesque is a musical number . . .

Traumerei has a certain beauty of its own, indicating the composer's capacity for deep expression.

Midsummer Lullaby has much charm and grace in its refined and sensitive verse inspiration.

Certain of these pieces are rather good and are full of suggestive effort.

The fifth piece is lovely and tender, but not particularly expressive.

And so on. The fact is, annotation of a long list of works, many of them alike in character, is one of the most difficult of tasks, and Mr. Porte has much to learn before he can tackle the job with success. Among the things of which he is apparently not yet aware is the simple rule that in the case of a work calling for no comment mere mention is all that is necessary. He will then spare himself and us such tritenesses as those quoted.

However, Mr. Porte deserves our thanks for a book which, despite its failings on the literary and critical sides, is of considerable value as a work of reference. We hope it will draw fruitful attention to the music of a delightful but neglected composer.

F.

BIRD MUSIC

Walter Garstang's Songs of the Birds (John Lane, 6s.) is a book whose message will be as welcome to the average reader as the gift of sight would be to anyone partially blind. It is true that most of us know the note of the cuckoo, and appreciate by proxy the song of the nightingale, but to say this is little more than saying that most of us know the smell of a rose, and appreciate the daffodil when Wordsworth prompts us. If, however, we could only use our ears as easily as we use our eyes, we should find that the air is as full of beauties as a herbaceous border is full of colours. With Prof. Garstang's help, our listening should become more sensitive and the pleasures of solitude and silence correspondingly greater. The book is divided into two parts ; the first is devoted to the theoretical questions of bird-songs ; the second is a collection of these songs, which the author states are little more than impressionistic sketches, accompanied by verses suggested by the rhythm of the song. The first part is of great interest to all nature-lovers, but to musicians it is in the second part that the chief interest lies. These examples of the songs of several birds do accurately reproduce the wood-notes wild, though the pianoforte is not the instrument for testing them. Far better is a simple metal pipe or a piccolo stop on an organ. The least satisfactory reproductions—those of the garden-warbler, the white-throat—are the most successful musically. Their music, though obviously natural, is too closely shaped to a country dance pattern to give us the mood of the careless composer. On the other hand, the more fragmentary examples are wholly convincing, and help us to realise how near our great composers are in their inspiration to nature. I believe that if the redstart's song were played to musical people, every one would exclaim : 'I know that ; it is the opening of one of Bach's Cantatas.'

To all these musical examples Prof. Garstang has added imitative syllables, called vocables, to which he attaches more importance than the average reader will feel to be their due. He expressly states that the song rather than the music is his theme. Probably to those who already know the rhythmic pattern and melodic outline of the song, these vocables may be satisfying, but as they stand they certainly produce no music, and are meaningless as poetry.

The book, which is quaintly illustrated with sketches by Mr. J. A. Shepherd, is wholly delightful, and everyone who reads it will be a lifelong debtor to the author for having taught his ears to hear.

A. B. S.

New Music

CHORAL MUSIC

Elgar's five part-songs for male voices have been arranged by the composer for S.A.T.B. (Novello). In this new form they are no less effective than in the original—indeed, Feasting I watch, After many a dusty mile, and Yea, cast me from heights of the mountains, gain somewhat from the greater range and variety of vocal colour. With the delightful miniatures It's oh ! to be a wild wind and Whether I find thee, they make up a set that will give an average choral society little trouble so far as mere notes are concerned, though the best of singers will find abundant scope in the matter of interpretation. As test-pieces for competitive purposes they should be invaluable, giving as they do, in a few pages, so much opportunity for finished singing.

A set of four part-songs for T.B.B. by Ethel M. Boyce (Novello) is well above the average of works in this form. Miss Boyce has chosen good and unhackneyed words, and has provided them with fresh and attractive music. The Bowl and The Bramble are set to whimsical words by Thomas Love Peacock ; the expressive Dirge and stately Choric Measure have words by Thomas Lovell Beddoes.

Adam Carse's well-known part-song for mixed voices, The Tide rises, the tide falls, has been arranged by the composer for T.T.B.B. (Novello).

A beautiful little work is Gerrard Williams's setting of Her Hair the net of Golden Wire, for T. (or A.) T.B.B. (Novello). Mr. Williams's harmonic idiom is one that none but good singers will be able to attack with certainty, although they are helped in this case by the slow pace of the greater part of the song, and by the vocal character of the writing. Moreover, the harmony, original and unexpected though it be, is quite natural. The work gives abundant scope for sonorous and expressive singing.

Those who are best suited by music on more conventional lines will find Frederic N. Lohr's tuneful A Slumber Song meet their case. It is an arrangement for T.T.B.B. of a part-song originally written for mixed voices (Novello).

Two part-songs for S.A.T.B. by Ethel M. Boyce (Novello), Sweet Echo and On May Morning, show the same admirable qualities as the composer's male-voice songs reviewed above.

There is always room for one more good setting of familiar words; here is an expressive and not very exacting one by George Rathbone of Weep you no more, sad fountains (Novello). The source of the words is given as 'old English'—an unnecessarily vague ascription, seeing that the lyric is a well-known item in Dowland's Third Book of Songs or Aires.

Arnold Bax's Now is the Time of Christymas (Murdoch) is a carol for men's voices (T.T.B.B.), flute, and pianoforte, the words dating from the 15th century. The carol is shorter than the composer's Of a rose I sing, with which it has a good deal in common in its blend of the archaic and modern. The flute is mainly concerned with a sprightly jig. A good pianist is called for, if the more awkward and spiky conglomerations of notes are to be handled unflinchingly. The tonic roughness and vigour of this carol make it a stimulating affair. H. G.

SONGS

Of the Three Songs of Lord Berners, published under one cover by Chester, two are settings of sea shanty words, the odd one dealing with a Masfield six-lined quip, Theodore, or the Pirate King. All three are amusing, but much less so, we fancy, than they would have been with a more direct treatment. It may be argued that the joke lies in this disparity between the simple nonsensical text and the highly-spiced dissonances. If so the humour is of a type that soon wears thin. Despite the composer's reputation for wit, it is felt that here he jests (as will his singer and accompanist) wⁱ deeficulty.

There is no wit, but plenty of robust humour, in three songs by Peter Warlock, Good Ale, Captain Stratton's Fancy, and Mr. Belloc's Fancy (Augener). Good Ale is a setting of a famous old drinking-song of the 15th century by an anonymous toper whose enthusiasm for our national beverage is quite disarming. Mr. Warlock gives the words a folk-song-like air and an admirably direct accompaniment. An uproarious stroke occurs at the end, where the time is changed to 2-4 prestissimo, and the drinker's impatience becomes amusingly frantic. The composer seems to have felt some of these high spirits in the mere writing of the score, for he couldn't refrain from adding Hey to the Prestissimo! Sung with the right bibulous enthusiasm (and to the right sympathetic audience) this song would bring down the house. But the singer must choose his occasion with care. In Captain Stratton's Fancy we have Mr. Masfield singing the praise of a less noble liquor—rum. Mr. Belloc's Fancy is a setting of a parody by J. C. Squire—a piece of nonsense glorifying in Bellocian style beer and Sussex. In both—especially the latter—Mr. Warlock has written rattling good tunes and appropriately full-blooded accompaniments.

Masfield provides the words for John Ireland's Vagabond (Augener), one of the simplest of the composer's songs, and one of the best. It can be read at sight by any average singer and player, but every touch tells.

Almost as simple is Alexander Brent-Smith's The Cotswold Farmers (Novello), in which the poem by John Drinkwater, telling of the ghostly visits of local worthies, is admirably set. The dragging syncopations, suspensions, and occasional harmonic pungencies, all play their part without a hint of being dragged in.

A bright setting of When daisies pied is that of Percy Judd (Augener). It is not easy to be so essentially simple, and at the same time fresh; but the composer has succeeded in this case. H. G.

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

One Tarantella is bound to be pretty much like another, but Alfred Wrigley manages to get an unusual amount of freshness into the main part of his Rondo alla Tarantella—far more of a Tarantella than a Rondo, by the way. A capital solo for a deft pair of hands, the work is one of a series by blind composers published for the National Institute for the Blind. It is issued also in Braille type (Ryalls & Jones, 224, Great Portland Street, W.1, and Grange Road, Birkenhead).

Kaikhosru Sorabji's two pianoforte pieces, In the Hot-house and Toccata, issued under one cover, are like the composer's Sonata reviewed in these columns recently, fiendishly difficult. Mr. Sorabji is surely giving us the last word in pianism. The present writer has had the pleasure of hearing him play these works, and so is able to testify that they really do 'come off.' It is impossible to give any idea of this extraordinary music without copious use of examples, which considerations of space forbid. It must suffice to draw attention to the pieces for the benefit of pianists who want something really craggy at which to throw themselves (London and Continental Music Publishing Co.).

Manuel de Falla's 'Recit du Pêcheur' is an extract from the ballet El Amor Brujo. It fills one page only, and is so charming that we wish it filled several more in the same vein (Chester).

From Augener's comes Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor, edited by Alex. Roloff, a version of the orchestral part, arranged for a second pianoforte, being placed below the solo part. H. G.

CHAMBER MUSIC

The directors of the Carnegie Collection of British Music have published W. G. Whittaker's Among the Northumbrian Hills—free variations on an original theme for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello (Stainer & Bell). The work is a characteristic example of modern music. The title is homely enough, but although the theme itself may possibly be connected in some way with the Northumbrian hills, the variations are concerned with other subjects than Northumberland, as the sub-titles tell: 'A fantastic garden in the Spring,' 'Children at play,' 'Swallows,' 'By the fireside,' &c. Moreover, Mr. Whittaker introduces a tune from Mr. Cecil Sharp's collection of 'English Folk-Songs for Schools' in the eighth ('Hay-making') variation and in the eleventh ('Farewell'). Hence it is useless to attempt to measure this quintet by the usual canons of criticism, no matter how broadly these may be conceived and interpreted. 'Free' variations have to-day the right to be above the law, and one hesitates, for instance, to ask even whether on page 12 in the first note of the first violin the accidental has been omitted by chance, or whether the second c of the bass on page 10 should not be strengthened by a sharp when it clashes with the c natural of the upper harmony? Your modern, free composer has made his own a line from the Free-booter Songs of the Wallace, 'The law of the lawless is the law I obey.' Well, we shall not envy him his freedom. The law of the lawless, even in music, is a fearful thing. Mr. Whittaker, for instance, appears haunted by the fear that his chords are not thick enough, or that there are not enough sevenths and ninths in the world to satisfy the modern craving for dissonance. Certainly his music has none of the light-heartedness of freedom. He is no new Mark Tapley going to the conquest of an unknown world with a tune on his lips. And it is a great pity that free composition should be such an anxious business, for Mr. Whittaker lacks neither the poetic imagination nor that sense of form and proportion that go such a long way towards making music worth having.

Mr. Arthur Bliss's Conversations for violin, viola, violoncello, flute, and oboe (Goodwin & Tabb) uphold worthily the composer's reputation for wit. The first conversation locus is a committee room; the scene of the second is a wood; of the third a ball-room; the fourth is a monologue for cor Anglais, and the fifth and longest is entitled 'In the Tube at Oxford Circus.' They are all, on the whole, as whimsical and pointed as the works which first made Mr. Bliss known here. Just one or two touches now and again will cause some alarm amongst the extremists of modernity. The whole of the 'committee meeting' conversation is in common time, and the whole of the 'ball-room' conversation in 3-8 time. Moreover, there is no rag-time riot in the latter, which will be to some the unkindest cut of all. Still more significant, some bars of the second conversation ('In the Wood') are almost charming. It is not for us to discover what this portends. But it is gratifying to see Mr. Bliss enlarging his province and, apparently, refining and retouching. Obviously in this way lies salvation. It is not a question of going back to the old rules, but of freeing ourselves from present slackness. Even the worth of wit and humour—which is what modern music could most readily give us—can be over-rated. After all there is nothing more boring than the professional wit. We have had in the past an overdose of sentimentality. Let us try not to burden our successors with an inheritance of clumsy humour. B. V.

ORCHESTRAL SCORES

There can be no doubt that, enjoyable as is the Elgarian version of Bach's C minor Fugue, it suffers from the lack of the Fantasia which so effectively serves as prelude. In most pairs of works of the kind the connection between the movements is of the slenderest; both prelude and fugue are self-contained movements which may be separated with little or no loss—indeed, in the case of some of Bach's longest organ works (e.g., the St. Anne Prelude and Fugue, the Toccata and Fugue in F, the Wedge Prelude and Fugue, and the Dorian Toccata and Fugue) the movements are best played as separate works. The normal ear tires under the burden of two big pieces delivered by so weighty a medium as the organ. But the C minor Fantasia and Fugue are so obviously joined together that they should not lightly be put asunder. They are of modest length; they are strongly contrasted, the melancholy questioning of the Fantasia receiving the finest of answers in the swinging vigour of the Fugue; and, to make their connection even more obvious, Bach ends the Fantasia on a half-close in the dominant—that is to say, he doesn't end it at all, but signifies in the plainest of ways that the Fugue should follow at once. The full score of Elgar's transcription of the Fantasia is now published (Novello). So much will be said about it after it has been heard that there is no need to dwell on it now. Organists will be interested to know that Sir Edward marks the work Poco allegretto, with about seventy-six crotchets to the minute. His phrasing marks are worth careful study. Throughout he emphasises the string-like character of the music—a point too often overlooked by organists when playing the work. Few of Bach's movements yield a better return for careful phrasing, because of the pronounced suggestions of chamber music in its texture. Sir Edward adopts a quiet treatment, working up a big climax at about a dozen bars from the end. It is worth noting that although the bass-drum is employed, its use (save for one bang at the climax) is confined to the quiet opening and a similar passage later. Marked pp on both occasions, and with its scarcely audible thuds falling on alternate beats (and so producing syncopation), it should have an impressive effect. The score, like that of the Fugue, is a fascinating study in orchestration.

The full score of Edward German's tone-poem The Willow Song, written for the Centenary of the Royal Academy of Music, has just been published (Novello). It is an expressive little work, quiet save for one climax. Messrs. Novello have also recently issued full scores of two short compositions of Gustav Holst—Country Song and Marching Song. These comparatively early works—they bear the Opus number 22—have so far attracted less attention than is due to music so attractive and straightforward in style. Now that the scores are available it is to be hoped that conductors (especially of small and amateur orchestras) will make their acquaintance. They are written for two flutes, one oboe, two clarinets, two bassoons, two horns, two trumpets, one trombone, drums, one small drum, bass-drum, and strings. The repertory for such a modest force is not large, so these capital little pieces should be welcome. Another work with claims on the attention of amateur, school, and other small string orchestras is the Chiddingfold Suite of Thomas F. Dunhill (Novello). It consists of five movements—'March Prelude' (founded on an old Surrey folk-tune), 'Dryads and Fauns,' 'The Mummers Arrive' (in which the old song The Faithful Plough is a prominent feature), 'The Vision of Richard Peyto,' and 'Maypole Dance.' The music is tuneful and vigorous, and free from complications and subtleties.

Yet another work that should appeal to small orchestras is a Suite from Purcell's The Gordian Knot Untied, for strings, edited by Gustav Holst, who has supplied additional parts for two flutes, two oboes, two clarinets, one bassoon, and two drums. These extra parts, however, are ad libitum, and are also written in such a way that if the complete wind force is not available such of the instruments as are at hand will be effective. There are five movements—an Overture, consisting of a slow Introduction and a fine bustling Allegro, leading by way of a brief Adagio into an Air; Rondeau Minuet; Air; and a Jig. A second Suite drawn from the same source is in the press. It was a happy thought to rescue such delightful music from the play; now that the interest in Purcell is so keen it is to be hoped that this salvage work will be carried on with vigour.

Two full scores of works published under the auspices of the Carnegie Trust have been received. Learmont Drysdale's Overture Tam o' Shanter was written as long ago as 1891, and unfortunately shows its age only too plainly. Thematically the work is undistinguished, and the scoring is lacking in subtlety. There is so much modern and far more original work in need of a helping hand that it seems a pity to sink capital in the publication of music which, promising enough thirty years ago, is likely to receive few performances to-day. Far better in every way is Ina Boyle's Rhapsody, The Magic Harp. A mere glance at the score shows qualities that make us wish for an opportunity for hearing the work. It should be added that the engraving and binding of these scores is worthy of high praise.

Very characteristic of its composer is Frederick Delius's Song before Sunrise (Augener). A small orchestra is employed—two flutes, one oboe, two clarinets, two bassoons, two horns, and strings. The strings are, however, divided throughout. This very engaging little work—it takes no more than four or five minutes to play—is compounded of the snatches of melody, deft touches of orchestration, and the subtly-shifting harmonic scheme that we expect from the composer. It should be heard soon; although there is no lack of short and attractive orchestral works there should be plenty of room for this one.

H. G.

STRING MUSIC

Messrs. Augener's publications this month consist mainly of arrangements. Mendelssohn's second Violoncello Sonata has been arranged for viola, and we should think that the result will appeal especially to teachers and students. More interesting is the Old English Violin Album, arranged for pianoforte and violin by Adam Carse, which contains various specimens of old English music. This is a step in the right direction, for an addition to the various 'Albums for the Young' has long been overdue. The editor, moreover, has not attempted to peptonise portions of great classical works, which, even when technically easy, are invariably above players of limited experience and undeveloped taste. The original works are two, a Notturmo and Aria for violoncello and pianoforte, both by Mr. Ludwig Lebell. Neither the aria nor the nocturne rises to great heights, but neatness and modesty are commendable virtues.

B. V.

The Brisbane Musical Union (now in its fiftieth year) has appointed Mr. Henry John King conductor. Mr. King's predecessor was Mr. George Sampson, who had occupied the position for twenty-five years.

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

Though primarily intended for use in schools, the set of records prepared by Prof. Walford Davies for the Education Department of H.M.V., under the title, 'Melody Lectures,' should be brought to the notice of gramophonists in general. There are (we like to feel) many keen amateurs who are using the gramophone not only for recreative purposes, but also as a means of increasing their musical knowledge. The records are discussed in detail in the September number of the School Music Review. It must suffice in this place to mention the set, and to advise readers to obtain from the Company, or their local dealer, the four-page leaflet giving Prof. Walford Davies's Foreword and particulars. I understand that an analytical booklet dealing with the set is in the Press, and will be obtainable free of charge.

Evidently intended for schools and other places where folk-dancing is practised are some excellent records of country dances played by the Black Diamonds Band, under the direction of Mr. Cecil Sharp. These may be—in fact, should be—enjoyed also by those of us who, debarred by the weight of years from dancing, can still appreciate a jolly tune. A 10-in. d.-s. has 'Chelsea Reach,' 'Confess,' and 'The Lady in the Dark'; a 12-in. d.-s. gives us 'Haste to the Wedding' and 'The Mary and Dorothy.'

Only one orchestral record has been received for review this month—the Overture to Der Freischütz, on a 12-in. d.-s., conducted by Mr. Albert Coates. This is a capital reproduction of a work that still remains one of the best and most enjoyable of its type.

The best of the vocal records is a 12-in. single-sided of Lucrezia Bori singing 'O gioia, la nube leggiera' from Wolf-Ferrari's Il Segreto di Susanna. The orchestral accompaniment comes out unusually well.

I am not enthusiastic about the record of Martinelli singing 'O mio piccolo' from Leoncavallo's Zaza (12-in. single). Aren't we getting a bit over-fed with these throbbing, sobbing, catch-in-the-throat operatic tenor solos? It is high time the possessors of fine voices gave some attention to fine songs.

Miss Edna Thornton is handicapped by her choice of songs in a 12-in. d.-s. Hope Temple's Rory Darlin' has long since been a back number, and Moszkowski's Cradle Song (Près du Berceau) has a fatal defect—it doesn't sound a bit like a lullaby. A song that becomes quite strenuous at times never yet helped a babelet off to by-byes.

Chamber music is not well represented. A 12-in. d.-s. has a not very good Minuet from Mozart's Quartet in D minor, and a far more interesting movement from Ottokar Nováček's E minor Quartet.

It is to be hoped that the thousands of incompetent pianists who play Rachmaninov's Prelude in C sharp minor will obtain the 10-in. record which gives us the composer's own performance. They will then learn that the middle section must be worked up to a furious pace, and that the recapitulation of the main subject must be played far, far quicker than they have ever imagined. They will find both these feats beyond them, and may perhaps see the advisability of refraining from further travesties of a work that, properly played, is a fine piece of music. By the by, a curious fact about this performance of Rachmaninov's is that at two points in the closing section he repeats a chord in a way that is not in the copy. This fine record suffers only from too much pianissimo at the beginning and end.

Church and Organ Music

THE SILBERMANN ORGANS AT DRESDEN

By JOHN MATTHEWS

As Saxony is likely to remain a terra incognita to most English organists of this generation, some particulars of the old Silbermann organs as they existed in Merkel's time may be of interest.

In 1885 their most characteristic features were absolutely unaltered. One might hear and play Bach under the same conditions as when Bach himself visited the city and gave a recital in the Frauenkirche. Equal temperament had long since been adopted, and one little peculiarity of Silbermann's corrected: he invariably omitted the lowest C♯ in the pedals, deeming it a needless expense with the limited range of keys allowed in the old system of tuning—to which he adhered in spite of Bach's refusal to consider an organ for Leipzig built under these conditions. No doubt new and more convenient pedal-boards—though still very wide in scale—had long since been added, but the old key-boards mostly remained. They were, of course, but little suited to our modern organ music, yet one certainly realised Bach as is not always possible even on a fine and up-to-date English organ.

With each great advance in the art of organ-building a different type of instrument is created*, which in turn creates a style of its own in composition. One could not imagine a Widor Symphony or a Hollins Concert Overture on a Silbermann organ, and the Dresden organists had almost of necessity to keep to the well-known classics; I doubt if any of them were so much as even acquainted with César Franck.

The Silbermann organ I was best acquainted with personally was that in the Frauenkirche, where it stood in an elaborate case of white and gold in a commanding position behind the altar. The reader may imagine the dome of St. Paul's, reduced in size, and with four or five galleries encircling its interior. The tone floated away freely, though the echo was not so great as that in the Chapel of the Royal Court, and the twelfth-sounding ranks stood out rather prominently to modern ears. The touch was not unpleasant, and the mechanism quite reliable, as all these organs—in those days at any rate—were maintained in good condition, and mostly well in tune. This organ was a three-manual of forty-three speaking stops, as follows: Great, 14; Echo, 11; Choir, 10; Pedal, 8; yet, owing to the light wind-pressure, and the system of blowing by connecting six planks to stand on with separate feeders, students, by merely stepping from one plank to another whilst the others were slowly settling down could blow for each other's practice for a long time without fatigue. The draw-stops were huge china-faced knobs as large as door-knobs, set in a rim of brass inside rosewood. There were, of course, no composition pedals, but one or two knobs labelled 'Sperr ventil' cut off the wind from groups of stops such as the mixtures or reeds without withdrawing the stops themselves. The reeds would not find any admirers to-day, though they were not so crazy as those in Silbermann's organ in the Church of St. Sophia opposite the Opera House. The gambas and flutes were good, the diapasons free and bold in tone, the twelfth-sounding ranks in the mixtures perhaps, as already noted, unduly prominent—but Silbermann, like our own Henry Willis, had certainly learnt the art of building up the tone into an artistic whole, expressing his own individuality. This feature with Silbermann was more noticeable than the excellence of any particular stop. I can fully endorse, from my own recollection, the following remarks of Dr. Albert Schweitzer:

'On going from a modern organ to one of Silbermann's a player feels at first only a lack of all the auxiliary devices which appeared indispensable for a delicately graduated interpretation of Bach's works. But in a short time there is a change. One begins to delight in the obligatory simplicity, and is surprised to see how little the refinement of the transitions is missed, and how characteristic, yet natural withal, are the effects now obtained, simply because one has control of but a few gradations of tone-power which cannot be shaded off into the other. There are works whose full beauty is manifested only under such conditions.'

The English organist who has never played a large organ without a Swell may be surprised to hear that one does not miss it so much as might be supposed when one has an ample number of foundation-stops in nice gradation as to power, and not differing very much in quality, with every stop blending in a free and open space. Under such conditions a fine crescendo can be built up with a friend to pull out the stops—each one a handful—in accordance with a carefully pre-arranged scheme. Although Merkel had no Swell pedal in any of the organs he played, he by no means despised it—in fact he praised the little Walker organ in the English church, and extemporized charmingly on it to my friend the former organist, Mr. B. S. Ward.

In the 'Church of the Three Kings' at Dresden Neustadt stands another Silbermann organ, where, in company with the late Mr. Franklin Peterson (formerly principal of Melbourne University), we met the organist Herr C. A. Fisher, who played to us. Here for the organist's use stood by the keys a large and ancient hour-glass, and the very organ-seat upon which Mozart once sat and played to the people of Dresden. What an opportunity for a novelist to describe how he enraptured the people—half a column of high-flown descriptive writing at least should follow. But, alas! the cold fact remains that Mozart, the 'divine Mozart,' left a record in the vestry stating that he 'could not warm the people by his playing.'

What the present condition of these Silbermann organs may be I do not know. Perhaps some reader will tell us if, during the war, in the great search for metal, any of them were stripped of their metal pipes. The bells in the English Church were broken up in the Church itself, but the organ was spared, as probably was the case with most organs in Saxony.

ALL HALLOWS', LOMBARD STREET

This interesting old City church—the last that Wren rebuilt after the Great Fire, on the site of which a church has stood since 1067, mentioned in Domesday Book as All Hallows Grasschurch—is now having its organ rebuilt. The first organ was built in 1703, at a cost of £350, subscribed for by a few generous supporters of the church. It stood in the west gallery (now demolished), and had one manual comprising nine stops (no pedal). The builder (or organ-maker as he was called in those days) was Renatus Harris, and the main condition of the contract was that if the congregation did not like it after six months' trial the organ was to be taken away and the gallery left in as good condition as it was previous to the erection of the instrument. The organ survived. The first organist was Renatus Harris, jun. He was paid £22 per annum, to play at the services and to keep the organ in maintenance. This organ did duty till 1870, when it was rebuilt and moved to the east end, south side. Seven of the old stops were retained, and formed the Great manual; a Swell manual of seven stops, a Choir manual of five stops, and a Pedal 16-ft. open diapason were added, with four couplers. This has existed to the present time, with tuning and minor repairs. The improvements now being carried out comprise cleaning throughout; existing manual action repaired; new standard R.C.O. pedal-board, with tubular pneumatic action—the 16-ft. Bourdon being borrowed from the Swell manual to make a second pedal stop; a new 8-ft. Oboe to tenor C on Swell manual; the existing Mixture on the Great taken out, and a Clarabella 8-ft. to tenor C in place thereof; the Choir organ to be enclosed in a Swell box; and the present Gemshorn 4-ft. on that manual to be replaced by a Voix Celeste to tenor C to undulate with the existing Dulciana. The cost of all this is being provided for by a worshipper at the church who wishes to be anonymous. Messrs. Gray & Davison are doing the work, and it is hoped shortly to complete the scheme by the addition of a mechanical blowing installation.

* An organ was opened last December in Freiburg University (i/Br.) built in accordance with the directions in the Synagoga Musicum of M. Praetorius, in order to interpret the old organ music with historical correctness.

The original contract ('purchase deed') of the organ was found in the church-safe a few months ago. The verger at All Hallows' will be pleased to show it to any readers who are interested.

H.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Candidates for the Associateship Examination are requested to note that the reference to the Peters' edition of the Trio in C minor (Bach), given in the regulations as Vol. 9, No. 7, relates to the old edition, and that in the new edition it is Vol. 9, No. 9.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING

The fifty-eighth Annual General Meeting was held at the College, Kensington Gore, on Saturday, July 22, 1922, under the chairmanship of the President, Dr. Charles Macpherson. Among the members present were Dr. W. G. Alcock, Mr. H. J. Balfour, Dr. G. J. Bennett, Mr. E. T. Cook, Dr. Alan Gray, Dr. A. Eaglefield Hull, Dr. Stanley Marchant, Dr. H. W. Richards, Dr. F. G. Shinn, Dr. Davan Wetton, Mrs. M. A. Good, Messrs. S. H. Baker, H. Batt, F. W. Belchamber, Miss M. G. Blundin, Messrs. H. Cartner, G. R. Ceiley, J. Coxhead, J. W. Croft, G. D. Cunningham, A. E. Danby, Dr. H. Darke, Messrs. H. P. Dean, E. M. Dent, E. E. Douglas-Smith, D. Edeson, Miss F. J. Fitch, Messrs. R. Goss-Custard, W. Goynne, H. Hall, W. Hancock, L. Harding, P. C. Hayes, H. Hodge, W. G. Hopkins, A. P. Howe, E. G. Hurst, L. M. Jones, W. H. Kirby, Mrs. M. Layton, Messrs. D. C. Leeke-Roe, W. Mallinson, C. A. Marks, O. D. Marsh, D. McIntyre, G. J. Metzler, C. E. Miller, T. T. Noble, W. E. Ogden, B. J. Orsman, A. C. Osman, L. A. Pattison, Dr. W. J. Phillips, Mr. W. J. F. Pugh, Miss M. Renton, Messrs. W. R. Simmons, W. A. Sims, Miss K. Cholditch-Smith, Messrs. S. Smith, H. Stubington, H. W. Sumsion, H. D. F. Taylor, Miss L. R. Trott, Messrs.

T. L. C. Tull, H. Uttley, G. T. Warren, Miss S. G. Watkins, Messrs. S. H. Way, W. G. Webber, H. Wharton-Wells, H. F. Wilkinson, Miss E. M. Williams, Messrs. L. Wilson, C. W. Wright, R. Yarrow, and Dr. H. A. Harding (hon. secretary).

The minutes of the last Annual General Meeting were read and confirmed.

Voting papers for the election of two London members of the Council were distributed to those members who had not voted by post.

Mr. G. R. Ceiley and Mr. Wharton-Wells were appointed scrutineers.

The hon. secretary, Dr. H. A. Harding, read the Annual Report.

FIFTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT.

Your Council have the honour to report that the past Session has been in every way characterised by complete success. There are unmistakable evidences of the steadily maintained prosperity of the College and of the usefulness of its work and mission.

The candidates entering for examination numbered 448, of whom 87 passed.

Your Council are much gratified that the Worshipful Company of Musicians have decided to present their silver medal triennially to the most distinguished candidate at the Fellowship Examination. The first presentation will take place on October 22, 1922, and the recipient will be Mr. G. C. Gray, organist of St. Michael-le-Belfrey, York, the Lafontaine prize-winner, who gained the highest number of marks in organ-playing during the last three years.

Your Council wish to acknowledge their indebtedness to the Worshipful Company of Musicians, and especially to Mr. H. Cart de Lafontaine, who, as Master of the Musicians' Company, used his good offices to make it possible for the candidates of the College to be eligible for this valuable distinction, which will prove a great incentive to our members to excel in organ-playing.

A new departure will be made at the distribution of diplomas. Your Council have decided that at these functions eminent organists shall be invited to play upon the College organ the pieces chosen for the Fellowship or Associateship examinations. It is hoped that members will avail themselves of these opportunities for hearing the test-pieces played by acknowledged masters of the organ.

The examiners appointed for 1921-22 were Sir Frederick Bridge, Sir Walter Parratt, Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Mr. H. J. Balfour, Dr. G. J. Bennett, Dr. Charles Macpherson, Dr. Stanley Marchant, Dr. Alan Gray, Dr. F. J. Read, Dr. H. W. Richards, Dr. F. G. Shinn, and Dr. E. T. Sweeting.

Your Council wish to accord their heartiest thanks to the hon. treasurer, Dr. C. W. Pearce; to the hon. secretary, Dr. H. A. Harding; and to the registrar, Mr. Thomas Shindler, for their assistance, so readily and so generously rendered on all occasions. Your Council also wish to express their obligations to the hon. auditors, Mr. O. D. Belsham and Mr. G. R. Ceiley, and to the professional auditors, Messrs. Pannell & Co.

The work of the College Staff is always characterised by promptitude and accuracy, and their efforts are much appreciated by your Council.

On the proposition of Mr. DOUGLAS-SMITH, seconded by Mr. BELCHAMBER, the Report was adopted.

THE PRESIDENT, in presenting the Annual Financial Statement, said: I am very sorry the hon. treasurer, Dr. Pearce, has not been able to come this morning. We all miss him very much. He had intended to be present, but was prevented at the last moment. If you would like to ask the hon. secretary any questions about this Statement he will be pleased to answer them.

Mr. HERBERT HODGE: There is one question I should like to ask with reference to the item for organ practice, and it is whether in view of the prosperous condition of the College it would be possible to reduce the fees charged for the use of the organ for practice? It seems rather a high price to charge 3s. 6d. an hour at the present time.

THE HON. SECRETARY: I can only say that I will report Mr. Herbert Hodge's suggestion to the Council, who will, I am sure, give it their careful and sympathetic consideration.

Mr. WHARTON-WELLS proposed the adoption of the Financial Statement, and this was seconded by Mr. YARROW and carried.

Mr. E. T. COOK: I have great pleasure in proposing the re-election of Dr. C. W. Pearce as hon. treasurer. We have seen how excellent is the service which he has rendered during the past year, and I am sure we accord him our very heartiest thanks.

Dr. STANLEY MARCHANT: May I second that? We all admire and respect Dr. Pearce. We could not have a better man in his important position.

The Resolution was carried.

Dr. H. W. RICHARDS: I have before had the honour of proposing that Dr. H. A. Harding be re-elected hon. secretary, and I am not tired of doing it; in fact, I would like to do it every year, because it is a joy to all of us to know that Dr. Harding is willing to go on working for the College, and to continue to do all he does for our benefit. We all know Dr. Harding's great interest in and enthusiasm for this College. He lives for it. Instead of calling him Dr. H. A. Harding, we ought to call him Dr. R. C. O. Harding. He is a wonderful secretary. Not only does he deserve our implicit faith in him, which is of course an essential qualification in an hon. secretary, but we have the deepest respect for him both as a man and as a friend. If you want to see Dr. Harding in his best form just try and say something against the Royal College of Organists. I can only say heaven help that wretched man, whoever he may be. If you value the College keep our present hon. secretary, and never let him slip, for that would be the worst day's work the College had ever done. Having personal knowledge of the enthusiasm he puts into his work, and the delight it is to work with him, I think we cannot do better than grasp and retain him while he has health and strength to discharge the duties of the office.

Dr. F. G. SHINN: I have pleasure in seconding the appointment of Dr. Harding, and in thanking him for the time and trouble he gives to the College. He certainly lives for the R.C.O., and he gives his time unsparingly to looking after its interests in every way.

THE PRESIDENT: I have great pleasure in putting this Resolution to the meeting. I can only say that I owe a tremendous lot to Dr. Harding. It would be impossible to be president without such a partner to guide one on every occasion. I cannot imagine the Royal College of Organists without Dr. Harding. He does everything to advance its interests.

The Resolution was carried with acclamation.

Dr. HARDING: Some kind things have been said about me by Dr. Richards and Dr. Shinn, and you have endorsed them and re-elected me hon. secretary. I hope you have done the right thing! In any case I thank you very much. Personally I am deeply interested in the work of the College. I have the greatest respect for the Council, who are very considerate to me and who do their best to lighten my labour, and I owe a great deal to Mr. Thomas Shindler, our registrar, for his able assistance. I really try to look after the interests of the whole College. I think I am always on the side of the candidates when some monstrous new tests are proposed by some fierce obstructionist. As regards the members generally, I am rather vexed with them about one thing, and that is that they do not vote. There was a great fuss made about the right to vote for the Council, but now we have the postal vote, out of fifteen hundred members only about five hundred exercise their right in this respect. I hope the members will think about it; they ought to take an interest in the people who are elected on the Council. I suppose I am a kind of watchdog. I wish to be so as regards the interests of music and of organists especially, and organists generally have something to do with Church music! There has been a committee formed by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York to inquire into the state of Church Music. I want to say a word about that, because it seems to me that the Archbishops have been somewhat ill-advised in not making that committee more representative. I have nothing to say against the gentlemen who belong to the committee—better men you could not get, but where does our president come in? He is the organist of the most important position in the world, and he is not on that committee. I protest against the omission of Dr. Charles Macpherson from this committee on Church Music. Archbishops have not time to bother about music nor about musicians, and of course someone advised them; but I say seriously that he did not give them adequate advice. As hon. secretary of this College I feel that our present president—and such a president as he is—ought to be on that committee. This, however, has nothing to do with my re-election, but it is a matter to which I feel I ought to refer, and I repeat, in no 'hole and corner' way, that our president, who has always risen to his sense of duty, should certainly be asked to serve on this committee to inquire into the state of Church Music. I thank you all very much for re-electing me hon. secretary for one more year. I hope I shall carry out the duties to your satisfaction.

A MEMBER: Can we put on the minutes a resolution to be voted by the College affirming that we support the hon. secretary's view on this matter with regard to this Music Committee?

Dr. HARDING: As a matter of fact we cannot carry a resolution at this annual general meeting unless it appears on the agenda. But may I say in my report what seems to be the unanimous feeling of the meeting?

The meeting assented with much emphasis.

THE PRESIDENT: The scrutineers have delivered their report. The voting for the London members of the Council was as follows: Dr. R. R. Terry, 370; Dr. Darke, 297; Mr. d'Evry, 228; Mr. Cunningham, 133; Dr. Phillips, 78; Mr. Crawford, 63. I declare that Dr. Terry and Dr. Darke are elected. With regard to the two vacant country seats on the Council, Dr. P. C. Buck and Dr. Alan Gray were the only members nominated, and they are of course duly elected.

Mr. DOUGLAS-SMITH: I propose that Messrs. O. D. Belsham and George R. Ceiley be re-elected hon. auditors, and that Messrs. Pannell & Co. be re-elected professional auditors, with sincere thanks for their able services.

Mr. YARROW: I beg to second the re-election of the auditors.

This resolution was carried.

Dr. RICHARDS: I must trouble you with one more important matter, and that is to propose a hearty vote of thanks to our retiring President, Dr. Charles Macpherson. We on the Council know something about his work since he has been President of this College, because we are more or less behind the scenes, and everybody else knows about his other work. It is because of our warm affection and enormous admiration for him in every walk of life that we feel great sorrow that his period of office in the chair has come to an end. It has been a real delight and joy to have had him here as President, and it only remains for me to put it to the meeting and to ask you to give this vote of thanks to Dr. Charles Macpherson with the warmest acclamation.

Dr. MACPHERSON: I am extremely obliged to you. My term of office has been a very pleasant time to me, and I hope it has not been marred by any grave neglect of duty. Our new President is Dr. Alan Gray, for whom I have always had a very warm affection. He is one of the most able and high-minded men we have in our profession, and I feel quite humble to know I am to be succeeded by such a man. I would like to thank you for the very hearty way in which you received Dr. Richards's remarks.

MISS CHOLDITCH-SMITH: I should have liked to say a few words about organ construction, particularly about the slow progress of the improvement of the mechanism of the Swell organ, but as the meeting has been somewhat prolonged I will postpone my remarks to another occasion. I must, however, be allowed to congratulate the College on the enterprise which produced the splendid recital of organ music by Dr. W. G. Alcock at the distribution of diplomas this morning, which we all enjoyed so much.

The proceedings then terminated.

Dame Margaret Neilson Martin, widow of Sir George Martin, bequeathed to the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's a sum sufficient to produce £50 per annum to assist the musical education of one of the choir boys after he has left the choir school.

BACH-WAGNER RECITALS

Mr. Frederick Chubb has recently given a series of recitals at Christ Church, Vancouver, the programmes being drawn entirely from Bach and Wagner—an unusual scheme, and one which appears to have yielded striking results. Mr. Chubb did not confine his Bach to organ music, but drew freely on the clavichord works. The Wagner extracts included the Götterdämmerung Funeral March, the Siegfried Idyll, the Prelude to Tristan, the Good Friday Music, the Fire Music from Siegfried, the Huldigungs March, the Forest Murmurs, the Ride of the Valkyries, the Liebsted, and the Overture to the Mastersingers. An exciting experience for all concerned! Such things as the Sarabandes, Bourrées, and Gavottes and Musettes of Bach must have provided delightful relief. Further contrast was given by Liszt's A major Concerto (pianoforte, Miss Elsie Alexander), Bach's D minor Concerto for three pianofortes and orchestra (Misses Ida Morris, Annette Speer, and Bessie Dunsmuir), and Saint-Saëns's G minor Concerto (Mrs. Douglas Johnston). Vancouver is fortunate in its enterprising organist.

BLIND ORGANISTS' SUCCESS

The following successes have been achieved by blind students at the Royal College of Organists during the past month:

Fellowship: Percival Dean (Turpin Prize), Harold Uttley.

Associateship: Leonard Harding (Sawyer Prize), James Saunders.

In addition to the above, Mr. W. L. Wilson, who studied at the Swiss Cottage School for the Blind, has obtained the Associateship Diploma. All these students have gained much from the opportunity provided them for practising on the organ at the National Institute for the Blind, which is a replica of that at the Royal College of Organists.

HYMN SERVICE AT YORK MINSTER

A special hymn service was held in the nave of York Minster on July 29, in connection with the scheme of the Dean for encouraging congregational hymn-singing. The six selected hymns were: 'Come, let us join our cheerful songs' ('Nativity'), 'God moves in a mysterious way' ('London New'), 'How bright these glorious spirits shine' ('Ballerma'), 'And now, O Father, mindful of the love' (Gibbons, Song No. 1), 'Blessed city, heavenly Salem' (Plainsong), and 'The sun is sinking fast' ('St. Columba').

ROCHESTER DIOCESAN CHOIR FESTIVAL

The annual Festival was held in the Cathedral on July 20, Mr. C. Hylton Stewart conducting and Mr. Percy Whitlock being at the organ. The choir numbered seven hundred and fifty voices. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Macpherson in G, and the anthem was Bach's 'Zion hears her watchmen's voices,' from Sleepers, wake. Organ pieces played included Franck's Choral in A minor and Bach's Prelude on 'All glory, laud, and honour.'

An excellent series of recitals was given at Boston Parish Church on June 21, July 5, and July 8 by Mr. Gordon A. Slater, with vocal items contributed by Mrs. Hutchinson, the Rev. R. O. Hutchinson, Mr. H. Thacker, and the boys of the choir. The chief items were Reubke's Fugue, Bach's Toccata in F and Prelude and Fugue in D, Mendelssohn's sixth Sonata, Macpherson's Fantasy-Prelude, Guilman's first Sonata, the slow movement from Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto, a Handel Concerto, and Chorale Preludes by Ernest Farrar, Parry, and Vaughan Williams. The programme book contained some well-written annotations.

The annual choral Festival at Exeter Cathedral on June 22 brought together five hundred and thirty-five singers from the North Devon Choral Union and Exeter churches. The conductor was Mr. T. Roylands-Smith, and Dr. Ernest Bullock was the organist. The Litany was sung in procession, and for the first time the Festival took the form of Choral Eucharist, sung to Merbecke.

A new organ was dedicated at St. John's, Bognor, on August 3, Mr. Frederick Kitchener giving the opening recital. His programme included Elgar's Imperial March, Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Finlandia, a Karg-Elert Chorale Prelude, and the 'Prize Song' from the Mastersingers. The organ is a remodelling by Messrs. John Compton of the instrument built by Hope Jones. It comprises four manuals of about thirty-five stops (a few of which are as yet only prepared for) and a pedal of six stops (major bass prepared for).

Messrs. A. Hunter & Son have erected a new organ in St. James's Roman Catholic Church, Spanish Place, W. The instrument is a three-manual with forty-eight stops—twelve on the Great, fourteen on the Swell, twelve on the Choir, and ten on the Pedal. We regret we have no space for the specification. So far as can be judged therefrom it appears to be a fine, well-designed scheme.

We are glad to hear that Mr. E. H. Lemare is drawing crowded audiences at his municipal recitals at Portland, Maine. A correspondent sends us a booklet containing the repertoire—four hundred and eighty items. The organ is a fine one of five manuals and a hundred and thirty stops, twenty-two being on the pedal.

Mr. C. E. Juleff writes pointing out that the organist of Bishop's Hull, Taunton, is Mr. W. R. Dyer—not Mr. Juleff, as was implied in a paragraph in our last issue.

On June 29 The Messiah was performed in Exeter Cathedral by the choir, augmented, and band, Dr. Ernest Bullock conducting.

Mr. Isaac Buswell has just completed fifty years' service as organist at Hinckley Congregational Church.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. A. G. Colborn, St. Stephen's, Bristol—Offertoire, Ambroise Thomas; Meditation, Padro; Fantasia, Parker.

Mr. John Pullein, Dunblane Cathedral—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Pastorale, Franck; March (Suite No. 2), Boëllmann.

Mr. R. Barrett-Watson, Giggleswick-in-Craven Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Reverie on 'University,' Grace; Minuet, Moszkowski; Grand Chœur in B flat, Dubois.

Mr. Joseph Soar, St. David's Cathedral—Toccata in F, Bach; Allegro Vivace (Symphony No. 5), Widor; Sonata in C sharp minor, Harwood; Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Sonata No. 7, Rheinberger.

Mr. H. F. Ellingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Fantasia and Fugue on 'The Prophet' Chorale, Liszt; First movement, 'Eroica' Symphony; 'Jubilee' Overture, Weber; Selection from 'The Mikado.'

Mr. R. Woodthorpe Browne, St. John's, Lowestoft—Suite, Borowski; Sonata da Camera, Peace; 'Le Carillon,' Wolstenholme.

Mr. C. H. Trevor, St. John's, Mortimer, Berks—Dirge, Attwood; Air, Wesley; Introduction and Allegro, Stanley; Gavotte, Arne; Adagio and Allegro from C minor Sonata, Bach; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach.

Dr. Louis A. Hamand, Malvern Priory—Theme, Variations, and Fugue, Hollins; Cantilène, Pierri; Elegiac Romance, Ireland; Kieff Processional, Moussorgsky.

Dr. Ernest Bullock, Bideford Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Fantasia and Fugue, Mozart; Preludes on 'St. Anne,' Parry, 'St. Peter,' Dark, and 'Bryn Calfaría,' Vaughan Williams; Finale, Gothic Suite, Boëllmann.

Mr. Percy Whitlock, Christ Church, Luton—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Sonata in E flat minor, Rheinberger; Legend, Dukas; 'Martyrs,' Gravé; Arabesque, Vienne.

Mr. H. C. Warrilow, National Institute for the Blind—Marche Nuptiale, Guilmant; Solemn March, Noble; Rondino, Wolstenholme; Impression, Karg-Elert.

- Mr. John Newton, Christchurch Priory—Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Scherzo (Sonata No. 5), Guiltant; Impromptu, Nicholson.
- Mr. J. Matthews, St. Stephen's, Guernsey—Concert Overture in F minor, Hollins; Tone-Poem, 'Urbs Beata,' Matheus; 'Pilgrim's Progress,' Part 4, Austin.
- Miss Doris Fenner, St. Dunstan-in-the-East—Sketch in C, Schumann; Sonata in E flat (first movement), Bach; Pastorale, Frank.
- Mr. W. Hedley Staniland, St. Nicholas, Sutton—Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Postlude in D minor, Stanford.
- Miss Christina Chalmers, St. Clement Danes—Sonatina, Karg-Elert; Choral Preludes by Bach and Charles Wood; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach.
- Mr. E. H. Smith, St. James's, New Brighton—Overture in E flat, Faulkes; Allegro con grazia, Tchaikovsky.
- Mr. C. H. Pearce, All Saints', Binfield—Fantasia and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Prelude on 'Hanover,' Charlton Palmer; Prelude on a Theme of Tallis, Darke; Toccata, Widor.
- Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, St. Lawrence Jewry—Overture to 'Athalia,' Preludio in C minor, Rheinberger; Prelude on 'Croft's 136th,' Parry; Prelude on 'St. Mary,' Wood; Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach.
- Miss A. L. Poole, St. Mary's, Woodbridge—'Great' G minor Fugue, Bach; Concert Overture, Hollins; Nuptial Postlude, Guiltant.

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. S. F. Bates, organist and choirmaster, Holy Trinity, Leamington Spa.
- Mr. Sydney Harrington, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, Wanstead.
- Miss A. L. Poole, organist and choirmaster, St. Mary's Parish Church, Woodbridge.
- Mr. W. Cawthorne Sunter, organist and choirmaster, Middle U.F. Church, Greenock.

Chamber Music for Amateurs

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur chamber musicians who wish to get into touch with other players.

- Gentlemen wanted to join mixed octet for unaccompanied music at mid-day recitals in City.—ERNEST W. PETTIT, St. Lawrence Jewry, Gresham Street, E.C.2.
- Lady pianist wishes to hear of good musical society for coming season (London or near Richmond).—E. L., c/o Musical Times.
- Wanted, violinist and clarinetist, amateurs, with view to small dance orchestra. F. DONALDSON, 59, Arica Road, S.E.4.
- Pianist (good) would like to meet two violinists, 'cello, and viola for mutual practice. Acton district.—C. W. C., 14, Milton Road, Acton, W.3.
- Amateur instrumentalists, all parts, are cordially invited to join the Cross Gates (Leeds) Wesleyan P.S.A. Orchestra. Rehearsals at Cross Gates Wesleyan Church on Mondays, at 8 p.m.—Applications for membership to F. W. P., 15, Chestnut Avenue, Cross Gates, Leeds.
- Young violinist (lady) wishes to meet good accompanist with view to mutual practice.—D. L., 6, Village Road, Bush Hill Park, Enfield.
- Young vocalist would like to meet pianist for mutual practice, also a vocalist (lady or gentleman). S.E. district preferred. And would like to join a musical society in London.—C. B., 34, Rockbourne Road, Forest Hill, S.E.23.
- Violinist (gentleman) would like to meet pianist for mutual practice one or two evenings weekly (Wallington, Sutton, or Croydon districts). Must be enthusiastic; same sex. Large library of dance, musical comedy, and light music.—F. PRIDDEY, 54, Manor Road, Wallington, Surrey.
- Violinist (lady), still studying, would like to meet pianist for mutual practice, with a view to playing at concerts, &c.; or would join amateur orchestra. Knowle, near Birmingham.—FAIRFAX, c/o Musical Times.

The Fulham Cecilian Orchestral Society has vacancies for 2nd violins, 'cellos, and violas; good amateurs only. Terms of membership, apply, HON. SEC., 209, Munster Road, S.W.6.

Flautist wishes to meet good accompanist (male) for mutual practice; sonatas, &c., for flute and pianoforte. Also desires to acquire orchestral experience in a small orchestra. N.W. London preferred.—CHADWICK, c/o Musical Times.

Wanted, soprano, alto, tenor, and bass to join small party for study and practice of motets and madrigals—no modern music. Enthusiasm and good sight-reading essential. Meetings on Saturday afternoons at Marylebone to commence.—REGINALD TANSLEY, 10, Colville Gardens, Talbot Road, W.2.

Violinist (lady) wishes to meet other instrumentalists with view to forming string trio or quartet for mutual practice. B., 64, Parkstone Avenue, Emerson Park, Hornchurch, Essex.

Vocalist would like to meet pianist for mutual practice. North London preferred.—L. G. S., c/o Musical Times. Enthusiastic 'cellist is invited to join pianist and violinist for study and practice of trios, quartets, &c. Large library of classical and modern works available.—Apply, 'CROMA,' c/o Musical Times.

Vacancy for few good amateurs (all instruments) in orchestra. Rehearsals, Thursdays. Concerts, Queen's Hall, &c.—Apply, D. WRIGHT, 46, Aldridge Road Villas, W.11.

Dorian Symphony Orchestra, Westminster.—A 'live' orchestra of keen amateurs and professionals has vacancies for one oboist, one bassoonist, French horn, one percussion, and few strings (especially viola players). Rehearsals (best of music) every Monday evening.—Write SECRETARY, 30, The Green, Twickenham.

Violinist (gentleman) would like to join amateur orchestra or string quartet, S.E. district.—F. D., 33, Matham Grove, East Dulwich, S.E.22.

A lady vocalist (amateur) desires to meet with lady pianist, who would accompany her one evening a week in exchange for help with singing.—H. S. C., 27, North End Road, Golders Green, N.W.11.

'Cello player wanted, to turn a trio into a quartet. Must play in tune, keep time, and read at sight, all competently. Good classical music, no cinema stuff. District, Dudley, Tipton, Oldbury, or West Bromwich.—C. E., c/o Musical Times.

Philharmonic Society (16th season) has vacancies in choir and orchestra (all instruments). Rehearsals (Western suburb): Orchestra, September 25; Choir, September 28.—Apply, Orchestral Secretary, Mr. E. LESLIE SIKES, 223A, Hammersmith Road, W.6.

Amateur instrumentalists, strings and wind, required for the West London Co-Operative Orchestra. Rehearsals resumed September 2.—Apply to Hon. Sec., Mr. C. J. MATHIE, 32, Micklethwaite Road, Fulham, S.W.6.

Conway Orchestra, Walthamstow. Male instrumentalists are invited to become members of the above orchestra. Wood-wind players particularly are desired.—Information may be obtained from the Secretary, J. E. PARISH, 14, Copeland Road, Walthamstow, E.17.

Pianist wishes to meet good vocalist or violinist to practise accompanying. Lady or gentleman. Birmingham neighbourhood.—A. V. K., c/o Musical Times.

North London Philharmonic Society. Vacancies for all voices and good instrumentalists. Rehearsals in Spensley Hall (opposite Fire Station), Brooke Road, Stoke Newington. Orchestra, Monday evenings, Choir, Tuesday evenings.—Secretary, Mr. J. H. CHISHAM, 30, Broke Road, Dalston, E.8.

Young lady pianist and vocalist, soprano, wishes to practise with accompanist, also to play with violinist and 'cellist. Beckenham district or London, S.W., preferred.—J. V., c/o Musical Times.

Two ladies, a pianist and a 'cellist, would be glad to meet a good violinist to join them in trio practice.—Write, Miss R. J. RITZ, L.R.A.M., 266, Elgin Avenue, W.9.

Gentleman vocalist desires to meet pianist-accompanist for mutual practice.—C. B., 34, Rockbourne Road, S.E.23.

Letters to the Editor

DID VIADANA USE FIGURES?

SIR,—In my letter of April 23, which appeared in your July number, on Viadana's use of \times and \flat to indicate a sharpened and a diatonic sixth respectively, there were some examples (Exx. 6-10, 12, 13) in which, for the reason given, I was unable to verify the significance of the \times and \flat in question.

I have now obtained from the National Library at Paris a transcript of as much of the tenor part-book of the 1626 reprint of Viadana's Concerti as serves to complete the examples in question with the exception of Ex. 8, which, however, does not really need further verification, since it already contains the sharpened sixth corresponding to one of the two sharps over the bass.

The result has been entirely satisfactory, as will be seen from the completed examples given below. (As before, the vocal bass in Exx. 7, 9, 10, being identical with the Basso continuo, is omitted):

Ave Sancta Maria (Tenor solus). B.c. xxxviii., bars 15 and 37.

Ex. 1 (= Ex. 6 in previous letter).

Bar 15. &c. Bar 37.

&c. &c.

N.B.—In this example the first sharp \sharp in bar 37 has proved to indicate a sharpened third, and not a sixth.

Salvum me fac (2 Basses) B.c. lxxvii.

Ex. 2 (= Ex. 7).

12th bar from end.

Lauda Sion (2 Tenors and Bass). B.c. xcvi. (5 bars before section in 3-2 time).

Ex. 3 (= Ex. 9).

Tria sunt munera (2 Tenors and Bass). B.c. cil., bars 3, 4.

Ex. 4 (= Ex. 10).

In this example the G sharp assumed to be indicated by the \sharp in the bass is not present in the voice parts, but there can be little doubt, in view of the other examples, that its inclusion in the accompaniment was intended.

Hunc praeclarum (Tenor solus). B.c. xxix. (5 bars from end),

Ex. 5 (= Ex. 12).

Ave hostia salutaris (Tenor solus). B.c. xxxvi.

Ex. 6 (= Ex. 13).

† Given as C in my transcript, either by a misprint in the original, or an error on the part of the copyist.

In addition to the above I am able to give an excellent which before I did not venture to put forward without example of \flat , as the indication of a diatonic major sixth, verification :

Congratulamini (Tenor solus). B.c. xxviii., bars 6, 7.

Ex. 7.

It will be noticed that in Exx. 2 and 3 (= Exx. 7 and 9 in my previous letter) the sharpened sixth is preceded by a suspended seventh.

In conclusion, I must withdraw my suggestion that Viadana purposely omitted \sharp as the indication of a sharpened third (or tenth) when the latter was preceded by a suspended fourth (or eleventh), as I find it to be refuted by instances to the contrary.—Yours, &c.,

F. T. ARNOLD.

July 1, 1922.

'OUR DECADENCE.'

SIR,—I have read Mr. Rutland Boughton's article in the July issue of the Musical Times with keen interest. It is thoughtful and thought-provoking, but I feel that, able as it is, it is unconvincing and inconclusive. Mr. Boughton seems only to endeavour to solve one problem by creating another; and, indeed, his whole article bristles with a number of statements that are individually very debatable. He is surely unduly pessimistic about a condition of things that is far from new. His knowledge of musical history should teach him that what has happened before is happening now, and will happen again, and must do so if musical art is to be progressive. Time, and the verdict of sound common-sense, will blow away the chaff and store up the wheat into the musical granary for future use. History is repeating itself, and there is little cause either for alarm or pessimism.

The whole question seems to resolve itself into the time-worn struggle of the Classic v. the Romantic element in music, and it is quite evident on which side Mr. Boughton would cast his vote. We may or may not agree with him, but it is quite evident that musical evolution has definitely decided. Being very much interested on this point, I referred to a lecture given by Dr. E. W. Naylor before the Musical Association (December 1, 1908), on 'Jacob Handl' (Gallus). Mr. Boughton may have read this lecture and its consequent discussion; if not, I am sure he would find much to interest him there. One of Dr. Naylor's points was to show how that even in this 16th century work the romantic element had crept in, and how the composer was trying (very often in a crude way) to enlarge the bounds of expression. The musical examples quoted are very striking. Dr. Naylor quoted extensively (especially from the writings of Pater) to enforce the distinction between classic and romantic. For the sake of those who have not a copy of the lecture, I make bold to add some quotations:

'The romantic consists in that which is strange—the classic in that which is beautiful.'

'The romantic is concerned with the subject of the artistic work—the classic with the method of presenting it.'

'Romance without the setting of formal beauty may become bizarre. The classic, debarred from the inclusion of new, untried sources of inspiration, may become mere stupid pedantry.'

Dr. Naylor then showed how the two tendencies (romantic and classic) have ever existed more or less: that we have narrowed our idea of romanticism and 'cut our boundaries with very sharp edges.' One could not, and, indeed, should not definitely assert that, e.g., the classic period ran to 1820, and the romantic from 1820 to 1870. It would be far better to take such central dates as 1600, 1700, 1800, and show that about these times a musical renaissance took place—a kind of struggle of birth and death, and it is interesting to note what happened:

1. Introduction of sentiment into mediæval polyphony (1600).

Result: Death of mediæval polyphony.

Cause: Too purely intellectual to bear sentiment.

2. Introduction of sentiment into elegant Italian music (1700).

Result: Death of elegant style.

Cause: Style too correct.

3. Introduction of further sentiment (1800).

Handel is not to be claimed as a romanticist; Bach is; Palestrina not. Byrd? Yes, a decided romanticist.

I have made somewhat long reference to this lecture as it seems to me relevant to the point at issue, and tends to prove the continued ascendancy through the ages of the romantic over the classic. To quote Pater again 'Curiosity and a desire of beauty have each their place in art.'

'The desire of the innovator is to express something new, if possible in forms of beauty already accepted, if not, ruat calum, it must be done in forms of ugliness.'

Mr. Boughton most wholly disagrees with this last quotation!

After carefully reading his article I gather that he is quite willing to admit the romantic element, but only on certain conditions—That formal beauty and euphony must always predominate; that music must be able to stand by itself as a discourse of sweet sounds in well-ordered design, able to give pleasure and meaning irrespective of its association with words or a dramatic setting. In short, Mr. Boughton says 'We may swear—but please swear like gentlemen!' We must call the trumpeter 'naughty,' not anything else—we must not use Mr. Shaw's vulgar stage words.

Mr. Boughton contends that prior to Beethoven 'under the most vehement stress the music was never allowed to abrogate its own musical laws.' I do not think we can all agree with him here. A study even of the Elizabethan composers will reveal the fact that, in their desire for more characteristic expression, they were frequently finding themselves cramped by the conditions of their day. Their attempts to widen their limits may appear to us to be crude, but they were attempts none the less, and I cannot agree that their first thought was to secure a 'fair musical shape.' Their first thought was to express themselves in the best way they could, and time after time they found they wanted more elbow-room. Though many of their crudities may be explained by the exigencies of polyphony, these do not explain all. And the same may be said of much of Purcell's work, with (for the period) his daring harmonic innovations. Music must be both a beautiful and expressive art. Mr. Boughton would have it always beautiful, but he would limit its range of expression wherever this does not coincide with the beautiful. The question then to be asked is this: 'What are the limits of expression in music?' To answer it we must remember that all art is suggestive rather than realistic. Directly music tries to enter the field of realism it prostitutes itself as an art; but who shall put a boundary to the field of suggestive expression in music, and say, 'Thus far and no farther'? If a composer (according to the canons of accepted taste) can justify his procedure, no matter how novel it is, in the matter of characteristic expression, then who shall condemn him?

The terms 'euphony' and 'cacophony' are surely relative only.

Mr. Boughton also insists on the impersonality of a composer's work, and condemns Beethoven for seeking 'self-expression rather than the service of musical art.' One feels bound to say that if this is true, then musical art is profoundly grateful to Beethoven for his waywardness.

I agree entirely with one of our foremost dramatic critics who wrote the other day: 'There is no such thing as impersonal work . . . any intelligent person ought to be able to draw a fairly faithful portrait of Shakespeare or Molière from reading their plays.' Is it not a very great compliment to Mozart with regard to his Requiem to read this: 'I am unable to say which movements were left unwritten by the master himself'? We may also (especially after hearing Mozart's Requiem fairly recently) disagree with Mr. Boughton over its excellence as a work of art. If this is a 'self-standing piece of music,' it does not do much to strengthen his argument. As a piece of characteristic expression of most beautiful and solemn words, it is a travesty and nothing else. Again, says Mr. Boughton, ' . . . the music set to verse or to a dance must be a self-standing piece of work.' Does Mr. Boughton really mean us to take this seriously, or is he writing with his tongue in his cheek? Do the expression of the words and spirit of a song count for nothing? If this principle is adopted we shall have worse diction than ever. Are we to judge Wagner's music-dramas apart from scenery, action, and general theatrical setting? Is a sacred work to be equally impressive alike in the concert-hall and cathedral? Surely Mr. Boughton is here pressing his ideal a little too far!

And may we not dissent from his definition of originality and individuality? Mr. Boughton seems to think we ought to regard 'originality' more in the light of 'obvious parentage'; that the originality of a composer consists in our ability at once to detect the source of his influence—his musical parentage; which is surely originality on Mr. Boughton's part! I have not consulted the various dictionary readings, but I think we are most of us able to distinguish between 'originality' and 'eccentricity.' Only a rather stupid person would say that original, bizarre, and eccentric, conveyed the same meaning. Original work must of course owe its debt to the past, but it takes its step forward into the future on its own account, and that step a characteristic one. It has absorbed the experience of the past, has been influenced by it, but it re-creates and gives rise to something fresh; it is not a mere copy, saying nothing that has not been said before and probably a great deal better. Its great essence is vitality. Can we accept Mr. Boughton's definition of 'individuality' as the 'sign . . . that an art-work is not standing alone'? Again, I think the confusion of thought is Mr. Boughton's. What do we mean by 'individual'? Mr. Boughton says that 'individual work is not divided from other similar work of its time.' He means to imply that the 'group' is not divided, and that therefore the work of the group is similar. But the word 'individual' plainly refers to 'one person' or thing—it is the one that is 'not divided,' does not share with the others; it is a separate entity, standing alone, and therefore individual work is work a person does by himself, having its own personal character, and unlike the work of others, or even of others working as a group or school.

To sum up, therefore, we must not be pessimistic over our so-called 'decadence.' To any student of history and psychology, the state of musical composition at the present time is no surprise nor discouragement. The phase will pass, and time will settle the matter and adjust the gain and the loss. There are times when Art seems to take many steps backward, but, like a good bowler, this is only to get a better length on the ball. Music will never revert to classicism pure and simple: we must have the beautiful, but we must have the expressive as well, and the latter must be continually growing and expanding. Time will see to it that with this growth and expansion Art still remains.—Yours, &c.,

HAROLD E. WATTS.

LIBRETTI IN ENGLISH: AN APPEAL FOR SANE TRANSLATIONS

SIR,—I am very much interested in the question of the English libretti of operas, which is touched upon in the 'Robert Radford' article appearing in your May issue, because I believe it to be a factor of vital importance in any attempt made to establish opera in English on a firm foundation.

The primary reason for composing vocal music is to give audible expression to the words to which it is set, and unless it permits its exponents to sing with as much intelligent diction as would be exercised by a trained orator, it fails in its main object. Much interesting vocal music, particularly of an operatic nature, has failed to acquire lasting popularity because of an inferior libretto, for very few operas have been written which are musically so great as to be able to live in spite of their text.

Notwithstanding the views expressed by certain idealists in their letters to The Times and elsewhere, the fact must be faced that the number of operas by native composers, which the British public cares to hear, is so very small as to be incapable of supporting any opera company worthy of the name. Yet there appears to be a growing desire on the part of modern peoples to have opera performed in their native language—which, from their point of view, is not unreasonable—and that desire must be reckoned with, because the people pay the bill. That being so, at least for a time any attempt to establish opera in English here on a satisfactory basis must be made chiefly by the use of the works of foreign composers.

That fact raises the question of English translations, or adaptations, of the original libretti, and on that subject Mr. Radford has not expressed himself too strongly, although I do not agree with him that the fault lies entirely with the publishers. It is not difficult to imagine that in face of an urgent demand for an English translation of a new opera successfully produced abroad, they might be forced to accept the best within their reach. Further, it is possible to suppose that not all of them have had a staff capable of judging whether or not a given translation was a faithful rendering of the original text, being partially, if not totally, ignorant of the tongue in which it was written.

For some time I have been devoting considerable attention to this subject because I consider the present position to be acutely distressing. The most charitable criticism I can give, of a general nature, is that the English adaptations I have examined appear to me to be a conglomerate of an exceedingly free translation and the voluntary action of the translator's imagination. He has, as it were, taken a bird's-eye view of the original libretto, and then set to work to express the same ideas on broad lines, avoiding intricate passages, and filling up their places with sloppy padding. That in the process negatives are turned into positives, affirmations into negations, and interrogations into assertions, seems to count for nothing. Thus the libretto the music was composed to express is not only lost sight of, but another is fitted in its stead which renders the whole effete. To the singer who really understands the original text the task of suitably interpreting the music by means of such a ghastly parody is more than discouraging: it is hopeless!

Here I venture to give two examples of what I mean—one from Rigoletto, showing how the plain meaning of the original has been perverted, and the other from Un Ballo in Maschera, showing how fine points of detail may be obscured by generalisation. Both phrases will show how very closely a translation may approach to the original without losing accent or rhythm:

Rigoletto, Act 2.

IL DUCA.

(a) E quan - do, o ciel? Ne' bre - vi -
(b) O heav - ns, but where? In that short
(c) But when, oh Heav'n? In the few

- stan - ti, pri ma che il mio pre - sa - gio in - ter - no sul - l'or - ma mo - ment ere some pre - sen - ti - ment of e - vil im - pell'd me moments e'er an in - ter - nal pre - mo - ni - tion to find the cor - sa an - co - ra mi spin - ges - se!

sud - den - ly to re - trace my foot - steps.
tra - ces of her flight had im - pell'd me!

Un Ballo in Maschera, Act 1.

RENATO.

(a) Al - la vi - ta che t'ar - ri - de di spe -
(b) On the life thou now dost che - rish, fraught with
(c) With the life which smiles up - on thee, full of ran - za e gau - dio pie - na, d'at - tre plea - sure, with hope re - splen - dent, while thy hope, bright with ev - 'ry plea - sure, ma - ny (fill'd)

mil - le e mil - le vi - te il des - star - is yet as - cend - ent, think what thou - sand lives of o - thers des - ti - ti - no s'in - ca - te - na!

thou - sands are de - pend - ent!
ny - doth in - ter - min - gle.

(a) Original; (b) Boosey's edition; (c) my rendering.

These two phrases ought conclusively to prove that our public has been kept in ignorance of the real gist of most foreign operas, and, as a consequence, is unable to appraise at its true value the composer's work.

My present conviction is that such translations cannot, and indeed need not, be made in verse. It is not sufficient for the person who undertakes them to be equally conversant with both languages concerned. No one who requires the aid of a dictionary ought to attempt the work, for various colloquialisms, peculiar forms of speech, innuendo, and play on words are often used which no dictionary help can elucidate. Further, the translator must be more than merely an efficient philologist; he must be sufficiently musical and have enough knowledge of singing to be able to catch the proper accent and rhythm, while adhering rigidly to the exact meaning of the original text.

Since I believe that the mere discussion of a subject, without action, leads nowhere, I have ventured to attempt to make a new translation of two or three of the libretti I have at hand, which, while faithfully conveying the exact import of the originals, would still be singable, and at the same time make the acutely high notes as comfortable as possible for the vocalist. I may mention that the task was considerably simplified for me in the case of Faust, my copy being an Italian edition of Ricordi's without an English version; for, although he may try to ignore it, an English adaptation distracts the reader's mind and sometimes causes him to see red. Of the result I may say that I consider the translation to be adequate; as to how far it is practicable I do not feel sure. Although, as I read it, I believe it to be so, others may not see eye to eye with me in every detail. Reviewing my work after its completion, I feel the necessity for collaboration; the turn of a phrase—which would make all the difference—while it has escaped me, may suggest itself to other minds.

With this idea in view during April—hence before the appearance of your article referred to above—I communicated with a prominent member of our new National Opera Company, proposing what practically amounted to the round-table of which Mr. Radford speaks. I suggested that after a preliminary conference between us, he should assemble such of the principal singers of the Company as would take the solo work in the opera (Rigoletto) concerned, so that I might have the benefit of expert opinion on an all-important point. Owing to pressure of work on the one hand, and, on the other, to the fact that Rigoletto is not included in the Covent Garden programme, my proposal was not found acceptable at present.

Yet I do not feel inclined to take this first reverse lying down. I believe that this much-needed work can be done successfully, and hope that some of those who are equally interested, and are qualified to do so, will render me the assistance and counsel which my National Opera Company correspondent was unable to give. If such will be good enough to communicate with me soon, I shall be very grateful.—Yours, &c.,

A. KEAY.

2, Gledstones Road, W.14.

WANTED—COMPOSITIONS FOR WIND INSTRUMENTS

SIR,—A short time ago the esteemed Commander of Kneller Hall made through a well-known daily paper an appeal to British composers for original works for military bands, which I hope met with the success it deserved. As a wind-player of about twenty-six years' experience, I shall be glad if you will kindly allow me through your valuable medium also to appeal to our able composers to bear in mind the now not inconsiderable number of players on the flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, and to write and publish solos, duets, trios, quartets, and quintets for these instruments. There are several solos by well-known living composers already published for each of the popular first three, but only one or two for the last two lesser-known instruments. Josef Holbrooke and Percy Grainger have each written quintets for them, which have deservedly been performed in London and the provinces, but I know of only one quartet for that unique combination (without the horn as tenor instrument), and this is an admirable little march, written at my importunate request by my friend, the late Edmondstone Duncan, for a party—but I regret to say I have not yet been able to get a publisher to print it.

A German composer has written one, published at Leipzig. I am aware that the sale for these works will be less than in the case of strings, but if a series of graded quartets, easy to difficult, for one of each of these five instruments were published, and also adapted as string quartets, at popular prices, I think they would pay their way.

Hoping some abler pen than mine will follow up this suggestion.—Yours, &c.,

JOHN PARR.

7, Snig Hill, Sheffield.

August 5, 1922.

SIR,—It was with particular pleasure that I read in a weekly contemporary that one of the most gratifying features of the Royal Academy of Music Centenary celebrations was the brilliant promise shown by that 'rising young composer, J. B. McEwen,' and that his Quartet Biscay was one of the most notable of all the works heard during the fortnight. It is a pity that all our rising composers do not receive such encouragement at the proper time.—Yours, &c.,

A. K.

WOES OF A MUSIC-MASTER

SIR,—Is it not high time to help music out of the rut into which it has sunk in many (I hope not all) of our public schools?

In 1917 I accepted a position as music-master at a large boys' school in the North of England. Lessons of half-an-hour each (one per week) were to be given in school hours, practices (three separate half-hours for each boy) being allotted to recreation periods. Owing, however, to the fact that all sorts of interruptions and special occasions are allowed to interfere with the musical syllabus, I find that the average boy does not get more than one and a half practices per week. I find, too, that about as much time (lessons and practices combined) is devoted to music in a whole term as is given up to any other branch of study, such as languages or mathematics, in a single week! Is this fair to music? All such important matters as ear-training, musical appreciation, &c., have to be shelved, and there can be little doubt that, judged by their attitude towards music, head-masters regard it as a necessary nuisance. Why not, therefore, act up to this conviction and strike the subject off the syllabus altogether? As things are to-day in some of our public schools, it is sheer waste of time to take up music.

What is the hope for the future? And wherein lies the remedy for the above state of affairs? First of all, it seems of primary importance to incorporate music in the regular school curriculum. It may be asked, What is the value to the boy of music in the general scheme of education? Personally, I invariably find that the boys whose time-sense, rhythmic-sense, and ear-sense are the keenest are the very boys who, as a general rule, stand highest in other subjects. They are, in short, brighter, more alert intellectually, and always 'on the spot.' It is bad in principle to allow parents to decide for themselves whether a boy shall study music. Doubtless many parents are fully qualified to form an opinion, but the great bulk of them are not so qualified. All boys should be tested, and only those discarded who, after fair trial, convince the music-master that they are utterly destitute of any appreciation of, or feeling for, music.

What appears to me to be of paramount importance is that head-masters should receive a 'lead' in this vital matter, and this might perhaps be undertaken by the joint action of our leading musical institutions. I would suggest that all lessons and practices take place in school hours, and that time be found for classes in musical dictation, ear-training, sight-reading, and musical appreciation. It is to be hoped that head-masters and governing bodies may, in the near future, devote more consideration to this important matter.—Yours, &c.,

'SPES EST UNICA FIDES.'

AN EARLY GREEK HYMN

SIR,—A fragment of an early Greek Christian hymn has been recently discovered and published by the Egypt Exploration Fund. As the volume in which it occurs—The Oxyrhynchus Papyri,* part 15—is not likely to be seen by many of your readers, I think a short description may be of interest. The fragment is, roughly, 12-in. by 2-in.; the front contains an account dating from the first half of the 3rd century. The hymn is written on the back. Above each line of text the corresponding musical notes are added. The notation is that given in Grove's Dictionary, but symbols not mentioned in the article on Greek music are used to denote length of notes, &c. The style of the writing points to a date in the latter part of the 3rd century rather than the beginning of the 4th. Only the concluding Doxology has survived, and that is not quite perfect, but the general sense is clear. I give a rough translation of it:

'Ye courts of heaven be not silent, nor stay your song, ye light-giving stars and streams of flowing rivers, as we hymn the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit; All ye powers shout, Amen, Amen! Dominion and praise and glory do we give both now and for ever to the only Giver of all good things. Amen, Amen.'

* Ed. Grenfell & Hunt. Egypt Exploration Fund, The Oxyrhynchus Papyri, part 15, 1922. Offices of Society, 13, Tavistock Square, W.C.1.

The transcription into modern notation has been made by Prof. H. Stuart Jones. I enclose a copy, and hope it will be possible to print it. The slurs over certain notes represent a sign in the original, but their omission in some places where two notes are sung to one syllable and their curious position in the last bar but one, suggest that their use is not equivalent to a slur. Prof. Jones suggests that the notes are to be sung legato.

A lover of plainsong might object to the rigid barring, but, like the classical Greek metres, the verse is strictly metrical; and the Greek accents did not originally represent stresses, but changes in intonation. In this fragment, as a general rule, a long note, or a group of notes, is used for a syllable that is long, i.e., has either a long vowel, or in which the vowel is followed by more than one consonant, so taking longer to pronounce, and the accented syllables are marked by the rising and falling of the melody.—Yours, &c.,

E. A. WHITE.

[πρ] υ ταν η ω σι - γά - τω μη'

άσ - τρα φα - ισ - φό - ρα λ[επ] - έ[σ]θων... πο - τα -

- μών 'ρο - θι - ων.. πά - σαι ύμ - νούν -

- των δ'ή - μών πα - τί - ρα χύι - όν χ'ά - γι -

- ον. πνεύ - μα , πā - σαι δν - νά - μεις ε - πι - φω - νούν - των, ά - μήν.. ά - μήν

κρά - τος αϊ - νος

δω - τή - ρι μὸ - νψ πάν - των

ά - γα - θών ά - μήν, ά - μὴν.

[Music transcribed by Prof. H. Stuart Jones.]

WHICH LANGUAGE?

SIR,—I note that in my letter on 'Instrumentation' printed in your last issue, you conform to custom in giving the title of Donizetti's opera as La Favorita instead of La Favorite. The question of opera titles seems worth discussing. Donizetti wrote music to a French libretto by Scribe, and it was first produced at Paris. It is as much a French opera as Robert le Diable. As it would certainly savour of affectation (to quote Mr. Abdy Williams) to speak of the latter as Robert der Teufel, because Meyerbeer was a German, it must be equally affected to call Donizetti's work by an Italian name merely because he was an Italian. More important is the fact that, while I am prepared to swear to what is on p. 258 of La Favorita, an opera published at Paris—I have the volume on my shelves—I have not the remotest idea of what may be on p. 258 of La Favorita, an Italian translation, engraved by Messrs. Ricordi, of Milan. Wagner arranged La Favorita, but Heaven knows who arranged La Favorita or Die Favoritin. The best rule appears to be—to give an opera its original title, or give it in English.—Yours, &c.,

St. Leonards-on-Sea.
July 30, 1922.

TOM S. WOTTON.

SIR HENRY BISHOP'S FIRST WIFE

SIR,—Can any reader of this journal give information as to the Parentage of Miss Lyon, who was the first wife of Sir Henry Bishop?—Yours, &c.,

23, Castellaine Road, ARTHUR M. FRIEDLANDER.
W. 9.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of September, 1862:

Musicus wishes to be informed of the name of the organist at the late Handel Festival, and asks why he was not mentioned in the different newspaper accounts of the Festival. The organist was Mr. Brownsmith, and we can only suppose that his not having been particularly mentioned arose purely from an oversight; we must certainly plead that excuse for ourselves. Mr. Brownsmith is always deserving of praise, and his performance at the late Festival was all that could be desired; he displayed excellent judgment and great steadiness, and there is no doubt he contributed very materially to the success of the undertaking.

BURNLEY.—The new organ at the West Gate Congregational Chapel was opened on July 30 by Mr. Best, organist of St. George's Hall, Liverpool. Several excellent compositions were played by Mr. Best, in admirable style, including the Andante from Haydn's Quartet in F; an Audantino from Spohr's Symphony, 'The Power of Sound'; and the grand 'Hallelujah' chorus from Beethoven's Engedi.

ECCLESIOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—A concert took place at the rooms of the Architectural Union on July 30, at which the motet choir of the Ecclesiological Society performed a selection of ancient Church music. The principal feature of the programme was Palestrina's Mass, which was sung in Latin, and was rendered much more effective by the versicles and prayers, always said by the priest, being chanted by the Rev. Mr. Helmore. The music of Palestrina is wonderfully elaborate, and though there are not three bars of melody throughout, it is a most interesting Mass, containing as it does so much learned contrapuntal writing. The programme also comprised a Latin psalm and a Latin hymn, which were given in a truly Catholic style; and there were also English hymns and psalms to Gregorian chants. The music had evidently been practised with assiduity, and it must have cost Mr. Helmore's boys considerable time and trouble to master the difficulties. If a few ladies with good voices had been introduced, the soprano part would have been more effective.

LLANSAMLET, NEAR NRATH.—An open-air Musical Contest was held at this place on Wednesday, July 28, when various prizes, from £5 downwards, were awarded for the best choral and part-singing. A detachment of the Swansea Valley Choral Association took the whole of the prizes. Four choirs competed. The Rev. J. Roberts (Lenan Gwyllt) adjudicated. President, Mr. Gwilym Williams, Ynyscynor, Aberdare.

'Why say ye, Flie as a bird unto the hills?'

A SOPRANO CANZONET, FOR MATINS, with Accompaniment for Organ or Pianoforte. Composed by J. SUMMERS, Organist of Holy Trinity Church, Weston-super-Mare. Published by R. Cocks & Co. Price 2s. 6d.

Sharps and Flats

I will not examine in detail M. Jean-Aubry's dictum that Elgar is to English music what Saint-Saëns is to French music: I will only say that if this dictum throws no light on Elgar, it throws considerable light on M. Jean-Aubry.—Ernest Newman.

There is more humbug talked about music than about anything else.—Sir Hugh Allen.

The passing years have not taken away as much from Pachmann's playing as they have added to his talking . . . One of Mendelssohn's little pieces should no longer be called a song without words when he plays it and talks through it.—Clarence Lucas.

Why is English opera a negligible thing to-day? I will tell you—because we are all milk-and-water Wagners, molly-coddling Mascagnis, or piffing Puccinis.—James Glover.

When I reached the Academy I first had a big dose of Dussek, Hummel, Cramer, and Clementi; but one day my old teacher, Dorrell, said he was going to give me something 'very modern' and 'revolutionary,' and, with a 'hush, hush' air, he said: 'The Concerto in D minor of Mendelssohn.'—Tobias Matthay.

It may be mere insanity, but I should greatly like to see what a world-congress of musicians and artists could make of international affairs at this troubled juncture. France . . . has Romain Rolland and Anatole France. England might send H. G. Wells and Ernest Newman.—'Plainsinger' in Musical America.

Art will unify all humanity. Art is one—indivisible. Art is the manifestation of the coming synthesis. Art is for all. Everyone will enjoy true Art. . . . We should have . . . even prisons decorated and beautified. Then we shall have no more prisons.—Nicolas Roerich.

I do not see why I or anyone else should be called on to endure long, dull stretches of Wagner or of any other composer for the sake of the 'rich oases.' There should not be any long, dull stretches. . . . I regard opera as an entertainment, and usually a poor one at that.—A. Corbett-Smith.

In spite of its momentary boom at Covent Garden, I fear there is no denying that opera is on its death-bed . . . perishing through sheer lack of nourishment . . . In practically all the stuff we see at Covent Garden the plot is too childish for words. . . . John W. Klein.

Musical examinations are a curse.—Arthur Bliss.

Well, I myself thoroughly believe in them, and my opinion is certainly worth more than that of Mr. Arthur Bliss.—Algernon Ashton.

The list of Mr. Algernon Ashton's works reaches to Op. 147 Can Mr. Ashton produce something out of this list to rival the undoubted genius shown in the few works yet accomplished by Arthur Bliss? Then perhaps his claim that his opinion is worth more than that of the younger composer can be investigated.—Gordon Bryan.

I intend to have my twelve-year-old boy trained as a violinist. I am very keen that his instruction should be the best, so I am going to put him under an Italian master at once.—P. Edwards.

Why should I please everyone? Another admirer of my work (who never performs any of it) Such a programme as this, not to be heard in England at any time: Overture, Brownwen; Poem, Utalume; Prelude, The Bells; Pianoforte Concerto (I had to play it myself again, as there are no British pianists who will play it yet) It is now nine years since any new work [of mine] has been heard.—Josef Holbrooke.

Go on, Josef! Centuries after you are dead they will recognise, no doubt, that you were, in 1922, the only unrecognised genius of your age.—Hannen Swaffer.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

During the summer term there were six chamber concerts, at which the following works by College composers were heard: Piece for violoncello by H. Stanley Taylor, four songs with accompaniment for flute, harp, and string quartet by H. Proctor-Gregg, Sonata for pianoforte and violin by Edmund Rubbra, and two songs by Margaret Crichton. At one of the three orchestral concerts, the College Orchestra was conducted by ten members of Dr. Adrian C. Boulton's conducting class, one of the items being a piece for violin and orchestra by Sidney Bett (Foli Scholar). There have also been four informal concerts.

A résumé of dress rehearsals of opera, with scenery and orchestra, given in the Parry Opera Theatre from time to time will be interesting: Meistersinger, Act 1; Figaro, Act 2 (three times); Gounod's Faust, Act 3 (twice); Hänsel und Gretel, Act 1 (twice), and complete (twice); Carmen, Act 3 (four times); Madame Butterfly, complete (three times); and La Bohème, Act 1; and last term, Louise, Act 1 and Work-room Scene; Charles Wood's Scene from Pickwick (five times); and R. Vaughan Williams's Shepherds of the Delectable Mountains (five times). Her Majesty the Queen was present at the rehearsal on July 11. J.M.

Music in the Provinces

ABERYSTWYTH.—The week-end Festival at University College on June 23-26, was the third of its kind since the institution of the National Council of Music in Wales under the direction of Prof. Walford Davies, and for the first time choral and orchestral works were included. Three formal concerts were given, in addition to two short students' concerts and two open rehearsals. The works performed included Brahms's Academic Festival Overture, Mozart's A major Pianoforte Concerto, Balfour Gardiner's Shepherd Fennel's Dance, Elgar's Wand of Youth, the Choral from Bach's Sleepers, wake, From the New World Symphony, Holst's Beni Mora Suite (conducted by the composer), Quilter's Children's Overture, a Suite of Rameau, orchestrated by Dukas, the Brahms Double Concerto for violin and violoncello, Beethoven's fifth Symphony, Mozart's G minor Symphony, Elgar's Dream Children, the Grieg Pianoforte Concerto, Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens, portions of the Bach Mass in B minor, the Bach Double Concerto, Vaughan Williams's Pastoral Symphony, and Debussy's L'Après-midi d'un Faune.

BRISTOL.—Miss Gertrude Winchester has organized, and will conduct, a ladies' choir, under the presidency of Mr. George Riseley.

HARROGATE.—At the symphony concert on June 29, Esser's orchestral arrangement of Bach's Organ Toccata in F was the chief item, Mr. Howard Carr conducting.

MANCHESTER.—At the Tuesday noon chamber concert on July 11, four students of the Royal College of Music played Brahms's G minor Pianoforte Quartet. On July 18 singing pupils at the same College, under Mr. Richard Evans, provided the programme.—At the Tuesday Mid-day concert on July 25, Mr. Maurice Cole played pianoforte music by Beethoven, Mozart, and Chopin.—A novelty was introduced on August 1, in the combination of music and the spoken word, by Miss Amy Buxton Nowell (reciter) and Mr. Eric Fogg (pianist). The ballads, Fair Hedwig and The Heather Youth, and Shelley's The Fugitives, were arranged to music by Schumann; The Trumpeter's Betrothal by François Thorne (in English), and Victor Hugo's La fiancée du timbalier, were also given. Miss Olive D. Murphy sang songs by Brahms and Hugo Wolf.

NEWCASTLE.—Open-air concerts were given on August 8 by the Musical Union, united military bands providing the programme in the afternoon, assisted by Newcastle Gleemen. In the evening the Festival Choirs, augmented by voices from the Roman Catholic choirs, sang Holst's Turn back, O man, Burke's St. Patrick's Prayer, and oratorio choruses. The Roman Catholic choirs sang the Kyrie and Gloria from Gounod's Missa Paschalis, and an orchestra played.

OXFORD.—The annual performance of unaccompanied singing by Christ Church Cathedral Choir, on June 25, included two settings of Hosanna to the Son of David, by Weelkes and Gibbons respectively, and two of Sing joyfully unto God, by Byrd and Palestrina, Tristis est anima mea (di Lasso), O Lord, the Maker of all thing (attributed to Henry VIII., and also to William Mundy), Wesley's Cast me not away, and Purcell's I did lay me down.—The Summer School of Dalcroze Eurhythmics opened at Oxford on July 31. Sir Hugh Allen, at the opening ceremony, justified Oxford's reputation as a musical centre. He thought the Dalcroze Rhythmic method for children was one of the best things that had ever been devised, but there was a danger of its filling the horizon. Recently there had been a general levelling up of musical education.

PLYMOUTH.—A ladies' choir has been formed under the direction of Mr. David Parkes, conductor of the Orpheus Male Choir, and will combine with the male voices for the performance of big choral works, the united forces to be known as the Orpheus Association. The female voices already number a hundred and fifty, the male choir being of about the same strength. The Dream of Gerontius and The Apostles will be put in rehearsal when autumn work begins.

PORTSMOUTH.—On August 13, at the Clarence Pier concert, Mr. Ernest Vavin played a Venetian love-song for pianoforte by Burmeister, and Miss Gabrielle Ferrand played the same composer's arrangement for violin of a Rigaudon by Rameau. A first performance was given by the orchestra of an Impromptu in A minor composed by the conductor, Mr. Charles H. Peters.

ROCHESTER.—Dr. Hylton Stewart conducted the Choral Society's performance, on June 30, of Bach's Jesu, Priceless Treasure, and two Motets from Parry's Songs of Farewell. Mr. Percy Whitlock played Rheinberger's sixth Organ Sonata.—The Senior and Junior Co-operative Choirs, conducted by Prof. G. H. Sharp, numbering a hundred and twenty voices, sang out of doors, on July 29, a Choral Fantasia on English folk-songs by White, Glover's Come away, elves, and Coleridge-Taylor's The Viking's Song.

SHEFFIELD.—Dr. Henry Coward, on July 3, addressed the Rotary Club on 'Music in Commercial and Everyday Life,' dwelling on the influence of the art towards humanism and sociability.

Obituary

We regret to record the following death:

On July 30, at Denver, Colorado (U.S.A.), JOHN HENRY GOWER, Mus. Doc., a remarkable organist, composer, and exploiter of psychic research. Born at Rugby (England), on May 25, 1855, he was a maternal descendant of Sir Walter Scott. So proficient did he become in music, that at the age of twelve he was appointed assistant-organist at Windsor Castle. In 1876 he was appointed organist and music-master of Trent College, Notts, having graduated Mus. Bac. in the same year; he proceeded to Mus. Doc. in 1883, at Oxford. In 1887 he emigrated to Denver, where, after a short period in the practice of his profession, he interested himself in the mining business, becoming successful, yet retaining his interest in music. In 1908 Dr. Gower entered the field of psychical research, and worked with Sir Oliver Lodge and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. On July 28 he had a paralytic stroke, from which he never rallied. His cantata, The Good Shepherd, had some vogue in pre-war days.

The West Middlesex Musical Society is a new organization that will open proceedings on September 18 (choral) at Haven Green (Large) Hall, and on September 20 (orchestral) at Haven Green (Small) Hall. The hon. secretary, Mr. J. H. Cuddington, 21, Selby Road, W.5, will be glad to answer any inquiries. The works for the season are Coleridge-Taylor's A Tale of Old Japan, German's Tom Jones, and Gounod's Redemption. Mr. C. Stanley Smallman is the hon. conductor.

The Ealing Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Victor Williams) begins its twenty-sixth season on September 28 (choral) and 29 (orchestral), at Ealing Town Hall. The works to be rehearsed are St. Paul, Brahms's Requiem, and a programme of Edward German and Coleridge-Taylor for the hundredth concert on April 21.

MUSIC IN IRELAND

Dr. E. Norman Hay of Coleraine, some of whose compositions have been recently published by the Carnegie Trust Fund, has been appointed Examiner for Musical Degrees in Dublin University, a post recently held by Dr. Eveleigh, of Cork.

The O'Mara Opera Company concluded a successful season at Dublin on July 29 with Trovatore.

Miss Mary A. Hoare has been awarded the degree of Mus. Bac., at the July meeting of the National University of Ireland.

A 'grand Italian opera concert' (in aid of the Belfast refugees) was given at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on July 30, the star being Signor A. Valente, from the Milan Conservatoire. The audience was small but enthusiastic.

Much satisfaction is felt in Dublin musical circles at the announcement that two Irish operas, i.e., two operas set to librettos in the Irish language, will be produced next month at New York. One of these is Muirgheis, by the late O'Brien Butler (who was drowned on the 'Lusitania'), and the other is Rithne, composed by Prof. Robert O'Dwyer, of the National University of Ireland.

As the Provisional Government of Ireland has temporarily taken over the Theatre of the Royal Dublin Society, the committee is negotiating for a make-shift concert room in which to hold the autumn recitals. At present there is not a single concert-hall in the city of Dublin.

Some old time friends of Arabella Goddard (Mrs. J. W. Davison) who remember her magnificent pianoforte playing at Rotunda Concerts fifty years ago, will grieve to learn of her death, at St. Malo (France) some months ago. Although she had retired in 1890, her recent death has been comparatively unnoticed, probably owing to the fact that a report of her demise had obtained currency in 1899.

It is gratifying to chronicle that a brilliant Irish organist, Mr. William E. Hopkins, Master of the State Musick in Ireland, has had a most cordial reception at Vienna, where his organ recitals have attracted crowded and appreciative audiences.

The late President Griffith was a keen lover of Irish music, and his untimely end is keenly felt in Irish musical circles.

Three important organ appointments have recently been made: Dr. E. Norman Hay to Bangor Church (Co. Down), where he will take up duties on October 1; Herr Koss, a German, to St. Mary's Cathedral (R.C.), Kilkenny; and Herr Fleischmann, another German, to St. Mary's Cathedral (R.C.), Cork.

BERLIOZ IN ITALY

BY CLAUDE TREVOR

A sojourn in Italy for men of genius, artists, and philosophers, has ever been the realisation of a dream, the revelation of a new world, the fount of great inspiration. Many volumes have been written containing enthusiastic descriptions of the grandeur and beauty of the art and loveliness to be found in the peninsula, and the moral debt contracted by visitors to the classic land. Of course there have been exceptions, one of the most notable being the subject of these lines—notable for the personality and genius of the artist; for the violence and bitterness of his judgments. The most recent, and, we should imagine, the best informed in many ways, of the biographies which have appeared of the great French composer, is by his gifted countryman, Adolphe Boschot, whose valuable work will be laid under contribution for some interesting facts.

Prior to winning the Prix de Rome, the young composer for four consecutive years had been a candidate for admission to the Villa Medici, submitting for judgment a cantata, Orpheus torn to pieces by Bacchantes, in 1827 (which was declared by the examiners to be impossible of performance), followed the next year by Herminie, founded on Tasso's Jerusalemme liberata, and La mort de Cleopâtre. Neither composition procured for Berlioz the Prix. Only in 1830 did the tide of fortune change with his Mort de Sardanapale, completed during the July Revolution. Deeply smitten as he was by the charms of his Camille, the author of the Symphonie Fantastique was by no means inclined to leave his country, considering his journey at such a time a menace to his affaire du cœur.

The mad passion he felt for his love of the moment, and the separation his sojourn in Italy would necessitate, caused Berlioz the most acute anguish, although the lady was at that time already premeditating the transference of her affections. Before leaving Paris he had conceived the greatest antagonism for Italian music, as was clearly shown in his tirades against the frequenters of the Théâtre des Italiens which appeared in the journals for which he wrote. Even the great Rossini was not spared; one of his greatest sins being his remark that Weber's music 'me donne la colique,' and he was dubbed by Berlioz 'the puppet of Pesaro.' Berlioz made some concessions with regard to William Tell, but he detested and condemned the whole Italian school of opera (in which he included Mozart), branding the art of its adherents as prostitute. Such exaggerated judgment, and such contradictions as he showed in all things, revealed an unbalanced mind. Obligated to depart on this 'absurd' journey, he embarked at Marseilles for Leghorn, travelling thence to Florence, where he went to hear Romeo and Juliet

... by a charlatan called Bellini. Heavens! to think the shade of Shakespeare did not come and crush this ant. The opera is loud, ridiculous, inadequate. And what am I to say of the "Vestale" by a wretched eunuch called Pacini.'

After the first Act he left the theatre furious that the 'Academicians and fossils' of France did not think his musical education complete till he had passed through the 'musical sewer' of Italy. The country from Florence to Rome he found not at all picturesque. The chief pleasure he experienced at Rome was the meeting and friendship he formed with Mendelssohn, little thinking how the German would express himself concerning the Frenchman's intemperate condemnation of most of the great classic composers. Mendelssohn wrote:

'Berlioz is a caricature without the shadow of genius, always groping in the dark, and esteeming himself a creator of a new world of art. With this idea he writes the most detestable stuff, and can speak of no one else but Beethoven, Schiller, and Goethe. He is vain to an inconceivable degree, and treats with the utmost disdain Mozart and Haydn, so that his great enthusiasm for the others is not to me very convincing.'

Distrustful and agitated in mind, because his Camille doesn't write to him, Berlioz decides after only a month at Rome to quit the Accademie and return to his innamorata. On his way he again stops at Florence, where he reads with avidity King Lear, attracting to himself the attention of passers by, while wrapt in the tragedy along the banks of the Arno, by his wild gesticulations and loud exclamations of admiration. Sometimes he would throw himself on the ground, rolling about as in convulsions from his violent emotions. One evening he entered a church, and assisted at the preparations for the burial of a young mother and her child. The coffin was not yet closed, and for a douceur the sexton was induced to gratify the morbid desire of Berlioz to look within. With a heart beating with unnatural excitement he awaited the sexton's lifting of the shroud, and at the revelation of the dead form he rhapsodised unrestrainedly, but diverged into gruesome details, adding, 'I thought of Ophelia . . . ' Berlioz later assisted at another funeral, that of the brother of Napoleon III.

Meanwhile there was never absent from his mind the torturing wonder as to why Camille remained so long silent. He was, too, bitterly disappointed that during his short stay in Italy he had come across none of the bandits with which he firmly believed the country to be infested; indeed, had he met any of such, it can easily be imagined that he might have joined them for a time, writing as he does:

'I would assist willingly at magnificent crimes, rapine, deeds of incendiarism, murders; a volcano belching forth lava caused by violent earthquakes, rich spoils in immense heaps concealed in dark caverns, a concert consisting of shrieks of horror accompanied by an orchestra of the firing of innumerable pistols and guns. That is life. . . . '

Suddenly he received the news from a friend that Camille had taken unto herself a husband! In the first moments of furious desperation her deceived lover vowed summary vengeance, deciding to kill her and then himself. Provided with dagger and poison, we find him once more on his way to Paris via Genoa and Nice. Were Paris not still so very far off, and had he encountered the fair deceiver on his way thither, he might possibly have achieved his murderous intention. The journey by road was so very long, even to Nice, that by the time he arrived there his bloodthirsty inclinations had cooled, and he concluded that he had better return to Rome, where he explained his absence to the Director at the Villa Medici by a story that he had attempted to drown himself, but had been saved in time. Such a cock and bull tale provokes a smile by its childish transparency, but it is quite in keeping with the character of the man, and his desire for the theatrical. The incident inspired him, however, to write his Retour à la vie. His longer stay at Rome did not in the least mitigate his first impression. Everything he saw and heard was in complete contradiction to what he expected, and, consequently, was detestable. His imagination had defined something quite different from what he experienced. The religious ceremonies of Corpus Domini he had pictured as 'comparable in richness and luxury to sacred functions of Ancient Egypt: to the musical pomp of the days of Solomon'; instead of which he saw 'a procession, dirty and mean looking, consisting of priests looking like delinquents, dressed in tawdry, grotesque vestments, in which they strutted about before a crowd of women.' He heard 'nasal-sounding clarinets and blaring trumpets worthy of a fair, causing a demoniacal cacophony,' while Rome itself is to him, as ever, a 'stupid place where one can do nothing because of the sirocco that blows, and the air as dense as smoke, the cafés being likewise dirty, dark, without newspapers, and where one is badly waited on.' In a city that is, in fact, one huge museum, he found not one work of art to satisfy him, no remains of its great past to interest him, or cause a thrill of admiration, a poetical vision, or a serious thought. His romanticism is of so very singular a character as to cause us to doubt its absolute sincerity. He is found morbidly frequenting cemeteries and remaining there for hours, and, when occasion offered, bringing away, secretly, some portion of bone or skull thrown up in the digging of a grave. The wonderful spectacle of a dead world, the glorious remnants of a civilization that has vanished, that have been the inspiration of artists and philosophers, are only tiresome, and tell him nothing. Hadrian's villa at Tivoli awoke, however, some antithesis to his mood, though, on his own showing, this was caused by the imbibing of strong drink, for he writes:

'I became intoxicated with aquavite. A canto from the Æneid, which had lain dormant in my mind since childhood, took possession of me, inspiring me with a strange recitative united to stranger harmonies. Thus under the influence of the inebriating liquor, memories, poetry, and music, was I caused an inconceivable excitement and exaltation. This four-fold inebriation culminated in a paroxysm of violent tears and convulsive sobs.'

During the period of his sojourn at Rome, which he tried by every means to abbreviate, he was entirely insensible to and uninterested in the social life there. This curious man was panting for the life of the Boulevards. Unlike most great artists and thinkers who have visited the Eternal City, he felt only a feverish desire for the glitter of his beloved Paris, justifying himself thus: 'I have within me so much that has been devastated, so many palaces—châteaux en Espagne—destroyed, so many ghastly ruins, that I seek for life outside my dead self.' Speaking of St. Peter's he says it is 'immense, sublime, overwhelming,' hence he avoids its contemplation, preferring to ensconce himself in a confessional elsewhere, devouring the passionate verse of his favourite author—Byron. Again, speaking of the mighty Basilica, he says: 'These paintings, these columns, this gigantic architecture, are but the body of the monument, music should be its soul. But where is it? There is no such thing . . . only a harmonium on wheels, to be moved from place to place as desired,' and the choristers whom he would have liked to count by the thousand consisted of eighteen on ordinary days and thirty-two on festivals. He does not in the least regret his absence from Rome during the springs of 1831 and 1832, being then unable to assist at the church ceremonies of Holy Week. Even Palestrina he derides. 'Good gracious,' he exclaims, 'it's stuff to laugh at, simple acrobaticism, quite extraneous to art, and such as to make one think that the composer having lost both hands was constrained to write with his feet.' Referring to the state of music in Italy, he regrets that he looked in vain for such, either in theatre or church:

'In the former [he remarks], before the rising of the curtain a short noise is made by the orchestra, which passes for an overture, but is wretched commonplace stuff which a barrel organ-grinder would refuse to play. In the latter, airs from operas are sung, and such overtures as that to the Barbiere and Cenerentola are played.'

'To rot here listening to this shameful exhibition of Italian music' was to him intolerable. His trip to Naples was of short duration, but pleased him, as the bustle of that city was a reflection of his longed-for Paris. Strange to say, he waxes enthusiastic over the loneliness of wonderful Pompeii, which shows how entirely contradictory was the man's nature:

'Oh [he exclaims] to be alone in this skeleton of a city! To wander at night among its columns and their shadows, only by the light of the moon, and free to give myself up to my every caprice! To dream in the midst of this silence, to trample beneath my feet these huge, polished paving stones, and to tremble, seeing behind the dense cloud of the past, gladiators, tigers, lions. . . .'

His ultimate return to Paris was a liberation, a positive resurrection from a living tomb. As soon, however, as he was settled in the French capital, he began to regret the things he had missed in Italy, or had failed to understand. While in the south, his work, which from time to time he sent to Paris, consisted simply of rewritings of compositions made prior to his leaving France. Berlioz was no sooner back again in his own country than he composed some of his most important works, which, strangely enough, are on Italian subjects. For instance, the plains of Lombardy, theatre of the Napoleonic victories, inspired him with his Symphonie Funèbre et Triomphale, while Harold en Italie, Benvenuto Cellini, Carnaval Romain, Roméo et Juliette, Siciliana, Serenata d'un Montanaro, Abruzzese, and part of Les Troyens were all composed after leaving Italy. The musical world of Paris was one day greatly astonished and excited to learn that Berlioz, who had written so many tirades against Italian music, had applied for the post of director at the Théâtre Italien! No doubt the desire of the then unappreciated composer to make money drove him to take this step and entertain the strange idea, but when we remember the violent abuse he hurled at the Italian School, declaring Donizetti's fecundity only to be inferior to that of a rabbit, and recall that airs by Bellini were included in some of Berlioz's concerts, the contrariness of his nature is again manifest. Many other instances might be quoted were space available, but for those interested in the general career and work of the composer we would commend to them the mine of information contained in Adolphe Boschot's book.

The Islington Choral Society begins its new session on September 25 at the Central Library Hall, Holloway Road. New members will be welcomed. The Society, formed in 1920, under the patronage of Sir Frederick Bridge, has a membership of over two hundred. Mr. Ronald Chamberlain is the conductor; all the Society's officers give their services. The works chosen for the coming season are The Messiah, Hiawatha, and Merrie England.

In celebration of his R. A. M. Jubilee, Mr. Tobias Matthay was given a reception by his pupils at his School at Wimpole Street on July 21. A beautiful triptych, the work of Stanley North, and containing the names of some eighty of his pupils, was unveiled by Miss Irene Scharrer and Miss Myra Hess. Mrs. Spencer Curwen made the presentation speech.

* I have myself, in years gone by, constantly heard such exhibitions. An air from Traviata, &c., was no unusual thing to hear during the elevation of the Host!—C. T.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

There is no need for 'Russil', a Russian Society for the dissemination abroad of Russian music and literature. Good Russian music has always been appreciated in Germany, and when 'Russil' with the Philharmonic Society under Pomeranzeff organized a series of concerts it ought to have known that only the best of Russian music must be submitted, as there is already plenty of the mediocre variety in Germany. Moreover, the conductor is too fond of exaggeration, of rubato, of brass and drum. The sole attraction of these concerts was the reappearance of Kloti in Tchaikovsky's Concerto in B flat minor, whom some years ago rumour had declared a victim of the Russian revolution. Neither Kloti nor Tepito Arriola, who in the Beethovensaal gave a concert of classical and modern music, have retained their former excellence. Arriola, years ago a prodigy of marvellous ability, has become a good pianist with great technique—but the marvel has disappeared.

Alexander Borowsky, another foreign pianist, proved himself in compositions akin to his temperament—such as a Gigue by Loeilly, Preludes by Rachmaninov, Prokofiev, and Scriabin—a great and convincing artist, but like many foreigners, he seems to play Bach and Mozart with a lack of purpose.

It was a happy thought of Dr. E. L. Swerkoff to take his Balalaika Orchestra on tour through Germany. It is remarkable what a wealth of sound may be obtained from the primitive balalaika under an energetic conductor—a wealth of sound graduating down to the sweetest ppp. A storm of applause followed each number wherever the players appeared, although it is a strange world which is opened up before the listener. It is very appropriate that Swerkoff has just published a collection of fifty Russian folk-songs with a German text by August Scholz (Leipsic, Heinz, Zimmermann). The accompaniment for pianoforte is primitive, yet it suffices.

VOLKSMUSIK

The street concerts organized by the Volksbühne Gross-Hamburg with the help of the large choral societies, and held in the streets and squares of Hamburg, are gathering great and enthusiastic audiences. Press and public hail these performances as the realisation of demands made by music-pedagogues and eminent musicians. Folk-songs and other serious and joyful songs are felt to be the most efficacious means of raising the taste of the people spoiled by cinema and comic-opera. The enterprise is looked upon as an aid in the solution of important social questions, and many German towns are intending to take up the idea and organize similar open-air concerts.

A love of folk-music has set in that augurs well for the future. The male-voice societies are again in full swing, and, during the months of June and July, male-voice competitions were the order of the day. Conforming with this movement Eduard Kremser has just published a book of three hundred and fifty-six pages, Wiener Lieder und Tänze (Gerlach & Wiedling, Leipsic), which gathers together a hundred and twenty-three songs and sixty dances of a decidedly popular cast. Many of these pieces have not been published before, having been handed down orally from generation to generation. Their authors travelled from town to town, visiting public resorts and hostleries and singing their songs, many of which became at once public property.

Hamburg is the city of the colossal. After Mahler's eighth Symphony, which was boomed as the 'symphony of the thousand,' Schuricht conducted No. 6, called the Tragic Symphony, which however ought to bear the title the 'fantastic' because between the evolutions of the laughing philosopher and the serious searcher we observe the mad pranks of E. T. W. Hoffmann. The Symphony not only lacks symmetry of form; it suffers also from sharply pointed contrasts in melodic matter and exaggerated employment of orchestral means.

On the whole a study of the programmes of music at Hamburg reveals stagnation. Nowhere do we meet with a powerful personality. There are either the great, recognised names or unmitigated mediocrity.

MUSICAL FESTIVAL AT DUISBURG

The chief work at this Festival was Arnold Schönberg's Gurrelieder, composed between 1900 and 1901 and first performed on February 23, 1913, by the Philharmonic Choir of Vienna under Schreker. It is the composer's greatest and 'fairest' work of his earlier period, a powerful composition for voices and orchestra, in extent similar to Mahler's eighth Symphony, in form a secular cantata, in character a fantastic ballad.

Herr Scheinplüg proved himself as usual the master of a colossal apparatus, composed of various singing societies and orchestras of Duisburg and Bochum. Frau Merz-Tunner with her brilliant soprano voice sang Tove, Alfred Wilde (tenor) had the part of Waldemar, Frau Dröll-Pfaff's alto did full justice to the song of the Waldaube, Holger Börgesen's powerful bass voice sang the Bauer, A. Giltmann the part of the Klaus-Narr, and Wilhelm Klitsch spoke the melodrama.

RHEINHESISCHE MUSIKWOCHE

In order to prove that the inhabitants of the occupied districts are not forgotten by mother Germania, the Darmstadt Landesorchester under Generalmusikdirektor Michael Balling undertook a musical tour, visiting Mayence, Worms, Bingen, Alzey, Oppenheim, Nieder-Ingelheim, and Wörrstadt. Mayence was to have two concerts, the second of which (Beethoven's No. 6 and Strauss's Alpen-Sinfonie) had, owing to the excitement attendant upon the murder of Rathenau, to be abandoned. The programme of the first concert contained Bruckner's Symphony No. 3, Mozart's No. 41, and Strauss's Don Juan. The Wormer listened to Rudi Stephan's Musik für Orchester, and Bruckner's No. 3. At Bingen the orchestra played Strauss's Don Juan and Brahms's No. 1. At Oppenheim and Alzey, where the concerts took place in the church, the programme included the Prelude to Lohengrin, the Adagio from the ninth Symphony, Johanna Senzer's Sonata for two violins and small orchestra, and Strauss's Tod und Verklärung. Nieder-Ingelheim and Wörrstadt, with their rural populations, were supplied with popular music excerpts from the Midsummer Night's Dream, Johann Strauss's Kaiser-Walzer, and the Overture to Rienzi. In addition to the above, Frau Johanna Hesse (soprano) sang in the smaller towns appropriate songs, Frau Kuhn-Liebel sang Volkslieder with harp, by Friedrich Brückmann, and Konzertmeister Andreea played the Concertos for violoncello with orchestra, by d'Albert and Haydn. The tour was a great success, concert-halls and churches being filled to the doors.

MAX REGER-ARCHIV

In the presence of the widow of the master the Reger-Archiv at Weimar was opened on June 30, with speeches by Dr. A. Paulsen, minister of state, Nachbaur, chief manager of the Meissinger Theatre, and especially Dr. Adolf Speemann (Stuttgart) who furnished an exhaustive description of the nature of Reger's music. A programme—Klara von Conter (songs), Marie Nietzsche (pianoforte), and R. Reitz (violin)—gave the opening its consecration.

A NEW GERMAN OPERA

Humperdinck's students' opera Gaudamus (Berlin, A. Fürstner), coming from a man standing at the brink of the grave, caused a great surprise among the many admirers of the ailing composer. When Wagner wrote Parisfal he thought of death and salvation. His pupil Humperdinck, who seemed never to grow old in spirit, glorified youth and gave to his opera the motto: 'Hoch die Jugend! Tod der Philestern!' There is nothing but joy, happiness, and humour from start to finish. A flow of beautiful music, partly based on well-known students' songs, partly original, strains of a peculiarly Humperdinckian style, the whole cast in a gorgeous orchestral garb and worked out with great contrapuntal skill—these are elements ensuring the success of this new opera. The plot, dealing with students' lives at Bonn about the year 1820, is a worn-out affair infused with new life by Robert Misch the poet. The work is everywhere received with enthusiasm.

F. ERCKMANN.

NEW YORK

Let no one imagine that, because the Opera House and the concert-halls are closed during the hot summer months, New York is without music. We have two organizations which give outdoor concerts during the warm weather. They are not municipal, nor are they in any way connected with military bands. They are both private enterprises. The longest season (twelve weeks) is that of Mr. Edwin Franko Goldman's band. Mr. Goldman is the founder of these concerts, controlling them entirely, as he is the business manager as well as the musical director. He has no rent to pay. Columbia University gives him the use of the campus for the pleasant evenings, and the use of the gymnasium for the rainy ones. On fine evenings the audiences number about ten thousand, but they grow larger every year, so it is fortunate that the campus can accommodate twenty thousand people or more. The concerts are ostensibly free. That is, everyone can get a ticket of admission to the grounds by applying for it. Once inside, however, he must either stand or sit on the grass unless he is willing to pay for more privileges. The programmes are sold for ten cents, and holders of programmes can sit on benches without backs. For a more comfortable seat a season ticket is sold for five dollars. All money collected, except from these two sources, comes from the generosity of Mr. Goldman's friends and others who believe in his enterprise and wish to encourage it.

The band numbers sixty players. The same faces appear on the platform year after year. The devotion and loyalty of Mr. Goldman's forces are unbounded, and they are deaf to all offers for other Summer work, and equally deaf to all attempts to make them dissatisfied with any plans or conditions Mr. Goldman imposes. As a large proportion of the music played is written for full orchestra, naturally the clarinets predominate, the parts scored for first and second violins being given to them. Out of the sixty men, twenty-three play the clarinet. The parts written for the other strings are divided between wood-wind and brass in various ways. When possible, Mr. Goldman uses published transcriptions for band of orchestral compositions, and of these he says that the English examples are far the best. Many things that he wishes to play are not published, and these he has specially arranged. Music originally written for a band is also on every programme in a lesser degree, and is played for encores. Every year the classical excerpts are played more and more, and every year there is more demand for them, as Mr. Goldman continually calls for 'request' programmes, when the most conspicuous names are those of Beethoven, Wagner, and Tchaikovsky. It is Mr. Goldman's aim—as it was that of Theodore Thomas in his famous Central Park Garden Summer concerts inaugurated more than fifty years ago—to cultivate the taste of the people, and make them prefer the best and ask for it. The largest audience ever seen on Columbia Green was there one night early this season, when the prominent name on the programme was that of Beethoven. The Overture to Egmont, the Allegretto from the seventh Symphony, and Leonore No. 3 were played to attentive listeners, and were followed by deafening applause. If it is argued that justice cannot be done to these compositions without strings, the answer is that many who have not been habitués of the Winter Concert Halls become recruits, going there for the first time in their lives to hear the great orchestras play the compositions they have learned to love by being introduced to them by Mr. Goldman's band.

Our second series of summer outdoor concerts is being given by a full orchestra in the Stadium of the City College. These concerts originated four years ago at the instigation of Arnold Volpe, who conducted them for two seasons. But this was never a one-man affair. Orchestral concerts are very expensive, heavy guarantees have to be obtained each year, and changes have been made in conductors and in the personnel of the orchestra for pecuniary reasons. For the last two summers the concerts have been given for only six weeks, and there are seldom any soloists. This season the Philharmonic Society has supplied the players (eighty-five men), and the conductors have been Henry Hadley and Willem van Hoogstraten, each being in charge for three weeks. Continual changes have been made in the sounding-board arrangements, and this year a large and elaborate one was constructed in the attempt to make the strings properly heard in the open air. But it seems to be futile. The sounding-board accentuates the brass, and when full orchestra is used, it is difficult to hear the strings. It might be worth while to try placing the violins at the back, where they would get the benefit of the sounding-board, but no one has attempted this revolutionary arrangement yet. The programmes are largely such as are offered in the concert-halls in the winter, though some lighter compositions are introduced, and some encores are given. Two or three full symphonies are played each week—well played and well conducted—yet it cannot be said that these concerts are what they claim to be—an artistic success—for the simple reason that the strings do not 'carry' in the open air when the forces of wood-wind and brass are let loose. Thus the experienced listener finds the combination of sound to which he is accustomed unequal and often distorted, while many fine effects are lost entirely. The audiences are large and enthusiastic. Seven or eight thousand people sit on the arena's stone steps (which are very uncomfortable) and about two thousand more sit in chairs, in what is called the 'field'—the ground in front of the orchestral stand. The prices are one dollar for the field, fifty and twenty-five cents for the stone steps. Many rich music-lovers give largely to the fund, Adolph Lewisohn (who built the Stadium and presented it to the City College) always heading the list. Faces seen in the winter concert-halls abound at the Stadium concerts, and it is a pleasant meeting place for musicians in the summer evenings. No music-lover can fail to get some enjoyment out of the efforts of the orchestra, even though his eye may stray to the fluttering of the flags, and to the rivalry of Jupiter and Venus in the evening sky.

M. H. FLINT.

PARIS

One of the chief events of the end of the season—the revival at the Opéra of Debussy's Martyre de Saint-Sébastien—proved extremely disappointing. In the current issue of the Revue Musicale, Mr. Emile Vuillermoz, that most acute and fearless among Parisian critics, explains that as sufficient time was not available for rehearsal, the work should not have been produced at all. In fact, the conductor, André Caplet, who had prepared the performances of 1911 under the direct supervision of Debussy, refused to conduct in the present circumstances, and another conductor was appointed at the eleventh hour to replace him.

Other disappointments occurred with the performances of Stravinsky's Ballet, Renard, and little opera, Maïra, which were given by the Diaghilev Company—but this time the disappointment had to do with the works themselves, and not with the conditions under which they were produced. With those who felt disappointed with Stravinsky, as revealed by these two futile little works, I heartily agree.

Among the new works by French composers recently produced, the first mention should certainly go to Witkowski's beautiful Poème de la Maison. The music is instinct throughout with deep feeling as genial as it is earnest, and with a most genuine sense of poetry. It is a work which should soon become popular among music-lovers in France and elsewhere.

On June 20, the 'Hommage National' paid at the Sorbonne to Gabriel Fauré assumed imposing proportions owing to the participation of conductors such as Vincent d'Indy, Messager, Gaubert, Rabaud, and Blüser; soloists such as Casals, Cortot, Lortat, Madame Jeanne Raunay, the tenor Panzéra (who sang the beautiful set of new songs, L'Horizon Chimérique, which belongs to the best of Fauré's output), and the orchestra and choir of the Conservatoire.

At the Concerts-Pasdeloup the last novelty of the season was Le Borne's Mudarra, a work of moderate importance.

The Société Musicale Indépendante ended its season with an incredibly long concert, rendered more tedious by the fact that it took place when the heat-wave from which Paris suffered at its very worst. In the circumstances it was difficult to judge fairly works such as a String Quartet by Jean Cras, which was not devoid of poetic feeling, and a Quintet by Robert Casadesus, which, even when played at a time when the audience was collapsing from sheer heat and from the boredom of an endless Violin Sonata played before, seemed to possess vitality enough to arouse a measure of interest.

At a concert of the Revue Musicale a curious and not unattractive Dilie, by Roland Manuel, and two Ballades by Honegger, were given.

On June 10 Madame Labully sang in delightful manner old Italian Arias and modern French songs, and the pianist André Laumonier gave an attractive reading of Cyril Scott's Impressions from the Jungle Book. Another noteworthy item was the performance of Paul Marcilly's charming and unpretentious Rayons Intérieurs.

On June 16 Madame Thérèse Vié sang with great success Ravel's Poèmes de Mallarmé, Poulenc's Bestiaire, and Delage's Poèmes Hindous, at a concert organized in aid of the 'Œuvre des Aveugles de Guerre.' On June 24, the season ended with a splendid song recital given by Roland Hayes.

I have refrained from mentioning a few novelties—some of no small importance, such as Ravel's Sonata for violin and violoncello—for the sole reason that they were played in London soon after their first performance here.

A. BOLD.

ROME

I am indebted to the editor of the Rivista Nazionale di Musica, Signor Vito Raeli, for kindly giving me permission to reproduce the following interesting paper recently read by Carlo Giorgio Garofolo before the Roman Philharmonic Society, and published in the Rivista Nazionale:

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY OF UNEDITED AND UNKNOWN MUSIC OF GIROLAMO FRESCOBALDI

It would not be superfluous to speak of Girolamo Frescobaldi, even if this great musician, the chief composer of the 16th century, were honoured to-day as he deserves to be. On the contrary, however, his name figures in the works of the various musicologists only as a worthy organist and composer, and not as a great master, such as he really was and remains.

It is not my aim to make a biographical sketch: I will only say that Frescobaldi was born at Ferrara in 1583 and died at Rome in 1643. From 1604 onwards he lived at Rome almost without interruption, and in 1608, on his return from Flanders, he became organist of St. Peter's. His fame as organist and composer quickly spread throughout Europe, and his Toccate, Capricci, Canzoni, &c., were widely diffused and in a short time passed into various editions. He was contemporaneously 'virtuoso' clavicembalist at the Court of the Aldobrandini at Rome. He later passed a short time at Florence at the Court of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, and then returned to St. Peter's, where he remained until his death. Buried in the Basilica of the Holy Apostles, in the common grave, not a sign remains to mark the last resting place of one who added so great lustre to Italian art.

I have said that Frescobaldi was a great master; in fact, with regard to the technique of the keyboard—later fount of all other instrumental and symphonic forms—he is to be compared to Palestrina, to whom is due the development of vocal polyphony. Frescobaldi, almost his contemporary, gave life, direction, and definite form to the new class of music of purely vocal derivation, as no one before him had been able to do. To be more clear and precise I will say that Frescobaldi did for the instrumental art what Dante had done for literature, Raphael for drawing, Michelangelo for architecture, and Leonardo for engineering.

At the distance of four centuries, the intrinsic value of Frescobaldi's compositions remains unaltered. They are a class of music which has no need of transformation or of realisation, as have the major part of the productions of composers posterior to him, in which the harmonies were indicated by figured basses alone, giving place frequently to equivocation or false interpretation: his music on the contrary remains integral in its real structure. Although the lugal style predominates, the contrapuntal power and the masterly movement of the parts cede the first place to the purity of the inspiration, and to the geniality and beauty of the motives, which instead of being sung are expressed by the keys. In order to obtain the perfect execution of this composer's works, it is to be noted that a not common capacity and mechanical ability are needed. It is this class of music which a century later found its greatest development in a descendant, indirect though he be, of Frescobaldi—Johann Sebastian Bach. It is well-known that amongst his other pupils, Frescobaldi numbered Fröberger, sent expressly by the Austrian Court to Rome to perfect himself with the Master, with whom he remained three years, and learned how to play and compose according to the mind and rules of Frescobaldi, and it is known also that after his definite return to Germany, he became master to the first generation of Bach. There is no doubt that J. S. Bach studied and loved Frescobaldi's works, and that the productions of the great Italian were for him a rich fountain of inspiration.

Not only did he cite him and esteem him, but he had a true and real veneration for his art. Schweitzer, in Bach, le Musicien poète, recounts how in 1721 Bach, already famous, acquired a copy of Frescobaldi's Fiori Musicali, which work, bearing Bach's signature, is still in existence. Without in the least minimising the greatness and importance of J. S. Bach, it is well to know that the originator of the lugal style, and of the fugue in particular, was Frescobaldi. It is deeply to be regretted, therefore, that this grand artist should be so little known, not only out of Italy, but even in his own land.

It is only too true that we possess but a small part of his compositions: many of them, along with the greater part of our musical patrimony, have been lost. Another illustrious scholar of Frescobaldi, Bartolomeo Grossi, confirms this when he says: 'Signor Girolamo has written infinite other volumes, and continually forms new ones, since he is so eminent in composition that he does marvels; but the fatigue and expense of printing does not permit them to see the light.'

It is to be deplored, however, that even of the existing works only a small part is known. Haberl prepared an accurate edition of some of these in modern notation (Breitkopf & Härtel, 1889), and in the preface deplored the neglect which musicians show to the memory of the great Ferrarese.

The greater part of the master's music, at the distance of four centuries, is probably irremediably lost—so much the more so, as, in 1688, his descendants ceased with the death of his son Domenic, a benefited priest of the Vatican Basilica.

I owe it to mere good fortune and chance that I am the possessor to-day of an old manuscript of the 18th century containing what I believe to be unpublished music of Girolamo Frescobaldi.

Many years ago I bought this MS. with some others from a wandering bookseller, and only at a later date did I become aware of its importance. This MS. of a hundred and fourteen pages, measuring 300 by 140 mm., without a frontispiece, unbound, but well preserved, dating from not later than the beginning of the 18th century, and as to the completeness of which one cannot be certain, includes twenty-seven Fugues for three and four voices, a Sonata col flautino in A major, an Elevation in G minor, and nineteen Canzoni, at the top of the first of which is written 'Canzone P.a Frescobaldi.'

The researches and studies I made regarding the style of these compositions completely reassured me of the genuineness of their authorship.

LEONARD PRYTON.

The North London Philharmonic Society is a new organization formed for the study and performance of the best choral and orchestral music, and for the development of appreciation of modern British music. The Society begins operations on September 18 and 19, at Spensley Hall, Brooke Road, Stoke Newington, the choir meeting on the former date and the orchestra on the latter. Mr. Henry Horwood (late of the Queen's Hall and Philharmonic Orchestras) is the conductor. The hon. secretary is Mr. John H. Chisholm, 30, Broke Road, Dalston, E.8.

Sir George and Lady Henschel gave a concert at Aviemore on August 9, in aid of the building fund of the local branch of the British Legion. Sir George sang an air from Cimarosa's Don Calandrino, Dvorák's By the Waters of Babylon, and Schubert's To wander. Lady Henschel sang Schubert's The Almighty, and three of her husband's settings of songs from Kingsley's The Water-Babies. Mr. Maurice Sons played solos by Bach, Wieniawski, Pugnani, and Fauré. The concert produced the handsome profit of £63, and was repeated at New Lonmore on August 15.

CONTENTS.

	Page
Music in the Dominion : A Talk with Dr. A. S. Vogt	613
Significant Chords. By Alexander Brent Smith	615
Medtner. By Alfred J. Swan	616
Music at the Oberammergau Passion Play	619
The Nurseries of English Song. II. By Frank Kidson	620
Studies on the Horn. II.—Wagner and the Horn Parts of Lohengrin . By W. F. H. Blandford	622
Occasional Notes	624
The National Eisteddfod	625
The Promenade Concerts	628
The Salzburg Festival. By Edwin Evans	628
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	631
The Musician's Bookshelf	632
New Music	639
Gramophone Notes. By "Discus"	642
Church and Organ Music	643
The Silbermann Organs at Dresden. By John Matthews	643
Royal College of Organists : Annual General Meeting	644
Chamber Music for Amateurs	647
Letters to the Editor	648
Sixty Years Ago	653
Sharps and Flats	653
Royal College of Music	654
Music in the Provinces	654
Obituary	654
Music in Ireland	655
Berlioz in Italy. By Claude Trevor	655
Musical Notes from Abroad	657
Miscellaneous	659

MUSIC:

Proud Maisie. Part-Song for Mixed Voices. By JOHN POINTER £33

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. The Earth is the Lord's. Harvest Anthem. By Albert Lowe.
2. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BANTOCK, GRANVILLE.—"How sleep the brave." Chorus or Quartet for T.T.B.B. (No. 584, The Orpheus) 4d.

BREWER, A. HERBERT.—"The Holy Innocents." An Oratorio. Revised edition. 4s.

FOSTER, MYLES B.—"The Song of the Gale." Part-Song arranged for Mixed Voices, with Accompaniment for Pianoforte or Orchestra. (No. 1405, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.

HAM, REV. HERBERT.—Te Deum laudamus. Set to music in the key of E flat for Choir and Congregation. 4d.

PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, REV. W.—Proclamation Hymn, No. 1 ("Onward! do not linger"). 1d.; 2s. 6d. for 50.

POINTER, JOHN.—"Proud Maisie." Part-Song for Mixed Voices. (No. 955, The Musical Times.) 2d.

PURCELL, HENRY.—"The Gordian Knot untied." Incidental Music. Suite No. 1. For Strings, with additional Wind and Drum Parts (ad lib.). Edited by GUSTAV HOLST. Score, 5s. String Parts, 2s. 8d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 363, contains the following music in both notations.—"Now golden day again is dawning." Trio from "The Magic Flute." Arranged for accompanied or unaccompanied singing. By MOZART. 2d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Piano-forte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

Book 268. Folk-Songs for Schools. Set VII. Collected and arranged by CECIL J. SHARP. Vocal Part only ... 4d. —

Book 269. Folk-Songs for Schools. Set VIII. Collected by H. E. D. HAMMOND. Arranged by CECIL J. SHARP. Vocal Part only ... 4d. —

No. 1164. "The Walnut Tree." Unison Song. SCHUMANN 3d. —

No. 1228. "The Organ Grinder." Unison Song. SCHUBERT 2d. —

SILVER, REGINALD.—"Crossing the Bar." Setting as a Vesper Hymn or for use at a Burial Service. 2d.

SMITH, A. BRENT.—"The Cotswold Farmers." Song. Words by JOHN DRINKWATER. In G minor, For Contralto or Bass; in B minor, for Soprano or Tenor. 2s. each.

SMITH, R. F. WOOD.—"The Virgin's Cradle Hymn." Song for Medium Voice. 1s. 6d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2381. "Yea, cast me from heights." S.A.T.B. EDWARD ELGAR 2d.

„ 2382. "Whether I find thee." S.A.T.B. EDWARD ELGAR 2d.

„ 2383. "After many a dusty mile." S.A.T.B. EDWARD ELGAR 3d.

„ 2384. "It's oh! to be a wild wind." S.A.T.B. EDWARD ELGAR 2d.

„ 2385. "Feasting, I watch." S.A.T.B. EDWARD ELGAR 3d.

„ 2387. "The Three Knights." T.T.B.B. EDWARD GERMAN 3d.

„ 2388. "The Isle." S.A.T.B. ERIC FOGG 2d.

„ 2390. "Three Sleeps." S.A.T.B. GERRARD WILLIAMS 2d.

WILLIS-DIXON, A.—"My Garden." Part-Song for S.A.T.B. 2d.
— "Oh! who will come a-maying." Part-Song for S.A.T.B. 2d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

FERRARI, GUSTAVE.—"Summer Haze." Part-Song for S.S.A.A. 10 cents (4d.).

PEELE, DUDLEY.—"Hear, O Lord, when I cry." For Soprano and Baritone. 12 cents (6d.).

TYE, DR. CHRISTOPHER.—"Not unto us, but Thee, O Lord," and "O God of Hosts the mighty Lord." 10 cents (4d.).

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION

FOR

MUS. B. AND MUS. D.

DR. B. BURROWS

(Mus. D. LONDON)

Terms, Testimonials, and Successes:
30, HIGHFIELD STREET, LEICESTER.

ORGAN MUSIC FOR SALE.—Fine Collection. All well-known Composers. List and prices on application. "Organist," Three Arts Club, 16A, Marylebone Road, N.W.1.

TWO - Manual and Pedal ORGAN for SALE. by the Smith American Organ Company. Hand and foot blowers, and power can be attached. 20 Stops and Couplers. Bargain for quick sale. Mere House, Gravelly Hill, Birmingham.

OCT 1 1922

No.
956

Price
6d.

THE

FOUNDED 1844

OCTOBER 1, 1922

Directors—
W. BERRIDGE
C. E. GALLARD

THE
WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES

LTD.

HAVE NOW REMOVED TO THEIR FORMER PREMISES

ADJOINING WIGMORE HALL.

OVER 20 ADDITIONAL MUSIC STUDIOS

Electric Lift. Central Heating. Lavatories and Comfortable Lounges on each floor.

GRAND PIANO IN EVERY ROOM

32-40, WIGMORE STREET, W.-1.

The Name of

J. & J. HOPKINSON

*Stands for the HIGHEST ATTAINMENTS
in THE WORLD OF MUSIC*

REMARKABLE FOR THE EXQUISITE QUALITY OF TONE

J. & J. HOPKINSON, LTD.,

44, FITZROY ROAD, PRIMROSE HILL,
LONDON, N.W.-1

(ONLY ADDRESS).

Registered

Trade Mark.

Melody Lectures

RECORDED BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc., LL.D., F.R.C.O.

Chairman of the National Council of Music in Wales, Director of Music in the University of Wales, and Professor of Music in the University College of Aberystwyth.

Illustrations played by

MARJORIE HAYWARD (Violin)

AND

THE LECTURER (Piano)

ON

“His Master’s Voice”

GRAMOPHONE RECORDS

12-inch Double-sided Records, 6/- each.

MELODY LECTURES

- | | |
|--|--|
| C. 1063 { 1—On Musical Outline
2—On Definitions | C. 1066 { 7—On Balance, Part 1
8—On Balance, Part 2 |
| C. 1064 { 3—On the Pentatonic Scale
4—On Melodic Meanings | C. 1067 { 9—On Completion
10—On Cadence |
| C. 1065 { 5—On Melodic Adventure, Part 1
6—On Melodic Adventure, Part 2 | C. 1068 { 11—On Simple Tune Building
12—On Movement Building
(piano illustrations only) |

LECTURE ILLUSTRATIONS

- | | |
|--|--|
| C. 1069 { 13—Tunes Built in Wa'es, Part 1
14—Tunes Built in Wales, Part 2 | C. 1070 { 15—Melodies of Handel
16—Largo from “Berenice” (Handel) |
| C. 1071 { 17—Rondo in B Flat (Mozart)—Part 1
18—Rondo in B Flat (Mozart)—Part 2 | |

THE GRAMOPHONE COMPANY, LTD.

Education Department,

363 - 367 OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

OCTOBER 1 1922

BACH'S ORGAN MUSIC

By IVOR ATKINS

Though the organ works of Bach have occupied the attention of organists in England for about a hundred years, the survey made of them has been curiously slight on the whole. It would be safe to say that, until recent years, the Chorale Preludes, which in actual bulk occupy so large a place amongst the organ works, have remained practically unknown to all but the more adventurous of Bach's English followers.

No adequate explanation of this neglect has so far been made. It is curious to reflect that in this country the greatness of the Chorale Preludes should not have been as quickly recognised as in Germany; for, thanks to the enterprise of Robert Cocks, the first English edition of The Little Organ Book, the six Schübler Preludes, and the majority of the Eighteen Chorale Preludes was published about eighty years ago.* Though the edition was launched with all the authority which Mendelssohn's name carried as editor, it appears to have had little sale, and it is significant that the very fact of such an edition having appeared seems to have been quite unknown to such Bach students as Dr. Sanford Terry and Mr. Harvey Grace.

Even if we recognise the fact that until recent years the hymn-tunes upon which the Preludes are based were unfamiliar to English ears, and that the words of the hymns which Bach so faithfully illustrated were entirely unknown, it scarcely explains matters, for if these Preludes are judged from the point of view of absolute music their beauty is so great that it should have compelled instant recognition of their value.

It is true that, with our knowledge of both tune and text, we are now able to understand them fully; Pirro and Schweitzer, too, have helped greatly by their identification of Bach's use of particular figures as a means of illustration. Nevertheless, one would have thought that, even without this knowledge, it would have been as impossible to miss the greatness of the music itself as it would be to miss that of Wagner's, if listened to in temporary forgetfulness of his whole system of leit-motiven.

Surely, one would say, no musician worthy of the name, given a movement bearing such a title as Das alte Jahr vergangen ist or In dir ist Freude, could possibly mistake its mood and meaning. And yet the beauty of the music of The Little Organ Book (of which Parry said in a letter to the writer 'the contents are amongst the most adorable things there are') appears to have passed practically unnoticed for almost fifty years. No knowledge of the text, no critical exegesis that can be offered can add much to the stature of such incomparable music as the Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland Prelude (Bk. XVII., 46),* and yet it, too, shared the same fate. By some accident this glorious music seems to have been simply passed over.

So little was the spirit of adventure abroad for anything but the Preludes and Fugues that the writer still remembers with amazement that the Magnificat (Bk. XVIII.) and the Jesus Christus, unser Heiland Preludes (Bk. XVII.), came as a complete surprise to one of the best-known organists of his day when played after Evensong at a Three Choirs Festival a very short time before the war. The challenge which such Preludes flung to musicianship—especially in the form in which they appeared in the Peters Edition, with its logical and satisfying use of the C clef—was only too seldom taken up.

Fortunately, Mr. Harvey Grace's recent book† will do much to remedy this one-sided view—a view which has hitherto emphasised the Toccatas, Fantasias, Preludes and Fugues, &c., at the expense of the Chorale Preludes. The book, which is the work of an enthusiast, will be of great value to students, for the author is a safe guide to all that is of permanent value in the organ works. Mr. Grace wisely discusses the works chronologically, and, as a result, we are able to follow Bach's development from his beginnings as a student to the last culminating days at Leipsic. So far as the present writer is aware, there has been no such work as this before, and it is a matter for pride that such a study should have proceeded from an Englishman. Although the book shows great learning, it is written in a style that is as clear and easy as its contents are illuminating. One is pleasantly surprised to find a book on this subject so thoroughly alive. It is refreshing, too, to see that with all his enthusiasm, the author manages to preserve his critical faculty; by the exercise of that faculty he is, for the most part, doing Bach's works great service. Mr. Grace discusses the works critically as he goes along, and with most of his judgments I find myself entirely in sympathy. It is good to have it pointed out that, if in the days of his maturity Bach developed a technique and an attitude of mind that at times seemed to pass earthly standards, there was a period in his early days when he was like ourselves, fallible and pleasantly liable to err.

Those who are intent upon the study of Bach's development will be interested in Mr. Grace's indications of the little touches of mastery in which the youthful Bach reveals points of departure from the workmanship of his predecessors. An interesting early example is the

* The references in this article are to the volumes and pages in the Novello Edition of Bach's Organ Works.

† The Organ Works of Bach, by Harvey Grace ('Handbooks for Musicians' (edited by Ernest Newman). London, Novello.

* That is, if the date of the English edition agrees with the date of Mendelssohn's Preface, to which I refer later.—I. A. surprising pedal entry in bar 18 of the Allegro section of the Fantasia in G (Bk. XII., 81):

The author's suggestions for interpretation and registration are perhaps on the whole even more useful for English organists than those given by Schweitzer and Widor. Sometimes the advice given is questionable, as when, for example, in speaking of the five-voiced section of the Fantasia in G (Bk. IX.), Mr. Grace suggests what amounts to a curtailment of the magnificent upward pedal scale of two octaves by doubling a portion of it; but for the most part the recommendations are very sound and helpful. Particularly so are those for the interpretation of the Chorale Preludes. The suggested treatment (pp. 279, 280)—e.g., of the great Jesus Christus, unser Heiland (Bk. XVII., 74)—is admirable. The author could perhaps have amplified it by pointing out that the lines of the Chorale can be made much clearer if a slight break is introduced between bars 13 and 14 and again between bars 26 and 27, the breaks being led up to by a slight allargando. It is a good plan, too, in bar 38, to make the Canto Fermo D of the tenor part stand out by prolonging it slightly after the other notes in the chord have been released.

The book does splendid service by drawing attention to the less well-known works amongst the Preludes and Fugues. Perhaps most of us are too restricted in our choice. We are for ever grinding out the D major, the C major, the 'Little' E minor, the Toccata and Fugue in D minor, and a few others. How rarely do we stumble upon a hearing of the 'Great' E minor, the B minor, or the Prelude in C minor, not to mention others! These are long, it is true, but considerations of time do not appear to weigh with organists when it is a question of playing undistinguished organ sonatas. And even the question of length is not insuperable. It is all to the advantage of some of these works, as Mr. Grace points out, to separate prelude from fugue at times. Our neglect of these great works can be explained only by the fact that we are far too much chained to our organ-stools. If we could get away from them more often, we should realise what magnificent effect these masterpieces make when adequately rendered. Who could forget the impression made by the little-known Fugue in C major (Bk. IX., 162), with the arresting effect of the E flat at the last pedal entry of the theme (inverted):

or of the pedal entry at the close of the 'Dorian' Fugue (Bk. X., 207):

I confess to a thrill of gratitude when I came across Mr. Grace's tribute to the greatness of the Prelude Kyrie, Gott heiliger Geist (Bk. XVI., 33). How little this work is known! And yet was there ever a grander peroration than this, with its magical sinking to G major, conditioned by the Plain-song of the bass? So far as I know, it has never failed to overwhelm layman and musician alike when played on an instrument of adequate power. Then again the Magnificat—a prelude on the Tonus Peregrinus—Bk. XVIII.) is still awaiting wider recognition. There are at least two passages in that work where the music, in spite of its being written in only five parts, soars with such overwhelming sweep as to appear to transcend the majesty of any organ yet built. This is one of them :

Ex. 4.

Of course the passage can only be properly appreciated with the context.

In matters of textual criticism the author is always sound. One is perhaps a little surprised to find him expressing a preference for the reading :

Ex. 5.

rather than for the much more characteristic :

Ex. 6.

in the 'Short' G minor Fugue, but no doubt it may be a matter of old association. He deals at length with the famous pedal passage in the Toccata in F (Bk. IX.) :

Ex. 7.

Investigating the whole matter with great patience, and showing a singular power of suffering fools gladly, he arrives at conclusions which must be convincing to all.

He does not, however, notice a passage towards the end of the Toccata and Fugue in D minor (Bk. II., 1), which always seems unsatisfactory if played as it stands. I refer to the section which opens thus :

Ex. 8. Adagio. Vivace.

It seems impossible that Bach can have intended the Vivace to apply to all four bars. Played in this way the massive sequences become little more than a meaningless succession of rapid, thumping chords. In my view it seems probable that Bach intended an alternation of Adagio and Vivace throughout the whole passage. If we treat it in this way, and are careful to avoid violent contrasts of pace (remembering the difference between the Vivace and Adagio of Bach's day and our own), the passage at once becomes invested with the dignity which we should expect to find at this point, where the composer is leading up to the Molto adagio of the end. Discussing the matter some years ago with Sir Walter Parratt, I was more than delighted to find that he had arrived independently at the same solution of the problem.

I give below my suggestion for the interpretation of this passage :

Ex. 9. Adagio. Vivace. Adagio. Vivace. Adagio.

In discussing the treatment of two notes against three in the prelude In dulci jubilo, in the Little Organ Book (Bk. XV.), Mr. Grace makes it clear that he would have us play the second note of the group of two with the third of the group of three. This, of course, was the general practice in the 17th century, but if the Bachgesellschaft editor correctly reproduces the composer's MS. it would appear that Bach intended the two notes against three in this Prelude to be played as we should play them to-day, for we come across two methods of notation. The earlier part follows this form :

Ex. 10.

(3rd stave omitted.)

and later on we come across bars noted like this :

Ex. 11.

Any decision must be postponed until the original MS. has been examined, but in the meanwhile the opinion may be expressed that the use of the figure 3 in the opening bar of the Bachgesellschaft edition and in the example quoted above is so unusual in music of this period that one must suspect the hand of the editor, Rust.*

I close this slight review of a valuable book by referring once more to the Little Organ Book. It may perhaps be pointed out that the statement on page 112 that 'only two editions—the original Bachgesellschaft and the Novello—retain the original order' is not accurate.

In the first English edition (to which I have already referred) the printed order of the Preludes was presumably that in which they appeared in Mendelssohn's autograph—except in so far as that order was modified by the few pages which were wanting in that manuscript.

The following passage, taken from Mendelssohn's Preface (dated Frankfurt, February 17, 1845) to John Sebastian Bach's Organ Compositions on Corales Psalm-Tunes, Edited from the Original Manuscripts by Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy (London, Messrs. Robert Cocks & Co.), will be of interest:

Of the forty-four short Preludes [i.e., the Little Organ Book] I am fortunate enough to possess his manuscript with the exception of but a few pages; the pieces are numbered in his own handwriting (even twice in a different way), and there can be no doubt that he intended them to form a collection of their own.

The recollection of the beauty of the Chorale Preludes—a beauty yet unexplored for many—must be my excuse for what I am now going to say.

I suppose that few men are given greater opportunities for realising the evils of unprepared oratory than organists. Most of us have suffered much from the formless word-stringing which so often does duty for the sermon. Few are without a wide experience; while, for some, the ways in extemporaneous oratory of the popular preacher have long since been as a carefully charted sea. But an infinity of suffering need not dull the critical sense: we may keep ourselves alive to the evil of unprepared thought. For this reason I venture to ask whether we organists are without our own temptations? Those of us who at every opportunity indulge in extemporization (for which some have gifts and some have not) show singular complacency towards a kindred type of suffering which we may be inflicting upon others. Frequent—and as unhappy as it is frequent—must be the experience of some worshipper who, having marched during the opening voluntary with the untrammelled thoughts of the organist, has yet to face the unbridled word-wanderings of the preacher.

It needs some courage to touch upon such a subject, but I do so to draw attention to the fact that there need be no excuse for too frequent extemporization while we have the Chorale Preludes of Bach to fall back upon.

If a short voluntary is needed, what can be better suited to produce the proper atmosphere for the opening of the service than the short Preludes of the Little Organ Book? To play such Preludes as Mit Fried' und Freud; Ich ruf' zu dir; O Mensch, beweine; Da Jesus an dem Kreuze stund, is to bring peace into one's own soul as well as to the listener's. By playing these Preludes frequently we are doing a service to ourselves and to others. Indeed, most of them are late in revealing their real magic. Few who have come to know Das alte Jahr vergangen ist would care to let the last day of the year pass by without lingering over such strangely moving harmonies as these:

Ex. 12.

Those who find delight in the most intimate moods of Bach will probably turn again and again to the Prelude Mit Fried' und Freud, with its perfect presentation of the resignation of the Nunc dimittis. Surely the following passage is one of the tenderest which even he ever penned:

Ex. 13.

(Lento e tranquillo.)

* Following the Bachgesellschaft edition when editing the Little Organ Book, I gave E as the last note of the alto part of Wer nur den lieben Gott (Bk. XV., 117), but this should probably be corrected to C♯—I. A.

It is music such as this which brings us so close to him that he becomes for us the 'old Bach' of our warmest affection.

For solemn use, what could equal the noble comfort of Jesu meine Freude or of Alle Menschen müssen sterben—a Prelude which comes to mean so much that it is almost impossible to think about it unmoved.*

If, on the other hand, we want something longer for the voluntary, we can turn to the Eighteen Preludes (Bk. XVII.), a collection which contains, amongst other masterpieces, the mystical Schmücke dich, O liebe Seele; Nun komm, der Heiden Heiland; Jesus Christus, unser Heiland, and other Preludes to which I have already alluded. But even then the treasures are nothing like exhausted. There still remain lovely things which we may find amongst the six Schübler Preludes and the Clavierübung, Part 3 (both the latter are in Bk. XVI.), and amongst the miscellaneous preludes which Bach left.

But such a study as Mr. Grace's Organ Works of Bach, useful as it is to organists, ought to be in the hands of every musician who desires to see Bach whole. To pianists, especially, it should be valuable. Under the discriminating guidance of the author there is a liberal education ahead for any who are enterprising enough to take the organ works to the pianoforte and transcribe them in a rough and ready way for themselves. Certainly such a task is most interesting, and one which yields an enormous amount of pleasure. And if, here and there, we come across music beyond the capacity of one pair of hands—though those who practise the game with the ardour which it is apt to induce are none too ready to recognise such limitations—it is always possible to call in the help of a second player, to whom some of the pedal part may be relegated (but the joy of the thing is so great that even the most unselfish of us will hardly surrender the part throughout!).

Nor need any think that it is impossible to get at the heart of these works in this way. I hope I shall shock none when I say that some of them give me almost as much pleasure when played on a fine pianoforte as when played on the organ.

I would go even further and suggest that there are times when the sympathy of the modern pianoforte appears to bring us nearer to the composer in those very intimate and human moods of his which we find so lovable. Something of the veil which the organ, with its impersonal, selfless tone, is apt to interpose between us and the Master's personality seems drawn aside as we listen to certain of these works at the pianoforte.

But this is dangerous ground. We are all more likely to agree that it is a good and healthy thing to look at great works from different angles.

A NEW CHORAL WORK BY HOLST

Of the works to be produced at the Leeds Festival none is likely to arouse keener interest than Gustav Holst's setting for chorus and orchestra of Whitman's Ode to Death, just published by Novello. Holst—at all events in his present stage—is surely the most direct of composers, and we are reminded of the fact by a mere glance at this work. How the older choral writers (and some of the newer ones) would have spread themselves over this poem of Whitman's! Its seven stanzas would have provided them with material for a full-dress cantata, with prelude, solos, and highly developed choruses. This vocal score of Holst's is contained in a mere nineteen pages—about 150 bars, if a further gauge be of interest. The chorus enters at the second bar, there are no solos, and no full closes in the ordinary sense of the term. Moreover, we get an impression of a curious kind of suppressed eagerness from the fact that there is practically no modulation. We move from key to key (sometimes to a very remote one) by the simple process of stepping into it—the very antithesis of the Delius way, whereby we slide and squirm from point to point. As an instance of the Holstian short-cut method we cite pp. 5 and 6, where there is a remarkable series of chords, apparently unrelated yet quite coherent, followed by a silent pause, after which occurs a plunge into the following, in eight parts, for the voices over a pedal A flat:

Ex 1.

lento.

Praise! . . . For the sure-en-fold-ing

Allegro moderato.

arms of cool-en-fold-ing death.

dim. pp molto stacc.

2+3

No less striking harmonically are some passages where the music swings quietly between two remote keys, e.g.:

* I am bound to disagree very strongly with Mr. Grace when he writes that this Prelude 'is no less effective played with fair pace and power.'—I. A.

Ex. 2.

TENOR. In the day, in the night, . .

BASS.

Sometimes we have two keys used simultaneously. For example, in bar 3 of page 2 the trebles and tenors are as clearly in A (or E) as the altos and basses are in B flat. The parts themselves are simple, but their clear and logical presentation in condensed pianoforte-score form puts a severe strain on the resources of notation. It must not be imagined from the above remarks that the music is extravagant or complex. On the contrary, it is essentially simple. The texture is slender rather than otherwise (the eight-part passage quoted is almost the only one of its kind), and the proportion of plain common chords and diatonic progressions is large.

Those who argue that there are no such tempi as 7-4 and 5-4, on the ground that those schemes are merely alternations of 4-4 + 3-4, and 3-4 + 2-4 respectively, expressed in such a way as to avoid constant changes of signature, will find support here. The bulk of the work is in 7-4 and 5-4 time, but at one or two necessary points the composer shows where the secondary accent falls by such signs as 4 + 3, 2 + 3, &c., an improvement on the constant use of dotted lines. Rhythmically the work is full of interest, with a fluidity and a scrupulous care in regard to verbal accentuation that provides the best of answers to the literary big-wigs who regard composers as vandals in such matters. The chief thematic constituents are a series of gently-dropping fifths hung on a dominant pedal:

Ex. 3.

Adagio.

4 + 3

Adagio.

pp 4 + 3

Come.

and the little figure of five notes which emerges from the dissonance at the end of the passage quoted in Ex. 1. This figure is used with striking effect as a ground-bass during some thirty bars, which begin in a manner suggestive of soft foot-falls, and work up to a climax at 'I joyously sing the dead.' The end responds to the beginning, with pedal-point and dropping fifths, and a whispered 'Come' from the chorus, an effect of expectancy being induced by this final chord being a second inversion:

Ex. 4.

Come.

pppp

8va

8va

The work is scored for a large orchestra, with organ, but the second oboe, third and fourth horns, all three trombones, celesta, and organ are 'cued in,' and can be dispensed with—a practical arrangement that places the work within the range of choral societies of limited financial resources.

For the benefit of those who do not know the poem it may be well to add that there is nothing here of the morbid or depressing. In fact, this Ode to Death is far more bracing and heartening than a good many poems dealing with Life.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

I understand that the attendances at the 'Proms.' so far are round about the record, and the fact sets one thinking. Here we have Queen's Hall full, night after night, at a period of the year supposed to be an 'off' season so far as concert-giving is concerned. And yet at the beginning of the summer we were told, with a wealth of despairing head-lines, that orchestral concerts were all run at a loss, that our orchestras were in danger of disbandment, and that something would have to be done about it. No practical suggestions were made, though there was no lack of the other sort; the public remained grandly calm, as it always does when threatened with musical crises of the kind; the S.O.S. died away, and the signallers went off for their holidays. Then, while the rest of us are still shaking our heads over the bleak prospect, the Chappell-Wood-Newman combination gets to work and shows that good orchestral concerts, given nightly, and despite holidays, daylight-saving, tennis booms, and other distractions, can draw audiences so large that time after time the house has been sold out.

Now if these large audiences can be got together nightly, hundreds of them paying two shillings to be allowed to stand for a couple of hours, how are we to account for the large proportion of empty seats at concerts given by the various orchestras during the season proper?

The burning question recently asked on all sides as to where flies go in the winter is an easy one compared with a similar inquiry as to Promenaders. Where do they go? Why are hundreds of Londoners avid for orchestral music during the 'Prom.' season and apparently indifferent about it at other times? Can this enthusiastic crowd be induced to tack itself on to the regular concert-going public? If so, how? And if not, why not?

Those who tell us that orchestral concerts must cease unless greater public support is forthcoming, and that even when the hall is full the balance is likely to be on the wrong side, must do a bit of hard thinking about the 'Proms.' There, staring us in the face, is the generous public support, and we may be pretty sure, too, that the concerts pay their way and a bit over. Messrs. Chappell's public-spirited saving of the situation some years ago, and their subsequent enterprise, must be gratefully acknowledged; but no firm is likely to strain its generosity so far as to run sixty concerts year after year at a loss.

Perhaps we shall get somewhere near an answer to the questions asked above if we begin by taking note of some details in which the 'Proms.' differ from other orchestral concerts. First, the prices of admission are lower, and, an even more important point, there is an unusually large proportion of space allotted to the 2s. and 3s. customers. Everybody agrees that at the average concert far too little consideration is given to the music-lover who has to look hard at a half-crown before he bangs it. Time after time we see him packed tightly into a small space under the circle at Queen's Hall while rows of stalls are empty. Presumably there must be a good reason for not increasing the number of cheap seats, but I have never yet heard one brought forward. (By the way, when will more commonsense be shown in the valuing of seats? At present, the cheapest at Queen's Hall are those under the circle. Assuming that one goes to hear the music to the best advantage, these area seats are far better than the front rows of the stalls, which cost about four or five times as much; and they are a good deal better than the stalls at the sides, which cost about double, and which, moreover, make the orchestra and chorus sound lopsided and sometimes far from unanimous. The occupants of these side stalls have an extra affliction in the perishing draught that braces them up every time a door is opened. Some day, when our concert-halls scrap all their conventions, the cheapest seats at orchestral and choral concerts will be those nearest the platform, whether in stalls, circle, or balcony, while the most expensive will be in the middle of the circle and balcony. The area and the remainder of the stalls will be priced at a trifle more than the front stalls. The ground floor of the hall will thus be entirely devoted to cheap seats. This seems startling until we remember that at the 'Proms.' all this is occupied by 2s. clients. It is absurd that on Friday night I may stand in the centre of the stall space for 2s., whereas before I can sit on the same spot at a symphony concert on the following afternoon I must pay about a half-guinea.)

Difference the second: We are allowed—even encouraged—to smoke, whereas at other orchestral concerts at Queen's Hall our use of tobacco must be confined to an occasional and surreptitious pinch of snuff. Nobody seems to see any incongruity in the simultaneous enjoyment of tobacco and fine music at the 'Proms.,' so why should we not smoke at Philharmonic and at Symphony concerts? Many a man, wavering between a concert hall and a variety theatre, finds the scale turned by his pipe. It is safe to assume that a large number of men, especially young men, go to the 'Proms.' chiefly because smoking is allowed, and that they stay away from other concerts because it isn't. Even people who don't smoke like the sociable and free-and-easy atmosphere of the 'Proms.'—an atmosphere due largely to the mollifying influence of the weed.

Side by side with this tobacco licence (so to speak) is the comparative ease with which one is able to obtain a variety of refreshments at the 'Proms.' The accommodation is better and the fare more varied and attractive, rising even to such festive and doggish things as ices.

Difference the third: The programmes have a triple pull over those of the average orchestral concert—they are shorter, they contain a larger proportion of the familiar, and they favour short works rather than long. The first part of the programme lasts as a rule about an hour and a half. One may enjoy a pleasant interval, hear the important work which usually opens the second half, and be well on the way home by ten o'clock. Symphony concerts rarely last less than two and a half hours (sometimes more), and they do not lend themselves so easily to an early departure.

As to the inclusion of a large number of familiar items, you and I may rail at the constant trotting out of these war horses, but we have to remind ourselves that there is a new generation of concert-goers always arriving, and that what is threadbare to us is thrilling to them. Do you remember how knocked over you were by your first hearing of the C minor, the Pathetic, Leonora No. 3, and, the rest of the standing dishes? You would have found it hard to realise that just behind was sitting a blast concert-goer who was as much bored as you were bucked. When an acknowledged masterpiece begins to wear a bit thin, you should dodge it for a season, and then come back to it fresh, and really listen to it. You will usually find that, like a razor that has been laid aside for a while, it has got back its old edge. A grouse at these works being retained in the repertory is as sensible as a complaint that a public library keeps Shakespeare, Scott, Dickens & Co., on its shelves. There is always somebody coming along to whom they will open the world of delight in which you yourself once walked enchanted, though to-day you may have time and inclination for no more than an occasional dip. This by the way. The point is that an enormous proportion of concert-goers are attracted by the familiar, as is shown by the attendance at Queen's Hall on Friday and Monday nights, when never a note of new music is on tap. The number of people who will turn up at any concert merely because a new work is promised is small. The average amateur is no more eager to be introduced to a new piece of music than to a new acquaintance. You may get him to hear the novelty, but only by sandwiching it between slabs of the familiar. He will do his duty by the new work, especially if the composer can be induced to appear, when he will applaud with such warmth and staying power that the composer is deceived into thinking he has scored a popular success. But it is Beethoven's No. 5 that our friend has really come to hear, and if he is to be trained on into a regular concert-goer every programme must contain at least one of the works that we know he wants. Similarly of course every programme should contain at least one novelty or quasi-novelty, or one revived work of special interest. The Goossens concerts last year showed how small is the public that can be drawn by programmes almost entirely made up of the unfamiliar. A judicious blend calls for less rehearsal, and for less effort on the part of the audience: it attracts the general musical public instead of the small specialist class only; and last, but far from least, it yields better results, because a contrast of styles is ensured. Nobody could attend the Goossens concerts without feeling that a string of unfamiliar modern works induced not less monotony than a string of familiar classics—perhaps even more.

To sum up: The 'Proms.' have the advantage of making a special appeal to London as one of the few musical features of which it may be proud, and they undoubtedly owe much to the personality of Sir Henry Wood, with his twenty-eight consecutive years as conductor. But when allowance has been made for these factors, there still seem to be additional reasons for their being able to succeed where most other orchestral concerts fail. Are these reasons to be found in the slight differences between the 'Proms.' and other concerts that have been pointed out above? If so, the crisis in the concert world ought to be settled without much difficulty.

At the risk of making a short story long, I feel moved to raise the question as to whether our orchestral concerts in general cannot be made more attractive, and with gain rather than loss so far as the standard of music is concerned.

First, as to the vocal items: Are our songsters at this date unable to do anything more enterprising than ring the changes on a batch of operatic recits. and arias? Many of these are beneath contempt as music. All but a few of the coloratura airs which sopranos seem to think we are bursting to hear are of little more interest than a difficult effort of Concone. Look through a batch of programmes of any recent season and you will see that soloists as a body are giving us pretty much the same old snippets that their parents and grandparents handed out. There was some excuse for the old generation of singers; most of them were operatic stars and little else. Moreover, the things they sang were drawn from operas actually in the repertory, and as a result concert audiences were familiar with the context, and thus were able to supply the dramatic significance without which such extracts are as meaningless as a page taken at random from a novel. To-day, many of the operas concerned are very rarely heard, or have long since dropped out of the repertory, but the extracts still linger on in the concert-room, usually sung in a foreign tongue and often with no English version in the programme book. As most of the audience know little or nothing of what they are about, they have to stand or fall on their purely musical merits. Most of them fall heavily, but nobody throws things, apparently because it seems to be an accepted tradition that singers at orchestral concerts should always be a century or so behind the fair. Yet what would be said of an orchestra that made up its programmes from the instrumental equivalents of threadbare extracts from Lucia, La Favorita, Traviata, L'Africana, Mignon, I Vespri Siciliani, and a dozen such works? We may be sure that a good deal would be said—and done—because we expect orchestras to keep us in touch with current orchestral music. Is it too much to ask singers to do the same for us in the matter of songs? As things are now, the only people who can hear a number of the best songs, from the classical lieder school down to contemporary examples, are the few who can attend vocal recitals—expensive affairs that usually take place in the afternoon. The great mass of the musical public hears little first-rate singing apart from that of the soloists at choral and orchestral concerts. Can we wonder that the royalty ballad is still the staple vocal solo of thousands who, in the matter of orchestral music, are capable of appreciating the best from Bach and Beethoven onwards?

It is sometimes said that operatic extracts are sung at orchestral concerts because it is a tradition that the vocal items on such occasions must be works with orchestral accompaniment, and that the number of songs fulfilling this demand is negligible. If this is the best reason that can be brought forward, the sooner tradition is knocked on the head the better. There can be no more grateful relief in the middle of an orchestral programme than a group of fine songs with accompaniment for pianoforte or string quartet, or some other small chamber combination. If the audiences of to-day were genuinely interested in such things as 'Bel raggio,' 'Ah! lo so,' and other done-to-death arias, something might be said in favour of their perpetuation. But if you will observe the demeanour of your neighbours at Queen's Hall while they are being sung, you will see, time after time, obvious signs of boredom, and rarely anything warmer than mere tolerance, though of course this indifference does not prevent a liberal amount of applause, especially if the singer happens to be above the average in comeliness and garb, with some good top notes and a smile that puts the comethor on all but the flintiest of us. That soft heart of our public is a bar to progress here as in other things. It encourages singers to linger on the platform years after they should have taken the rags of their once fine voices into honourable retirement, and it will applaud all sorts of futilities because it cannot screw itself up to hurt a performer's feelings—if the performer happens to be on the concert-platform, that is. If it is merely Anna Maria making a hash of some domestic job, or a tradesman sending the wrong article, or a dress-maker who gores a sleeve with a box-pleat instead of a V-shaped insertion, feelings do not matter overmuch. Who are musicians, anyway—and, above all, singers—that they should be exempt from the common lot where praise and blame are concerned?

The other point in which orchestral concerts might be improved is in regard to the limited use we make of the instrumental soloist. Here again we are slaves to a tiresome tradition. Why must our Cortôts and Lamonds, Suggias and Harrisons, Mengeses and Sammonses, never be heard save in a concerto? The number of fine works in this form is notoriously small; almost all are far too long; and some of the most frequently played are generally admitted to be poor stuff. I believe the prospect of hearing (say) Moiseiwitsch play a twenty-minutes' group of solos, or Lamond in a Beethoven Sonata, or Cortôt in a Ravel-Debussy group, would attract more people than would the announcement of either of them in a concerto. As in the case of a group of songs with pianoforte accompaniment, the programmes would gain by the relief, and a host of people would have an opportunity of getting on terms with a good deal of fine instrumental music that at present is heard only by the comparatively small number able to attend solo recitals. Of course the best of the concertos would be heard from time to time, but we ought to be spared a few of the far too frequent repetitions of such poor and hackneyed specimens as the Tchaikovsky B flat minor.

Well (to make a da capo), the Promenade Concerts show that there is a large public for orchestral music—for we have to remember that their audiences are not made up of the same people night after night. Apparently they tap three or four sections of music-lovers, for you will see a different crowd on Mondays, Fridays, and Saturdays, the gatherings on the other nights being less clearly defined. Clearly there are enough enthusiasts to furnish packed houses for the thirty or forty orchestral concerts given in London during the winter. It will need something like a surgical operation to persuade me that the general run of orchestral concerts cannot be so managed as to keep the bulk of these Promenaders in constant touch with orchestral music until the time for their annual sixty nights' feast comes round again. It is futile to sit around howling jeremiads about crises and disbanding of orchestras on the ground that concerts either don't draw, or that they lose money when they do draw; the 'Proms.' both draw and pay, so it's up to the others to show that what can be done nightly in the summer and autumn can be done on carefully selected dates in the winter. If things can be put right by such simple, practical, and undignified means as tobacco, more cheap seats, shorter programmes, brighter ditto, bigger buffets, and ices during the interval, the parties concerned must get down off their high horse and see to it. Otherwise the cinema, with its ever-open door, cheap and comfortable seats, and (frequently) good music, will be able to answer the question 'Where do "Promenaders" go in the winter.'

STUDIES ON THE HORN

BY W. F. H. BLANDFORD

II.—WAGNER AND THE HORN PARTS OF *LOHENGRIIN

(Continued from September Number, page 624.)

The valve-horn achieved no early general popularity among orchestral players, who, having had to master the delicate and difficult art of the hand-horn player, saw no advantages in an instrument that, defective in itself, threatened to supersede their laboriously-acquired skill, and lent itself, if improperly handled, to an inferiority of tone and style that they properly shunned. The first really effective step towards its introduction into the higher walks of music was taken by an able French artist, P. J. Meifred, who, when Spontini (between 1823 and 1831) sent from Berlin to Paris the first valve-instruments seen in that capital, energetically advocated the use of the valve-horn, which he improved. He was appointed professor of the valve-horn in the Paris Conservatoire in 1833, and undoubtedly paved the way for Halévy's adoption of it in La Juive.

Nevertheless the instrument was slower to make headway in France than in Germany, owing to the conservatism of French musicians. It was not even taught at the Conservatoire from the time of Meifred's retirement in 1863 until M. Brémond, the present professor of the horn, obtained leave in 1897 to have an informal valve-horn class, and in 1902 to have it taught as the principal instrument. French composers, such as Gounod and Bizet, continued to write for the natural horn until recent times; but it is interesting to note that one of Gounod's early works was a set of pieces for valve-horn and pianoforte dedicated to M. A. Raoux, second horn at the Théâtre des Italiens and the last of the famous house of horn-makers.

Although the walls of conservatism did not fall at the first blast of the valve-horn, it filled an obvious want and proved itself of value in wind-bands and minor musical organizations in which the natural horn had been of comparatively little use. Even here inertia had to be contended with, and not until 1830 was the valve-horn admitted to the Prussian military bands, or until 1837 to the Bavarian.

* Through an unfortunate misreading of the MS. notes from which this paper was written, the changes of key in the horn parts on page 244 of the full score of Lohengrin were incorrectly given in the second column of the September instalment (M.T., page 623, col. 1). The key is changed from E to E flat after a rest of nine quavers, and two bars later to F after a rest of three quavers.—W. F. H. B.

Things being as they were, the valve-horn in its early career fell mainly into the hands of players who had never made a proper study of the far more difficult Waldhorn, with the inevitable result that a different and inferior standard of playing came to be adopted for it.* So much indeed may be inferred from the prefatory note to the score of Tristan which, though not given to the world until 1860, represented ideas that must have been simmering in Wagner's mind when he wrote Lohengrin. Translated into English, it runs as follows:

The composer desires to draw special attention to the treatment of the horns. This instrument has undoubtedly gained so greatly by the introduction of valves as to render it difficult to disregard this extension of its scope, although the horn has thereby indisputably lost some of its beauty of tone and power of producing a smooth legato. On account of these grave defects, the composer (who attaches importance to the retention of the horn's true characteristics) would have felt himself compelled to renounce the use of the valve-horn, if experience had not taught him that capable artists can, by specially careful management, render them almost unnoticeable, so that little difference can be detected either in tone or smoothness.

Pending the inevitable improvement in the valve-horn that is to be desired, the horn-players are strongly recommended most carefully to study their respective parts in this score, in order to ascertain the crooks and valves appropriate to all the requirements of its execution. The composer relies implicitly on the use of the E (as well as the F) crook; whether the other changes which frequently occur in the score, for the easier notation of low notes, or obtaining the requisite tone of high notes, are effected by means of the appropriate crooks or not, is left to the decision of the players themselves; the composer accepts the principle that the low notes, at all events, will usually be obtained by transposition.

Single notes marked + indicate stopped sounds; if these have to be produced in a key in which they are naturally open, the pitch of the horn must be altered by the valves, so that the sound may be heard as a stopped note.

On this criticism H. Kling observes: 'Comme corniste, nous ne pouvons souscrire à cette appréciation de l'illustre maître' (Bull. S.I.M., 1908). Here again the historical sense seems lacking, for unless Kling were old enough to remember the valve-horn playing before Lohengrin was written, his own views would be derived from a period when the improvements brought about by the artists of whom Wagner speaks had already minimised the defects.

When Wagner went as Hofkapellmeister to Dresden he found already installed as principal horn a notable player, J. R. Lewy,† of whom he makes laudatory mention in Ueber das Dirigiren (p. 42), where he praises the beautiful and restrained playing of the horns under the artistic leadership of Lewy in the opening of the Overture to Der Freischütz.

* See hereon the late H. L. Eichborn's Die Dämpfung beim Horn, p. 16 (Leipsic, 1897). Eichborn (1847-1917), a personal friend and correspondent of the writer's, was an excellent and cultivated essayist on the historical and æsthetic sides of trumpet- and horn-playing.

† Joseph Rodolphe Lewy, 1802-81, a younger brother and pupil of E. C. Lewy, in his turn a pupil of H. Domnich. The latter, of German birth, was one of the first professors of the horn at the Paris Conservatoire and intimately acquainted with the great Ponto, from whom he received lessons and whom he was said even to excel in fulness of tone and beauty of his trill. He published a Method which contains some curious and interesting information.

Now Lewy published, probably about 1850, Douze Etudes pour le Cor chromatique et le Cor simple, avec accompagnement de Piano (Leipsic, B. & H.), which are the last word in difficulty, and compel a profound respect for his abilities as a player. Three of these Studies, Nos. 5, 10, and 11, are marked, as in Wagner's score, with numerous changes of key, confined to F, E, E flat, and D. They are never preceded by more than a crotchet rest, and frequently occur without preparation in the midst of most florid passages; and they make the music extremely difficult reading, apart from its executive obstacles.

Lewy prefaces his studies with an explanatory note in which he says:

These Studies are to be played on the chromatic F horn, but the valves are to be employed only when the natural horn is inadequate for the bright and distinct emission of the sounds. Moreover, what is written for the simple horn is also to be played on the chromatic horn, the valves being used only for playing in other keys without changing the crook. When the part is marked 'In Es,' the first valve is to be used; when 'In E,' the second; and when 'In D,' the third. In this way alone will the beauty of tone of the natural horn be retained, and the instrument acquire increased capabilities.

The text of the last sentence may be usefully compared with Wagner's note to Tristan; and the following extract from Study No. 11 will suffice to enable a comparison of Lewy's manner of writing to be made with that of Wagner:

Two of the remaining Studies are stated to be entirely for the natural horn used as above. In the others no changes of key are marked, and it is left to the player's discretion to decide where he shall use the valves, though an occasional direction, such as 'La main,' or 'Cor chromatique' (where sonority is required) controls his choice. It requires no argument to show that Lewy's treatment of the valves was strictly a reversion to the original conception of Blühmel and Stölzel.

Another of Lewy's works exhibits an important detail which strengthens the evidence; this is a Divertissement on motives of Schubert for chromatic horn and pianoforte, Op. 13 (Leipsic, B. & H.), published after the Studies, as is shown by the index numbers of the plates. It is written for horn in F, and exhibits changes from F to G flat, and back again, and from F to E and back again. The upward change to G flat, an exact parallel to Wagner's previously inexplicable change of the horn crooked in G to A flat in Ex. 4 suggests, taken together with the Studies, that Lewy employed, or contemplated the use of, a horn with one ascending valve as well as three descending valves, the former raising the pitch one or two semitones (if the latter, the second descending valve would be employed concurrently to produce a semitone rise).

Ascending valves were first proposed by John Shaw (his 'spring staples,' 1824), and were made by Saurle, of Munich (1829), Halary, of Paris (1847 or 1849), Ad. Sax (1850), and Oswald Röhlich, of Vienna (date unknown), but little use seems to have been made of them. Recently, however, they have become popular on M. Brémont's re-introduction in France, where players of the higher parts commonly substitute for the descending third piston, which lowers the pitch three semitones, an ascending piston which raises it two semitones (Halary's arrangement). This facilitates high passages, and also scales and figures in difficult keys, such as C sharp, but it causes the loss of a few low notes, which must be obtained by other means known to horn-players. One artist, M. Reine, late of the Paris Opéra, uses a four-valved horn, having an ascending valve in addition to the usual three descending valves. This is an excellent combination, though it has the disadvantage of making the horn heavier, and of placing four valves under the control of the left hand, which has also to hold the horn and regulate the embouchure.

The objection to assuming the use of an ascending valve to explain the change to G flat in Lewy's Divertissement (and the analogous change to A flat in Ex. 4) is the absence of evidence that Lewy ever used such a system and the improbability of his introducing it into a piece meant for a drawing-room diversion. The alternative that suggests itself is that the portions in G flat are meant to be played quasi con sordino, the pitch being obtained by muting the F horn with the hand.*

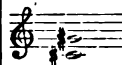

The key of G flat is used in a transcription of Schubert's Serenade, the first twenty-two bars (including silences) of the voice part being written in D minor for horn in 'Ges,' without indication such as con sordino or gedämpft or any dynamic marks. From the twenty-first bar inclusive the part proceeds as follows:

Ex. 6.

The musical notation for Ex. 6 consists of four staves. The first staff is labeled 'In Ges.' and the second 'In F.' with a forte (f) dynamic. The third staff is labeled 'In Ges.' and the fourth 'In F.' with a mezzo-forte (mf) dynamic. The notation includes various musical symbols such as notes, rests, and dynamic markings.

The two short phrases in G flat can be appropriately played as an echo by muting with the hand; but it is unthinkable that Lewy should have intended playing the first twenty-two bars in a manner suggesting a ventriloquist imitating a cornet-player on the roof, and blurring into the full tone of the horn at the twenty-third bar, subsequently employing it again for the final cadence. This possibility has been unanimously rejected by experienced players both in England and France, to whom the passage has been submitted, but without eliciting any alternative suggestion. It is certain that Wagner's change to A flat was not intended to be produced by raising the pitch with the hand, though he was familiar with the device, as shown by sundry chords in Lohengrin and the Flying Dutchman—e.g., in Scene 7 of the latter the chord marked gestopft for Waldhorn must be produced by raising the pitch. Although Lewy's Divertissement may be thought only to solve one problem by raising another, it does afford evidence that Wagner was copying a practice of Lewy's, and our primary object is to explain Wagner and not Lewy.

A perusal, spread over nearly forty years, of a large quantity of horn-music, including much of the player-composer type so important in this connection, has not brought to light any parallel to this mode of writing employed by Wagner at Dresden, and Lewy, his principal horn there; nor in any later work of Wagner's is it repeated precisely. Can it be doubted that there is a true nexus between the two, and that we are not face to face with a coincidence? Which of the two, Wagner or Lewy, converted the other is an interesting but fruitless subject for speculation. A plausible hypothesis is that Wagner found in Lewy a pure hand-horn player, and, being dissatisfied with the valve-horn as then played, induced Lewy after some time (probably after the first performance of Tannhäuser, in which there is no sign of the new manner of writing) to co-operate in evolving a system for the use of the valve-horn that should combine the amenities of both instruments, so that in future the composer might be free to write entirely for the valve-horn without risking loss of quality.

Be this as it may, the evidence that has been adduced is sufficient to enable the following solution of the problem to be submitted, though it must already have become apparent to the reader:

Where in Acts 2 and 3 of Lohengrin a change of key in any horn part is not preceded by any rest sufficiently long to admit of the crook being changed, it was the composer's intention that such change should be effected by means of the valves, and the passage in the changed key played wholly or mainly with the technique of the natural horn.

How far a change which effects a reversion to the key of the horn obtained by the use of the crook alone is subject to the same principle must be decided by a consideration of the part in each case.

Certain difficulties in, and objections that may reasonably be taken to, this solution must now be stated and examined. First, Wagner makes no distinction whatever throughout the work between changes to be carried out by the crooks, or by the valves employed as stated, or even changes that may be regarded merely as theoretical, to assist the score-reader, or enable the player better to appreciate the relation of his part to the harmony, and intended to be carried out by transposition, as at the present day. No modern horn-player, however easily he could play his part in Lohengrin by his own methods, could hope to reproduce Wagner's presumed changes of crooks and valves without such preliminary study as is recommended for Tristan. One may be sure that the Prelude was meant to be played by the first and third horns on the E crook, and the Introduction to Act 3 by all four on the G; but in parts of the score there is nothing but guess-work, or very careful analysis, which may lead to fallacious results, to help us to the composer's intentions. In Lewy's pieces, on the other hand, the use of the F crook is postulated throughout, and no doubt can arise as to how the changes are to be made.

* The writer is aware of the fact that the possibility of raising the pitch by means of the hand has been denied 'in solemn form,' and contents himself here with emphatically reasserting it.

Secondly, admitting the principle that in these passages change of key involves use of the valves, what explanation that preserves to Wagner's memory any reputation for common-sense can be given of such repeated and perplexing changes as are found in Ex. 2,* where it would have been so much simpler to write all for horn in F?

Thirdly, and this is more serious—the rule requiring passages in the changed key to be played with the technique of the simple horn is frequently broken, or leads to an unsatisfactory result. Though Ex. 3* can be played mostly with good sonority on the horn in G, with the 3rd piston held down, it contains in the notes marked + some very ineffective sounds. It is only fair to point out that it is doubled by the bassoons and later by the trombones as well, and that there is a close parallel to it in Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony. But the second horn part of the passage in E is also very bad, and that in Ex. 4 is unthinkable in the orchestra. The meticulous score-reader will be able to pick out many other bad or impossible passages for himself; but a word of warning must here be given. A proper choice must be made of the key given by the crook, and it must not be assumed to be F. For instance, our Ex. 1* comes after the horn has been ringing the changes between E and F, and during the fourteen omitted bars the second horn has been showing marked symptoms of valvular disease which culminate in the remainder of the quotation, which it would be simply grotesque to suppose written for anything but the valve-horn. Hereon the sceptic will say, 'According to your hypothesis, the horn has been changed by the valve from F to E, and therefore all this passage and the preceding bars have to be played as on the natural horn, which is absurd.' To this the fitting reply is, 'O ye of little faith! Do ye not perceive that the basic crook of the whole section may be E, in which valve notes are freely written, and that an ascending valve may be employed to put it into F?' But this is mere speculation.

Viewed from any standpoint, even that of the solution here propounded, these horn parts cannot be regarded as logical or satisfactory. Let us bear in mind that Wagner was demonstrably, on the evidence of the parts themselves, trying his hand at an unfamiliar method of writing, and, unlike Berlioz, his orchestral conceptions were liable to be ahead of his knowledge of the mechanism required to realise them—as witness his parts for harp and bass trumpet, and, in places, even for strings.

Moreover, Lohengrin was composed in expectation of its being first performed at Dresden, where Lewy would have carefully studied each part 'in order to ascertain the crooks and valves appropriate to all the requirements of its execution.' The world knows how the composer's political tendencies defeated his expectations, and how the score, as the dedication to Liszt itself tells us, was given to it unheard and unrehearsed by Wagner. Tannhäuser underwent a final revision after its first performance in 1845, and we cannot avoid the supposition that Lohengrin, in happier circumstances, might have undergone the same treatment, by which, or by changes made during rehearsals, some of these obscurities and blemishes in notation might have been removed. However much Lewy may have been responsible for influencing Wagner on the proper treatment of the valve-horn, we are not justified in supposing that the parts, as they stand, had ever been revised by him or received his imprimatur.

In connection with the events that brought Wagner's position at Dresden to an end, it is worthy of notice that Lewy (in the English translation of Wagner's autobiography quaintly described as a 'bugler') was instrumental in reporting to Lüttichau, the director of the Court Theatre, Wagner's association with the 'trade union' formed among the members of the orchestra.

If Lewy's system had been rigidly adhered to, one could better follow the principle even in such extracts as Ex. 2, with its confusing changes. If this had been written all for one crook, say the F, and played by players who by training and precept were impressed with the necessity for using the hand wherever possible, this and similar passages would have been played with a number of stopped notes that would have endangered the sonority that Wagner required. He therefore adopted the clumsy expedient of continually changing the horn key, thus indicating the valve to be used to render the passage in open notes. True, it could have been done much more easily by writing in one key, and superscribing the single word 'Ventil,' but this would not have had the fascination of playing with the new toy.

On the other side, what is to be said of the very definite breaches of the rule that passages in the changed key are to be played with the hand? Merely this, that no rule of writing would avail to fetter Wagner's musical conceptions, and when something else had to be put down the rule had to go. And if some player had complained to Wagner that he was expected to play by the technique of the natural horn passages that were manifestly ridiculous or impossible, might not the composer, without unduly sacrificing his reputation for consistency, have replied that the player had been deprived neither of valves nor brains, and (following Lewy's directions) that the valves were to be used when the natural horn was 'inadequate for the bright and clear emission of the sound'?

These considerations being duly weighed, should the sceptic, unmoved by the pleading of counsel for the defence, still maintain that the solution here tendered is unsatisfactory or insufficient, then we can but urge him to apply to himself the spirit of the immortal recommendation, 'If you knows a better 'ole, go to it!'

In his treatment of the horns, Wagner halted between two opinions, and, like that other great man, Tartarin of Tarascon, exhibited a dual personality. While Wagner-Quixote called out for valve-horns, tubas, and all sorts of new and formidable brass, Wagner-Sancho exclaimed, 'Oh, les bons cors simples à main! Oh, les douces notes liées, les beaux sons bouchés!' In the early operas each had his way and wrote for his favourite instrument. In Lohengrin, after a vain attempt to proceed on the old lines, the conflict became more acute and a compromise had to be arrived at whereby Wagner-Quixote provided the instruments and Wagner-Sancho controlled their employment, much hampered by the former's continual interference. By the time of the later operas the contest had ended, as such contests always do, in favour of the more forceful personality, and Wagner-Sancho was reduced to making an appeal ad misericordiam in the foreword to Tristan, in the pious hope that the players would not forget the principles for which he stood, when performing Wagner-Quixote's parts.

The note to Tristan renders it needless to comment on the horn parts of Wagner's later operas, except on one point. Frequently, as in the Siegfried Idyll, insufficient time is allowed for exchange of the E and F crooks, both of which Wagner expected to be used. He was probably familiar with a mechanism that has been applied to the horn, and more often to the trumpet and cornet, whereby the pitch can be instantly lowered a semitone by rotating a movable cock, which adds the necessary tubing and is not governed by continuous finger-pressure. The errors of length thereby introduced into the valve-tubing are of little consequence to a player trained to correct faults of intonation with the hand.

That Wagner was not at his happiest in putting on paper his conceptions for brass instruments is shown, not merely by examples here discussed, his impracticable treatment of the bass trumpet, and his vacillation over the notation of the tuba parts in the Ring, but by two circumstances for which we are indebted to Mr. A. Borsdorf, who had them verbally from Richter himself.

At one time Wagner conceived the idea of reforming the horn notation altogether, and propounded a scheme for writing in one of the C clefs, presumably treating the horns as non-transposing instruments—not in itself altogether a novelty. From this he was only dissuaded by Richter's earnest representations of the confusion that it would cause.

Also, when in Die Meistersinger he gave to the first horn the subject of Beckmesser's serenade, he actually wrote it at its present pitch for the E crook, on which he expected it to be played. Again Richter, having procured his horn, demonstrated experimentally that it was utterly impracticable, and induced the composer to transfer it to the G crook, where it remains and on which it should obviously be performed.

THE FRENCH HORN IN ENGLAND.—In our article in the August Musical Times, at the end of p. 545, the date of the introduction by Stamitz of horn-players to the concerts of La Poupinière should have been 1754 and not 1750. But, as a matter of fact, the 'deux nouveaux cors de chasse allemands' were first heard at the Concerts Spirituels in December 1748, in a Symphony by Guignon, thus anticipating Stamitz by six years. (Lavignac, Encyclo. III., p. 1522.)

ADDENDUM.—We are indebted to Dr. H. Grattan Flood for supplying from Irish sources the following interesting particulars, which fill up gaps in our account: Handel's horn-player was named Winch. On October 22, 1741, at Smock Alley Theatre, Dublin, between the Acts of King Lear, a Concerto was performed 'by the celebrated Mr. Winch, who has performed several years in Mr. Handel's operas and oratorios,' and the play was followed by a pantomime! On May 12, 1742, at Fishamble Street Music Hall, Dublin, 'Mr. Charles and his second gave a concert, including Handel's Dead March in Saul, and introducing for the first time in Ireland the clarinet, hautbois d'amour, and Shawm.' We wonder what was the Shawm—probably the 'Tener Hoboy,' or cor Anglais; but we should have expected an instrument that Purcell used, and that was common in England in the form of the Wait, to have reached Ireland sooner. Mr. Charles is described in the notice as 'a Hungarian horn-player.' No doubt he was a Bohemian: the identification is close enough for those days, and Hungarian names rarely occur in lists of horn-players. He and his second remained at Dublin till the close of 1743, and he is met with at Edinburgh in 1755, and at Dublin again in 1756. Another newspaper entry of May 15, 1755, records the death of 'John Andrews, the famous French Horn, at Limerick. N.B.—Col. Croker will see him decently interred, as he was a stranger.' A. Mr. Skeggs also played the horn at Dublin in 1755. In 1748, Sheridan announced that his theatre orchestra contained two French horns, a trumpet, and a harpsichord; and between 1740 and 1760 there were several horn-makers at Dublin.

MUSIC BY WIRELESS

BY JEFFREY PULVER

It is a fortunate thing for the operators of wireless telegraphy and telephony that burning at the stake as a fitting reward for successful sorcery has gone out of fashion; for anything savouring of the supernatural so much as a concert out of the empty air could scarcely be imagined. A good deal has been written and said on the subject already, but a few words describing a musician's experiences during some interesting wireless experiments may be welcomed by scientific musicians and musical scientists.

The electrical losses sustained in the transmission of messages by wireless telephony are fairly well understood, and since music can assist the research worker in this science very much, it happens that concerts are frequently sent out so that record can be taken of the progress made. Mr. H. Lloyd, of the Sheffield University, who has fitted up the splendid experimental station known as '2.U.M.,' was desirous of discovering how music stood in transmission; what effect it had after its long journey; and in what way the pieces suffered musically. Now musical loss can be of two kinds—either loss in quality or loss in quantity. My experiences at Sheffield on August 19 bring me to the conclusion that not nearly so much is lost as most people imagine. After hearing a broadcasted concert the average layman is apt to say, 'How much like a gramophone is the quality,' and 'How weak it is.' Wireless telephony would not be the first science to suffer through the soaring anticipations of the ignorant. It is a baby science, and has a good deal of growing-up to do, but the results already achieved—if we look at them in the right way—are positively astounding.

What I have to say on the shortcomings and virtues of wireless music is quite likely to give rise to some controversy. This is unavoidable, for the simple reason that scarcely two listeners will hear the same concert in the same way. The powers of perception in different ears vary tremendously, and the quality and adjustment of different receiving 'sets' differ enormously, too. I can speak only from my own experiences, and must take for granted that station '2.U.M.' was a characteristic one, perhaps somewhat above the average—certainly it is perfectly controlled and managed by Mr. Lloyd and his father, Mr. Frederic Lloyd.

It must be obvious that so long as microphones have to be employed in transmitting and receiving, the music must acquire some little 'gramphonic' flavour, and though this is not so disturbing a factor as in the gramophone itself, it will be a happy day when the researches of engineers are rewarded by the discovery of a piece of apparatus which will avoid this defect. The second drawback arises from circumstances that no one can control. These are the so-called 'atmospherics,' or outside disturbances, which cause unpleasant noises. Their causes cannot be removed, and the task of the electrician is to produce the means of eliminating them without causing loss to the desired sounds. These atmospherics are of course not of continuous duration, and interfere only at intervals. The use of thermionic valves and filter circuits has done a good deal towards amplifying the volume of tone received without magnifying the atmospherics. The third defect has already been alluded to—the loss in volume. This is the least important of the losses, as it can be so easily rectified. The valves already mentioned can be used in greater numbers until the tone has been increased to the desired volume.

Serious as these three defects may appear to be when thus described, they do not cause so much trouble in practice as might be expected. The third one enumerated can already be overcome, and it cannot be long—so rapid are the strides made in this science—before the other two are satisfactorily cured. The actual tone-character or quality of the voice or of the instruments is not changed in the slightest degree in the process of transmission, and therein, I think, lies the greatest promise for future developments in wireless music. If the original quality is retained it can only be a question of improvements in mechanism, and such improvements are being made every day.

On Saturday, August 19, I heard Mrs. Pulver sing a few songs through the 'loud-speaker' of a station at some distance from '2.U.M.,' but I had no difficulty in recognising her voice, so little was its quality or character changed. In like manner, Mr. Frederic Lloyd's Gagliano violin sounded in such a way that I was clearly able to recognise it by tone alone. The preservation of technical detail is also a remarkable feature of music sent out by wireless. In the case of violin music, for instance, it is possible to hear how a passage is being fingered or bowed, and to judge of the phrasing and interpretation. This being the case, the use of wireless in seeking advice of a distant teacher on various small points must be obvious. Indeed, in many ways wireless telephony will in the future be of great assistance to musicians.

On the day following the tests above-mentioned I heard the concert that is broadcasted from The Hague. Here, again, I was agreeably surprised at the clarity of the production. As heard without any change in the apparatus, the effect was wonderful. The tone-volume was of course very small indeed, and required close aural attention to be audible at all. I asked that the set might be left as it was for a little, so that I could judge of the musical effect under those conditions. Except for the loss in volume, the performance as heard at Sheffield must have been a replica in miniature of what was happening at the Dutch capital; but it was a miniature perfect in detail. I heard every note and nuance; I could distinguish between the various instruments of the orchestra—by no means an easy matter even with the best gramophones—and so perfect was the performance in detail that I could have described how the piece was being played at The Hague. Having satisfied myself on these points, I had more valves inserted to magnify the tone.

This done, the music became loud enough for anyone in the house to hear, and though the volume of sound was increased, the quality of the tone was not changed. This, as I said before, is proof that the confidence I am placing in the future of these valves is justified.

The uses to which these means of transmission can be put must be obvious, but there must necessarily be limits to their employment. It is easy in the first enthusiasm aroused by a discovery little short of miraculous to frighten the musical world into the belief that the days of the public concert are numbered, and that all future concerts will be given by wireless for anyone to hear by switching-in his receiving apparatus. Nothing could be more absurd. The existence of a wireless set at Sheffield will not prevent me paying personal visits to my friends there, any more than the presence of the ordinary, old-fashioned line telephone stopped all personal contact between friends. The personal element will always attract patrons to the concert-hall, and even if wireless music is developed so highly that the audible effect is equal to that in the concert-hall itself, I do not for one moment suppose that music-lovers will be content to hear and not see the artist. The gramophone and pianola have not killed music, as many people feared they would; they have rather stimulated it by encouraging amateurs in remote parts of the country, by giving them a chance of hearing music that they would otherwise never have heard, and affording them examples to follow and imitate on their own instruments. I know of more than one instrumentalist whose only guide to interpretation in the pieces he plays has been gramophone records played by eminent artists. In the same way, the wireless concert of the future will bring music to the listener who cannot go to the music. Isolated country districts will then not be so remote from the musical culture of the great cities, and instead of reducing the numbers in metropolitan audiences, wireless will increase them by those who have had a taste and want more and stronger fare straight from the cook's hands. Look at all the arts and sciences how we will, they are all interdependent, and the losses sustained by one through the existence of another are always amply compensated to the full.

SOME ASPECTS OF WILLIAM BYRD

BY SYDNEY GREW

On the eve of the three hundredth anniversary of his death Byrd's reputation is changing. The present revival of interest in 16th-century music has caused a new critical and general attitude to be adopted towards him. For a long time his music was not thoroughly understood, much as for some century and a half the poetry of Shakespeare was not thoroughly understood. Already the new enthusiasm is trying to establish a settled appraisal of his art, usually at the expense of one of the masters we are either dethroning or asking to take a lower seat. Thus it is already the thing to say that Byrd is greater than Handel. We ought to avoid a stereotyped judgment, and to keep a fresh and open mind, because otherwise we shall not easily enter into the particular domain that is Byrd's. Moreover the mention of Handel, for example, will set the mind working along a familiar groove, and it will institute a kind of remembrance that must inevitably distract the attention from the subject that awaits contemplation. Byrd is to be compared only with his contemporaries, and the only touchstones to apply to his music are the universal principles of musical art.

He was great among 16th-century musicians by virtue of a quality he owned as completely as Palestrina, and more completely than any other English musician of his school. In one important respect he owned this quality in an even more complete degree than Palestrina. It is a quality of mind and art we can indicate in spoken language only by some such abstract term as the absolute, the synthetic vision, ultimate reality, the eternal verities, mystical perception of the Godhead, and so forth, according to our religion or philosophy. Probably the most practical term for this quality is the word sublimity, as defined by careful writers to convey the idea of total completeness.

So far as I have at present observed in my study of Elizabethan music, Orlando Gibbons alone of Byrd's contemporaries possessed the same mystic vision and exercised it as constantly. (Elgar has this vision; it is the quality that makes his music so peculiarly great.) But the spirituality of Gibbons is without the warm humanity I feel ever apparent in the spirituality of Byrd. It is this constant human warmth that, for me personally, makes the sublimity of Byrd's music slightly more precious than that of Palestrina. Gibbons has passion, serenity, depth of feeling, and intense love, but not the tenderness of the love I find in Byrd, nor the sweetness of the serenity, the swelling emotion, or profound pathos. I would distinguish between these two men as between Milton and Shakespeare. Milton's world did not contain, for example, so intensely human a moment as the close of the play-scene in Hamlet, where Hamlet, assured beyond further question that his mother and uncle are false, breaks into the mysterious cry of

Why, let the stricken deer go weep,
The hart ungalled play;
For some must watch, while some must sleep:
Thus runs the world away.

and Gibbons, I feel, would not have expressed the same poignant pathos as Byrd in the wail, 'Sion deserta':

Ex. 1. Cantiones Sacrae, 1589. No. 21, 'Civitas Sancti Tui.'

fac - ta est de - ser - ta;
Si - on de - ser - ta, de - ser - ta fac - ta est Si - on de -

Nor would he have given us the maternal tenderness we find in the close of Byrd's lullaby in the great Christmas piece, 'Be still, my blessed Babe':

Psalms, Sonnets, &c., 1588. No. 32, 'Lullaby.'

lul - la - by, lul - la - by, my sweet lit - tle ba - by, ba - by.

But a student cannot speak dogmatically when making comparisons of this kind. There is something in the nature of 'absolute' art that will not let us form a fixed and final opinion. Elizabethan music in particular compels a fluid attitude of criticism and appreciation. It is not merely that the music seems good to us in one mood and less good in another, but that it seems constantly more and more good as we proceed in knowledge of the works, and as our nature develops in capacity to understand and respond to them.

The chief cause of our past misunderstanding of Byrd lay in his music. The sublime in art is not easy of approach. Very few of us are able to realise total completeness of idea and to perceive total fitness of expression. And where, as with Byrd, appreciation of the whole can alone make true understanding possible, while appreciation of detached parts of the whole but confuses the issue, the real thing is likely to remain quite fatally obscure. The matter is not rendered more accessible by the fact that only mystics like Coleridge, and powerful rhapsodists like Victor Hugo, can express for the help of other men a personal understanding of such art.

Perhaps the most erroneous label ever fastened to a composer is that which describes Byrd as 'austere.' I find it exceptionally hard to determine how this error could have started. There is in Byrd no more stern morality or harsh reserve than in the Whitman of Sea Drift, Old Ireland, and President Lincoln, or in the Wordsworth of the Lucy poems and in the Browning who wrote Evelyn Hope. There is scarcely ever even an intellectual severity. Austerity, indeed, is impossible in any music not deliberately scientific, as parts of Bach's Art of Fugue. Here and there among the many hundreds of pieces written by Byrd in the course of his eighty years of life is a work of scientific or conventional character, just as among the Sonnets of Shakespeare and Spenser comes once in a while a poem where the writer seems to be indulging only in the fine athletic joy of a magnificent intellect, setting problems for the pleasure of solving them with apparent ease. But the bulk of his work has genuine human warmth and true poetical character. Yet Byrd was himself aware, as was Browning in respect of his poems, that his compositions were not for a casual hour and a lazy pipe, and he expressly desires our finest attention in a verbal passage I shall quote from later. Composers of the order of Byrd, Bach, Wagner, Franck, Elgar, and some later men, have, in their vocabulary of expressions, forms and figures which body forth certain definite ideas and shades of emotion. These idiomatic details are generally common to their time, and so may become 'abstract,' which is another word for austere. One of those much used by Byrd is the little figure shown in my next musical illustration. All composers of the age used this, and it expressed for them all kinds of feeling. In the final section of the Fantasia of four parts of Gibbons, for example, the motive seems to express a serene spiritual joy—though I have heard this passage of the Fantasia played in a manner that suggested a rugged energy. When Byrd uses the motive, he fills it with that pure pathos which is his chief beauty. Were he austere he would have failed with so simple a theme to be anything but dry and conventional. I make a quotation from the first work Byrd issued with English words :

Psalms, Sonnets, &c., 1588. No. 1, 'O God, give ear.'

Ex. 3.

me a gain: With plaints I pray, full me a gain: with plaints With sore op - pressed.
pray, full sore op pressed.
plaints I pray, full sore op.

Byrd is greatest when his subjects are most complete in themselves, or when they permit him to exercise his vast objective vision. In his mind was no surface animation, no flippancy or indeed even normal frolic, and no play of picturesque fancy. He had no use for the light fantastic toe of dance-movements (that is, in his choral music). What was conventional or partial, or a matter merely of pretence, could not move him. Only as he saw the whole of an idea was he inspired; and he could not fabricate an inspiration. Therefore the artificial amorous wailings of his time left him cold, for all that these helped other composers to some of their most delightful pieces. Religion, in the sense that religion is belief in the good of a fully realised thing, was his inspiration, as it was to different ends and in different ways the inspiration of Morley, Wilbye, Gibbons, and John Ward. Yet though these are supreme truths regarding Byrd, they do not justify that other long-held erroneous opinion of him—the opinion, that is, that he failed when touching a secular subject.

Before we could consider this question, we should have to divide the secular vocal music of the Elizabethans into three departments. These would contain respectively the serious madrigal, the ballet or fa la, and the light madrigal. The light madrigal would range from the jolly

On a fair morning as I came by the way

Met I with a merry maid in the merry month of May;

of Morley, to Wilbye's four-part setting of Lady, when I behold the roses sprouting. The serious madrigals would range from Wilbye's Draw on, sweet night and Happy, O happy he, to the various memorial songs of different composers. We should at once find that in the serious madrigal Byrd was—in his own particular way—as fine a master as the rest. His setting of

Ambitious love hath forced me to aspire

The beauties rare which do adorn thy face, is a magnificent passage of music (and a final proof, moreover, that he can deal with a nobly moral subject without becoming didactic or austere). As regards the fa la's the question would be answered by the simple statement that he wrote none of these at all; but the effect of the answer would be modified by the comment that, of all his companions, only Weelkes and Morley were completely successful here. As a fact, the ballet was a restricted idea, easily conventionalised, and it was with this form that—shortly after Byrd's death—the madrigalian epoch expired ingloriously in the three-part Ayres of John Hilton. The serious madrigal of Byrd differs from the rest by being less delicately poetical and less inclined to incorporate picturesque touches, also by being a little more massive and as needing therefore in performance that rather slower tempo, and that more deliberate accentual touch, which are proper for all his music. His serious madrigal is never egoistic or subjective, and it rarely, if ever, explores the lanes and by-ways of thought and feeling. In place of the ballet, Byrd has a type of madrigal very nearly his own, and in place of the light madrigal he has a power of joy which no one else seems able to emulate. The latter comes into his great Easter pieces with English text. The former comes with pieces that are English in the way the patriotic passages of Shakespeare are English. Morley gives utterance to the happiness and energy of English life and character, Wilbye voices its quiet, brooding melancholy and sense of charm, but Byrd very proudly expresses its innate nobility and personal grandeur. Thus in place of such works as Morley's Ho, who comes here? and You that wont my pipes to sound, we have from Byrd such works as his In fields abroad where trumpets shrill do sound, My mind to me a kingdom is, and I joy not in no earthly bliss. Gibbons wrote some fine pieces of this class, in the set of four commencing with I weigh not fortune's frown nor smile, and Weelkes had some splendid vigour in his Like two proud armies marching to the field; but neither Gibbons nor Weelkes, nor any one else, arrived at the remarkable strength and courage of Byrd. I feel that with these magnificent alternatives we can consent to other composers, who were below Byrd in certain departments, being placed above him in others.

Yet here, as elsewhere, our remarks can be but tentative and provisional. We really know little of Byrd's more secular music, because so very few of the pieces are in our concert repertory. (Dr. Fellowes did not bring Byrd into his edition until recently.) It may be that we shall later on see further into the character of his lighter compositions. There is a sweet purity and grace in La Virginella, and a happy buoyancy in the well-known I thought that love had been a boy. Yet the final judgment will probably be that though Byrd never took his pleasures sadly or laughed heavily, his versatility here was so far below that of Morley that Morley will always be his superior in respect of sweet delicacy and simple loveliness.

But Byrd none the less was foundation, supporting column, and roof to the superb architecture of the later Elizabethan music. First in time of his great group, by long life and extended achievement he was also last. Gibbons died two years after him, Weelkes in the same year, and Morley twenty years earlier. Wilbye lived on to 1638, but actually ceased work before his senior, the dates of their last volumes being respectively 1609 and 1611. (Both Wilbye and Byrd contributed to Leighton's Tears or Lamentations of a Sorrowful Soul in 1614.) All that came out in the way of madrigals after 1611 were the sets of Gibbons, Ward, Lichfield, Bateson, Tomkins, and a few others, the Tomkins set (1622) being the last of real value, and the Hilton set (1627) being the last of all. Thus Byrd, dying in 1623, lived a twelvemonth after the true close of the epoch, his life having enveloped that of Morley, his friend, disciple, and general equal, as completely as the life of Haydn was destined later to envelop the life of Mozart.

In the 19th century he was well admired by some musicians, but apparently with respect rather than love. A number of musicians, indeed, were scarcely respectful, Horsley applying words like 'monstrous' in his criticisms, and Rimbault transcribing the music with a full measure of his remarkable slovenliness and inaccuracy. Thus he was not truly admired at all, since admiration, in directions like this, must be based on love.

Few readers will have seen Horsley's remarks, and I therefore quote some leading sentences :

'W. H., Kensington Gravel Pits,
'July, 1842.

'A minute examination has led me to form a very different opinion of the Cantiones Sacrae to that which I formerly entertained. [Horsley had apparently known only Nos. 20, 21, which had been included in Boyce's collection.] Judging from a few favourable specimens, and trusting, as I am bound to confess, too much to the applause which has been lavished on them for more than two centuries, I had formed notions of their excellence which exist in my mind no longer.' [This applause had crystallised into the statements of Burney, who 'often wrote about things which he did not carefully examine,' and of Hawkins, who 'often wrote about things which he did not thoroughly understand.']

The Elizabethan composers were ignorant of the principles that had guided their greater Netherlandish and Italian predecessors. Horsley continues :

'Englishmen were working, as they now too often work, alone, and deprived of those advantages which arise from intercommunity of thought. . . . Can we wonder, then, at the superiority of the Italian School?' [Burney had said that 'long before the works of Palestrina had circulated throughout Europe we had choral music of our own which for gravity of style, purity of harmony, ingenuity of design, and clear and masterly contexture, was equal to the best productions of that truly venerable master.']

Horsley proceeds to give the refutation direct to each of the ideas conveyed in the italicised words. Byrd has no rhythm, because he has no melody—though this, Horsley admits, is the common fault of the age. He has no modulation, because in his day tonality was not fixed—'the natural relations of the scales, which have since been discovered,' were unknown to him, whence it comes that his modulations are 'vague and timid'; he appears to have been 'almost alarmed' when leaving his original scale, and 'glad to return to it'—this also is common with the other composers of the time, but it makes his works 'often monotonous and tedious.' Tried by the principles of fine harmony (principles that 'have their foundation in Nature,' and that 'neither time, nor fashion, nor caprice can affect'), Byrd's compositions will appear very defective. There is, says Horsley :

' . . . the monstrous combination of the major and minor third on the same root . . . these false relations are so common in the works of early English composers, that we are almost led to believe they considered them as beauties.'

Again :

' . . . the counterpoint of these songs is not always clear or correct ; consecutive fifths and eighths are often found, more especially those that are hidden or which arise from an injudicious crossing of the parts, and the parts themselves often move in an awkward and unmelodious manner. . . . Boyce in making his selections displayed great judgment, and if the other portions of the Cantiones Sacrae had approached to them in excellence, the work would have been more deserving of the praises which have been too heedlessly lavished upon it. That the work is curious, and worthy of being reprinted by the Musical Antiquarian Society, may be readily admitted. We must, however, bear in mind that the examples it furnishes are of a school long since passed away, and that (like other music of the time) it contains principles of composition no longer received.'

As I have already implied, the extreme lofty idealism of Byrd's art was partly the cause of this lack of appreciation, but chiefly it was due to the average ignorance of the real character of his music. Byrd will not reveal himself through the kind of performance hitherto afforded Elizabethan music. There are passages in Morley, Weelkes, and Wilbye that appear tolerably well when forced into the regular beat of modern music, and when regarded by a mind occupied exclusively with a modern sensitiveness to music. One reason why the Oriana pieces were popular during the last hundred years is that they contain a good deal that lends itself to the typical Handelian style of singing. Byrd's music must be sung to its own laws exactly as Milton's verse must be declaimed to its own laws ; it requires for its proper understanding to-day a scientific exposition that shall serve the same splendid purpose as the book of Robert Bridges on Milton's prosody. Only by thoroughly understanding the letter of earlier art may we understand the spirit, because the letter or form embodies the spirit, and because it is the natural first approach. Byrd himself asked for very special care in the treatment of his music. Writing in his sixty-ninth year, and commending his last volume to 'all true lovers of music'—to whom he wished 'all happiness both temporal and eternal'—he said :

'Only this I desire : that you will be but as careful to hear them well-expressed as I have been both in the composing and correcting of them. Otherwise the best song that ever was made will seem harsh and unpleasant, for that the well expressing of them, either by voices or instruments, is the life of our labours. . . .'

We did not, I believe, respond to this appeal during the 19th century. We did not learn his true accents, and so we misunderstood him. Even so direct a passage as the following will not reveal its secret to a regular four-beat bar, a conventional metrical stress, and an unimaginative 'expressing' of the individual parts :

Ex. 4. Psalms, Sonnets, &c., 1568. 'Ambitious love.'

Pro - ceed then in this des - per-ate en - - ter - prise, With good ad - vice, and fol - low love thy guide that leads (thee

Such a parallel to the Poet Laureate's study of the scientific character of Milton's verse ought to be provided against the coming tercentenary celebrations. It is a pleasant circumstance that this great anniversary should mark the first climax in our 20th-century revival of Elizabethan music. How different the position was twenty years ago is shown by the fact that—so far as I can discover—the three-hundredth anniversary of the death of Morley passed with very little comment. I have recently read newspaper reports of concerts given by several madrigal societies in 1903, and have actually found that no single piece of Morley's was included in the programmes! The tercentenary of Byrd's birth coincided with the Musical Antiquarian Society's editions of his works—the Mass for five voices (1840, Rimbault); the first book of the Cantiones Sacrae (1842, Horsley); and Parthenia (1847, Rimbault). But there was little real significance in the event; the transcriptions were not accurate, and Horsley's preface, as I have shown, was a monument of erroneous criticism. The fact that these editors worked without monetary remuneration should perhaps be borne in mind; yet after all, what counts in art is not how the work repays the artist, but how it repays the art. The pieces for next year's celebration should be carefully selected, first to compel attention to the essential style of Byrd, and secondly to avoid strangeness. And singers should keep in the forefront of their mind the entire content of the composer's 1611 preface—and, indeed, listeners should do the same. The old man (Morley's 'loving master, never without reverence to be named of musicians'), after remarking that the 'well-expressing of songs is seldom or never well performed at the first singing or playing,' continues thus :

'Besides, a song that is well and artificially made cannot be well perceived nor understood at the first hearing, but the oftener you shall hear it, the better cause of liking you will discover [Byrd would have appreciated the principle of the competition festival], and commonly that song is best esteemed with which our ears are most acquainted. As I have done my best endeavour to give you content (in "every humour : either melancholy, merry, or mixt of both") so I beseech you satisfy my desire in hearing them well expressed, and then I doubt not, for art and air, both of skilful and ignorant they will deserve liking.'

In this little commendation of his works, the master uses the word 'well' six times; and he inscribes himself Thine W. Byrd.

The Musician's Bookshelf

English Organ-Cases. By the Rev. Andrew Freeman (George A. Mate & Son, 7s. 6d.).

Speaking of the organ-builders of the past, Mr. Freeman says :

They bestowed on the outside of the instrument the same loving care as was bestowed on font or pulpit, screen, lectern, or bench-end. They grudged neither time, thought, nor labour in their determination to make its outward appearance worthy of the prominent position it occupied. . . . No one ever dreamed of setting one up merely because it pleased the ear. It must please the eye too. An organ might be large, or it might be small; it must be beautiful.

To re-establish this creed is the purpose of this book, and the author gives the wise advice to those who are contemplating building an organ that they should set apart a proportionate and adequate amount of the total sum for the provision of a well-designed and well-wrought case. Unfortunately those responsible for the choice or the construction of an organ are very few, but it would be well for our churches if they laid to heart the counsel of the organ-builders of the past that the organ may be large or small, but it must be beautiful.

An organ in an uncouth case—or, worse still, an organ with no case at all—is a pitiful spectacle in a church, whereas an organ beautifully cased lends a mysterious charm to whatever building it inhabits, besides seeming to mellow the actual sound and making it more spiritual. Pipes painted a glaring green can sound only harsh and strident; but pipes richly gilded, even if they are but dummies, seem to suggest tones that are smooth and golden.

Mr. Freeman has evidently taken great pains to collect material from all sources, and he has produced a comprehensive catalogue of organ-cases from the earliest times until the present day, devoting a chapter—illustrated by some good drawings by H. T. Lilley—to the Smith and Harris organs built during 1660-1790.

A book on such a subject might perhaps have been more lovingly written. It is impossible to imagine a writer on architecture or pictures meting out his praise or condemnation in such stereotyped phrases as Mr. Freeman too frequently uses. Also, the phrase 'box of whistles' suggests the cant of mere journalism rather than a meet description of what is designedly a lasting contribution to a noble Art.

The book is admirably illustrated with numerous drawings and photographs, and will be a useful addition to the library of anyone interested in ecclesiastical architecture, besides being a pleasant companion while making a tour of the famous churches in London or the countryside. A. B. S.

The Art of Transcribing for the Organ. By Herbert F. Ellingford (New York, H. W. Gray Co.; London, Novello, 18s.).

Recent years have seen a great development in the use by organists of music originally written for some medium other than the organ, and immense numbers of transcriptions have been published by organists of note in this country and elsewhere. But organists who wished to make their own arrangements have had to trust to their own good sense and taste, with no other guidance than that afforded by very occasional R.C.O. lectures, which could not deal with the subject in any great detail. This gap in organ literature has now been made good by Mr. Ellingford.

It need hardly be said that so experienced a recital-organist deals with his subject in a thoroughly practical manner. But in addition to this his writing is always admirably lucid, and the book is got up in attractive style, with a wealth of music-type illustration which adds much to its value.

Mr. Ellingford divides his work into three sections, the first of which deals with the arrangement of orchestral accompaniments to choral works. This, we venture to think, the average organist will find the most generally useful part of the book. Many do not aspire to give recitals, and if they do, play only an occasional transcription; but very few escape the duty of accompanying choral music, and all too few know how to adapt the accompaniment in the most suitable and effective way for the organ. Every point which the author makes is carefully illustrated, each extract appearing in three forms—the full score, the usual pianoforte reduction, and an organ version. With but few exceptions, the organ versions are splendid; in fact only two cause us any doubt—No. 13 ('How lovely,' from Brahms's Requiem) surely suffers by the sacrifice of the vigorous string figures; and in No. 14 (from Brahms's Song of Destiny) we feel that there is something wrong with the suggested registration.

The second section deals with the transcription of purely orchestral works, and here the author is on his own ground and speaks with authority. His versions are all drawn from his own repertory, and have had the test of actual performance at Liverpool. Naturally, in transcribing, alternative solutions are often possible, and it must be confessed that occasionally we have felt that an alternative was preferable; but the printed versions are always organic and faithful renderings of the originals. It is, we think, a pity that Mr. Ellingford writes so often for a 32-note pedal-board; many of us, even in these days, are not blessed with those extra two notes, and could not possibly play excerpts 17, 33, and 35 as they stand.

The third section refers to works for small orchestra, chamber and pianoforte music, and songs. Here, as elsewhere, the essential points are well illustrated. It was presumably thought necessary for the sake of completeness to include the songs; but these do not lend themselves very happily to transcriptions, and are not in themselves very worthy specimens of the form.

Altogether this book is a very valuable addition to the organist's library, the more valuable because it breaks new ground, and we commend it warmly to the attention of all who have anything to do with transcription for the organ. Mr. Ellingford is to be doubly congratulated—first as a pioneer, and secondly for the production of an attractive and comprehensive volume. J. A. S.

Pedalling in Pianoforte Music. By Algernon H. Lindo (Kegan Paul, 4s. 6d.).

Considering the great importance of this subject it has received singularly inadequate treatment in most works on pianoforte playing. Mr. Lindo's little book, which runs to about two hundred pages, is a praiseworthy effort to treat a very subtle and difficult art in a systematic and thorough manner. A short introductory section concerns itself with the general principles of pedalling, various methods of indicating pedal depression and release, and a description of the mechanism and action of the hammers and dampers in a pianoforte. The second and main part of the book deals with the practical application of the principles of pedalling. The writer has some helpful comments on the pedalling of isolated chords, staccato passages, and passages containing rests—matters concerning which there is much confusion of thought. A question of the utmost importance, and one which frequently perplexes the conscientious student, i.e., To what extent should pedalling be influenced by the presence of passing-notes? is discussed at considerable length and freely illustrated from Chopin's works. A chapter on half-pedalling and tremolo pedalling quotes an extract from the works of York Bowen. This composer would seem to be almost the only English musician who devotes the same care to his pedal marking that he does to the marking of light and shade, tempo, &c. Under the heading 'Some less-known pedal effects' the author describes various unorthodox devices frequently employed by professional pianists which are never indicated in the printed copy and are totally unknown to the average student. One of the most effective of these—silent pressure—is here described, probably for the first time in print. The third part of the work is a brief consideration of the special pedal treatment required for certain periods and certain composers. A helpful feature of the book is the large number of admirably-chosen music examples. Though it is highly improbable that all Mr. Lindo's suggestions will meet with universal approval, his excellent little volume should certainly stimulate students to think and experiment for themselves. G. G.

Outspoken Essays on Music by Camille Saint-Saëns.

Translated by Fred Rothwell (Kegan Paul, 4s. 6d.).

As the bulk of these essays made their first appearance in English in the columns of the Musical Times, it is necessary to do little more than draw the attention of readers to their issue in book form. Among papers that are new to us are one on Chopin's MS. of the F major Ballade, wherein the composer's second thoughts (which were not always the best) and other changes are shown by many music-type examples; a pleasant account of his impressions of America ('Yes, America pleased me well, and I would willingly revisit it, but as for living there . . . that is another matter . . . I belong to the past whether I like it or not . . . I shall always prefer our old cities before all the comforts of a young nation'); and some 'Observations of a Friend of Animals,' which show the composer in an intimate and kindly light. Mr. Rothwell's translation has the right ease and fluency for papers whose character is largely that of good table-talk.

H. G.

Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina: His Life and Times. By Zoë Kendrick Pyne (John Lane, 7s. 6d.).

So much enthusiasm has gone to the making of this book, and it contains such a wealth of information, that we are reluctant to find fault. Our grumble is that the amount of space devoted to the 'life and times' side is disproportionate. The most important thing about Palestrina to-day is his music, and we should have been more helped and interested by an arrangement which would give us a brief biographical sketch, followed by a lengthy discussion of the composer's works. After all, is not the life of Palestrina written in the book of Grove? Miss Pyne has, of course, been able to add thereto, but the extra matter is no justification for relegating consideration of the works to about twenty pages of annotated index. For example, we want something more about the Missa Papæ Marcelli than this curt note:

Theme from Plainsong. In mixolydian mode. This Mass should be studied for the transparency and suavity of phrase; for the new and surprising harmonic effects achieved by passing-notes and without departing from the strict rule; for the frequent use of the ancient device of nota cambiata (changing note) in the melisma.

The average reader, who is like to have little of the music at hand, naturally wants to see one or two of these surprising harmonic effects; he may even be a bit hazy as to what changing-notes sound like. True, we have occasional allusions to the music during the biographical portion of the book, but even here the author makes no more than a hasty dab at the subject. Thus, when telling us of the production of the third book of Masses she alludes to the Hexachord Mass and says:

Without stopping to analyse it, the student's attention may be drawn to the interesting employment of the sixth (hexachord) continually progressing up and down, a mechanical device which in no way hinders the flow or the unusual simplicity of effect.

But surely the writer's job was to 'stop and analyse it,' with music-type illustrations, the more so (we repeat) because so few readers have all—or even any—of Palestrina's Masses at their elbow. Apart from this cursory treatment of the music, and an occasional lapse into too flowery a style, the book is to be warmly commended. There are some well-produced illustrations, and appendices on 'Sixteenth Century Art' and 'Characteristics of the Roman School,' though here again it is felt that such matters ought to have been embodied in the general scheme of the book rather than poked away in small type at the end.

H. G.

Caruso and the Art of Singing. By Salvatore Fuciti and Barnet J. Beyer (T. Fisher-Unwin, 10s. 6d.).

Signor Fuciti acted as Caruso's coach and accompanist from 1915 to 1921; so far, therefore, as the discussion of the great tenor's methods is concerned, nobody could be better qualified to speak. The chapters dealing with Caruso's breathing power, tone-production, methods of practice, &c., are easily the best part of the book. Twenty-nine exercises are given, with notes as to Caruso's use of them. Some of the exercises suffer from being reproduced from photographs of MSS., and in one or two cases we should have been glad of approximate metronome marks. The striking feature about most of them is their extreme simplicity. There can be no more valuable lesson for the student—and for not a few teachers—than this further proof of the oft-forgotten fact that what matters most is not the exercise, but the way you go to work with it. Fuciti's note on humming touches a weak spot in choralists as a body. He tells us that, when learning a new rôle Caruso sometimes whistled or hummed his part, merely to rest his voice and also as a diversion. But Fuciti points out the value of humming as a means of developing resonance, and goes on to say that most people hum with the jaw, tongue, &c., rigid. This is so, but it is worth noting that the fault occurs, as a rule, only when singers are bidden to hum during a lesson. When they hum casually they adopt the right looseness. We read that when Caruso hummed he produced a . . . wonderfully coloured tone-quality of ravishing beauty, a tone resembling the timbre of a fine violoncello. So sonorous and resonant, so round and velvety, were the tones Caruso poured out, that they could not have been surpassed in beauty and opulence by an expert violoncellist playing on an old Italian instrument.

The quotation reminds us of the long way most choral societies have to go before they make all that can be made of this simple and beautiful effect—an effect that was until lately regarded by severe musicians as an ad captandum trick!

One cocks an eyebrow on reading that Caruso never strained or forced his voice. What, never? Hardly ever, perhaps, but some of his gramophone records give an impression of effort on an occasional high note.

Dealing with Caruso's repertory Fuciti tells us that he 'never attempted to sing a rôle, an aria, or a song that, in his judgment, was beyond his vocal capacity, or that was unsuited to his vocal organism.' The obvious comment is that his vocal organism was unfortunate in restricting him, both in opera and song, to music that rarely rose above the third-rate. Was Wagner beyond his vocal capacity? Were the finest songs of Brahms, Wolf, Schumann? What could not such a singer have done towards the raising of popular taste in song! The mob would go to hear him whatever he chose to sing. He had but to give the best, and deal a blow at the shoddy. But too often he chose the shoddy, and so helped to perpetuate it. Sometimes the shoddy was his own work. We are told that one of his hobbies was composition,

. . . or perhaps—for Caruso made no pretensions to be a composer—it should be called melodic invention. . . . Sometimes he would invent a melody himself, and he had a real gift for finding a tuneful air of a lyric character which lent itself easily and naturally to a good harmonic background. Various of these songs have been published, and have won favour.

Exactly; they won favour because Caruso sang them, when he ought to have been winning favour for something better.

It will have been grasped from the above that the book is nothing if not hero-worshipping. A good deal of this may be pardoned in the case of a subject of such attractive powers as Caruso, but none the less the authors would have been more convincing had they moderated some of their transports. However, it is good to have an authentic account of the tenor's early struggles—an account which shows some popular stories to have been apocryphal—and, even better, to be given so valuable an insight into his methods of work. There are some excellent illustrations, including a few of Caruso's caricatures, and a photograph of his bas-relief of himself as Eleazar in La Juive—a bit of work which shows that as an artist he had a strong second string to his bow.

H. G.

Extempore Playing. By Dr. A. Madeley Richardson (Schirmer).

There are very few manuals dealing with the art of improvising at the keyboard, so pianists and organists—particularly the latter—will be interested in the appearance of this work by Dr. Richardson. The book takes the form of forty lessons in the art of keyboard composing. The lessons are simply planned and carefully graduated, the object of the author being to emphasise the importance of simple, elementary foundation work. Each lesson concludes with a number of practical exercises. The book, which contains many illustrations from the works of the great composers, should certainly benefit those who work through it systematically, and, in particular, are prepared to put in plenty of patient, conscientious effort at the keyboard.

G. G.

[Reviews of new music are unavoidably held over.
—EDITOR.]

Photo by]

A GROUP AT GLOUCESTER

[H. E. Jones, Gloucester.

DR. A. H. BREWER, SIR HUGH ALLEN, PROF. GRANVILLE BANTOCK, SIR HENRY HADOW, SIR EDWARD ELGAR, THE BISHOP OF GLOUCESTER, LORD GLADSTONE, THE DEAN OF GLOUCESTER, SIR CHARLES STANFORD.

THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL

BY HERBERT THOMPSON

Many people—I for one—have at times entertained serious doubts whether musical festivals had not had their day; but happily such pessimism has been put to shame by the cities of the 'Three Choirs.' Worcester led the way in 1920, Hereford followed suit in 1921, and now Gloucester has had its turn, and may be said to have 'gone one better' by a Festival which in many features was a record. The choir was of remarkable excellence: in a fairly long experience I can recall no better, if any as good, at a Three Choirs Festival. The attendance, which is more easily gauged, was the greatest ever known, and concerning this matter a few statistics may be acceptable. The number of tickets sold at the last Festival (in 1913) was 13,926; at this Festival 18,298. The collections in 1913 amounted to £415, in 1922 to £700. These figures speak for themselves. Another record was achieved by the weather, for though it is a tradition to have fine weather at the Three Choirs Festival, it was hardly short of a miracle to enjoy seven successive fine days after such a summer as we have endured.

The great event by which this Festival will be remembered was the unveiling of the Memorial Tablet to Hubert Parry in the Cathedral during the performance on Wednesday, September 6. Parry was one of Gloucester's most noteworthy citizens. Like his father before him—who decorated one of the chapels in the south transept with his own hands—he was intimately associated with the Cathedral and the Three Choirs Festivals. At this, the first Gloucester Festival since he passed away, so greatly beloved, in 1918, it was inevitable that there should be some marked recognition of the man and his art, nor was the opportunity neglected. A beautiful tablet, with an inscription by the Poet Laureate—being part of the memorial which is being organized—was unveiled by Viscount Gladstone, a friend from Eton days, and participators in the little ceremonial were the Professors of Music in Oxford, Cambridge, and Birmingham Universities, the Vice-Chancellor of Sheffield University (Sir Henry Hadow), and Dr. Brewer, the organist of the Cathedral and conductor of the Festival. Lord Gladstone gave an address in which he did justice to Parry's fine character, his free and generous sympathies, his high ideals; and then Sir Hugh Allen, as Parry's successor in both London and Oxford, gave a most stirring and uplifting performance of Blest Pair of Sirens, the work by which Parry is perhaps better and more widely known than any other. Nor was this the only example of his art which was heard during the Festival; at the concert in the Shire Hall the Symphonic Variations, so interesting in structure, were heard, and on Thursday morning the Ode to Music, written for the opening of the R.C.M. Concert-hall in 1901, and afterwards heard at Norwich, Gloucester, and Leeds Festivals, was sung. It was a happy choice, for it is intensely characteristic, and served to reveal the composer's individuality in all its geniality, sanity, and high endeavour. Yet another of his works, the noble Motet, There is an Old Belief, brought us into very close communion with the composer. Apart from the fact that as music it represents him at his best, free from some mannerisms and replete with strength and ardour, there was the feeling that we were listening to the last message of one who was on the eve of departing from us, which lent an added poignancy to the expression. It was very finely sung, and gave the finishing touch to a worthy commemoration.

The novelties, on which the wider import of a musical festival so largely depends, were in several instances of distinctly stimulating character. This applies especially to the works of three of our younger composers. There was a time when any symphony was deemed unsuited to a Cathedral, but though we have conquered this prejudice, there may have been some who doubted whether so freakish a work as Arthur Bliss's Colour Symphony was sufficiently staid for its surroundings. I must say that I was not troubled by any sense of incongruity, for the music is not frivolous or distinctively secular in character. What I did feel was its intense vitality: it is distinctly live music, and this makes one ready to accept, or at least condone, what seem to be its eccentricities. At a first hearing its structure is not easy to follow, but in a published analysis by Mr. Percy Scholes he makes out a plausibly logical sequence of ideas. It is styled a Colour Symphony because the composer is one of those not very rare individuals who associate music and colour, and who is therefore able, from a motive which is not merely capricious, to label the several movements by the colours purple, red, blue, or green, together with certain abstract ideas which they connote: pageantry, magic, loyalty, or youth, as the case may be. He offers these as no more than suggestions, arising from his own personal preconceptions, but it is enough that they have served to give him the cues for some strange music, which is sometimes attractive, sometimes repellant, but generally intrigues the hearer by its adventurous spirit. The composer conducted, and, as he has not had much experience in this rôle, it is doubtful whether the utmost possible was made of the music, so all we can say is that, considering its great and perhaps gratuitous difficulty, a performance which was at least effective was achieved. These young composers are rather too apt to tempt providence by putting undue difficulties upon their interpreters, and this was felt also with an interesting orchestral Phantasy, entitled, in non-committal fashion, Sine Nomine, by Herbert Howells, a Gloucestershire musician who has already won a more than local reputation. It is serious in character, complicated in phraseology, and requires more sympathetic and sensitive handling than a new and strange work can be expected to meet with at a festival. The composer makes use of the human voice: a soprano and tenor ejaculate sentences from the Vulgate, which, so far as could be judged, are chosen as in keeping with the general mood of a work designed for a church performance, and at the close the choir enters, but only as an addition to the orchestra, vocalising, but having no words to sing. This choral obbligato we could understand, but the fragmentary phrases for the soloists seemed simply futile. As an experiment the Phantasy was interesting, and it was well to give the composer the valuable experience of hearing it, but it was hardly discreet to put it before an Elijah audience, who could not be likely to give it a very patient or intelligent hearing. Mr. Goossens is another of our young lions, but he has already acquired a technique which enables him adequately to express his ideas, and this was manifested in a short choral work, Silence, a setting of two stanzas from a poem by Walter de la Mare, the mystical quality of which the composer has expressed with skill and insight. It is music which affords the choir some stumbling-blocks in the matter of intonation, and, considering that it had been placed before the singers only about a fortnight before the Festival, these were cleverly surmounted, though there were a few passages in which some hesitancy was still noticeable. The other two new works were less speculative in character. Prof. Granville Bantock is engaged setting passages from the Song of Solomon in a form which is evidently intended for the stage, and from this Biblical opera we had an extended Prelude, a scene in which the Shulamite laments her lost lover and disregards the advances of the King, and an interlude for a mystic choir, singing a Psalm behind

Reproduced by kind permission of The Times

IN THE CATHEDRAL

The photograph was taken immediately before the performance of The Kingdom

the scenes. The composer has treated his subject without imposing any sort of ecclesiastical gloss upon it, and has made it simply an idyl of faithful love, the Oriental imagery with which the poem abounds having evidently attracted him. As a fragment it is not very convincing, the absence of action having compelled him to rely upon decorative orchestral effects that do not materially assist the dramatic impression. The Psalm, sung in the choir, and accompanied by the organ, was the one feature which seemed perfectly suited to its environment, and the purposeful bald simplicity in the music made a striking and effective contrast to the sensuous character of what had preceded it. Miss Denne Parker put the right expression into the part of the Shulamite (though some of the higher passages seemed slightly to strain her resources) and the composer conducted. At the opening service Mr. T. F. Dunhill conducted some Elegiac Variations which he has dedicated to the memory of Sir Hubert Parry; they were musically and pleasant if not strikingly original or distinctively elegiac—save for some occasional episodes of a graver character. These were all absolute novelties, but in the same category may be placed the transcription of Bach's Fantasia in C minor, which Sir Edward Elgar has completed to accompany his brilliant arrangement of the Fugue and which was heard for the first time on this occasion. Whatever may be said of the Fugue-transcription—which certainly sounded magnificent—that of the Fantasia is most sympathetic, the inexpressible charm and restraint of the music being admirably reproduced. If these transcriptions do no more than bring this beautiful work into the ken of a wider circle—as they certainly will—they will be justified. One other quasi-novelty may be referred to here; Dr. Brewer's newly-revised version of his oratorio, The Holy Innocents, which was originally written for the Gloucester Festival of 1904. For the present occasion he has revised and condensed his score with much advantage, and, if it is felt that the composer has been handicapped by an extremely conventional libretto as well as by a task which cannot have appealed very strongly to a musician of his temperament and quality, it must be conceded that he has come out of the ordeal very cleverly, and written with a freedom and a facility that rarely fail him. But it will not be here that we shall look for the best fruits of his gentle muse. A minor novelty was a song by Sir Ivor Atkins, a setting of Alice Meynell's poem, The Shepherdess, very refined and in perfect harmony with the text. It was charmingly sung by Miss Olga Haley—who, by the way, made an excellent impression on this her first appearance at an English festival. A rather lighter touch in the handling of the orchestra is all that seems needed to make this song perfectly acceptable.

Coming to the more familiar features we had, of course, Elijah to open the Festival, and The Messiah to finish it off; Verdi's Requiem was given for the fifth time at Gloucester, and Sir Edward Elgar conducted his oratorios, The Apostles and The Kingdom, both of which received superb interpretations in all respects. His choral work, For the Fallen, was given as part of a programme evidently meant to be commemorative, since it also included the Eroica Symphony, some solos from Judas Maccabæus, and Stanford's Last Post, which was greatly aided by the acoustics of the Cathedral, the final bugle-call, sounded in a remote part of the building, having a wonderfully impressive effect. The preponderance of Handel, Mendelssohn, and Elgar in the programme is easily understood, and though we may think that the two older composers have hardly full justice done to them by harping upon a single work of each, I always console myself by reflecting that this clears the way for rehearsal by eliminating two programmes out of seven from the crowded days of preparation. All the same, lovers of Handel cannot but wish that his greatest work should receive a little more consideration than when it is given, practically unrehearsed, at the fag-end of a four-days' festival.

Holst's setting of two Psalms, based on ancient melodies, was one of the happiest things in the Festival scheme. The composer's leaning towards the archaic, and his quiet reticence, made the music fit the Cathedral almost better than anything else we heard there, save perhaps Parry's Motet. The only choral work of Bach was the Motet for double choir, Now shall the grace, which was well sung, and though it may be doubted whether the music suits perfectly such large forces, the effect was impressive. An unpretentious but sincere and very effective Motet, a setting of the Lord's Prayer, by C. Lee Williams, must also be mentioned.

The orchestral works, other than those already referred to, included Brahms's second Symphony, and the Finale of the first Symphony, played at the opening service, two delightful pieces by Edward German, his tone-picture on the Willow Song, written for the R.A.M. Centenary, and the Harvest Dance from the Seasons Suite (played under the composer's direction with admirable point and spirit), and W. H. Reed's freakish fantasy The Lincoln Imp. An interesting innovation was the introduction into the Cathedral of Scriabin's Poème de l'Extase. If listened to on its merits, and without any prejudice, the music sounded well and not inappropriate for such an environment.

• It remains only to recall the names of the principals who have not been mentioned hitherto: sopranos, Miss Hilda Blake, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Dorothy Silk, and Miss Carrie Tubb; contraltos, Miss Phyllis Lett, Miss Doris Lorton, and Madame Kirkby Lunn; tenors, Messrs. John Coates and Frank Mullings; basses, Messrs. Norman Allin, Herbert Heyner, George Parker, and Robert Radford. The London Symphony Orchestra, seventy-six strong, and led by Mr. W. H. Reed, and the organ, played alternately by Sir Ivor Atkins and Dr. Percy C. Hull, composed the instrumental forces. Dr. Brewer, as choir-master, conductor, and general master of the ceremonies, was indefatigable, and his twenty-five years' service at Gloucester has been worthily crowned by the success of the Festival.

By way of a postscript I must briefly mention the daily services in the Cathedral, sung by the Three Choirs, which presented an interesting survey of English Church music, including specially composed voluntaries by Stanford, W. H. Reed, Basil Harwood, and Brewer; these brought into notice the fine Cathedral organ, recently enlarged and reconstructed by Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, at the expense of Sir James and Lady Horlick. Advantage was taken at the same time to effect a much-needed improvement, and introduce the lower 'French' pitch, which ought to have been done long ago.

From a Midland journal:

'The Gloucester Festival happily finds Dr. Brewer where he was in 1911.'

Happily, indeed; but then Cathedral organists are notoriously a long-lived race.

Photo by H. E. Jones

THE PARRY MEMORIAL TABLET IN GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL

[Gloucester]

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

The only orchestral record received from the H.M.V. Company this month is that of the Emperor Concerto, played by Lamond and the Albert Hall Orchestra, with Eugène Goossens conducting. This is one of the most formidable enterprises so far undertaken in the way of recording. It is on five 12-in. d.-s. discs, the first movement filling five sides and the Andante two. The reproduction is excellent, especially of the pianoforte part. The effect is here and there a bit too suggestive of a pianoforte solo with orchestral accompaniment, but that is a weakness of the form. Only in one or two modern examples (above all, in the 'Cello Concerto of Elgar) do we feel that the orchestra is a great deal more than an expensive background against which the soloist is disporting himself. There is still a huge public for the Emperor, if we may judge from the crowds that flock to Queen's Hall when it is announced, and we know that there is a no less large Lamond public where Beethoven is concerned. The success of these records is therefore assured. They should be particularly useful to students as an aid to memorising the work, seeing that there are no cuts.

From the Æolian Company come several orchestral records. The most important are a couple of 12-in.

d.-s. giving the Unfinished Symphony, played by the Æolian Orchestra under the direction of Cuthbert Whitmore. Save for an occasional faintness in the lower passages of the string basses these are first-rate. A few cuts are made, but in the case of a work in which length is the result of repetition rather than of development, judicious pruning is an advantage. The other orchestral record from this Company is a pleasant example of light music—a Ballet Suite, Fireflies, by Montague Ewing, played by the Regent Orchestra, conducted by Debroy Somers. There are four movements, on a 12-in. d.-s.

Chamber music receives some interesting additions from the Æolian Company. A 12-in. d.-s. contains a couple of delightful Mozart numbers—the first movements from the E flat and E major Trios, arranged for violin, viola, and pianoforte by Lionel Tertis, and played by Sammons and Tertis, with Ethel Hobday as pianist in one work and Frank St. Leger in the other. These are among the most enjoyable chamber music records I have so far met.

Equally successful is a 12-in. d.-s. of the London String Quartet playing two Mendelssohn movements, the Allegro non tardante and the Canzonetta from Op. 12 (Æ.-Voc.). When my gramophone had finished this record I found myself wondering why we so rarely hear any of Mendelssohn's chamber music in our concert halls. I have sat under lots not nearly so fresh as these movements. Fashion in music is as powerful as fashion in dress, and often as absurd.

A 12-in. s.-s. of the Flonzaley Quartet playing Borodin's Nocturne fails, like practically all chamber music records, in the quieter passages. Why cannot the scale of power in such records be raised? The soft passages would not be a bit too loud if they were as powerful as the forte ones are at present. There seems to be no difficulty in reproducing power in the case of small dance music combinations of players; why cannot the same clearness and strength be obtainable from a string quartet, where it is really far more important, owing to the complex texture of the music. This said, it should be added that the Borodin movement is a delightful affair, specially enjoyable features being the use made of a rising staccato scale, and some effective canonic writing. The record is issued by H.M.V.

Albert Sammons is heard to great advantage in a 10-in. d.-s. of Kreisler's La Gitana and the Hindoo Chant from Rimsky-Korsakov's Sadko, arranged by Kreisler (Æ.-Voc.).

A thrilling vocal record is that of Rosing in Moussorgsky's Field Marshal Death (Æ.-Voc.). A big factor in its success is the accompaniment by the Æolian Orchestra, which is unusually clear. As Rosing sings in Russian, the explanatory note and literal translation of the text recorded on the other side are a boon. This aid should be supplied in all cases where the singer uses a foreign tongue. Indeed, gramophonists will soon demand it even when English is the language, unless some of our songsters take a leaf out of the book of the comedians and let us hear what it's all about.

Here for example is Sir Harry Lauder, on a 12-in. d.-s., singing Bella, the Belle o' Dunoon and Saturday Night with such point and distinctness that every word comes through. Unfortunately when the wor-r-r-ds have come thr-r-r-ough they are, like the music to which they are set, of no great moment. Sir Harry doesn't know his limitations. He is a great artist on the stage but a poor hand as writer and composer. To those of us who have heard him, the record serves to recall the rich voice and the succulent laugh, and incidentally it shows what a personality can do with feeble material (H.M.V.).

Seeing that all Lauder's words are clearly heard one cannot but ask why we should miss so many of Edna Thornton's in Alicia Needham's Exile's Return and Somerville's Shepherd's Cradle Song (H.M.V. 10-in. d.-s.).

A 12-in. d.-s. (Æ.-Voc.) of Carrie Tubb singing Oliver's The Orchard by the Sea and Grimshaw's Song my Mother Sang is better in the matter of words, but I wish Miss Tubb had chosen songs more worthy of her gifts.

The same must be said of Malcolm McEachern, who wastes his fine bass voice on W. H. Squire's A Chip of the Old Block and Lyall Phillips's Cheerily Yeo-Ho. But he lets us hear the words (Æ.-Voc.).

However, choice of songs is a ticklish question. Personally I would rather hear d'Alvarez in almost anything rather than the well-worn Silent Night, Holy Night, but de gustibus, &c., and here she is making the most of Grüber's old song on a 12-in. d.-s. with orchestral accompaniment (Æ.-Voc.).

A capital Peter Dawson record is a 10-in. d.-s. giving us Vaughan Williams's The Roadside Fire and Landon Ronald's O Falmouth is a fine town. The words of the first might be clearer, and the piano-forte accompaniment is not sufficiently defined. As a result, passages containing sudden changes of key suffer because we are apt to miss some vital chord on which the whole progression depends, and a note in the voice-part may even sound like a wrong 'un for lack of the explanatory harmony, so to speak. In both songs the voice and style are first-rate (H.M.V.).

A 12-in. s.-s. of Michele Fleta in 'Il fiore che avevi a me tu dato,' from Carmen, gives us some fine singing. Fleta's strong point is his management of nuance on long-held notes. I had to switch back and encore one particularly good example—a long high note with a gradual diminuendo followed by a most delicate skim down the scale. He overdoes the power now and then, and in his long swellings of high notes he is apt to force and sharpen. One might give a budding tenor a capital singing lesson from this record, showing him much to copy and something to avoid (H.M.V.).

A good operatic duet is 'Pronta io son,' from Don Pasquale, sung by Lucrezia Bori and Giuseppe de Luca (12-in. s.-s. H.M.V.). Without knowing what the lady and gentleman are discussing, one may yet enjoy the spirited singing, especially when it develops into a bright bit of back-chat towards the end. A delightful feature of the accompaniment is some mellow work on the flute.

But that excellent instrument for recording purposes gets an even better chance in Bishop's Echo Song, wherein it shares the honours with Galli-Curci (H.M.V. 12-in. s.-s.). This is a typical Galli-Curci record. It is practically a duet between her beautiful high notes and those of the flautist, and although on the platform the lady would get all the bouquets, the gramophone, with its appeal to the ear only, enables us to give the flautist also his due.

From the Æolian Company come a couple of dance records, both 10-in. d.-s., one bearing Ma, a one-step, and And her Mother came, too, a fox-trot, while on the other are two fox-trots, Old-fashioned Girl and Somewhere in Naples. I am glad to have an opportunity for mentioning an occasional specimen of this type of music, because it is fair to assume that there are a good many readers of the Musical Times who are not too old, heavy, or serious to dance occasionally.

Though I am out of the hunt on all three counts, I must confess to having found enjoyment and amusement in the first and fourth of these dances. What interests me most, however, is the clearness and power with which every detail of the scoring comes out. It raises the question asked above, as to why chamber music records should be so faint in their quieter passages. You reply that chamber music employs a big range of nuance, whereas dance music of the fox-trot breed is almost invariably on the strepitous side. True; but one of the most important duties of the artist is to adapt himself to the needs of the medium or occasion. This being so, surely chamber music parties when playing for recording purposes should raise the general scale of power, especially in the lower string passages. After all, the gramophonist wants to hear all the notes clearly, even if this clearness is at the cost of some subtleties of nuance. He will be ravished by ppp playing in the concert room, but if this same ppp on the gramophone is so faint as to be killed by the sound of the

(Continued on page 716.)

CHORUS FROM THE ADVENT CANTATA "BLESSED ARE THEY WHO WATCH"

Music by HUGH BLAIR

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Maestoso. ♩ = 66

f p

SOPRANO
ALTO
TENOR
BASS

Be - hold the hour cometh

Be - hold the hour . . cometh

Be - hold the hour . . cometh

Be - hold the hour . . cometh

f p

when the dead shall hear . . the voice of the Son of God,

p when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God,

p when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God,

p when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God,

and they that hear . . . shall live.

and they that hear . . . shall live.

and they that hear . . . shall live.

and they that hear . . . shall live.

Più mosso.

For the Lord Him - self shall de - scend from Heaven with a shout,

For the Lord Him - self shall de - scend from Heaven with a shout,

For the Lord Him - self shall de - scend from Heaven with a shout,

For the Lord Him - self shall de - scend from Heaven with a shout,

Più mosso. ♩ = 100.

with a shout, with the voice of the Arch - an - gel, and the trump of

with a shout, with the voice of the Arch - an - gel, and the trump of

with a shout, with the voice of the Arch - an - gel, and the trump of

with a shout, with the voice of the Arch - an - gel, and the trump of

God, for the Lord Him -

God, for the Lord Him -

God, for the Lord Him -

God, for the Lord Him -

poco accel.

poco accel.

poco accel.

poco accel.

ff

poco accel.

- self shall de - scend from Heaven with a shout, with a shout, with the

- self shall de - scend from Heaven with a shout, with a shout, with the

- self shall de - scend from Heaven with a shout, with a shout, with the

- self shall de - scend from Heaven with a shout, with a shout, with the voice of the Arch - an - gel, and the trump of God.

voice of the Arch - an - gel, and the trump of God.

voice of the Arch - an - gel, and the trump of God.

voice of the Arch - an - gel, and the trump of God.

The musical score is written for four voices (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and piano accompaniment. The key signature is one flat (B-flat major/D minor) and the time signature is 4/4. The score includes various musical notations such as rests, notes, and dynamic markings.

Piano Introduction: The piano part begins with a series of chords and a melodic line. It includes markings for rall. (rallentando), dim. (diminuendo), and rall. pp (rallentando, pianissimo).

Vocal Entry: The vocal parts enter with the lyrics "A - wake and sing, ye . . . that sleep . . . in the dust,". The tempo is marked Tempo lmo. (Lento). The music features a mix of half notes and quarter notes, with some parts marked ff (fortissimo) and p (piano).

Second Verse: The vocal parts continue with the lyrics "a - wake and sing. Thy dead men shall live,". The tempo remains Tempo lmo. and the music includes markings for ff and p.

Piano Accompaniment: The piano part continues with a steady accompaniment, including markings for p and ff sempre. (fortissimo, sempre).

Page-Footer: The page is numbered (4) at the bottom center.

thy dead . . . men shall . . live, to -

thy dead . . . men shall . . live, to -

thy dead . . . men shall . . live, to thy dead . . . men shall . . live, to - ge - ther with my dead bo - dy shall they a - rise, shall they a ge - ther with my dead bo - dy shall they a - rise, shall they a .

ge - ther with my dead bo - dy shall they a - rise, shall they a .

ge - ther with my dead bo - dy shall they a - rise, shall they a .

rall. molto.

- rise ; and the earth . . . shall cast out the dead.

rall. molto.

- rise ; and the earth . . . shall cast out the dead.

rall. molto.

- rise ; and the earth . . . shall cast out the dead.

rall. molto.

- rise ; and the earth . . . shall cast out the dead.

rall. molto.

(Continued from page 710.)

needle he will prefer a mere p or even mf. The gramophone will make a big step forward when it gives us fine songs with the words as clear as those in its comic records, and when its reproduction of chamber music drops the present shy, hope-I-don't-intrude delivery in favour of the bold clarity with which it hands out Ma and Swanee.

Occasional Notes

When, at the beginning of the present volume, we made a somewhat drastic change in our methods of collecting and presenting news from the provinces, we feared an outcry from readers in the country. Instead, many expressions of approval have been received, and only three complaints. As two of the latter were written under the mistaken impression that we were proposing to give no provincial news whatever, they do not count. The solitary remaining protest calls for discussion because it comes from a quarter entitled to consideration, and even more because it perhaps expresses what many of our country readers are thinking.

The protester's points are: (1) The musical happenings at (say) Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, and Leeds are as important as those of London, and therefore should be as fully reported; (2) Readers are more interested in the news from these towns than in the news from Berlin or any other foreign centre.

As to (1), we do not deny that there are many provincial concerts (especially of the choral type) at least as good as, and sometimes better than, anything of the kind heard in London. But it should be obvious that if we gave critical reports of all the important concerts that take place in Great Britain there would be no space available for articles, reviews, correspondence, and the rest of the matter that makes up the magazine side of the journal. Our readers have a right to expect a good deal more than mere news, much of it inevitably some weeks old. They wish to be kept in touch with current developments of the art, abroad as well as at home. They look to the musical journals for information in regard to new music and musical literature—information which such journals are able to help out with music-type illustrations and an amount of space not often available in the lay press. Room must be found, too, for articles dealing with various branches of research; such articles, if they did not appear in the musical press, would almost certainly appear nowhere else. Contributions of this type make the bound volumes of a journal of permanent interest and value, and it is a desire to increase this interest and value that has led us to condense provincial news into a bare record of events.

A certain amount of critical and detailed concert news must, however, be included for the benefit of readers who wish for information about the new works produced and about the form and style of contemporary performers. The great majority of new works receive their first hearing in London, and London is also the first English centre visited by prominent performers from abroad. If these visiting artists go on a provincial tour their programmes are little more than repetitions of that given at their London débüt, so it is the London performance that calls for critical notice. Moreover, with all its musical shortcomings, London happens to be the metropolis. The case is surely met, therefore, by giving a pretty full and critical account of musical occurrences in central London, plus a condensed record of suburban and provincial events.

There is another practical point that is apt to be overlooked. The critical opinions appearing in this journal are sometimes quoted by performers and concert agents—a procedure to which no exception can be taken so long as the quotations are not garbled or set out in a misleading way. Provided such opinions represent the first-hand impressions of members of the staff who are qualified to make critical pronouncements we are delighted to find them useful to artists. But more than once we have seen a glowing tribute given with the Musical Times as its source, and on looking up the quotation have found it to be in a provincial report.

Now, as it is obviously impossible for a local correspondent, responsible for a large area, to be present at more than a very small proportion of the events he chronicles, such tributes are apt to be drawn in all good faith from a local paper. Readers will understand our reluctance to see the Musical Times quoted as saying that 'Miss So-and-so sang superbly,' when as likely as not the glowing adjective came from the general-utility reporter of an obscure country paper—a reporter who no doubt went on to say that the lady 'literally brought down the house.' By limiting our critical reports to London concerts and to specially important events in the provinces, such as the various festivals, we are able to ensure that they are the work of writers whose opinions carry weight, such reports being invariably signed or initialled. (In this connection we are glad to find our readers warmly appreciative of our endeavours to give them a monthly review of London's chief musical events written by some of the best critics of the day.)

Here a word may be said as to our placing of the provincial towns in alphabetical order, instead of giving the big towns special prominence. The alphabetical system has been adopted, first, for convenience of reference, and, second, because we are convinced that mere size tends to count for less and less so far as musical activity is concerned. For example, there are certain choral strongholds the chronicle of whose activities would be little more than a dull list of performances of hackneyed works. On the other hand, we could name twenty smallish towns that, musically speaking, were not on the map a few years ago, but which to-day are showing an astonishing amount of enterprise, not only in choralism, but in chamber and orchestral music as well. They are making a tradition instead of merely maintaining one, and if any towns deserve both space and prominence in our columns surely these do. The most encouraging feature in the musical life of the country at present is this activity in the smaller centres, and we regard as illogical and undemocratic a news service that would give greater prominence to a performance of The Messiah in a Yorkshire town of 300,000 inhabitants than (say) to that of The Apostles given recently at Bedford, with its mere 40,000.

As to the amount of space allotted to news from Berlin and Vienna, it should be remembered that the correspondence covers practically all the principal musical events in Central Europe. It must indeed be a parochial mind that fails to realise the interest and importance of news from those quarters. The gradual revival of musical activity in Austria and Germany since the war is an intensely interesting episode in musical history, and it should be recorded in a journal such as this, not only for the benefit of readers of to-day, but even more for the purpose of a record which will certainly not diminish in value as time goes on.

We have discussed this matter at some length because there are no doubt a good many readers who have not yet realised that a system that was convenient twenty years ago is very much the reverse to-day, owing to the great developments of music in local centres. Such changes as we have made have been the result of careful consideration. The time had come when we had to decide whether the Musical Times was to be a journal overloaded with news (necessarily printed in small type, and most of it a month old) or one in which the bulk would consist of articles and reviews of varied character, and, so far as possible, of a good literary quality. In deciding to aim at the latter we are convinced that we have practically all our readers with us, and we hope soon to convert the rest. It remains only to add that we are arranging for an improved news service from certain large towns, and that the journal will be specially represented at the chief festivals, and on other occasions in the provinces when important works are being heard for the first time.

While we were writing the above there arrived by a happy coincidence an account of a concert given in a small West of England village. It so completely bears out our contention as to the most vital musical happenings not being confined to the big towns that we cannot resist the temptation to give a few details. The account is the more interesting and reliable in that it is contained in a private letter to a well-known composer who lent some band parts to the conductor. The letter frankly says where the players failed, and—but let us give the main items of the programme first: Overture to Figaro; Gavotte, Minuet, Bourrée, and Passepied from Bach's Suite in C; Pavane, Earle of Salisbury, Byrd; Suite (five movements), Purcell; a Festival Chime on 'St. Denio,' Holst; and Fantasia on English Folk-tunes, by R. T. White—the last two works being for chorus and orchestra. The choral items included Gibbons's Silver Swan, Morley's Now is the month of maying, and Early one morning, arranged by Dunhill. The orchestra consisted of four first and two second violins, two violas, two violoncellos, one bass, one flute, one clarinet, one trumpet, one horn, drums, bells, and pianoforte:

Figaro [says the letter] was too much for us, but after a wobbling start we got going . . . the fiddles in the scale-passage near the end almost brought us to confusion, but they rallied. The Grave, Allegro, and Courante of the Bach proved too hard nuts, so we thought it best not to give them publicly, as we wished to do nothing that might injure whatever reputation Bach may have got as a composer. . . . But the four dances that we ventured on! Sir, I think I may say that here we at least did no harm. . . . The Bourrée gave our basses great sport, and was very jolly; in the Passepied the wood-wind had the time of their lives, and finished quite breathless, but happy. (How did the oboe keep himself going in Bach's time? I forget whether oxygen had been invented; I don't think it had.) However, the whole band thoroughly enjoyed themselves, which I take it is somewhat to the purpose. . . . In the Pavane of Byrd I felt some anxiety as to whether the band would rise to the occasion, none of us being any too good; you know, of course, that the players belong entirely to what William Morris called the 'unhelped people.' However, as it happened, they never played better. Naturally, we cannot rise to any ecstasy over our own playing; but even so, the uplift of this music is tremendous. The spell of its gracious dignity was not lost on us. In this isolated place we never get any music save what we make ourselves, and we blessed — for bringing this piece to our notice.

The Purcell Suite suffered from the fact that the conductor had scored the movements himself—a task which he frankly admits was a bit above him. He feels strongly that a great deal of Purcell should be available in arrangements for small orchestra, and we agree.

Now this concert, given in an obscure village, is one more proof that there are few places so small and isolated that, given a lead, they cannot do music-making well worth while to themselves and to their fellows. The musical life of the country is affected far more by such enterprises as this than by concert tours by 'international celebrities.' The present-day fashionable talk of 'decentralisation of music' is generally used in the confined sense of extending the activities of our orchestras and other professional performers to the outer circles of big towns. The decentralisation that surely matters no less—perhaps even more—is that brought about by encouraging amateurs in remote country districts to get together, and (like these wood-wind players in the Bach suite) 'have the time of their lives.' After all, as the conductor of this village band says, '. . . it is somewhat to the purpose' that the players thoroughly enjoyed themselves. Bearing in mind the highly-skilled performers who manage to give us all the right notes without the slightest appearance of enjoyment, we think the 'somewhat' is too mild a term. We hope these West-country enthusiasts will go on finishing movements 'breathless but happy.'

It is a further happy coincidence that this very month we find ourselves bound to say something about our 'Chamber Music for Amateurs' column. This feature has grown to such an extent that we can now spare space for no more than one insertion of each advertisement. (We began by giving three.) The scope of the column has been extended somewhat. Our original object was to help amateur chamber music players to get in touch with one another, but the question soon arose as to whether the term 'chamber music' ought to be narrowed down to a purely instrumental significance, and we could hardly refuse to include announcements concerned with vocal quartets. (As Miss Townsend Warner says in an article on Byrd in the British Music Society's Bulletin for September, 'The madrigal and motet have as good a right to be classed as chamber music as the string quartet, and are to the full as exciting and delightful in performance.') Next came the question: If amateur chamber music players and singers, why not amateur orchestras? There seemed to be but one answer, and we made it. The original intention of the column having been so much extended, the title must be changed. In future, therefore, it will be headed 'The Amateurs' Page.' We must remind those who wish to make use of it that the department is for bona-fide amateurs. In one or two instances we have had to refuse advertisements that smacked somewhat of the professional, or at least of the quasi type. (In one instance, by the by, the column was apparently regarded by a particularly lonesome advertiser as a kind of matrimonial agency!) Finally, we are glad to know that the Musical Times has been the means of bringing so many keen music-makers together, and we need hardly say that so long as there is a demand for 'The Amateurs' Page' we shall do our best to find space for it.

Elgar's Quintet had its first performance in South Africa on August 17, at one of the series of chamber music concerts given by Mrs. Selma Whitehouse (an old Guildhall student, and pupil of Wilhelmj), and Mr. Lorenzo Danza. The press reports speak with enthusiasm of the work and its performance. Notable music has been played at these concerts—the Beethoven Trios, Trios by Rachmaninov, Tchaikovsky, Schumann, and Saint-Saëns, Quartets by Beethoven and Dvorák, Quintets by Brahms, Saint-Saëns, and Schumann, the Brahms Sextet, &c. After five years of uphill work in the face of indifference, a keen chamber music public has been got together, and the concerts actually pay their way. We congratulate the plucky and enthusiastic players, and hope that they will go on getting their deserts.

In our correspondence columns appears a letter from the hon. secretary of Barclay's Bank Musical Society, pointing out that in our report of the National Eisteddfod, the conductor of the Society's Choir was described as an 'enthusiastic Welshman,' whereas Mr. Herbert W. Pierce, the conductor aforesaid, happens to be merely an enthusiastic Englishman—even worse, a Londoner born and bred. He was educated at the City of London School, and was for some years organist at Union Chapel, Islington, a post graced also by Gauntlett, Prout, and Julius Harrison. As to his work as choirmaster, it will be remembered that at the National Eisteddfod, after what the judges described as the 'keenest competition in history, a veritable struggle of giants,' this London business-house choir was placed third in a class of thirteen entries, with only one mark separating first from second, and second from third. At the semi-national Eisteddfod held in London last November, Barclay's Bank tied with the well-known Llanwrst Male-Voice Choir for first place. We have received a prospectus of the coming season's work, and note that the Choir will be busy with madrigals, part-songs, and carols by William Byrd and Arnold Bax.

A morning paper recently dished up the chestnut about Sullivan (or somebody else) and Grove (or another) trying to find a friend's house, and being helped by one of them recalling that the friend's door-scraper was in B flat. Our friend 'The Looker-on,' of the Evening Standard, who has a keen scent for revivals of the sort, was moved to devote a column to musical stories. He considers that musical circles are particularly rich in good yarns, and suggests that 'someone ought to make a small collection of the best of them. You would never think [he adds, only too truly] from seeing musicians on the concert-platform that they were such funny fellows.' We can imagine no more desolating kind of book than a collection of jokes, so we are not enthusiastic about a collection, but we agree that the best musical stories ought to be printed in a more permanent and get-at-able form than that provided by the columns of the daily press. Obviously the musical journals should rescue them, the more so as the point of many such stories is apt to be lost on the layman. 'The Looker-on' quotes one or two from Sir Landon Ronald's recently published book of reminiscences, and then adds a few good ones on his own account. Some are too familiar to repeat here, but a couple of broken-English specimens will probably be new to most of our readers. Sir Landon Ronald tells us he was actually in the theatre when Arditì shouted his immortal crusher to a disputatious fiddler: 'Don't shpoke! If you no like, you went!'

Perhaps the following is a ben trovato development of the Arditì yarn: A foreign conductor at Covent Garden was much annoyed at the chattering of the orchestra. He stood it as long as possible, but at last broke out with, 'Don't shpoke! I can stand it then and now, but always, my God, never!'

Here is perhaps the neatest example of Bülow's wit. (In order to appreciate it one has to remember that when a German is about to address a person with whom he is not acquainted, he introduces himself by giving his name thus: 'Baumgartner,' 'Snitzelheimer,' or what not.) Coming out from a concert one night von Bülow accidentally stepped on a man's foot. The victim turned angrily to Bülow and cried 'Esel!' ('Ass!'). Whereupon the pianist raised his hat, bowed, and said 'Von Bülow.'

Finally—for we must beware of making anything like a collection; nobody should serve up more than four stories at one helping—here is a capital specimen which we imagine is new, seeing that it was told by Sousa recently, and has just appeared in the Musical Courier. It has to do with a charwoman in an English hotel:

Every morning as Sousa went down to breakfast he saw a woman continually scrubbing the floors, and it occurred to him what a horrible life she led. 'I asked my manager for a pass to one of my concerts,' said Sousa, 'and I may say that above all things he hates a man to whom he gives a pass, and there are few men he hates. But I succeeded in getting one eventually. So the following morning I said to the charwoman: "Would you care to go to a concert next Thursday afternoon?" The charlady, expressing great joy, exclaimed: "Is that your only day off."'

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION

So far as can be ascertained, the only mention of music during the meetings of the British Association last month at Hull was at a joint gathering of the Anthropologists and Psychologists, when Dr. Charles Myers, President of the Psychological Section, in discussing the permanence of mental characteristics among nations, mentioned the strange fact of England's loss of her position as the first musical nation in the world in the 17th century. He is presumably aware of the fact that this was largely due to political and religious reasons and to Cromwell, but he certainly did not say so, and he represented it as merely an interesting psychological problem, because of the rarity of such changes. Within limits this is, of course, true, because powerful as the external causes of the change were, it would not have been so markedly complete had there not been some subtle change in the national appreciation of music at that time, and it is not impossible that some reasons—neither political nor musical—may account for the fact that it took nearly three hundred years before England could again boast of a national school of music. This certainly is a subject worth consideration and investigation.

In the course of the same discussion we heard another interesting thing, which is perhaps worth mentioning although it has nothing whatever to do with music. A speaker quoted a report on the characteristics of the English, by some Venetian observers in Tudor times, who said that the British working man was distinguished by his love of sport and fair play, exceedingly hospitable and generous; but when he saw a starving man he would not offer him food or money, but would say, 'Come along and have a drink.'

It has frequently been remarked that the difference between English functions of the kind afforded by the British Association and similar events in any foreign city, is that on any such occasion abroad there are always at least one or two orchestral concerts and several operatic or theatrical performances thrown in. In the course of the Hull meetings the only thing of the sort was that the management of one of the theatres invited certain members of the Association to performances of a musical comedy. On the other hand, the D'Oyly Carte Company was at Hull during the week, and people were turned away nightly—but among the audiences were large numbers of bearded and bespectacled gentlemen with dome-like foreheads, and wearing the Association badge.

The venue of the Association next year is Liverpool—which has famous musical institutions—and as it is the Association's watchword now to bring the scheme of its discussions into close touch with the daily life of the city in which it meets, would it be too much to suggest the possibility of arranging for a concert of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, or one or two organ recitals in St. George's Hall—both of which have done so much to make history in the North? The financial difficulties of an orchestral concert should not be impossible to overcome.

A. K.

GLASTONBURY FESTIVAL:

RUTLAND BOUGHTON'S ALKESTIS

Mr. Boughton spells the title of his new music-drama Alkestis, and Prof. Murray, whose translation of Euripides' drama is the basis of the work, does likewise. But as in the course of the Glastonbury performance last month the hard sound was used, it is pardonable to spell it phonetically; incidentally, it is truer to the original.

If appearances go for anything, Mr. Boughton has scored a popular success, for his audiences have been large and enthusiastic. He has written music which 'gets through,' as the saying is. Apparently the sacrifice of Alkestis for her husband has stirred his feeling. The music of the first Act, from the entrance of the handmaid to the chorus 'Daughter of Pelias, fare thee well,' which concludes it, is one long intensification of every harrowing element in the dying farewell of Alkestis. It is impossible to listen to it without being affected deeply, and it is in the main simple and direct in treatment. The composer has not a great many cards to play, perhaps; possibly, on the other hand, he has deliberately restricted himself in the matter of harmonic resource. Melodically, however, his simplicity in this work brings him dangerously near tameness, and when he wishes to press home the feeling of a situation the effect on a sensitive listener is that of having his withers wrung, an effect nearer to melodrama than to tragedy, or the epic type of utterance by right belonging to music-drama. Sometimes, indeed, he presses us completely over the line, as when the little son of Admetus and Alkestis breaks in with 'Oh, what has happened? Mummy has gone away.' And when Alkestis enjoins the prospective widower to bring no stepmother into the home, for 'Better a serpent than a stepmother,' it is to music that enhances the atmosphere of the Surrey or the Adelphi already inherent in the situation.

The second Act, dealing with the recovery of Alkestis by Herakles from the clutches of Thanatos, the messenger of death, is stronger, not because it brings about a happy ending, for in doing that it shames us for the tears drawn from us during the first Act, but because it is free from the taint of sentimentality which is the weakness of its predecessor. There is a noble vein of sadness, with an incidental suggestion of Chopin, in the scene of the return from the funeral, and Mr. Boughton has written music for the drunken scene of Herakles which admits of a wide variety of interpretation. The first of these, in fact, is the only scene in the work in which we feel beyond doubt that the composer's imagination, as distinct from his feeling, has been captured. In this Act, too, his choral writing, which throughout is the strongest feature of the work, is at its very best. There is great charm in his handling of 'Oh, a house that loves a stranger,' with its dancing rhythm in the first three verses and a tune carried by soprano, contralto, and tenor in turn, and its gradual relapse into sadness in the fourth verse as a preparation for the appearance of the funeral procession. And when, in the later chorus beginning 'I have sojourned in the muses' land' there comes a kind of summing up of the composer's emotion on the theme of woman's sacrifice for man, we feel him to be stronger in his reflection on the theme than in his dramatic treatment of it.

Much may be said regarding the place of the chorus in a music-drama of this type—whether, for instance, unison treatment would not possibly be better in effect than part-writing, giving us the poet's words more articulately, or whether the orchestra unassisted might not express the poetic feeling of the choruses in Greek drama better than any setting of their words—but there can be no denying the skill and power with which Mr. Boughton has handled his problem along the lines of the solution of his choice. His treatment of the choral entrances, and of the phrases for single voices that often precede the entrance of the mass, is very happy. Much care for beauty of effect, also, was shown in his disposition of them on the stage, for Mr. Boughton, though he had splendid help from Miss Christina Walshe, was very much his own producer. There was, however, an element of sophistication as opposed to naturalness in some of the gestures employed. Circumstances compel the use of the auditorium at Glastonbury for the passage of the performers to the stage at certain points. The tiny Assembly Hall was built for other purposes than stage performances; but circumstances were no enemy to beauty of effect in the case of Alkestis, the passing and the return of the funeral procession through the hall contributing to an intimacy of feeling impossible on the proscenium stage. Of the work as a whole, one's impression is of an interesting experiment bravely and sympathetically carried through. In seizing on the feeling of the Alkestis story to the exclusion of the atmosphere of Hellenic drama, Mr. Boughton has certainly brought the story down to date. But there is a sense of anomaly when staging approximating to Hellenic lines and costuming and grouping on Greek models find no reflection in the music, for classic breadth and dignity of treatment are overborne by a small and rather finicking handling of the emotion of the drama. Its feeling is carried along on a choppy sea rather than on a great overbearing current. Indeed, it is difficult to understand why Alkestis was chosen for the experiment, for there are many greater things in Greek drama, while in adhering so faithfully to Gilbert Murray's text Mr. Boughton has handicapped himself with a libretto which, poetic in expression as it undoubtedly is, suffers from a form which comports itself ill with the requirements of musical structure.

In Miss Astra Desmond Mr. Boughton had an Alkestis of queenly bearing who also sang his music without stint of emotional expressiveness. Admetus seemed to present a few problems for its interpreter which Mr. Steuart Wilson did not solve in a really convincing way, but in a difficult part he did very well in the main. As Herakles Mr. Clive Carey was vocally equal to the requirements of the music, and managed with skill the transition of mood in the scene with the cupbearer, Miss Greta Don. Though Apollo has little to do, Mr. Arthur Jordan did that little splendidly, and was an imposing figure. Miss Kathleen Davis as the handmaid, Mr. Frederick Woodhouse as Thanatos, and Mr. Joseph Eastman as Pheres were capable representatives of their parts, while in the important rôle of chorus-leader Mr. Arthur Clark did excellently. As always here, fine choral singing was a feature of the production, for the singers are enthusiasts.

Other performances of the Festival included a concert in which Miss Desmond sang most finely the complete cycle of Bantock's Sappho songs, with the composer at the pianoforte. For the Prelude Miss Penelope Spencer, principal dancer of the National Opera, arranged a dance which, given against a backcloth by Miss Christina Walshe, was at least exotic in feeling and graceful in its details. At the same concert Mr. Jordan sang Julius Harrison's Four Songs of Chivalry, the composer accompanying. A production of Blow's Masque, Venus and Adonis, had too great a proportion of immaturity of voice and style in its singing to justify its inclusion in a Festival making a wide appeal. Mr. Carey's Adonis, however, was an exception amid the prevailing amateurishness, and Mr. Harrison kept a firm rein on the music, while the chorus work was particularly good. A production of the drama of the Trachine by Sophocles was notable for the treatment of the choruses. Sung in unison, with only an occasional break into octaves, to melodies of a plain-song type adapted by Mr. Boughton from folk-tunes, they supplied an eloquent argument in favour of the unisonal method as against a harmonized treatment.

A. J. SHELDON.

We are glad to be able to announce that Gustav Holst's opera, The Perfect Fool, will be published by Messrs. Novello.

Church and Organ Music

REMAINS OF A FAMOUS OLD ORGAN

BY C. F. ABDY WILLIAMS

All strangers who go to Rome are bound at some time during their stay to visit the great basilica of St. John Lateran. And I doubt if many, whether musical or not, can fail to notice the remarkable organ which, at some sixty feet above the pavement, stretches its enormous length without a break across the Church above the south door.

I had long been fascinated with this organ, and knew that it was said to be unplayable. It was built in 1599 by Luca Blasi of Perugia, and was therefore in existence when Frescobaldi was organist of St. Peter's. As I found the choir of St. Peter's sometimes sang at the Lateran, I saw no reason why Frescobaldi of St. Peter's should not have occasionally played on this large instrument.

There are four other organs in the basilica, but there was nothing special about them to attract me; the great Frescobaldi-period instrument was the one I wished to examine. At last an opportunity came. Monsignor Stonor, Dean of the Church, invited me to attend a mass, and introduced me to Filippo Capocci, the famous organist there. Capocci asked me to call on him, which I did, and found him most charming. Moreover, he had been in England, and had played organs there, and we found several acquaintances in common.

He was interested in my keenness about the old organ, and readily made an appointment to meet me at the Lateran. This was in 1907; whether the instrument still stands I cannot say.

The approach to the organ was by a narrow staircase in the thickness of the wall of the great south door. Carrying candles, we had to climb its steep corkscrew steps, for, it seemed, an immense way up, but we eventually emerged in the gallery on which the organ stands. Here an amazing sight met us. Everything was in ruins. The front, which looks so imposing from below, was the only part remaining more or less intact; but even here the great centre pipe, a metal F of 26-ft. (as well as some others) was sunk with its own weight into its foot. This damage cannot be seen from below. The two keyboards seemed to have parted company. Their keys would certainly press down and return, but slowly and heavily as if they resented being woke from their long sleep. Their compass was F to F, five octaves, a large compass for the 16th century. That of the pedals was from F, twenty-one notes. The lowest two sharps were omitted, as was then frequently the case, to save space and expense. On the manuals the naturals were black, the sharps white, a fashion not unknown in Father Smith's English organs.

The coupling arrangement was curious. The upper keyboard overhung the lower, and carried square hooks, intended to engage with corresponding eyes in the top of the lower keys. To couple, the player must have either pulled the upper clavier bodily forward about an inch, or pushed in the lower to the same extent. I had, by the way, seen this system, or something like it, actually in use in Spain. How the Lateran organ worked its couplers we were unable to discover.

The action was tracker. There was a roller board, but evidently this was a late addition, for it looked much newer than the rest. Capocci told me that in the last century (the 19th) Walcker, of Ludwigsburg, had 'restored and ruined' the organ, and that since then a Frate had been at work on it and had done a lot of mischief. At his house he afterwards showed and lent me a manuscript opinion drawn up by his father, Gaetano, in 1859, the then organist. I copied the document, and have it before me now. The writer says that many attempts had been made to restore the organ. The chief thing desired was to preserve the Prospect, 'which is perhaps one of the grandest in Italy.' But these ancient pipes gave only a feeble tone, not in keeping with modern requirements. There being no Italian builders competent to deal with such enormous pipes, it had been suggested that Walcker, of Ludwigsburg, should be called in. But Gaetano thought that this course would be simply 'throwing money to the winds.'

Apparently the Dean and Chapter did not listen to their organist's advice; Walcker was called in, and could do nothing to improve matters.

The pedals also were most curious. Set at an angle of forty-five degrees (like the blowing pedals of a harmonium), they were very short and could only be played with the toe. They were permanently coupled to the lower manual by wires, which were in no way concealed. So far as I could see, the seven or eight lowest pedals had their own pipes in addition to the coupling; the rest seemed to depend entirely on the manual.

There were eighteen stops on the left side and twelve on the right. The left-hand stops were levers shifting from right to left, as in many North Italian organs I have seen. When in action they were latched. By a slight touch on the part of the organist a spring brought them to the 'off' position. Most had names printed on the case above them. On the right-hand were round draw-stops, with names on their knobs, as in the modern organ. It looked as if the restorers had got tired of the job, and had left off after modernising these stops. The uppermost on each side was labelled 'Principale' (Open diapason). No dimensions were given. On the left they proceeded downwards by quinta, ottava, 15th, 22nd, 26th, with a flauto and ottavino. Two were unnamed. On the right, in addition to the flue-stops, a repetition of those on the left, there were a cornetto and another whose name I could not read. On both sides were remarkable accessories, some of which pulled out, others being levers. Two were labelled 'Rinforza di Principale.' The use of the others we could not ascertain. After examining the front we went behind into the bellows chamber, which consisted of a large and substantial shed built out of doors on the roof of the Loggia. Everything in the basilica being on a gigantic scale, there was plenty of room on this roof. The shed contained six bellows, which were merely feeders, three on each side of a spacious gangway. There was no wind reservoir, and pressure was obtained by heaps of broken statues piled up on the ends of the feeders. These were raised by long levers, and the blowers must have timed themselves carefully, for it is evident that if all six feeders happened to be raised simultaneously, the organ would suddenly cease to sound.* The bellows, like everything else, were on a gigantic scale, and on each side of the gangway was a substantial handrail to prevent the blowers from accidentally adding their weight to that of the broken statues. The levers, projecting over the handrails, were easily manipulated.

Returning from the bellows chamber, we got inside the organ. If we were astonished at the ruin in front, it was nothing to the complete chaos within. I thought at once of the smash up in a railway collision. We lifted out two of the few small pipes that had escaped the general ruin, and blew into them. They gave a pleasant, soft, fluty tone. We took out a big reed pipe. It was of wood, conical and mitred, and about 6-ft. long. It fitted into the heaviest leaden boot I ever saw. The reed was very thin, and of great breadth compared to its length. It had not escaped damage, for its edge was bent and it would not sound. Capocci told me that in 1863, in his father's time, the organ was just playable, but that by 1873 it was entirely done for. It would never sound again as it stood.

I thanked Capocci for the interesting afternoon he had given me, and we parted hoping to meet again; but I left Rome a few days later, and never saw him afterwards.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

Candidates for the Associateship Examination are requested to note that the reference to the Peters edition of the Trio in C minor (Bach), given in the regulations as Vol. 9, No. 7, relates to the old edition, and that in the new edition it is Vol. 9, No. 9.

A report of the Congress of the National Union of Organists' Associations appears on p. 727.

CHRIST CHURCH, GREYFRIARS (NEWGATE STREET)

REOPENING OF THE ORGAN

The organ at Christ Church is to be reopened on Tuesday, October 10, at 12.15, by the Lord Mayor, when a recital will be given by Dr. Stanley Marchant, sub-organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, formerly organist of Christ Church. The history of the organ is worth recording briefly. The original instrument was built in 1690 by Renatus Harris. Numerous additions and improvements were made by various 18th century builders, and fairly extensive alterations took place in 1827, when Samuel Wesley played at the reopening. A letter from him, stating his satisfaction with the work, is still in existence. Eight years later the compass was extended to CC. The organ was in this state when Mendelssohn played on it in 1837 and 1842. In 1867 considerable enlargements and alterations were again made, the most important being the adoption of equal temperament. Barker lever pneumatic action was applied to the Great organ, and about 1900 electric blowing was installed. The whole organ has been recently rebuilt by Mr. F. Tunks, of Clapham. Tubular pneumatic action has been applied throughout, twenty-one pistons have been added, and eight new stops added or substituted. The old and beautiful tonal characteristics of the instrument have not been disturbed in any way—indeed, they have been enhanced.

The specification now stands as follows:

GREAT ORGAN (14 stops)

FT.		FT.
1. Double Diapason	... 16	8. Harmonic Flute	... 4
2. Open Diapason, No. 1	8	9. Twelfth	... 3
3. Open Diapason, No. 2	5	10. Fifteenth	... 2
4. Open Diapason, No. 3*	8	11. Mixture	... 5 ranks
5. Stopped Diapason	... 8	12. Double Trumpet	... 16
6. Clarabella	... 8	13. Posaune	... 8
7. Principal	... 4	14. Octave Posaune	... 4

* The old Pedal twelfth has been incorporated in this stop.

CHOIR ORGAN (10 stops)

FT.		FT.
1. Open Diapason	... 8	6. Principal	... 4
2. Stopped Diapason	... 8	7. Lieblich Flute	... 4
3. Dulciana	... 8	8. Flute	... 2
4. Under Maris	... 8	9. Clarinet	... 8
5. Gamba	... 5	10. Orchestral Oboe	... 8

(The whole enclosed in a Swell box.)

* This difficulty was common to regals and early positives.

SWELL ORGAN (11 stops)

	FT.		FT.
1. Double Dulciana ...	16	7. Mixture ...	8
2. Open Diapason ...	8	8. Oboe ...	8
3. Stopped Diapason ...	8	9. Clarion ...	4
4. Gamba ...	8	10. Trumpet ...	8
5. Celeste ...	8	11. Contra Fagotto ...	16
6. Gemshorn ...	4

PEDAL ORGAN (10 stops)

	FT.		FT.
1. Bass Bourdon ...	32	6. Open Diapason (wood) ...	8
2. Open Wood ...	16	7. Bass Flute ...	8
3. Montre ...	16	8. Fifteenth ...	4
4. Bourdon ...	16	9. Trombone ...	16
5. Principal ...	8	10. Octave Trombone ...	8

ACCESSORIES

Six Combination Pedals (operating on Great and Pedal).

Great to Pedal (on and off):

(a) By Pedal

(b) By Piston under Swell manual.

Swell to Choir (on and off) by Piston under Choir manual.

Six Pistons operating Swell stops.

Seven Pistons operating Great stops.

Six Pistons operating Choir stops.

Tremulant to Swell Organ.

Balance crescendo pedals to Swell and Choir.

On the day of the reopening a second recital will be given at 6 o'clock. On the three days following (October 11, 12, and 13) recitals will be given at 1.15 and 6 o'clock, and on October 14 a recital at 3 o'clock.

The following are the recitalists: Dr. Charles Macpherson, Dr. Stanley Marchant, Mr. E. S. Roper, Mr. F. G. Shuttleworth, Mr. D. E. Hopkins (organist at Christ Church), Mr. H. J. Timothy, Mr. S. H. Lovett, and Mr. Leslie Regan (former organists at Christ Church).

No tickets will be required for the reopening or for any of the subsequent recitals.

As we go to press we hear with great regret that James J. Walker, the builder of so many fine organs, died at Felixstowe on September 19, aged seventy-six. An obituary and portrait will appear in our next issue.

DR. HAROLD DARKE'S BACH RECITALS

Dr. Harold Darke will give a series of six Bach recitals at St. Michael's, Cornhill, weekly, on Thursdays at six o'clock, from October 5 to November 9. Each programme will include a group of Chorale Preludes, as well as one or more of the most popular of the Preludes, Toccatas, and Fugues. We are very glad to see that the six Trio Sonatas are to be played in their order, one per week. This should help toward a more general realisation of the possibilities of these delightful works for recital purposes, though perhaps the inclusion of an entire sonata is not advisable save in cases such as this, where the audience is of a special type. At ordinary recitals it will often be wiser to play one movement only. We hope Dr. Darke's fine scheme will be as successful as that of last year, when the church was packed throughout the series.

'BLIND ORGANISTS' SUCCESS'

Mr. Guy M. Campbell, Principal of the Royal Normal College for the Blind, writes pointing out that in our paragraph in last month's issue, under the above title, nothing was said as to the institution to which the blind students successful at the R.C.O. examinations owed their training—the Royal Normal College. He further informs us that the Associates and Fellows of the Royal College of Organists trained at the Royal Normal College number fifty-eight and twenty-four respectively—more than double the total prepared by any other institution of the kind in the Empire. We are glad to place the credit in the right quarter. The paragraph which drew this letter from Mr. Campbell came from a reliable source, and was inserted in all good faith.

THE WAR-LORD USEFUL, AFTER ALL

We hear from the Federation of British Music Industries that the Town Council of Neuhaudensleben has decided to pull down the local statue of the ex-Kaiser, and to use the metal in replacing the pipes of the Parish Church organ, which were converted into munitions during the war. So keen an amateur musician as Wilhelm will doubtless see the fittingness of this conversion.

A recital of organ and vocal music was given at Cromer Parish Church, on August 10, by Mr. A. E. L. Burr and the treble choristers of Jesus College, Cambridge. The boys' solos included Tchaikovsky's Legend, Mendelssohn's O for the wings of a dove, Martin Shaw's Mine eyes have seen the glory, &c. Mr. Burr played pieces by Stanford, Vaughan Williams, Vierne, Byrd, Purcell, Chambonnières, Handel, and Bach. We understand there was a record attendance—about seventeen hundred—and, even more important, a record collection for the organ fund.

A unique organ recital will be given at Chelsea Congregational Church, Markham Square, on October 3, at 7.30. The occasion is the opening of the organ after restoration, and a programme of eight items will be played by seven former organists of the Church (Mrs. Mary Layton, Mr. Wesley Hammet, Mr. Emmanuel Barson, Miss Margaret Layton, Mr. Alfred Stock, Mr. Alfred King, and Mr. Ernest Alden) and the present holder of the post, Miss Marjorie Renton.

Mr. Bertram Hollins announces his fifth series of recitals at Beckenham Congregational Church, to take place monthly from September 27 to May 2. Two recitals will be devoted to Bach, and the series will close with a plébiscite programme. The October recital is on the 24th.

Mr. Arthur Meale has resumed his Wednesday mid-day (1.5) recitals at the Central Hall, Westminster—his eleventh series. Mr. Meale plays also at the Central Hall Saturday evening popular concerts, which opened their season on September 23.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Arthur R. Saunders, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Prelude in D minor, Mendelssohn; Allegretto (from Sonata), Elgar; Pæan, Harwood; Lied and Carillon, Vierne; Scherzo, Baird.

Mr. Joseph Soar, St. David's Cathedral—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Scherzo (fifth Symphony), Widor; Fugue, Reubke; 'Dithyramb', Harwood.

Mr. H. J. Timothy, St. Vedast Foster—Allegretto and Finale (Sonata No. 4), Mendelssohn; Postlude in D, Smart; 'O ruddier than the cherry'; Barcarolle, Bennett.

Mr. S. M. Popplestone, All Saints, Weston-super-Mare—Toccatina in F, Bach; 'Schiller' March, Meyerbeer.

Mr. William H. Speer, Christ Church, St. Leonards—Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Pastorale, from an Organ Sonata, Speer; March from 'St. Elizabeth', Liszt.

Mr. Arthur E. Davies, St. James's, Clacton-on-Sea—Sonata No. 9, Merkel; Allegretto, Wolstenholme; Minuet from 'Samson.'

Miss Emmie Bowman, Barkway Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Overture 'Euryanthe'; Variations de Concert, Bonnet; Capriccio, Faulkes.

Mr. S. de B. Taylor, Temple of Humanity, Liverpool—Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger; March for a Church Festival, Best; Andantino, Franck; Overture, 'Faust', Gounod.

Mr. W. A. Roberts, St. Margaret's, Anfield—Prelude, Dupuis; Fugue, Arne; first three movements of Symphony No. 3, Vierne; Legend, Grace; Theme varied, Faulkes; Finale to Suite, Lyon; Choral No. 2, Franck.

Mr. F. J. Livesey, St. Bees Priory Church—Grande Pièce Symphonique, Andantino, and Choral No. 2, Franck; Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. Ernest H. Smith, St. Margaret's, Anfield—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Berceuse et Hymne Seraphique, Ernest H. Smith; Toccata, Callaerts; Offertoire in G, Faulkes.

Mr. H. C. Warriolow, National Institute for the Blind—Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Franck; Minuet and Trio, Wolstenholme; Villanelle, Ireland; Finale in B flat, Guilmant; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. J. H. Lilley, Wells Parish Church, Norfolk—'The Storm,' Lemmens; Prelude on 'Bowe Bells,' J. F. Bridge; Violin solos by Viscount Coke: Air on the G string; Arioso, Handel; Londonderry Air, arr. by Tertis.

APPOINTMENT

Dr. F. H. Wood, of Blackpool Parish Church, to be conductor, Preston Choral Society.

The Amateurs' Page

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Amateur instrumentalists, strings and wind, required for the West London Co-Operative Orchestra. Rehearsals resumed September 2.—Apply to Hon. Sec., Mr. C. J. MATHIE, 32, Micklethwaite Road, Fulham, S.W.6.

Conway Orchestra, Walthamstow. Male instrumentalists are invited to become members of the above orchestra. Wood-wind players particularly are desired.—Information may be obtained from the Secretary, J. E. PARISH, 14, Copeland Road, Walthamstow, E.17.

Pianist wishes to meet good vocalist or violinist to practise accompanying. Lady or gentleman. Birmingham neighbourhood.—A. V. K., c/o Musical Times.

North London Philharmonic Society. Vacancies for all voices and good instrumentalists. Rehearsals in Spensley Hall (opposite Fire Station), Brooke Road, Stoke Newington. Orchestra, Monday evenings, Choir, Tuesday evenings.—Secretary, Mr. J. H. CHISHAM, 30, Broke Road, Dalston, E.8.

Two ladies, a pianist and a 'cellist, would be glad to meet a good violinist to join them in trio practice.—Write, Miss R. J. RITZ, L.R.A.M., 266, Elgin Avenue, W.9.

Gentleman vocalist desires to meet pianist-accompanist for mutual practice.—C. B., 34, Rockbourne Road, S.E.23.

Amateur instrumentalists, strings and wind, required for Andrew Brotherhood orchestra. Rehearsals resumed September 5. Apply to Hon. Sec., Mr. R. HEATH, 138, Merton Road, Wimbledon, S.W.19.

Vacancies for string, wood, and brass players, in good orchestra; small subscription. Practice rooms near Oxford Circus. Write, CONDUCTOR, 15, Eleanor Road, London, E.15.

Pianist (male) desires to meet male 'cellist for mutual practice of classical and modern music. Must be good player and enthusiastic. Sunderland. Write, A. W. W., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist-flautist-pianist wishes to meet amateur 'cellist, fairly good sight-reader, for mutual practice. Birmingham district.—C. T., c/o Musical Times.

Lady viola player seeks practice in orchestral and chamber music. Streatham or neighbourhood preferred.—'OMEGA,' c/o Musical Times.

Young violinist (gentleman) wishes to join amateur orchestra in N.W. London or City. Dance music, or other. ERNEST E. MACER, 43, Milman Road, Brondesbury Park, N.W.6.

There are vacancies in the North London Orchestral Society (established, 1889) for string and wind players (low pitch). Rehearsals, Monday evenings at St. John's Church Hall, Gloucester Road, Finsbury Park. New season starts October 9.—Mrs. SEDGFIELD, 54, Bethune Road, N.16.

'Cellist and wife (violin or viola) wish to meet first-class amateur violinist experienced in chamber music, to lead quartet; also good second for weekly practice of classical quartets, at Wimbledon.—J. E. T. M., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (experienced) would like to meet other instrumentalists for practice of quartets or trios.—G. S. M., 89, Park Road, Chiswick, W.4.

Amateur organist wishes to meet 'cellist for mutual practice, also to take part in Sunday performances of good chamber music, with violin and organ.—Mr. S. DE B. TAYLOR, 142, Upper Parliament Street, Liverpool.

Vacancies for oboist, bassoonist, violist, and 'cellist in orchestra rehearsing for production of Cherubini's Requiem Mass in C minor, at Islington.—Apply, W. F. S., 58, Berwick Street, W.1.

Young lady pianist and vocalist (soprano) wishes to practise with accompanist. Would also like to hear of 'cellist and violinist with a view to playing classical trios. Beckenham or South London preferred.—J. V., c/o Musical Times.

The P.S.A. Orchestra, Brockley Wesleyan Church, Brockley Road, S.E.4, commenced its second year in September and will welcome amateur instrumentalists, especially viola, 'cello, and wood-wind. Rehearsals Wednesday evenings in Church Hall, 8 to 9.45 p.m.—A. R. TITMAN, 1, Leathwell Road, Lewisham, S.E.8.

Capable violinist (gentleman) would be glad to meet others for regular quartet practice. London or halfway.—J. F., 'Rosemary,' The Grove, Woking.

Two violinists and 'cellist would like to meet viola player for mutual quartet practice. Hampstead district.—E. L. S., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishing to take a more general interest in music would like to meet vocalist or violinist to practise accompanying one or two evenings a week.—Mr. E. JOHNSON, 4, Moorgate, E.C.2.

South London Philharmonic Society has vacancies in the orchestral section for a few good violins, violas, flutes, bassoons, and all brass instruments. Works to be performed, Faust, Gounod, Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast, The Wake of O'Connor, Bath, Parsifal, Overture Egmont, a Brandenburg Concerto, and a pianoforte concerto, &c. Rehearsals on Mondays at 8, at New Cross. Conductor, William H. Kerridge.—Hon. Orchestral Secretary, E. A. WHITE, 15, Ashurst Street, Battersea, S.W.11. Vacancies in choir for men's voices only—apply J. W. WATERER, 19, Adelaide Road, Brockley, S.E.4.

Lady pianist wishes to meet either vocalist or violinist for practice, or would join amateur orchestra. Within easy distance of Forest Gate.—F. V. D., c/o Musical Times.

Advertisers would like to meet good violinist of either sex to complete string quartet. North London district.—CROUCH, c/o Musical Times.

Young vocalist desires to meet contralto or tenor for mutual practice (duets, &c.)—C. B., 34, Rockbourne Road, S.E.23.

Cornet soloist, with good orchestral experience, wishes to get into touch with good amateur symphony orchestra.—R. LATIMER, 5, Ockenden Road, Southgate Road, Islington, N.1.

Viola player desires to meet accompanist for mutual practice, or would join orchestra. Ewell district.—A. D., 'Ranmore,' Ewell, Surrey.

Violist wishes to join quartet, orchestra, &c., in S.W. district. Evenings or Sunday.—Address, S. S., 6, Hauberk Road, Clapham Junction, S.W.11.

Orchestras. Violinist, sound player and musician, will give services as leader on Sundays in return for opportunity for conducting experience. Western London.—H. ELLIOTT, 3, Doneraile Street, S.W.6.

String quartet playing wanted by an experienced amateur violinist, as leader. Eastbourne.—FURNESS PETERS, 5, Spencer Road, Eastbourne.

Wanted for amateur orchestra, efficient players of 'cello (2), viola (2), and 2nd flute. Mission Hall, Surrey Square, Old Kent Road, S.E.17. Wednesday, at 7.50.—F. W., at above address.

Good violinist invited to join two ladies in trio practice.—Mrs. MATHEWS, 3, Ladbroke Court, W.11.

Violinist would like to meet young lady pianist (experienced) and good accompanist one evening a week for mutual practice.—F. W., c/o Musical Times.

Lady vocalist wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. Birmingham district.—L. G. C., c/o Musical Times.

Required immediately, amateur instrumentalists for select college orchestra in City. Commence October.—Apply, in writing, to G. ABBÉ, 59, Sloane Street, S.W.1.

Letters to the Editor

'AN EARLY GREEK HYMN'

SIR,—I am most grateful to your correspondent Mr. E. A. White. Living, as I am compelled to, in a backwater, I often fail to hear of 'things that matter.'

The 'symbols not mentioned in Grove' are the well-known time-signs given by Bellermann's Anonymus, published, with notes, in 1841. Its exact date is unknown, but it is supposed to be within the first three centuries A.D. The symbols are as follows:

The unit of time is the shortest note used in a given composition. It has no sign: a note without a time-sign is understood to be the 'primary time' (chronos protos). In translations from ancient to modern notation its value is the quaver.

The two-time note, our crotchet, has over it the sign —

The three-time note, our dotted crotchet, has over it  but in the Tralles hymn this is reversed, thus,

The four-time, our minim, has the sign

The five-time, minim tied to quaver, has

The 'empty-time,' our rest, if of quaver value, has the sign A To this is added above it the appropriate sign if the rest is of more than quaver value.

The stigma is a dot placed over the note to indicate the ictus or accent.

The hyphen  joining two notes, is equivalent to our slur (see Bellermann's Anonymus, page 21, &c.).

On collating the translation of the new Greek hymn with the original I was startled to find the anapests translated  instead of  The notes bearing the stigma had been placed in arsis. Had I been wrong all these years? Was Monro wrong in his edition of the Tralles hymn? Are all the musicians wrong? And the resulting feminine ending on 'Amen'? Does the stigma indicate a weak syllable?

Now Bellermann's Anonymus distinctly states that the thesis is 'astikton,' i.e., 'without stigma,' and the arsis is 'estigmenon,' 'bearing the stigma.' Bellermann equally distinctly proves in his notes that the balance of ancient authority is against this assertion. He also remarks on the confusion into which the ancient grammarians fell in the matter of arsis and thesis. I thought it had for many decades been understood, by practical musicians at least, that the thesis is the down beat, the arsis the up beat: that in spite of Anonymus the stigma always indicates the down beat.

In this translation the notes bearing the stigma are placed on the up beat, in accordance with Anonymus, whom Bellermann shows to be mistaken.

Now, Sir, I venture to make a suggestion as to how this remarkable confusion arose amongst ancient grammarians, who perhaps were not 'musical.' To put it as shortly as possible, we are told that rhythm consists of arsis and thesis. Arsis is the 'elevatio,' or 'levatio' (raising) of the hand in conducting, the foot in dancing. Thesis is the 'positio' (putting down) of the hand or foot 'with sound.' (It is known that the ancients beat their time audibly.) To the musician this can only mean that arsis is the up beat, thesis the down beat. Some of the grammarians, knowing that arsis meant a 'raising,' thesis a 'falling,' applied these terms to poetry: looking upon the accented syllable as a 'raising' of the voice they called it arsis, and the weak syllable, a 'lowering' of the voice, they called thesis. They ignored the fact that thesis was accompanied by 'sound.' The confusion arose during a period of decadence, when the Greek and Latin languages were losing their 'quantity,' and poetry was beginning to take 'accent' as its rhythmic unit.

For my own satisfaction I have written out the new hymn and shifted the bar-lines so as to make them agree with the stigma in the papyrus, as is done by Bellermann in his explanation of the mistake of his Anonymus, and in some short rhythmic exercises given by Anonymus himself.

Again thanking Mr. White and the Musical Times.

—Yours, &c.,

C. F. ABDY WILLIAMS.

South Mead,

Milford, Lymington.

'THE RAFF CENTENARY'

SIR,—In the course of this correspondence it has been suggested that some of Raff's compositions might still be acceptable, despite changes of taste. May I call attention to the fact that the London County Council's Orchestra (which used to play twice weekly at the Victoria Embankment Gardens in the years immediately preceding the war) included the Forest and Lenore Symphonies in its repertory, and played them as frequently as the Symphonies of Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, &c.?

Familiarity with these works convinced several of us that the neglect of Raff was as unfortunate as inexplicable—that the Lenore Symphony (the music of which is of an almost unearthly beauty) did not suffer by comparison with the finest German masterpieces; and that the Forest, though not so undeniably great and original, lost nothing of its fresh and varied charm by repeated hearing. Both these compositions were always enthusiastically received by the audience and never failed to impress, and I remember one occasion when the Andante from the Forest was spontaneously encored, the only time I have ever known such an honour accorded to symphonic music.

These were not the only works of Raff which figured on the programmes. I was fortunate enough on one occasion to hear his beautiful Spring Symphony, and I believe others were occasionally played. From this it appears that Raff's music has stood the test of time; and if any of our conductors had the necessary courage and determination the more representative of his works might be not only successfully revived, but would even find their rightful place in the permanent repertory.

In conclusion might I add two suggestions? One is that if the 'Prom.' programmes were as well arranged as those of the L.C.C. Orchestra a symphony would be played every night, instead of twice a week. This would mean the sacrifice of a few worthless trifles and scrap operatic selections; but it would also allow for the revival not only of Raff, but of other great neglected symphonists—e.g., Schumann and Goetz.

My other suggestion is that a centenary celebration might give the necessary impetus to a Raff revival. It is the composers who have fallen into undeserved neglect whose centenaries should for that very reason be observed, though they seldom are. But what is the use of holding special celebrations for composers like Handel, Beethoven, Verdi, or Wagner, whose music is always with us?

It may interest some of your readers to know that a small choral and orchestral society in North London hopes in the near future to revive Raff's oratorio The End of the World.—Yours, &c.,

B. VINCY.

Highbury.

August, 1922.

'NURSERIES OF ENGLISH SONG'

SIR,—Apropos of the interesting article on 'The Nurseries of English Song' in your September issue, may I make a remark on Mr. Kidson's reference to John Cunningham, whom he describes as 'poor enough to justify his existence as a poet even if his verses did not.' The fact is that John Cunningham was an Irishman of great poetic and dramatic ability; and, as is well known, several complete editions of his poems have been published (as I write I have before me a charming edition published by Whittingham in 1805). Cunningham was the son of a Dublin wine-merchant, and at the age of seventeen wrote a successful play, Love in a Mist, produced at Capel Street Theatre, Dublin, on May 22, 1747. Many of his songs were enormously popular, e.g., Kitty Fell, Kate of Aberdeen, Fanny of the Dale, A Man to my Mind, The Miller, In Holiday Gown, &c. Cunningham died at Newcastle-on-Tyne on September 18, 1773, aged forty-three. It is only just to add that, through the zealous efforts of Mr. John Robinson, the monument erected at Newcastle-on-Tyne to the memory of Cunningham, and which had become ruinous, was restored in 1887, and unveiled by Dr. Thomas Hodgkin.—Yours, &c.,

W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD.

'Rosemont,' Enniscorthy.

September 1, 1922.

A WORD ON THE ORGANIST

SIR,—I have been reading with great interest the series of articles which have recently appeared in the Musical Times on 'British Singers and Players,' and have wondered, as I read each one, whether any member of the organists' profession was to be honoured by inclusion therein. So far, the organ has not been represented, a fact which brings to mind the strangely isolated position of the solo organist among executive artists in this country, a position very detrimental to the art of organ playing.

Ninety-nine out of a hundred organists are choir-trainers as well, and of all instrumentalists it is perhaps more necessary for them than for any others to be thorough musicians. A number of our prominent organists have gained their prominence more through efficiency in choir-training or other branches of musicianship than through remarkable readings on the organ. I am now, however, considering the organist in his capacity as a servant of art as distinct from his capacity as a servant of the Church, and as a soloist worthy of classification with the artists whose lives and work have been reviewed in the above-mentioned articles.

The pianist, violinist, or other soloist hires a hall, gives his recital, and receives his meed of praise, criticism, or both, in the press. The public gauges his abilities by these reports; but unless he reach a high pitch of excellence and consistently improve, he cannot stand. Not so the organist: he can give a recital whenever he likes; he is subjected to no criticism, and the public, deprived of the chance of self-education by comparing its own judgment with the press reports, will probably think him a genius if he plays the Andantino in D flat rather more sloppily than usual, while it will remain comparatively unimpressed by a clean and delicately phrased reading of a Bach Trio-Sonata. The ignorance of the ordinary man concerning the organ and its technique has, of course, frequently earned comment, but I consider that this is largely due to the lack of any sort of detailed criticism of organ playing, from which he may learn what is good and what is bad, what to look for in artistic playing and what to attribute to the shortcomings of a particular instrument—for he knows how to discriminate between good and bad at, say, a pianoforte recital.

The result is that there are more indifferent players still afloat in the organ world than could possibly exist among performers on any other instrument—players who have none of the artist's enthusiasm for the best for art's sake. And on the other hand, far too little recognition is given to the really fine exponents of the art of playing the organ. The names of Robert Radford, Albert Sammons, Harold Samuel, are household words even to the most casual music-lover, but the big names that occur to the man-in-the-street at the mention of organ playing are certainly not those of the corresponding artists in that profession. I think the Musical Times would be rendering a great service to the art in selecting for inclusion in these articles some British organist whose name can be worthily coupled with those of players such as Dupré and Bonnet.—Yours, &c.,

Crouch End, N.8.

ERIC BROUGH.

September 11, 1922.

[The organists have not been forgotten, and an article dealing with a well-known player would have appeared during the summer, had not the holidays made it difficult to pin down the victim for an interview.—EDITOR.]

WHY?

SIR,—I wonder why Sir Henry Wood occasionally so sorely tries the loyalty of his ardent and enthusiastic admirers. At the Promenade Concert yesterday some half-dozen 'rumbustious' bars were tacked on to the end of the Casse Noisette Suite. Probably many people squirmed. One certainly did, and that was

Yours, &c.,

THE MAN NEAR THE FOUNTAIN.

Oxford and Cambridge Musical Club,
6, Bedford Square, W.C.1.

September 15, 1922.

'HAND DEVELOPMENT FOR THE PERFORMER'

SIR,—I have read with interest the letters from Mr. Pitcher and Miss Smith, in your June issue, on this subject. As evidently they have both misunderstood my previous statements, I shall make a final effort to clear things up.

Both my letters were intended to convey, among other things, the idea that I was not attacking the 'Techniquer,' nor was I aggrieved over anything. My sole concern was with several reported statements. That I have been unsuccessful in my intention must be attributed either to my limited command of my native tongue or to the fact that both my controversialists read my letters without due care. The statement alluded to by Mr. Pitcher is certainly not mine. The basis for what I did say will be found in Matthey's Act of Touch, p. 11, foot-note 1, and in many other places. I can deal with Miss Smith in no more practical fashion than to refer this book—especially the notes to Part 3—to her careful perusal.

I thank Mr. Pitcher for the extract from another musical journal which he quotes. It is, in my opinion, the best justification for the 'Techniquer' I could have seen. Modesty forbids me to draw the obvious deduction if, however, we are to regard Matthey's exercises as either impossible or other than a pleasure. In this connection I would say that I have several elementary pupils also achieving the impossible and unpleasant! Whether that is or is not the case, I am glad that we are again in accord on the excellence of those teachings. For my part, increasing experience of them only makes me more uncompromisingly opposed to any of the superstitions that have arisen through the silly practice of attempting to master pianoforte technique by means of the visible appearances of it. The statements that I complain of, and which I must regard as a fair synopsis of the lecture, were all of a kind to emphasise this practice. For instance, it is no good for any student to feel aggrieved because his hand is one of the four hundred and ninety-nine out of a particular batch of five hundred not formed by nature to play the pianoforte. His job is to overcome his difficulties with patience and perseverance, like the other four hundred and ninety-eight. This is apart from the correctness or otherwise of the statement.

By all means let us use legitimate aids to conquer our limitations. The 'Techniquer' is welcome, and so are the teachings of Mr. Matthey. But let us drop all the talk about flexors and extensors; or even 'relaxation' and other very important and very useful 'labels' unless we have a very clear grasp of their significance. Such talking merely fogs the issue.—Yours, &c.,

ROY HEAD.

'Ellerslie,' Clanwilliam Street,
Chatswood, Sydney, Australia.
July 24, 1922.

'WANTED: COMPOSITIONS FOR WIND INSTRUMENTS'

SIR,—I was interested to read Mr. John Parr's letter on wind instrument music in your current issue. He laments the scarcity of this class of music written by British composers, and rightly surmises that the reason for this is the difficulty of getting such works performed and published. I myself have written a Quintet for flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, and the only performance of this work took place at Cologne some twenty years ago, when it was warmly praised by the press and public. I have also composed solos for flute and clarinet, but none for the bassoon, which I know is Mr. John Parr's special instrument, and although Mr. Parr has repeatedly asked me to write a solo for the bassoon, I have never seen my way to do so, knowing that this invaluable and indispensable orchestral instrument is not effective when played as a solo with pianoforte accompaniment.—Yours, &c.,

ALGERNON ASHTON.

'The Trossachs,' Grand Drive,
Herne Bay.
September 8, 1922.

'SIR HENRY BISHOP'S FIRST WIFE'

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Friedlander's query as to the parentage of Miss Lyon, Sir Henry Bishop's first wife: although there is some uncertainty, the following is known.

Her name was Elizabeth Sarah Lyon (but at her christening she was named Sarah Elizabeth). William was the father's name given on the baptismal certificate. The probability seems to be that he was a brother of the future Lady Hamilton's father, Henry Lyon, of Great Neston, Cheshire, and a bassoon player of some eminence. An interesting coincidence in this connection lies in the fact that Mrs. Bishop's first-born was named Henry Nelson. Miss Lyon—Sarah Lyon being her stage name—was born in London on July 4, 1787, baptised at Marylebone Church on August 5, and at her marriage on April 30, 1809, at St. Pancras' Church, she was described as a spinster, of the Parish of St. Pancras. Bishop was twenty-three years of age at that time. Miss Lyon was a pupil of Domenico Corri, then at the Haymarket, and made her début at Drury Lane on October 10, 1807, as Rosetta, in Shield's Love in a Village, with great success. After a number of genuine successes in opera, she retired from the theatre about 1820, and appeared only at concerts. She died on June 10, 1831, after a long illness, and (within four weeks!) Bishop married Anna Riviere.—Yours, &c.,

National Institute for the Blind, EDWARD WATSON.

224, Great Portland Street, W.1.

August 31, 1922.

A LINE FROM THE 'RISING YOUNG COMPOSER'

SIR,—Musical opinion in this country groups the native composer into two categories: 'The Promising Young Composer' and the 'Old Fogey'—the 'May-be' and the 'Has-been.' There does not seem to be any intermediate stage, and one never knows when exactly he makes transition from the one to the other.

Twenty-five years ago I was told that I belonged to the first of these; and I had believed that I had long since been promoted—or reduced—to the other. However, I am glad to see that in the opinion of your weekly contemporary, quoted by 'A. K.' in this month's Musical Times, I am still to be regarded as vociferating a promise which the expiry of a quarter of a century has not stifled, even if it has not succeeded in bringing it to fruition.—Yours, &c.,

Royal Academy of Music.

JOHN B. McEWEN.

September 12, 1922.

AN ENGLISH VERSION WANTED

SIR,—Will somebody kindly translate and explain the following, which appeared recently in an esteemed contemporary, apropos of Milhaud's Suite Symphonique:

'The concentration of thematic enunciation in synthetic form, by presenting subjects together in poly-tonic fashion; the expressive contrast of combined and contrasted harmonic planes, and the similar synthesis of different rhythmic quantities in unifying group-figures, such as the 8-quaver measure of the Pastorale (a particularly delightful number), in two groups of three and one of two, all reveal a logical and sane method of thinking and creating.'

A further puzzle in the same article is presented in the statement that 'Stravinsky's Sacre is classical,' and elsewhere we are told that:

'The English mentality accepts much of Shakespeare because of the envelope of sentiment which it is able to wrap about many of his inexorable implications.'

What is an inexorable implication, anyway?—Yours, &c.,

'PLAIN ENGLISH.'

BARCLAY'S BANK MALE-VOICE CHOIR.

SIR,—Having read with great pleasure the report of the National Eisteddfod, I feel compelled to point out a mistake regarding our talented conductor, made in the following sentence: 'The choir owes its existence to the initiative of the enthusiastic Welshman who is its conductor.' The facts are that in 1905 I brought together a number of men to sing at a smoking concert, and Mr. James Lewis (now deceased) consented to conduct. He did this for many years, taking a choir to Paris in 1912 and achieving some success; but neither did he (despite his name) nor does Mr. H. W. Pierce, claim to be a Welshman.

The credit of bringing the choir to its present high level is entirely due to Mr. Pierce's skilful and patient training. Had he not volunteered for this work I fear the Society would not have carried on. The progress achieved by Mr. Pierce during the three past seasons is truly remarkable.

—Yours, &c.,

P. F. KISTNER

The Hill Farm, Weston,

Nr. Ross-on-Wye.

August 31, 1922.

GERMAN GRAMOPHONE ENTERPRISE

SIR,—I returned from Germany recently, armed, amongst other things, with a catalogue of the 'Grammophon Co.' (Die Stimme seines Herren—similar hound and instrument). A careful study of this catalogue, which I enclose, is worth the attention of all gramophone enthusiasts, as it contains records which some of us occasionally dream into the existing English catalogues after our Sunday roast, but never find there. How long shall we have to wait, for instance, before we possess records of such standard songs as Wohin und Du bist die Ruh' by Schubert, Verborgeneheit and Er ist' by Wolf, Sapphische Ode and Der Schmied by Brahms, Morgen and Traum durch die Dämmerung by Strauss? All these and many more accepted masterpieces have been recorded by Elena Gerhardt, while other artists of the first rank are also to be heard in representative songs. The field of opera has been exploited with amazing thoroughness. To take one example only, Die Walküre: no less than twenty-four double-sided records are published, some of which represent as many as five different artists. One has to be a fairly hardened Ring-goer to recognise some of the titles. So ist es denn aus, Fort denn, Eile, and War Wälse dein Vater? require hard thinking to place correctly at a moment's notice.

It seems a great pity that it is not possible to purchase these records over here. Few of us are going to fag to write to Germany for them, and it is extremely doubtful whether we should get them if we did. Under the circumstances it is natural to turn to the H.M.V. Co., which one thinks ought, three years after the war, to be able to make arrangements for supplying the records of its sister-company in this country. I humbly assume that before the war the English and German companies were part of the same organization, but I am open to correction. Perhaps our friend 'Discus,' for whose monthly articles we are all so much obliged, will find an opportunity for discussing the matter with one of the H.M.V. people.—Yours, &c.,

ROBERT LORENZ.

26, St. James's Mansions, N.W.6.

September 9, 1922.

[We discussed Mr. Lorenz's letter with a Gramophone Company representative, who explained the situation. The matter is too involved to be gone into here, being one of the complications that inevitably occurred in the cases of firms who had factories both in England and Germany when the war broke out. In regard to the Wagner records, we understand that the Company will shortly issue a large number—probably about forty.—EDITOR.]

[We have received from Mrs. Sylvia M. Everett, of the Calcutta School of Music, a long letter attacking the examinations conducted by Trinity College of Music. As Mrs. Everett's indictment may be applied more or less to all musical examinations (and indeed to everything in the way of educational tests) no useful object would be served by our publishing the letter: the question has been discussed thoroughly long ago. Moreover, it is obviously unfair to lay the unavoidable weakness of a system at the door of one institution. Examinations are not devised for the discovery of genius; they profess to do no more than provide the pupil with an objective, and to test his progress from time to time. The results are mixed, of course. Many a duffer passes such a test, and occasionally a talented aspirant comes to grief, but in the main the best workers are the most successful—not a bad lesson for the young idea to absorb. Of course, if pupils or teachers confine their operations to the necessarily restricted scope of the syllabus, that is no fault of the examining body. But here again it will generally be found that rough justice is done, and that the passes go mostly to those who work not only at the allotted task but all round it as well.—EDITOR.]

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of October, 1862:

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL

The hundred and thirty-ninth of the musical Festivals which alternately take place at Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford began this year on Tuesday, September 9. . . . The novel feature of performing an oratorio on the same day as the opening service was not a profitable device on the part of the stewards. The sale of tickets scarcely reached nine hundred, and the paucity of visitors presented a marked contrast to the thronged aspect of the Cathedral but a short time before. The Creation, however, was magnificently given. The solos, sung by Mlle. Titiens, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Weiss, fulfilled every desire. . . . The musical portion of the Festival came to a conclusion on Friday morning, with the performance in the Cathedral of Handel's Messiah. Upwards of two thousand five hundred persons were present, and the oratorio thus exercised its old influence, which, happily, seems never destined to be disturbed.

ROTHERHITHE.—On Wednesday evening, August 27, at the Church of St. Gregory by St. Paul's, a trial took place under the direction of the Rev. J. C. Haden, Precentor of Westminster Abbey, of four anthems and two canons—one 4 in 1, on the 5th, the other 4 in 1, on the 4th, composed by Joseph C. Tiley, organist of Christ Church, Rotherhithe. The vocalists were Messrs. Shoubridge, Fielding, and Mattacks, vicars-choral of St. Paul's, and several of the choristers. The anthems were sung with precision. Mr. Tiley presided at the organ, and between the anthems played several pieces from his 'Pedal Fugues' in all the keys, in a masterly style. The performance produced upon the Rev. Precentor and those present an impression in favour of the composer, who is in his twentieth year, and was preferred to a seat in a stall at Westminster Abbey in December last.

Sharps and Flats

There exists such a thing as good 'jazz' music, and good 'jazz' is a great deal better and far more harmless than is a bad ballad or the bad playing of Beethoven.—Carl Engel.

'Jazz' is harmless. . . To attack 'jazz' is not worth while.—Musical Courier.

I adore 'jazz' when it is well done.—Gabriel Groves.

My motto is to please one person, and that person is the buyer of tickets.—Manager-impresario August L. E. Behymer.

I had only one rehearsal with the London Symphony Orchestra . . . and the response from the men surpassed my wildest expectations. . . . They have developed a keenness which I have never seen equalled in any other band of musicians. Some of the music played was on their stands for the first time, and the exhibition of sight-reading which followed was nothing short of marvellous.—Nikolo Sokolov.

The Eisteddfod ranks as the most important music festival in the British Isles.—Musical America.

I recently heard a tenor who exerted himself enough to raise a ton and yet did not raise a tone worth listening to. He imitated Napoleon, who, according to Artemus Ward, 'tried to do too much and he did it.'—Clarence Lucas.

The pianoforte music was of a high standard. . . . Bach's Capricanti and Beethoven's 'Symphony' were among the numbers given.—South African Paper.

The Rev. J. H. Dabb, referring to Gounod's Gallia, claimed it to be suitable to the season, because its words are taken from Launceston and are concerned with the desolation of Jerusalem.—The same.

There is a queer sort of latter-day mind about that affects to believe that none but old fogies like Brahms. . . . If they would just look around them, they would see that the world is not divided neatly into old fools who swear, say, by Brahms, and young Solons who swear, say, by Milhaud. There are any number of young people who think Brahms a composer of genius and Milhaud only a cross between a talent and a gamin.—Ernest Newman.

Enter the bassoon—a funny name, I think. And it is an instrument used by composers for some jokes. . . . It is the violoncello of the reed instruments, and is used often with very beautiful effect. Yet it is an odd fellow too, and if Mr. James is ever so kind to me as to say 'What shall I play for you?' I, in my lowbrow way, will reply, 'Play Pop goes the weasel!'—W. Crawford Snowden.

Farce is akin to music. It is always an octave—you go up to the eighth and down to the first note of the octave, and one or other extreme of the octave always gets you your laugh.—Donald Calthrop.

I have so brought down my weight that I am now slim enough to play Mephistopheles.—Chaliapin.

I tried to reduce my weight by surf-bathing, but it was no good. What will you? I cannot help it. . . . Oh! la la la! —Tetrazzini.

After all, her voice is her fortune, and a singer is not a dancer. The public still goes to hear her trill even if she is fat.—Hannen Swaffer.

THE NATIONAL UNION OF ORGANISTS' ASSOCIATIONS:

ANNUAL CONGRESS, GLASGOW

This Congress has proved to be an important event, and may have far-reaching effects on the future of the organist. It reflects the greatest credit on all concerned in its organization, especially the enthusiastic hon. secretary of the Glasgow Society of Organists, Mr. John Campbell, together with his able executive committee, and also Mr. J. C. Lumsden, president of the Edinburgh Society of Organists. No pains were spared in making the Congress one which will long be remembered by those who were privileged to be present. The proceedings opened on Monday evening, September 11, with an informal meeting at the Grosvenor Restaurant, when the members had an opportunity for enjoying social intercourse, a cup of tea, and a programme of music.

The Congress proper began on Tuesday morning with a meeting of the executive, followed by an open public meeting, with the president, Mr. S. W. Pilling, in the chair. In a brief introductory statement he observed that the object in forming the Union was to create a brotherhood of musicians especially interested in organ music. They were not a trade union in the popular sense of the term, but a body designed to further the interests of music in general and of organ music in particular.

Mr. J. K. Findlay, vice-president of the Glasgow Society of Organists, formally welcomed the visitors to Glasgow.

Speeches were delivered by Mr. R. Finnie McEwen, of Marchmont and Bardrochar, and ex-Bailie E. Rosslyn Mitchell, Glasgow.

The former, who is a past hon. president of the Society, said that although the life of an artist was essentially solitary, as he must do his work largely by himself and for himself, there was tremendous inspiration to be drawn from association with his fellows. It was a matter of the utmost importance for artists to meet in conference from time to time in order to consider questions affecting their relation to the public. They must take a large and comprehensive view of their duties and responsibilities. Many admirable artists were satisfied when they satisfied themselves, but there was a duty towards the general public. After all, it was the public they had to serve, and although public opinion might not always be right, public approval sooner or later always prevailed. The inference to be drawn was that they must strive to capture public approval of the highest things, and for that purpose it was necessary that they should not put forward conflicting individual views, but must meet in conference and decide what was best, and, having come to a decision, do all they could to promote its acceptance.

Councillor Rosslyn Mitchell introduced a discussion on Municipal Enterprise in the use of the Organ. He said that with the exceptions of Liverpool and Southport, municipalities were not generally noted for their interest in organ music. They talked about their band performances, but very little about organ recitals. He supposed that was largely due to the fact that in the public mind the organ was so much associated with churches and with lugubrious ideas in music. This lack of the idea of merriment in the organ repertory had caused it to be the Cinderella of music. The usual organ recital at a concert was a half hour's performance while the audience was assembling, to the accompaniment of shuffling of feet and the chorus of the programme-sellers. If it was used in a ballad it was brought in rather tremulously at the third verse when the singer started forward on the celestial flight to the top G. It was not necessary or right that the organ should be regarded merely as an adjunct of the ballad concert, and for municipal purposes it should be regarded as the fundamental instrument for two reasons—(i.) the extraordinary cheapness with which organ recitals could be run; (ii.) the wide range of organ music. By an organ recital, not as an occasional thing but as a regular feature, the public mind, and particularly the mind of the young, made gradually familiar with the great organ music of the past and the present, would become enriched and purified by the sheer beauty of form and phrase of pure organ music and the numerous arrangements and transcriptions of the finest orchestral music. People would come to listen to the great masterpieces of orchestral music not as new acquaintances, but as old friends. For these reasons it should be their endeavour to promote in the corporations of the country a greater desire for organ recitals.

The following took part in the discussion: Mr. Edward Machell, Glasgow; Mr. J. H. Dixon, Lancaster; Mr. John Brook, Southport (hon. general secretary); and Dr. Hutchinson, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

In the afternoon the visitors were received by the Lord Provost and magistrates on behalf of the Corporation, in the Kelvingrove Art Galleries. Lord Provost Paxton, in extending a welcome, said that the Corporation had realised the value to the citizens of good music, and was catering in the most generous manner not only in supporting the orchestral concerts, but in providing bands in the parks and concerts and organ recitals during the winter. It was not well known that the Corporation had direct control of more organs in its various halls than any other municipality, and it seemed a shame that they were so seldom heard.

After Mr. Pilling and Mr. Findlay had acknowledged the civic hospitality, the guests were entertained by a short organ recital by Mr. Purcell J. Mansfield. In the evening the members attended an organ recital by Mr. Herbert Walton in Glasgow Cathedral.

For Wednesday a steamer excursion down the Clyde through the Kyles of Bute to Arran had been arranged. This proved a most delightful experience, and the views obtained of the beautiful and rugged scenery were most impressive.

In the evening the Congress dinner was held in the Grosvenor Restaurant, Mr. Pilling occupying the chair. The toast of The King was proposed by Mr. Pilling, and that of the National Union of Organists' Associations by Mr. A. Collingwood, of Aberdeen, Mr. Pilling replying. Mr. Brook, the hon. general secretary, who also acknowledged the toast, said that if the Union had done nothing more than bring to light the discussion of the previous day it would have done no mean service to the profession. Other toasts followed, and an excellent programme of music was greatly enjoyed.

The last day of the Congress was spent at Edinburgh, where members and friends were entertained in a most delightful way by the Edinburgh Society of Organists.

After a reception of the visitors by the president, Mr. J. C. Lumsden, on behalf of the Edinburgh Society, in St. John's Episcopal Church Hall, the whole party was taken round the city in motor-cars. In this way a splendid idea of Scotland's romantic capital was obtained.

After lunch there was a short informal discussion on organs and organ music. Mr. Pilling spoke of the small use that was being made of Glasgow's seven or eight municipally-owned organs, but expressed his satisfaction that this was likely to be remedied, largely owing to the efforts of the Glasgow Society.

Dr. W. B. Ross spoke of the efforts of Mr. Lumsden and himself to popularise the organ and organ music. Mr. David Stephen, Dunfermline, also referred to Glasgow's silent municipal organs, and said that if the Congress had had the effect of stirring up the municipal authorities of Glasgow to make use of their own and the community's property they would have every reason to feel glad that that year the National Union's venue had been in Scotland. He mentioned also the splendid work done by Mr. John Pulein in his organ recitals at St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow.

Visits were made to McEwen Hall, Usher Hall, and St. Mary's Cathedral, where items of organ music were given by Mr. T. H. Collinson and Dr. W. B. Ross.

In the afternoon the guests were entertained to tea by Mr. and Mrs. Greenhouse Allt, and in the evening a smoking concert was held in the hall of St. John's Church.

R. BARRETT-WATSON.

London Concerts

THE PROMENADES

Since August 17, when our last record broke off, a few novelties have been heard. On August 24 Mr. Armstrong Gibbs conducted the first performance of his Betrothal Ballet, a Suite made up from the incidental music he wrote some time ago for a production of Maeterlinck's The Betrothal. Its three movements were pleasant enough, but, like most music of this incidental type, it hardly bears transference from the theatre to the concert-room. Herbert Howells's Procession, introduced on August 29, was a much stronger bit of work. Those of us who expected yet one more effort of 'the band passes' type were pleasantly disappointed. Mr. Howells brings his procession gradually abreast of us, with a big climax, and then sends it round the corner, leaving the onlooker thinking about it. The composer conducted, and the work was so well received that it was played twice. Of Darius Milhaud's Suite Symphonique little need be said. It has its moments, but as it left most of the audience uncertain as to whether the composer was having a little game with them or not, it fell flat. After all, no skilful joker leaves the jokee in doubt. The Suite has scarcely an idea worth serious consideration, and the insistence on discord proved monotonous. The scoring was brilliant in places, but then everybody can score nowadays. A section of the audience hissed, and so caused a mild counter-demonstration; but the first London performance of the work is likely to be the last.

Georges Migot's Le Paravent de Laque aux Cinq Images (September 5) proved to be very slight and tentative impressionist sketches which roused little interest. A more successful effort in the same line was Pierné's Trois Paysages Français (September 7). Especially good was the first movement, a delicate picture of a convent garden, with fountain, quietly-chiming bells, and a cuckoo-call (delivered, like the call in Delius's work, via the clarinet, instead of the more usual flute). John B. McEwen's A Winter Poem (September 12) had the right dour flavour, and was a stimulating affair save for the quieter and slower moments, when the bottom rather fell out of it. The composer conducted, and obtained some excellent playing.

On the whole the novelties have been overshadowed by the best of the standard works and some quasi-novelties. Among the latter have been Bax's November Woods, Elgar's Violoncello Concerto (beautifully played, with Miss Beatrice Harrison as soloist), and the Prelude to Holbrooke's Bronwen. This is one of the best things the composer has done, and met with genuine popular success. The soloists have maintained a good level. Mention can be made here only of the début of a couple of pianists. On August 31, Miss Belinda Heather showed herself to be a performer of unusual promise, in Liszt's E flat Concerto, and on September 12 M. Mitja Nikisch, son of a famous father, made his bow in Brahms's D minor Concerto. He had a great reception, partly no doubt because of his name, and also because of the engaging gusto and undoubted musicianship with which he set about his task. Some crudities in his playing were not entirely out of keeping with this rather rough, bleak work of Brahms. His appearance as a soloist will tell us a few things about his playing that could not be gathered on this occasion.

Having mentioned some of the best things of the season I end by mentioning one of the worst—the arrangement for organ and orchestra of the Allegretto and Toccata from Widor's fifth Organ Symphony. This taking of two of Widor's weaker movements and treating them so that they became positively banal was a bad error of judgment and taste. There was the organ, and at it sat Mr. Kiddle, who is a brilliant player. The obvious thing to do is to let Mr. Kiddle give us occasionally a fine work of Bach, Widor, or somebody else, as a solo. An audience that enjoys Bach's orchestral music so much might surely be trusted not to complain if asked to listen to some of the best of his organ music.

H. G.

CHORAL SOCIETY PROGRAMMES

LONDON AND DISTRICT

There is little departure from tradition in the season's programme of the Royal Choral Society, except that five conductors will share the duties relinquished by Sir Frederick Bridge. The conductor-in-chief is Mr. H. L. Balfour, who will take charge of the Carol concert on December 16, The Messiah on January 6, and Hiawatha on March 3. Elijah opens the season on October 21, Sir Landon Ronald conducting. Verdi's Requiem will be given on November 25, with four of the English Singers as soloists, and Mr. Albert Coates conducting. Holst's Hymn of Jesus has been coupled with The Dream of Gerontius to make an evening's programme on February 3, under Dr. Adrian C. Boulton. On Good Friday (March 30) occurs an event which looks extremely attractive on paper, and will probably be not less so in practice—Mr. Eugène Goossens conducting The Messiah. This concert is not one of the subscription series. The season ends on April 28 with the following programme (no conductor being specified): Bach's Be not afraid, Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens, Stanford's Songs of the Sea, and the Finale from Die Meistersinger.

The Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society is giving Elijah a rest for at least one season. The Messiah, of course, stands firm for Good Friday. The season opens on October 14 to The Martyr of Antioch and an eight-part chorus, Blessed are the Dead, by Dr. James Lyon. Walford Davies's Everyman will be coupled with Merric England on November 11. The other arrangements are: December 1, Gounod's Faust; February 10, Israel in Egypt; March 10, B minor Mass; May 5, Hiawatha. Mr. Allen Gill conducts, and the concerts take place at the Northern Polytechnic, Holloway Road.

Dulwich Philharmonic Society discards routine in favour of a long list of miscellaneous works, choral and orchestral. These are the programmes of two autumn concerts: November 7, Coleridge-Taylor's Kubla Khan; two Psalms by Holst for chorus, organ, and strings; The Banner of St. George; a Mozart String Serenade; Jongen's Tableaux Pittoresques. December 16, Six Christmas Carols; Brahms's Trios for female voices, horns, and harps; From the Bavarian Highlands; Symphony from Bach's Christmas Oratorio; Finlandia; Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, to be played by Mr. Thomas Fussell. Next year the Society will give Carmen, Dvorák's Stabat Mater, and his New World Symphony. Carmen will be conducted by Mr. Arthur Fagge (the Society's conductor for many years), the rest being under the direction of Mr. William H. Kerridge.

The Novello Choir, conducted by Mr. Harold Brooke, has issued the following programme: December 10, Bach's Sleepers, wake; Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols. April 17, Purcell's King Arthur, and Brahms's Liebeslieder. These concerts take place at the Bishopsgate Institute. A concert will also be given at St. Anne's, Soho, on December 30.

The prospectus of the Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society includes a Wagner programme, a Bohemian concert, and King Olaf, under the direction of Mr. Walter W. Hedgcock.

South London Choral Association, conducted by Mr. Leonard C. Venables, gives Endymion's Dream (Coleridge-Taylor), Schumann's New Year's Song, and Brewer's Sir Patrick Spens.

South London Philharmonic Society will put the following works into rehearsal: Faust, Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast, The Wake of O'Connor (Hubert Bath), and Parsifal. The orchestra is to study the Tannhäuser Overture, a Brandenburg Concerto of Bach, the '1812' and Egmont Overtures. Mr. William H. Kerridge is hon. conductor.

South-West Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Arthur R. Saunders, gives Hiawatha on November 29, King Olaf on February 28, The Messiah on Good Friday—all at Battersea Town Hall.

Sevenoaks Musical Society, of which Mr. W. A. Taylor is hon. conductor, opens its season's rehearsals with Parts 1 and 2 of Bach's Christmas Oratorio.

PROVINCIAL.

We have received the following particulars of choral programmes in the provinces:

BOROUGH OF PORTSMOUTH PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY—Hon. conductor, Mr. Hugh A. Burry. Verdi's Requiem, The Dream of Gerontius.

DERBY CHORAL UNION—Conductor, Dr. Henry Coward. The Creation, Hymn of Jesus (Holst), Elijah, The Spectre's Bride.

EDINBURGH ROYAL CHORAL UNION—Conductor, Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt. The Messiah, Scottish Concerto, Choral Fantasia (Beethoven), ninth Symphony, Mass in D, Judas Maccabaeus.

HUDDERSFIELD CHORAL SOCIETY—Conductor, Dr. Henry Coward. Aida, The Messiah, Hymn of Jesus (Holst).

HULL VOCAL SOCIETY—Conductor, Dr. Henry Coward. Berlioz's Faust, The Messiah.

LEEDS CHORAL UNION—Conductor, Dr. Henry Coward. Tannhäuser, The Messiah, Dvorák's Stabat Mater and The Spectre's Bride.

NORTH STAFFS DISTRICT CHORAL SOCIETY—Conductor, Mr. John James. Song of Destiny, Dvorák's Stabat Mater, The Messiah, Berlioz's Faust.

PORT TALBOT GLEE SOCIETY—Conductor, Mr. George T. Llewellyn. The Golden Legend, The Desert (David).

SHEFFIELD MUSICAL UNION—Conductor, Dr. Henry Coward. Hiawatha, The Messiah, King Olaf, Ode to the West Wind (Cyril Jenkins), At the Eastern Gate (Alick Maclean).

STOCKPORT VOCAL UNION—Conductor, Dr. Thomas Keighley. Cavalleria Rusticana, The Spectre's Bride.

Too late for detailed mention above come two prospectuses of great interest—those of the Newcastle Bach Choir and the Philharmonic Choir. They will be referred to in our next issue.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The success of the youthful violinist, Frank E. I. Bilbe; at the recent Welsh Eisteddfod, following as it does on his similar successes of last year in Wales, London, and elsewhere, tends to confirm the College belief in a more than useful artistic career for this boy (he is only fifteen years of age), who has for some time been one of its scholarship holders, and is being trained by Mr. Louis Pecskaï. To win both Junior and Senior prizes in two successive years under such conditions is no mean achievement. With his sister and another, he won the Trio prize also.

In the following list of awards of twenty-eight scholarships decided upon after an open competition held amongst students from all parts of the United Kingdom, particular attention is drawn to the important Bambridge Pianoforte Scholarship which, having an annual value of £100, affords a good opportunity for the gifted and earnest student. The winner on this occasion is Dorothy Grace Callender. There is also announced an award of a Musical Degree Scholarship, under a scheme which entitles the holder to a complete course of preparation for the Bachelor of Music degree of one of several Universities. The competing candidates must already have matriculated or passed any Arts test required from the chosen University in this connection. G. V. Sutton, the successful Scholar, is proceeding to a London University degree.

• Pianoforte.—Eleanor W. Baillie, Evelyn I. Brightman, Florence N. Daniels, Lena Hooper, Lilian M. A. James, Horace A. Johnson, Cyril A. Marks, Vera Snare, Erica Wildt.

Singing.—Francis R. Mitchell, Nellie M. Reed, Herbert S. G. Batter, Winifred E. Brightman, Edith Fletcher, Dorothy N. Fox, Florence L. Legg.

Violin.—George M. E. Harkins, Nan Moston, Rose Phillips.

Viola.—Grace C. Scott.

Violoncello.—Cæcilia P. Bickford.

Double-Bass.—Frederick C. Wright.

Flute.—Emily D. Scott.

Also the above named Dorothy G. Callender and G. V. Sutton.

The adjudicators were Sir Frederick Bridge, Dr. C. W. Pearce, and Dr. E. F. Horner.

The inaugural address of the current term was given on September 20, by the Rev. Frederick William Bussell, late Fellow and Vice-Principal of Brasenose College, Oxford, and now Vicar of Northolt, Middlesex, who chose for his subject 'Music and Morals.' College students who had gained Diplomas at the July examinations were admitted, and during the proceedings a programme of music was given.

The arrangements of the Club for the current term include three social evenings and chess and other games contests.

THE FORTHCOMING SEASON AT MANCHESTER

During the summer recess there have appeared from time to time in the Press admiring comments on the comparative financial success of last season's Hallé concerts, in such marked contrast to similar undertakings elsewhere. The Hallé band was formed sixty-five years ago; never have the gross receipts exceeded those of the 1921-22 season; and the Manchester district was then passing through the most critical period ever known in the cotton and allied industries. In this sense matters can hardly be worse in the coming winter, but may be distinctly better; but the connection, in our industrial districts, between adverse trade conditions and a closer and keener interest in good music, whilst not exactly a fresh phenomenon, is worthy of more than passing notice. The Hallé band will probably find its way to Toronto next August. That city was keen on establishing an orchestra like the famed Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit, or New York bodies. It may well prove that as from the great Manchester Arts Treasure Exhibition in 1857 grew the now-famed Hallé Orchestra, so this band in its turn, through participation in the musical scheme of the great Exhibition next August on the shores of Lake Ontario, may stimulate our Canadian friends to greater efforts to bring about the design they cherished in pre-war days.

The coming Hallé season well maintains Mr. Hamilton Harty's high standard of programme drafting. It has often been urged in these columns that the only sensible occasion on which to float an orchestral novelty is when the crowd is sure to be present to hear some great soloist or big work possessing unusual drawing power. This method is consistently followed in the current programme. The outstanding first performances at Manchester are Stanford's new Irish Rhapsody, Rossini's Boutique Fantasque, Martucci's Tarantelle, Dukas's La Peri symphonic poem, and Hamilton Harty's new B minor Pianoforte Concerto, which he will play under Sir Thomas Beecham's conductorship (March 15, 1923). I understand this will be the first concert which Sir Thomas has undertaken since his absorption in family business affairs. The main features of the season's scheme are (besides symphonies, concertos, and symphonic poems from the current repertory): Berlioz's Fantastic Symphony; Delius's Dance Rhapsody, Paris, and Appalachia; Stravinsky's Petrushka; Scriabin's Poem of Ecstasy; Fauré's Suite; Pelléas and Mélisande; Vaughan Williams's Overture, The Wasps; Dukas's The Peri; and the following choral works: Verdi's Requiem and Stabat Mater, Berlioz's Te Deum, The Dream of Gerontius, the Liebeslieder Waltzes, and the Mass in B minor.

Mr. Brand Lane's schemes are more ambitious than ever. I have not yet seen the draft programmes, but it would not be easy to include in a winter's music a more representative list of names than Chaliapin, Melba, Tetrassini, Clara Butt, Kreisler, Pachmann, Rosing, Gerhardt, and Backhaus.

The Co-operative Wholesale Society Male-Voice Choir maintains its position as the provider of the lowest-priced concerts in the city. Conspicuous amongst its artists is the Lener String Quartet. The choir has selected a formidable list of unaccompanied music, and Mr. Alfred Heyson continues his work as conductor. Chamber music schemes are not yet fully matured, except in the case of a new series inaugurated by Mr. Edward Isaacs, who brings the Flonzaley, Catterall, and Bohemian Quartets, as well as the English Singers.

But a far more momentous development is steadily progressing—the proposal that the Hallé Orchestra should receive municipal support in the form of a guarantee which would enable it to extend the sphere of its influence. Some time ago it was suggested that the Hallé Society might give a series of more popular programmes at popular prices outside the series of customary Thursday evenings. The proposal was for eight Sunday afternoons at a shilling and two shillings (plus tax), and that for such a scheme the City Council should guarantee £1,000 against any possible loss which the Hallé authorities might incur in shouldering these risks.

Objection has been taken to any charge for a Sunday concert. A counter-proposal for Hallé concerts on days other than the usual Thursday would bring them into competition with similar series under private enterprise. This discussion is all to the good; opposite points of view may be reconciled. Our fear was that the whole idea might be allowed to slide, but there now seems little likelihood of that. If municipal aid is granted solely for work done by the orchestra and its conductor outside the scope of its hitherto normal activities, then it would appear reasonable that the Hallé executive should have one or two City Council representatives at its meetings to deal with these arrangements. Probably next month it will be possible to write more positively on this aspect of the Orchestra's work.

MANCUNIAN.

[We are indebted to the Musical Japan Co. (Ongakukai), Tokyo, for the following interesting report. The original phraseology has been retained, with no desire to poke fun, but because it has character: a corrected version would be merely a dull affair that anybody might have written.—EDITOR.]

MUSICAL CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO PRINCE OF WALES'S SOJOURN IN TOKYO

The memorable day of our people here is the epoch-making April 12, when British Royal Heir Edward on board the cruiser Renown arrived at our Yokohama harbour just nine o'clock on that morning, the day being exceptionally fine—the ideal weather we can decidedly pronounce. To begin with, the military band under direction of Bandmaster Lieutenant Kasuga and navy band under that of Sub-Lieutenant Hayakawa struck out British National Anthem to cordially welcome Royal Visitor. The Prince set his first foot on the soil of Sun-rise Empire, and directly taking Imperial Special Train entered the Capital in high spirits amid hearty welcome and three cheers of Banzai of the populace. At 7 p.m. splendid banquet was given in the Homen Hall of Imperial Palace in honour of this illustrious Royal Guest, and during that time the programme shown under was played by court musicians, Director G. Dubravich taking the command:

(Programme of the day played)

1. Pomp and Circumstances March.
2. Overture 'Midsummer Night Dream.'
3. Zuni Indian Suite.
4. Selection 'Othello.'
5. Pomponette.
6. Ballet Egyptian Suite.
7. Polonaise Militaire.

At 10 p.m., when the dinner was over, a ball was held to entertain the Prince, producing two classic Court Dances 'Nasori' and 'Shunteika' [to be explained later on]. To describe more fully this State occasion, at the centre Her Majesty took the seat, and to her right side the Prince of Wales and to her left our Prince Regent sitting, while other Imperial princes and princesses as well as ministers of State and corps diplomatique seated themselves respectively. The stage was so arranged for the gracious inspection at the front of these august spectators. The said piece 'Shunteika' ('The Flower in spring Garden') which was on this occasion submitted to the gracious inspection can be traced back to the reign of our Emperor Kammu, great sovereign of Enryaku revival period (latter part of 8th century), when it was brought back by our special envoy despatched to Chinese Court of Tang dynasty. In Tang dynasty it was played on the auspicious occasion of the crown prince's investiture at the garden of Shunyo Hall before the assemblage of state dignitaries. The dance played to-day is the adaptation of the Chinese dance some thirty years after its introduction by the hand of a noted Court musician, Otamaru. The real meaning of this dance is the manifestation of love for flowers, so that the dancers are of four ancient warriors clad in gay figured uniform, wearing a long sword and a coronet on and carrying a branch of cherry flowers in hand. The other piece 'Nasori' is one of ancient Korean dances, introduced here just about the same time or a little earlier. In short it is an antique masquerade, danced by two men with masks. The instruments used for the accompaniment thereof were of seven kinds, viz., reed-organ, flageolet, fife, Korean flute, drum, and gong, and the accompanists are three musicians for reed-organs, three each for flageolets and fifes, one man for other remaining instruments, i.e., twelve musicians in all, who dressed up in ancient musicians' costume. This Court music and dancing we may claim to be really the characteristic feature of ancient Oriental culture. Those artists who played this dance and music belong exclusively to Court Music Troupe of the Imperial Household, consisting of forty members who have served our Court as hereditary professionals for many centuries down to the present day, pursuing either sacred classical music or ancient Korean and Chinese musics respectively as their special courses. The Prince of Wales looked at these dances with keen interest and appreciation, and left the Palace at 11 p.m. for his abiding Akasaka Detached Palace, enjoying the ball well.

COURT-DANCE 'NASORI.'

Ancient Korean Dance: one of the two dancers.

The next day the picked little ones, representing all the schools in Tokyo two thousand in number gathered on the premises of Akasaka Detached Palace where the Prince is staying as temporal abode, and sang British Anthem 'God save the King' in chorus.

On 16th Anglo-Japanese fraternal band music was played at Music Stand of Hibiya Central Park, in which the 'Prelude for the Welcome of H.R.H. Prince of Wales,' composed by Mr. K. Yamada especially in honour of the visit of British Heir to Japan was heard for the first time—it being a happy combination, with some variations, of

AUGUST COURT-DANCE 'SHUNTEIKA.'

One of the four dancers.

'Rule, Britannia' and the 'Kimigayo.' The navy band from British cruiser Renown participated in it with our navy band.

On 17th the orchestra by our Court musicians specially sent for the occasion was heard at Akasaka Detached Palace of the following programme:

1. Overture 'Merry Wives of Windsor.'
2. Indian Summer.
3. A. Valse Gracieuse.
B. Gipsy Dance.
4. Selection 'Butterfly.'
5. Ballet D'Oiseau.
6. A. Dreaming.
B. Scotch Lullaby.
7. Marche des Toreadores.

On 18th at the Luncheon Party in the Imperial Palace the following pieces were performed by Court musicians:

1. L'Arlesienne Suite.
2. Southern Idyll.
3. Selection from Eugene Oneguine.
4. Caucasian Sketches Suite.
5. Ballet of the Flowers.
A. Red Rose.
B. Marguerites.
6. Selection 'Merry Wives of Windsor.'
7. The Entry of the Gradiators March.

On 23rd British navy band from the Renown played some beautiful melodies at the Band Stand of Tokyo Peace Exhibition in Uyeno Park, giving a good impression on our citizens relative to the strengthening of our Anglo-Japanese friendship. In connection with the illustrious Royal Visitor here, Mr. H. Sugiyama, a noted violinist composed a new music, 'Welcome Mazurka,' to congratulate the safe arrival of British Heir to our shores without any hitch.

VIOLINS OLD AND NEW: PREJUDICE VERSUS FACTS

During the last century or so a controversy has been raging regarding the status of the modern-built violin, a controversy that is becoming more heated as time goes on, and more productive of dispute as the violin-maker of to-day asserts his skill and craftsmanship in the production of the king of all musical instruments.

Probably no other contrivance has ever been the cause of so much joy, uncertainty, lying, or faking as the violin; yet with the passing of time has also passed the fuller understanding of what the violin really is, until to-day it is regarded much in the same light as a piece of furniture, with its tone-value of mere secondary importance. To many this statement may seem somewhat far-fetched, but a study of the facts will bear out the assertion.

Between the years 1550 and 1875 the total number of professional makers of the violin and kindred instruments in Italy and elsewhere was about nine hundred. Of all this number two take the first rank, closely followed by four who take second place, and about a dozen or so who occupy the third position as creators of really fine-toned violins. Assuming that the number of 'old masters' was actually twenty-five—although this far exceeds the figure, as students of violin history well know—we are left with eight hundred and seventy-five luthiers of old times who were simply 'fiddle makers.' Realising, as we must, that these twenty-five old masters turned out very few instruments (and especially the choice specimens of them) when compared with the productions of their more numerous compères, is it not a matter of surprise that so many hundreds of 'old fiddles' should command priority over the modern-built violin of superior tone? How comes it, then, that this prejudice for the old violin has become so firmly rooted?

In the early years of the last century a cult was founded upon the genuine old masterpieces, pioneered by one Luigi Tarisio. Tarisio was a carpenter by trade; he never made a violin, and could play the instrument but indifferently. What he lacked in actual violinistic knowledge, however, he made up for by a keen business ability, so he went through Italy collecting and selling the violins of famous old makers until gradually he spread the craze over France and into England. Originally only master violins were considered, but as the financial side began to dominate, first one and then another of the lesser-known makers was embraced, until now all old fiddles of every country are included, irrespective of the maker and regardless as to whether the instrument has anything other than age to commend it. At auction sales minor old fiddles, many of them worthless from the tonal standpoint, bring as much as fifty guineas, but when we understand the fons et origo of this the explanation is not far to seek. The violin to-day is looked upon by experts, dealers, and collectors as a curio rather than a wonderful instrument that is almost human in its appeal. In valuing the violin consideration is given to age, origin, maker (if known), school, condition of various parts, &c.; but the only thing that matters—the tone—is entirely ignored; in fact, without even placing a bow across the strings (in many cases the dealer is unable to play at all) a money value is assigned to the instrument.

Let us look facts in the face. On June 22, 1912, the London Daily Mail published the following from its Paris correspondent:

'A contest took place last night which seemed to vindicate the contention that modern violins are as good in tone as those of ancient make, for which thousands are paid by enthusiasts. A number of violins were played in a dark room, and at the end of the competition a vote was taken from the numerous musical and artistic audience present, with the result that the finest was judged to be a Belgium instrument dated 1912, the second was a French 1911 violin, and not until the third came a Stradivarius, valued at more than £3,000.'

The details of the voting (which the Daily Mail omitted) were as follows:

- (New) 1. Auguste Falisse, Brussels, 423 points.
- (New) 2. Chenantais-Kaul, Nantes, 422 points.
- (Old) 3. Antonio Stradivari, Cremona, 401 points.

Altogether, there were forty-two violins entered for the test, but from this number six were finally selected to compete with six old ones. There was a large public attendance, and a hundred and sixty-one artists were selected to do the voting. Simonne Filon and Jean Have, two well-known violinists, played, one after the other, on the twelve violins, with the above results.

These are undisputed facts which the prejudiced violinist who scorns the modern-built violin as being inferior to its older cousin would do well to ponder.

Recently a test was made by a well-known violinist on four old and four new violins, one of which was an old Italian fiddle valued at £500. The palm was awarded to an instrument by Robert Alton, a British violin-maker. The Alton violin was built in London in 1913.

All who have drawn the bow across the strings and have thrilled at the throbbing response will readily admit that the only true standard by which a violin should and can be measured is the tone; and by the tone, then, let us proceed to judge its merits. Violin dealers of world repute have asserted that it is easier to sell an imitation old violin than a new one of better tone, and their assertions are only too true.

To-day the machinery of German fiddle factories turns out 'old' violins by the thousand, while a few makers of considerable reputation, weary at last of fighting against the terrific odds of prejudice and the curio-hunting fraternity, have taken to 'ageing' their instruments by artificial means, knowing that these fakes will sell more readily and bring a higher price than fiddles that are frankly new.

Violin-players should bestir themselves and realise that their instrument is on a higher plane than furniture, and that the only way to judge a violin with any degree of justice is to test its tone, not its age. When they are prepared to do this, and to discard prejudice and face facts, they will have a higher standard of violin, and will finally rid themselves of the violin faker.

J. W.

SOME CONTEMPORARY CRITICISMS OF BEETHOVEN

BY MURIEL SILBURN

Humour is not precisely the quality looked for in serious criticism of music, but to modern eyes some of the early notices of Beethoven's works are decidedly, though unconsciously, humorous. Besides their unintentional humour, we find in these critiques an almost childish naïveté and a most refreshing candour. What modern critic of good standing would admit that, in an Andante of nineteen bars, 'seven . . . are so strange that with humility we confess our inability to comprehend them'? Whatever may be his inner sensations, the critic of to-day apparently understands, and can interpret to his readers, the most involved and abstruse composition. His interpretation may be in direct opposition to the composer's original intention, certainly; but that of course is an insignificant detail.

A point which evidently occasioned very serious perturbation in Beethoven's early critics is the extreme length of many of his works. This is shown in the following extract from a criticism of the Pastoral Symphony, given by the Philharmonic Society on May 5, 1823:

'Opinions are much divided concerning the merits of the Pastoral Symphony of Beethoven, though very few venture to deny that it is much too long. The Andante alone is upwards of a quarter of an hour in performance, and, being a series of repetitions, might be subject to abridgment without any violation of justice either to the composer or to the hearers. In saying this we do not mean to undervalue the work, but range ourselves on the side of those who think that it abounds in traits of singular genius and in beautiful effects; though we certainly never heard it through without rejoicing, on account of its prolixity, at its termination.'

The seventh Symphony, given on June 2 of the same year, gave the unfortunate critic occasion to bewail himself in an extremity of boredom in his final sentence:

'The Symphony by Beethoven, in A, is indebted for its reputation to the movement in A minor, which is one of the brightest gems in the author's diadem. The other parts of the composition are without any settled design, confused, full of harsh combinations; and, what is worse than all, the time occupied by the whole is at least fifty minutes!'

A notice of the Sonata, Op. 111, is so interesting that it must be fully quoted later; but we may here observe the sad fact that 'the Arietta extends to the extraordinary length of thirteen pages'—much to the discomfort of the weary critic.

Again, of the performance of the Eroica on February 23, 1824, the much-enduring one writes:

'The Heroic Symphony of Beethoven abounds in traits of genius, and the Funeral March which forms one of the movements is full of dignified feeling; but three-quarters of an hour is too long a time for the attention to be fixed on a single piece of music; and, in spite of its merit, the termination of it is wished for some minutes before it arrives.'

A curious feature of the majority of these early criticisms is their entire lack of any genuinely critical detail concerning the performance or construction of the works under discussion. As an example, we may take the remarks on the C minor (fifth) Symphony, alluded to above: they could be hardly less illuminative or more commonplace if written by an intelligent school-child:

'The Symphony in C minor is generally considered as Beethoven's chef d'œuvre, and by ourselves amongst others. It is certainly the most elaborate and scientific of his works, and if sublimity were his object in writing it, he attained it, all must allow.'

In the same programme the Overture to Fidelio was given. It may perhaps interest the present-day musician to learn that this is 'a very eccentric composition, full of genius, and never fails to please the cognoscenti'—the critic himself evidently being numbered amongst the elect. The 'eccentricities' of Fidelio prepare us for the remarks on Coriolan:

'It is a specimen of Beethoven's wildest and most original flights: his mind must have been full of uncommon imagery when he wrote it. It always brings to our view Blake's illuminations of Blair's poem, The Grave, or some of Fuseli's designs for Paradise Lost. But it will ever please those who have acquired a taste for the highest branches of instrumental music, though there are few orchestras in which it would be prudent to attempt a work of so unusual a character, and so difficult to perform well.'

It may safely be asserted that no member of a modern audience would associate Beethoven's work with either Blake or Blair, but the most illuminative point lies in the last sentence, which we have italicised. What a suggestive picture of the state of the orchestra and orchestral playing of the period is revealed in these words!

In a review of the pianoforte arrangement of the Overture to the Ruins of Athens in the May issue of the Harmonicon, the critic is once more delightfully ingenuous:

'This adaptation has just appeared, and as we have never heard or seen the score we must form a general opinion of the composition from the arrangement. It begins with an Andante of nineteen bars, the first seven of which are so strange that with humility we confess our inability to comprehend them. . . . Genius has its eccentricities, and if they occur but seldom we are bound to respect them. The favourite cat of Domenico Scarlatti walked over the keys of his harpsichord, and sounded a few notes at most irregular and forbidden distances. Her master, however, pleased with her début, noted down the feline solo, made it the subject of a Fugue, and produced a composition that is delicious to the ears of all experienced harmonists. Some such accident may have suggested to Beethoven the commencement of this Overture; but he has not equally profited by the hint. A very short March follows this whimsical opening, and ushers in the principal movement, which consists of but five pages, and is in a more familiar style than we are accustomed to in this great composer's overtures. It is, nevertheless, a very animated piece of music, and by a tolerably skilful performer may be made to produce a brilliant effect.'

That the critics of Beethoven's day were prepared to accept the new only if it were judiciously diluted with the old is abundantly clear from the following notice of the performance on April 21, 1823, of a 'New Overture (MS.) never before performed in this country—Beethoven.' [This proves to be Die Weihe des Hauses, Op. 124, which was given on the above date by the Philharmonic Society]:

'The New Overture, by Beethoven, has recently been composed for this Society. It opens with a kind of "March Religieuse"—a divine piece of harmony, free from all violent modulations, and calculated to delight and soothe at the same time. The principal movement is a Fugue of elaborate construction, in which the author appears inclined to show his knowledge of the learned works that have issued from the great schools of Handel, Sebastian Bach, and the two Scarlattis. It is a very scientific production, and so well mixes the ancient and modern styles that the partisans of both join in applause.'

The Sonata in C minor, Op. 111, has already been alluded to: on it the critic has poured out a flood of half-annoyed bewilderment:

'Every genuine lover of music, every real admirer of genius, owes to the great composer whose work is now before us a large debt of gratitude for his vast contribution to an art of so much importance to society, the influence of which seems to be gaining strength and spreading wider every day. Beethoven is not only still numbered amongst the living, but is at a period of life when the mind, if in corpore sano, is in its fullest vigour, for he has not yet completed his fifty-second year. Unfortunately, however, he is suffering under a privation that to all who endure it is sufficiently afflicting—to a musician is intolerable—he is almost bereft of hearing; inasmuch that it is said he cannot render the tones of his pianoforte audible to himself. This, if true, accounts for some of the combinations—the crudities, as Dr. Burney would have called them—which appear in his later publications; for though the design of a composition ought to be formed in the mind, without any aid from material sounds, yet its effect should be accurately heard upon some instrument before adoption. This Sonata consists of two movements; the first, in C minor, begins maestoso, and then passes into an Allegro. It betrays a violent effort to produce something in the shape of novelty, is scientifically written [our critic dearly loves "scientific" music: it appears to be one of his highest terms of praise], rather in the fugue style, and is very difficult to execute, particularly for the left hand. In this are visible some of those dissonances above alluded to, the harshness of which may have escaped the observation of the composer. [An example of the "dissonances" is then given.] The second movement is an Arietta, adagio, and extends to the extraordinary length of thirteen pages. The subject of this is not inelegant, but its ramifications are noted down in so unnecessarily perplexing and discouraging a manner that we may without hazard foretell only a few very dauntless, persevering enthusiasts will ever attempt it. [Here the "ramifications" are shown in a short excerpt.] The greater portion of it is written in the same time (i.e., $\frac{3}{4}$); but a part is in $\frac{4}{8}$, and about a page in $\frac{3}{8}$. All this is really laborious trifling, and ought to be, by every means, discouraged by the sensible part of the musical profession. Too many difficulties are already thrown in the way of those who wish to acquire practical skill in the art; it is the true policy of musicians to lessen, not to multiply, obstacles. But if it be for a moment granted that the introduction of such unprecedented times is attended by advantages that counterbalance the evils arising out of their strangeness, how, even then, shall we be able to understand them as employed in this Sonata? In the $\frac{3}{4}$ time, for instance, we find all the bars thus composed in respect to measure. [Example given.] We have devoted a full hour to this enigma and cannot solve it. But no sphinx ever imagined such a riddle as the $\frac{3}{4}$ time presents. Here we find twelve demisemiquavers and eight double demisemiquavers in one bar; twelve demisemiquavers and twelve double demisemiquavers in another; ten demisemiquavers, nine double demisemiquavers, and two semiquaver rests in a third, &c.—and all without any appearance of a misprint! The general practice of writing notes apparently very short, then doubling their length by the word adagio, is one of the abuses in music that always increases the difficulties of performance, often produces confusion, and loudly calls for reform; but the system of notation pursued in this Arietta is "confusion worse confounded," and goes on, as we have before stated, to the extent of thirteen pages, and yet the publishers have in their title deemed it necessary to warn off all pirates by announcing the Sonata as "copyright." We do not think they are in much danger of having their property invaded. Let us, however, do them justice and acknowledge the spirit with which they embark their capital on works the circulation of which must be very limited, and that consequently promise no great return of profit. The connoisseurs are indebted to them for many, which but for their enterprise they could only have obtained in a very circuitous and expensive manner, and it is in the very nature of speculation now and then to meet with disappointments.

On a par with the foregoing criticism is the notice on Thirty-three Variations on a Waltz by Diabelli, composed by L. van Beethoven, Op. 120:

'We had scarcely finished the foregoing article when we received through an obliging friend a copy of this air with variations—which is Beethoven's latest work. It fills forty-three pages, and is, we fear, confirmatory of the report, which we reluctantly alluded to above, of this great composer having from deafness lost some of that discriminating judgment which he possessed in so striking a degree before his sense of hearing was impaired. We pass over several unaccountable irregularities in this work, and can only allow ourselves to observe generally that while it manifests either an entire loss of that sense so needful to a musician, or a degree of neglect in the engraver unparalleled and incredible, it shows that its author had not yet quite exhausted the fund of ideas, exclusively his own—upon which, for the benefit of mankind, he has been drawing nearly thirty years. Among the music published in our present number will be found the subject, by Diabelli, upon which these variations are written. The air in itself is very pleasing, and derives additional interest from having been selected as a theme by the greatest musical genius of the century.'

An extract from A Day with Beethoven, by Ed. Schulz (1824), emphasises the attitude of the English critics of the period towards Beethoven's finest works:

'It is worthy of remark that this great musician cannot bear to hear his own earlier works praised, and I was apprised that a sure way to make him angry is to say something complimentary of his Septets, Trios, &c. His latest productions, which are so little relished in London but much admired by the young artists of Vienna, are his favourites. His second Mass he looks upon as his best work, I understand. He is at present engaged in writing a new opera called Melusine.'

The enthusiasm of the more discriminating 'young artists of Vienna' is again evident from the Harmonicon for January, 1825:

'The new (ninth) Symphony of Beethoven, composed for and now in the possession of the Philharmonic

Society, is characterised in a Vienna journal as the ne plus ultra of this master's orchestral works, according to the unanimous opinion of the first-rate professors of that capital. In the last movement is introduced a song—Schiller's famous Ode to Joy—which forms a most extraordinary contrast with the whole, and is calculated to excite surprise certainly, and perhaps admiration.'

Under the date August, 1823, is to be found in the Harmonicon a truly wonderful specimen of the 'flowery' writing of the period. The Quarterly Musical Magazine (vol. v., 1823) declares the paragraph to be taken from a German paper:

'The collection of the works of Beethoven made by M. Haslinger, to which a further addition of two large folios has been made, and which is unique in its kind, is said to have been purchased and on its way to England. Is there, then, in the whole of Germany not a single Mæcenas to be found to dispute with the proud Briton the possession of one of the greatest of musical rarities? Shall he have the glory of spending his guineas in the purchase of productions of art, while the German turns over his dollar again and again before he parts with it? Happy Albion! When posterity shall have formed a due estimate of the merits of Beethoven, it will be necessary to journey to thy shore in order to survey with astonishment the numerous creations of the genius of this sublime master, united in one handsome and masterly collection. Yet worthy art thou to call excellence like this thine own; to thee is it known how to ennoble true merit—does not Handel rest by the side of thy kings?'

Enough extracts have been given to show the 'crudities'—as Dr. Burney would have called them—of the musical criticisms of Beethoven's contemporaries, and the conspicuous lack of theoretical knowledge which they displayed. The veriest tyro nowadays can discourse fluently—though perhaps not always wisely—of technique, musical idiom, and a hundred other things of 'which the critics of Beethoven's day knew little or nothing. But after all, when the 'whirligig of time' has turned for another hundred years, probably the musical cognoscenti of 2020 will smile over the criticisms of to-day with an air of amused superiority, while he congratulates himself on having been born in the age of true enlightenment and learning. In music, as in other matters of this life, the enthusiasms of to-day are the 'back numbers' of to-morrow.

Music in the Provinces

BRISTOL.—The British National Opera Company opened a two weeks' season at Colston Hall on September 11, with a performance of Samson and Delilah. The chief feature of the repertory was a cycle of The Ring.

CARDIFF.—Mr. Garforth Mortimer opened his third season of Sunday concerts on September 3. The orchestra, which has been augmented, was assisted by Mr. Peter Dawson, vocalist.

HARROGATE.—Mr. Howard Carr is forming a large choral society for performance of oratorios, cantatas, madrigals, and part-songs, and Princess Mary has become the first patroness.

LIVERPOOL.—In recognition of his long services to Welsh music, Mr. J. H. Roberts—who has written many part-songs which have been sung throughout the Principality—has been presented with a cheque.

MANCHESTER.—At the mid-day concert on August 15, Madame Sobell Dorville, a former pupil of Madame Schumann, gave a pianoforte recital, including Chopin's l'alse posthume, Debussy's Minstrels, and Cyril Scott's Water Wag-tail.—On August 22 a vocal and pianoforte recital was given by Madame Bella Baillie and Miss Mary Haslam.—The programme on August 29 consisted entirely of the songs of Edmondstone Duncan, sung by Miss Millicent Holbrook and Mr. Charles Neville, to the accompanying of Mr. Samuel Langford, the latter also giving an address on the composer and his works. The songs sung included My true love hath my heart, My silks and fine array, O the month of May, May morning, Golden Bells, White Butterflies, In a garden wild, The mocking bee, O Swallow, Consolation, When in disgrace, Night song, and I dare not ask a kiss.

SOUTHSIDE.—The London String Quartet, on August 28, at the Clarence Pier concerts played a new fairy suite by Waldo Warner, The Pixey Ring, and Quartets by Mozart and Schubert. The Southsea (Portsmouth) Symphony Orchestra, as it is now called, made its first appearance, conducted by Mr. Charles H. Peters, the vocalists being Miss Phyllis Lett and Mr. Hubert Eisdell. —On September 10, at the Story concert, the Symphony Orchestra played a new March composed by Mr. Charles H. Peters, the conductor; a Liszt Rhapsody (No. 2); and Gounod's Funeral March of a Marionette. Mr. William Boland and Miss Margaret Paarl were the vocalists.

TORQUAY.—Miss Adela Verne and M. Moiseiwitsch have both given pianoforte recitals in the Pavilion, the former on August 24 and the latter on September 7. Miss Verne was assisted by M. Jean Vallier, who sang baritone songs, chiefly from opera. M. Moiseiwitsch included in his programme an Idyll by Medtner, Ravel's Tocata, and Moussorgsky's Gopak.

IRELAND

The following interesting advertisement is taken from a leading Dublin daily (August 19): 'Youth, good baritone and tenor singer, wishes training; age 22; strict T.T. for life. Box . . .'

Lauritz Melchior and Miss Carrie Tubb were the outstanding attractions at the La Scala concert on August 20, in connection with the Dublin Horse Show. The Dublin Symphony Orchestra contributed some agreeable items under Mr. Vincent O'Brien.

Jimmy Glover's many Dublin friends are delighted to learn that the old orchestral maestro at Drury Lane Theatre is about to contest a London Parliamentary seat. The son of the late James Mackey, and grandson of J. W. Glover, organist of the Pro-Cathedral, Dublin, he is now in his sixty-third year and has been in London for forty-two years. He has wielded the baton at Drury Lane since 1893.

The prospectus of the Belfast Philharmonic Society for the season 1922-23 is sufficiently attractive and displays catholic taste. It is intended to open with the Hymn of Praise on October 27, Miss Dorothy d'Orsay being the solo vocalist.

Mr. Aloys P. Kimber, who has been organist of St. Mary's, Enniscorthy, for the past seven years, has been appointed organist of Christ Church, Lisburn (near Belfast). His departure is keenly felt in musical circles at Enniscorthy.

It is gratifying to learn that the Rathmines and Rathgan Operatic Society is preparing two of Gilbert and Sullivan's operas for the forthcoming season.

The Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society has a programme in view which probably surpasses all previous amateur records. These are the chief items: December 14, Prelude, The Wreckers (Ethel Smyth), conducted by the composer; César Franck's Symphony. March 1, Elgar's second Wand of Youth Suite; Oberon Overture; Liadov's Kikimora; Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto (Miss Irene Scharrer). April 19, Prelude, Dylan (Holbrooke), conducted by the composer; Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony; Cherubini's Overture, Ali Baba. Mr. Joseph Ivey is conductor-in-chief. The concerts are given at Queen's Hall.

Can any of our readers help a correspondent who writes: 'I have just bought a Portuguese guitar, and now, just as I wish to set to work and learn it, I am told that there is no music published for it, and that nobody plays it outside Portugal. I hear rumours of an excellent instruction book, but it never gets beyond a rumour, for nobody seems to know the name of author or publisher?' Any information that comes along addressed to E. W. T., c/o Musical Times, will be duly forwarded.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

Unlike former years our musical activities have this summer been confined exclusively to Scheveningen. The unusually unpropitious weather seems to have acted as an impediment to other arrangements. Amsterdam has only once been roused from her musical slumber, when the 'Basler Feldmusik' came from Switzerland to pay a short visit to Holland. This combination was greatly appreciated, all the more as we (at least at Amsterdam) are hardly ever cheered by the sound of a good military band. Needless to say, the Swiss guests met with a warm welcome, which I trust they will keep in pleasant remembrance.

As regards the symphony concerts at Scheveningen I must limit my notes to an account of the outstanding events. As usual there has been quite a large number of foreign guests, some of whom had not been heard in Holland since the outbreak of the war, and consequently these drew by far the biggest audiences. The reappearance of Harold Bauer was accompanied by quite a sensational success. He gave us first-rate readings of Strauss's Burleske and Schumann's A minor Concerto. The Spanish violinist, Juan Manén, met with a no less hearty reception. His playing of Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole was at all events a most remarkable performance, despite his underlining of the virtuoso element to a far less degree than is generally the case. The graceful Hungarian violoncellist, Madame Judith Bokor, reappeared on August 16, when she again created a fine impression by her exquisite reading of the Dvorák Concerto. Two concerts given in commemoration of the late Camille Saint-Saëns received an additional lustre through the engagement of Jacques Thibaud (Violin Concerto and Havanaise) and Madame Sigrid Schnéevoigt, who was heard to great advantage in the second Pianoforte Concerto. The orchestral pieces on these two evenings consisted of the second and third Symphonies, the Overture La Princesse Jaune, and the symphonic poems Phaëton and Danse Macabre, with which Prof. Schnéevoigt and his orchestra scored a well-earned success. On August 5 the hundredth anniversary of the birth of César Franck (born December 10, 1822) was duly, if somewhat prematurely, celebrated by a concert the scheme of which comprised the Symphony, a fragment from La Rédemption, the symphonic poem Le Chasseur Maudit, and the Variations Symphoniques, the pianoforte part of which was sustained in thoroughly artistic fashion by Prof. Charles Scharrés, of Brussels. Speaking generally, the concerts of this summer have not been conspicuous for the introduction of new works. One of the few exceptions was an Esquisse Symphonique, a composition entitled Nuit d'Avril, by the Belgian composer, Jean Rogistre, who himself conducted. Though admitting of no definite conclusion as to the abilities of its composer, the impression which this work left on the audience was by no means unfavourable.

The season this year received an additional attraction by the return of the Italian Opera Company. Very fortunately, the director, M. de Hondt, had been able to secure the same combination of artists we heard in May last, with the addition of a very fine tenore leggero, Signor Gualtieri, and a soprano, Madame Polazzi, both of whom proved to be artists who did honour to the Company. Special mention should be made of the indefatigable conductor, Signor Giovanni Frattini.

There remains to be noted a concert given by the Harmonia male choir of Aix-la-Chapelle, an imposing body of some two hundred singers. They were in very fine form, but unfortunately the choice of their programme, which contained much that ought to have been shelved ages ago, admitted of only a very superficial gauging of their actual quality. It is to be hoped that on a future occasion they will take account of the advanced standard of taste in an important city.

W. HARMANS.

GERMANY

HANS PFITZNER

Disdaining the booming of the agent and the press, Hans Pfitzner is quietly but surely pressing his romantic art upon the world. His latest composition, Von deutscher Seele, Op. 28, a romantic cantata based upon sentences and poems by Josef von Eichendorff, for four solo voices, mixed chorus, orchestra, and organ (Berlin, A. Fürstner), proclaims him the last of the romanticists. Like many another great work it grew out of sketches for individual songs, and was at first declared devoid of artistic form. The many performances during the last few months, beginning with Berlin and Stuttgart, have proved that it is a concise, firmly built musical creation.

For an appreciation of this strange composer, the reader's attention is directed to a newly published book by Conrad Wandrey, Hans Pfitzner (Leipsic, H. Haessel), which explains his spiritual individuality, and his position in this world of discords.

A COMING MAN

During the last few decades certain threads joined together formed the collective term 'Süddeutsche Musik.' This Southern German school of music, of which Rheinberger and Max Reger were early representatives, owes nothing to the influence of Schreker, Schönberg, Debussy, and other musical anarchists, and numbers among its chief men Joseph Haas, born March 19, 1879, the son of a school-master. He studied under Reger, Straube, and Sitt, and is one of the professors at the Stuttgart conservatorium of music. Apart from the opera, Haas has cultivated all branches of musical composition with success.

The Cologne Tonkünstlerverein submitted recently a programme of Austrian composers, among whom Hans Gal (who is by some looked upon as the successor of Brahms) and Egon Kornath claim special mention. The latter submitted a Sonata, Op. 15 (Döblinger, Vienna), glowing in colour and masterly in workmanship, a work which really enriches this branch of literature. Neither this Sonata nor Gal's Suite for violoncello and pianoforte offers problems distracting to the listener. It is music pure and simple.

Those who have read Mr. C. à Becket Williams's article on 'Spohr and his Influence' (Musical Times, January, p. 49) will be interested to hear of the opening of a Spohr Museum at Cassel, where the great violinist and composer lived from 1822 until his death in 1859. Heinrich Hein, the founder and director of the Museum, has since 1914, when he broached the subject, brought together a rich collection of everything pertaining to the life and work of Louis Spohr.

JOHANNES BRAHMS

The numerous Brahms festivals all over Germany seem to justify Rudolf von der Leyen's assertion* that 'if ever our German nation suffers during phases of sadness and visitation, then the children of Brahms's muse will like holy angels . . . pour balm into the sore hearts.' From everywhere comes news of the deep impression left by Brahms's music.

The concert season at Hamburg, which generally extends over nine months, closed with a Festival on a large scale in memory of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the death of Brahms (who in 1889, at the instigation of Bülow, had been elected honorary citizen of the city). What distinguished this Festival from the numerous other Brahms festivals all over Germany was the fact that it was organized by the Deutsche Brahmsgesellschaft, deriving therefrom an official character. The various concerts had been entrusted to local Musikdirektor Julius Spengel, a personal friend of Brahms, who conducted the Deutsche Requiem, Rinaldo, Nänie, and the Schicksalslied, and Wilhelm Furtwängler, who was in charge of the orchestral concerts. With such able conductors and a thoroughly qualified choir and orchestra Hamburg may take rank with the most musical cities of Germany.

It is but just to refer to two especially remarkable Brahms Festivals. Essen has for the past forty years warmly cherished the great Brahms heritage, and this year's Festival afforded an opportunity to study the master's life-work, beginning with Op. 10 and ending with Op. 121. Four orchestral concerts and two chamber music concerts provided the four Symphonies, the Haydn Variations, the Requiem, the Alto Rhapsody, choruses for female voices, with harp and horns, the Violin Concerto, the B flat Pianoforte Concerto, the Pianoforte Quintet (Op. 34), the Horn Trio (Op. 40), the String Quartet (Op. 67), the Clarinet Quintet (Op. 115), songs, and other small works.

The Brahms Festival at München-Gladbach was equally successful owing to the enthusiasm of the populace. Here, for years past, every great concert has been repeated at popular prices, in addition to which the chief rehearsals are open to the public at reduced rates. Both the orchestral concerts and the chamber concert were full to overflowing, which, considering the great musical talent brought together, was but natural. Musikdirektor Gelbke conducted the sunny second Symphony and the humorous Academic Festival Overture; the Rosé Quartet played the Quartet in B flat major, and, with Edwin Fischer, the Pianoforte Quintet in F minor. Herr Fischer, in addition, proved himself a master of the Pianoforte Concerto in B flat major, while Maria Philippi earned a great triumph in the Alto Rhapsody.

SAARBRÜCKEN

With Dr. Bodo Wolf as instigator and conductor of a musical Festival, Saarbrücken has become a nursery of modern music. The programme of the first evening concert, devoted to chamber music, contained a Prelude and Fugue for string quartet by Hermann Grabner, a pupil of Max Reger, a remarkable composition, rooted in the purely lyrical. The Wendling Quartet, from Stuttgart, gave a successful performance. While Joseph Eiders-Aachen, who played his new Fantasia in F sharp minor, seemed considerably influenced by Brahms. Mischa Senkar, who two years ago settled at Aachen, showed himself in a cycle of Japanese songs a representative of the new impressionistic school. A romantic String Quartet, by Friedrich Klose, brought the concert to a close. The second day was devoted to organ works by Max Reger, artistically played by Hermann Keller, of Stuttgart.

At the final concert, Stephan Frenkel introduced a Sonata for violin solo in the olden style, which proved to be a valuable addition to this branch of literature; and Hermann Henrich's passionate Concerto in E minor for pianoforte (Dr. W. Georgü) and orchestra was highly approved. Of orchestral works may be specially mentioned Arnold Schönberg's Orchesterstück, Op. 16, No. 5, which did not gain many friends, Bodo Wolf's Festival Overture in D, Op. 12, and Richard Strauss's Tailleur, which provided a powerful finale to this very interesting Festival.

DÜSSELDORF

Famous in the fields of pictorial art, Düsseldorf has gathered together a number of German composers to preach their gospel. But they do not understand one another, and their tongues are divided. Each speaks a different language, and Düsseldorf, the city of Schumann and Mendelssohn, conservative in spite of the young conductors who ever lead forwards and upwards, meets them with considerable opposition. This opposition became the more pronounced on account of inner divisions in the Allgemeine Deutsche Musikverein, which was responsible for this Festival. In spite of the strongly expressed wish of its founder, Franz Liszt, that 'progressive development' should be fostered, the committee stopped at the commencement of modern music. It favoured always the same composers, furthered mediocrities, and wished to have nothing to do with the great contemporary developments. Luckily a new spirit has seized the members of the committee, and for the first time in its history the Verein has recognised new men and new aims. Seven hundred compositions had been submitted to the committee for performance, against two hundred and fifty in the previous year, and preference was given to the pupils and adherents of Schreker and Schönberg. One opera and thirteen new concert works were performed for the first time, which meant an enormous demand on the patience and musical sympathies of a public which is to a large extent conservative. It was not so much the Symphonic Overture by Karl Horwitz, a pupil of Schönberg, that excited the listeners, as the Symphonic Fantasia for orchestra and pianoforte by Alois Haba, a young pupil of Schreker, with its constant change of time and its employment of half-tone and quarter-tone progressions. After this peppery dish, Ewald Straesser's fifth Symphony sounded almost old-fashioned. Its Rhenish optimism and wealth of melodies stood in fiercest contrast to the laboured pessimism of Haba.

* Walter Niemann, Brahms (Schuster & Loeffler, Berlin).

Even Artur Schnabel, the pianist of the classics and the romanticists, belongs as composer to the left wing. Being a pronounced expressionist in the corner movements of his String Quartet, only towards the close of the first and in the second movements does the composer allow the beauty of harmony to break through, showing that after all he belongs to the good old musical realm. The Quartet was beautifully played by the Havemann Quartet of Berlin.

Paul A. Pisk, too, a pupil of Schönberg, belongs to the moderate expressionists of Vienna. The Sonata for violin and pianoforte performed by Konzertmeister I. Gumpert and H. Flohr possesses cantabile passages reminiscent of the past. Finally the programme contained songs by W. von Bartels and Iascha Horenstein. Bartels's mediæval love-songs, although clothed with a modern accompaniment, had a natural simplicity which earned the applause of the audience, who preferred them to the Russian's songs.

Karl Ehrenberg, the composer of the opera Anne Lise, is already favourably known through an extravagant tone-poem Jugend, and an impressionistic orchestral Suite. The opera was a surprise, and its great success a contrast to the composer's fiasco at the last Tonkünstlerfest at Nürnberg. This work is more a dramatic ballad than an opera, the musical form symphonic rather than dramatic. The almost brutal forte of his orchestra shows his descent from Wagner and Strauss, but his music is bold and independent.

The second half of the Festival began with a Passacaglia for grand orchestra by Anton von Webern, a work of weak themes, exaggerated tenderness, and ill-sounding brass music with stopped instruments. It was followed by a Sinfonische Musik for chamber orchestra, solo violin, and soprano voice, by Emil Peeters—expressionistic music, innocent of thematic development. The concert concluded with a Sinfonia patetica, by Georg Gräner, which evoked demonstrative applause that was evidently a protest against the radicals. At the second chamber concert peace reigned once more. Some songs of Alexander Temnitz, though utterly devoid of melody, adequately illustrated the text by their accompaniments. Wilhelm Knöchel belongs to the moderate set of composers. His Quartet sounds well and was well-received; also Philip Tarnach's Sonata for flute and pianoforte was much admired. The climax of the concert was reached with Max Reger's unpublished Quintet in C minor, Op. 21, a youthful work, but thoroughly Reger in matter and manner.

At the last choral concert, Victor Merz produced a hymn, Natur, for soli, mixed chorus, and orchestra, a work with too much sound and too little counterpoint, too much Mendelssohnian sweetness and too much Strauss orchestra. It was followed by three scenes from Manfred Gurlitt's musical legend, Die Heilige, a work very modern and not without stimmung. And again Max Reger carried off the palm of the concert. The powerful architecture of his '100th Psalm,' Op. 106, for mixed chorus, organ, and orchestra (performed for the first time on February 22, 1910, at St. Luke's Church, Chemnitz), acted like a salve after the modern effusions. This gigantic work, composed seven years before his death, is reminiscent of Handel's greatest creations. It is a picture of God the Omnipotent painting His power over all the world in musical language.

COLOGNE

With a sigh of relief we turn to the second Rhenish chamber music Festival of Cologne, which in five days produced pearls of the pre-classic symphony and quartet literature—i.e., the renaissance of chamber music, gradually leading up to our time. The festival character was especially underlined by the presence of six string quartets—the Budapest, the Gewandhaus, the Gürzenich, the Havemann, the Mairecker-Burbaum, and the Mannheim. The Symphonies were conducted by Abendroth, Fiedler, and Panzner. The first concert began with the seventh Suite (Banchetti Musicale) by J. H. Schein (1617), one of J. S. Bach's predecessors at St. Thomas, Leipsic, followed by a Concerto Grosso by Corelli for strings and cembalo (published by Raabe & Plothow, Berlin). Mozart's Serenata Notturne for two string orchestras led up to the climax of the evening's programme, Dittersdorf's Quartet in A major, faultlessly interpreted by the Budapest String Quartet. The concert concluded with a Symphony by Rosetti (1787), who, with Haydn and Dittersdorf, was one of the favourite composers of his time. FR. ERCKMANN.

PRAGUE

Prague, the capital of the new country of Czechoslovakia, bids fair to become, under present conditions, the musical capital of Europe. Not only are the Czechs a passionately musical people, who now in the time of their national triumph are able to cultivate more freely their greatest national gift, but also—the exchange of Czechoslovakia being so much more favourable than that of its unhappy neighbours, Germany and Austria—the best artists of these countries find it to their advantage to accept engagements at Prague, where there is still a considerable German population.

The Czech love of music, which is so closely bound up with patriotism, finds its expression very largely in opera, which in Czechoslovakia is a truly national art. Indeed, before the war, when the country was still under the hated dominion of Austria—music was almost the only unpunishable way of expressing national sentiment, and opera afforded the happiest means of keeping alive in the minds of the people their traditions and folk-songs. Such was the hold gained by opera on the popular affection that when the National Theatre (or Czech opera-house) was burned down some thirty years ago, the Czechs, poor as they were under Austrian rule, contrived to find the money to rebuild it in its present form.

Prague—a town of perhaps about the size of Bristol—supports no fewer than three opera-houses, two Czech and one German. 'Supports' is perhaps hardly accurate, for although they are subsidised, and are crowded nightly, yet such is the cost of production that they do not entirely pay their way. Still they exist, and will continue to do so, for the demand for them is real. The finest is the 'Národní Divadlo' or National Theatre, already mentioned; the production of a national opera in this theatre will bear comparison with anything done even at Vienna. The other Czech opera-house, the 'Stavovské Divadlo,' was formerly the old German theatre next to the fruit market—the very theatre for which Mozart wrote Don Giovanni—and still very much the same as it was when Mozart conducted the first performance of his work there in 1787. It has the sedate charm of an old print, and possesses a wonderful stimmung. Mozart is still done superbly there. I was so fortunate as to hear a performance of the Magic Flute in this theatre, and the same opera a week later at Vienna, under Strauss. They were the two finest performances of the opera I have ever heard, and yet each was entirely different. Vienna offered a richer setting, better singers, and interesting and very practical departures from the accustomed tempi; but Prague played as if it loved every note, the result being a fine ensemble and unity of performance, and the most beautiful orchestral accompaniment that could be wished for.

All operas at the Národní and Stavovské Theatres are of course given in Czech, which is now the official and universally-spoken language of the country, and in which all notices, signs, and posters (even those for the German theatre) appear. Consequently the unhappy foreigner has some difficulty in recognising even well-known operas when they appear in the guise of Kouzelná Flétna (Magic Flute) or Prodána Nevěsta (The Bartered Bride). The serious study of Czech is not to be lightly undertaken, but sufficient must be acquired in order to guess roughly at the meaning of notices and bills. It is surprising how soon one becomes accustomed to hearing operas in a language of which he does not understand a word, and how comparatively little this matters in any work later than Rossini. In operas with rapid and complicated action, such as Barbiere or Don Giovanni, most points are inevitably missed rather badly if the words be not understood; but in modern opera, where every motive and situation is foreshadowed and underlined by the orchestra, the essentials of the story can rarely fail to be grasped, though details and subtleties escape. Dvorák's Dmitrij, however, presents great difficulties, for it deals with the story of Boris Godounov from the point of view of the false Dmitry: this involves many complications, to the present writer's complete bewilderment.

It is curious how little we know in this country of the most famous Czech operas. Most histories of music mention one or two in passing, and stress the fact of their being intensely national in idiom, as if that were a fault. They are, indeed, no more national in idiom than are many well-known Russian operas; and the fact is that modern European music is really an international art, which allows of every nation expressing itself in a truly national fashion while yet being understood of the others. The only Czech opera at all well-known in England—and that mainly by name—is The Bartered Bride; but Smetana alone has written many others, notably Dalibor, Huňáček (The Kiss), and Libuše, which are almost, if not quite, as fine. According to the Encyclopædia Britannica, Dvorák, 'in spite of his industry and dramatic talent,' had not one opera that was really successful. It may be submitted that this is not now the case, and that his best works would surely have had a European reputation had adequate translations and parts been available.

In this country, however, we still judge Dvorák largely by his Spectre's Bride, New World Symphony, and Humoreske, none of which is the real Dvorák, and his greatest opera, Russalka (The Water-Fairy), remains practically unknown outside his native land, although a German translation of the text exists.

Russalka is one of the most charming fairy-operas ever written: less extravagant than Le Coq d'Or, and less symbolic than The Magic Flute, dealing in the most delicious way with a story resembling that of Hans Andersen's Mermaid—an opera that would delight the 'Old Vic.' audience.

The Deutsches Theater is very different from the two Czech opera-houses, both in atmosphere and in its somewhat ornate appearance; and there is something rather chilling and matter-of-fact about the German representations, after the warmth and spontaneity of the Czech. The German language is of course heavier and less adaptable, though on the whole more melodious than Czech. The latter, though tongue-twisting (requiring indeed a technique of the tongue only to be acquired in infancy), has a certain vivacity and, it would seem, a less ponderous construction than German. Figaro in Czech 'goes' quite well, but in German it loses all its sparkle; it is better indeed in English. On the other hand, it is difficult to imagine how Wagner would 'go' in Czech!

The Czech opera-houses had each a repertoire of some twenty or thirty operas and plays during March and April, which seems a considerable achievement, even although some system of interchange of players did in fact obtain. The German opera-house, in addition to a standard repertoire, gave towards the end of the season (June and July) a Strauss season and a Wagner Festival, at which every opera of Wagner was performed.

The opera-goer at Prague must accustom himself to the somewhat disconcerting and casual way in which a performance may be altered or cancelled at the last moment. He may go to see Prodana Nevěsta, and find himself seeing Eugène Onegin or something of the sort—little uncertainties which all add to the excitement of life!

Arbeiter-Vorstellung—the Czech name is elusive—are frequent at all theatres, and for these admission can be obtained (and that for a few pence) only by members of the Guild or Socialist society for which the performance is being given. The writer was present at two such performances—one of a national opera, Psůhlavci, by Kovařovic, which excited great enthusiasm; the other, in the German theatre, a 'Mai-arbeiter-Vorstellung' of Figaro. Is it possible to imagine the workers of this country celebrating a general holiday by the special performance of a Mozart opera?

Nevertheless, in comparing the performance, not the appreciation, of opera in this country with that at Prague and Vienna, one remembers with pleasure outstanding performances by the Beecham Company of Figaro, Le Coq d'Or, Falstaff, and Othello, which could bear comparison with anything done abroad.

In addition to three opera-houses, Prague also supports a very fine orchestra, the Ceske Filharmonie—possibly now under Talič, the finest in Europe, not excepting that of Amsterdam. During the winter and spring—besides special concerts with soloists—three concerts a week are given, on Thursday evening, and on Sunday afternoon and evening, with frequently a 'General-Probung' on Saturday evening, to which the public are admitted for the small sum of one penny. The special series of orchestral concerts that came to an end in March was designed to give a performance of every modern Czech symphony. Especially memorable were the 'General-Probung' and performance of Suk's Asrael Symphony, which is surely one of the great things of modern music. It was played with evident enthusiasm by the orchestra—horn-players lifting the bells of their instruments like little elephants.

Equally memorable were performances of Dvorák's Slavische Tänze (which involved wonderful and subtle use of cymbals), and Smetana's great and equally popular symphonic cycle Ma Vlast (which being interpreted means My Country). Why, in this country, we do not now hear performances of these and other striking Czech works for orchestra is matter for wonder, though we must be grateful to Sir Henry Wood for recent performances of Novák's fine symphonic poem From the Tatras.

The Ceske Filharmonie does not of course confine itself to national music; its rendering of classical works combines fire and enthusiasm with exquisite finish and delicacy.

Solo recitals are not very frequent at Prague, but chamber music is very popular, and the wonderful Bohemian Quartet is famous throughout Europe. Prague also is still the centre of a violinistic school, being once more the home of Sevcik, whose most distinguished pupils gave a concert there in March to celebrate the seventieth birthday of the master. Of concerts given by foreign artists at Prague this spring the most successful were those by Miss Fanny Davies and the Bohemian Quartet (a perfect ensemble which should be heard oftener in London); two given by the English Singers, who created a furore; and a Strauss song-recital by Fr. Schumann (of the Vienna Opera) and the composer.

The principal concert-hall (the Smetana Sin) has about half the capacity of Queen's Hall, and possesses a very practical triple platform, which by a simple arrangement of wooden screens is made suitable for either chamber, orchestral, or choral-orchestral music. Very curious are the side-galleries, which, instead of running the length of the hall, hang on the wall above the 'loges' like large crow's-nests.

The visitor to Czecho-Slovakia learns never to be surprised at anything, and to accept with equanimity, for instance, the fact that in one little town the village-priest is also director of the opera; yet, even at Prague, the most hardened would scarcely expect to find the Conservatoire of Music in an ancient monastery. In former days the Czech and German Conservatoires occupied together a large modern building; but in 1918—the Government of the new Republic having pressing need for a Parliament House—both these Conservatoires became homeless. The Czech section insinuated itself (to put it mildly) into the monastery of Emmaus, where the old refectory is now a concert-hall and the monks' cells are studios—the principal professor of pianoforte occupying the cell of St. Andrew. Entire ignorance is professed by the Czechs as to what became of the German part of the Conservatoire—even policemen and postmen deny all knowledge of it, and only persistent search discovers it in a quiet little side street. The writer's predilection would be to do her scales and exercises in an ancient monastery!

In April quite a large Choral Competition Festival took place at Prague, which was of great interest to an English visitor. The outstanding qualities of the Czech choirs were vivacity and elasticity of rhythm, and great vigour of attack, all probably the natural outcome of a highly rhythmical language. The tone, however, was often strident and harsh—especially in the female-voice choirs, which were frequently unpleasantly shrill. The conductor of the finest choirs, be it remarked, was a woman—a highly-gifted and very able teacher. It was felt, however, that the average English festival choir could have more than held its own at this Prague 'Sing-Kampf,' and it was satisfactory to reflect that at least there was one branch of the art in which we could rival such a wonderfully musical nation as the Czechs.

M. G. GRIERSON.

VIENNA

The musical season, or to be more precise, the concert season, opens far later this year than has heretofore been the case at Vienna. The first and only event so far has been a recital by an English violinist named Jean Butt, whose début, owing to the absence of newspaper heralding and bill-posting as a result of the printers' strike, unfortunately escaped general notice. This belated opening of the concert season is, in a way, a return to pre-war conditions, when our concert-halls were wont to close their doors about Easter, not to reopen them until towards the end of September. Such orthodox and strictly prescribed rules became defunct during the war years, when a great general demand for spiritual uplift and, to be frank, even more the sudden onrush of the amusement-loving nouveaux riches, kept the concert-halls crowded until well into June, and, with a short six weeks' respite, again from the middle of August. Such prosperity, judging from the slackening attendance at last season's musical entertainments, has become a thing of the past, and apparently Vienna concert-managers intend this season to draw their lesson from this state of affairs. Prospects are not at all bright for the local concert bureaux, of which a large crop has shot up here in recent years. The enormous and still increasing cost of arranging a Vienna concert practically bars the way for all native artists save a limited number of favourites, and the field is clear for that variety of recitals termed 'Valuta concerts,' given by foreign artists who are in a position to effect Vienna débûts at a price which is insignificant when figured in English or American currency. This situation, while lending Vienna a seeming air of cosmopolitanism, yet does not augur at all well for the city's future development as a musical centre.

A still more alarming fact results from the circumstance that even the large orchestral subscription cycles such as that of the Tonkünstler and Konzertverein, venerable and traditional institutions of many decades, are now seriously threatened in their existence. The Tonkünstler series is in particularly difficult straits in view of the recent decision on the part of Wilhelm Furtwängler to devote his activities as a conductor to more tempting and lucrative offers from foreign countries. The loss of Furtwängler would deprive Vienna of its most potent and efficient musical personality, and would leave a gap not easily to be filled. The exorbitant cost of maintaining an orchestra of some eighty players, moreover, may sooner or later prove prohibitive for the patrons of the two orchestral societies. The task is all the more difficult since these concerts cater almost exclusively for a class of intellectuals whose income and financial capacity do not increase in the same proportion as the rising prices of admission. On the other hand, the wealthy element, or the majority of it, does not count among the clientèle of the orchestral concerts, preferring as it does the more obvious and diverting musical nourishment served by the Staatsoper.

Of all our musical institutions—and, in fact, of all establishments connected with this battered and impoverished State—the Staatsoper alone manages to keep up the appearance of a seemingly flourishing organization. This season again a host of new members is being added to its personnel, which is already at least three times as numerous as in pre-war days. But as many as three or four star 'guests' frequently assemble for a single performance, while the regular singers of the house are kept in involuntary leisure. It is a notorious fact, and one often commented on with a certain bitterness, that the opera maintained by this bankrupt miniature State pays to its artists what are virtually the highest salaries offered by any European opera-house. Enormous sums are being spent on costly mountings and gorgeous costumes, calculated to brighten up the dull routine of the Staatsoper's narrow repertoire, while practically the only novelties produced are the works of the Staatsoper's director, Richard Strauss, who is just now preparing a lavish presentation of his new ballet Whipped Cream. Thus this luxurious theatre benefits the cause of music and progress even less than it does the interests of the State whose citizens are utterly unable to attend its expensive performances. Sold-out houses, to be sure, are the rule, but their receipts are totally insufficient to cover the enormous deficit caused by such reckless management, and which now amounts to well over twelve million kronen a night. Sooner or later such hopelessly unhealthy conditions will precipitate the inevitable catastrophe. The remedy is, of course, quite simple. The Staatsoper will eventually have to choose between the two alternatives of reducing its outlay and admission fees (and thus becoming a truly national theatre)—or of plainly admitting its present position as a luxurious amusement place for wealthy visiting foreigners. In the latter case the theatre will have to raise its prices to such a level as to become an independent, self-supporting enterprise. At present it is, at best, a vehicle for the ambitious plans of Dr. Strauss, whose self-glorification finds a ready response from that spirit of hero-worship which has long been proverbial with the Vienna public. Having looked askance at Strauss's earlier and serious works, Vienna now surrenders unconditionally to the largely sentimental and, at any rate, suspiciously 'popular' products of Strauss's waning genius. It is as though the populace was only too glad to make up for old sins by a blind submission to all the Straussian deeds. A movement is now afoot to entrust him with the directorship of the Vienna State Conservatory, a post for which this arrivé composer is perhaps even less fitted than he is for the post he now holds at the Staatsoper. If this new plan succeeds, the State Conservatory is to have a combination similar to that at the Staatsoper, with Prof. Franz Schmidt to occupy a position corresponding to that held at the Staatsoper by co-director Franz Schalk, who does virtually all the work while all the glory goes to Dr. Strauss. Although the new scheme planned for the State Conservatory is still meeting with some opposition, there is little doubt that influential social friends will eventually succeed in effecting the Strauss monopoly of the two important musical posts which the Austrian State is in a position to grant.

The Volksoper this season intends to fill the gap left by the Staatsoper's reluctance towards modern works. This year's novelties at the Volksoper will include, besides Josef Holbrooke's opera Bronwen, Moussorgsky's Boris Godounov (which, strangely enough, has never been heard at Vienna), and Charpentier's Louise, which also has been absent from the Staatsoper's programme for fifteen years. It is the intention of the Vienna Volksoper to give this winter a ten weeks' season in a number of English cities, including London. Though the work of this Company is frequently very good, it may not be amiss to point out that it is not at all representative of Vienna's operatic status. The Volksoper, as its name implies, is a theatre intended to attract the masses, although it has of late lost sight of this avowed purpose and has seriously suffered from the economic crisis. Felix Weingartner, its director, now touring South America at the head of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, has been obliged to raise the admission fees of the theatre, as a result of its high budget, thus frustrating any attempt at catering for the working-classes and for the host of intellectuals who are eager not for costly scenery but for good music presented in a dignified manner by a well-balanced if not over-brilliant company. One would wish that the new 'Middle-Class Opera' which is just about to open its first season with a production of Beethoven's Fidelio might profit by the fundamental mistakes committed by the Staatsoper and Volksoper. There are vast possibilities for such an enterprise here at this moment.

Optimists are anticipating a stimulating influence on Vienna's artistic life from the advent of Max Reinhardt, who will this month take possession of the Redoutensaal Theatre for what is intended to be an annual three months' season. The coming of Reinhardt has been preceded by some rather sensational newspaper controversies between his adherents and adversaries. The former finally won the day, but one is rather inclined to think that the latter's objections were well grounded. The dramatic methods of Reinhardt, which have long outlived their passing vogue at Berlin, are very little suited to fit in with the more conservative and legitimate spirit and tradition which our venerable old Burgtheater still cherishes. The plan of investing Reinhardt with the directorship of that famous old State playhouse has, temporarily at least, met with failure, and Reinhardt's Vienna activities will for the present be confined to his private theatrical ventures. It is an open secret, however, that his friend, Dr. Richard Strauss, is untiring in his efforts to make Reinhardt director of the Burgtheater, or at least to appoint him stage-manager of the Staatsoper. No doubt Strauss will eventually have his way. Hero-worship . . .

PAUL BECHERT.

Miscellaneous

We have received, too late for notice earlier in the Journal, the complete programmes of the London Symphony Orchestra concerts at Queen's Hall during the winter. The concerts take place as usual on Monday evenings. The new works down for performance are Bax's Symphony, Gerrard Williams's Three Preludes, and Holst's Ode to Death. The Bach Choir will be heard in the ninth Symphony (January 22), and the Philharmonic Choir at the last concert (April 23) in the Ode to Death, Rachmaninoff's The Bells, Brahms's Song of Destiny, and a selection from Act 3 of Die Meistersinger. The conducting will be shared by Coates, Goossens, Koussevitzki, and Busoni.

The Mayfair Dramatic Club proposes to give a performance, during the autumn, of Rosina, an 18th century ballad opera by William Shield. So far as has been ascertained by Mr. Alec Brooksbank, secretary of the Club, the opera was last performed in London, at the Haymarket, in 1825.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

- BACH, J. S.—Fantasia in C minor. Transcribed for Full Orchestra by EDWARD ELGAR. Full Score, 8s.
BANTOCK, GRANVILLE.—"Grass of Parnassus." Part-Song for Mixed Voices (unaccompanied). (No. 1404, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.
BLAIR, HUGH.—"Serenata" ("Life and Love"). For Pianoforte Solo. 2s. 3d.
BRIDGE, SIR FREDERICK (EDITED BY).—Sacred Motets or Anthems. For Four and Five Voices, by WILLIAM BYRDE and his Contemporaries. 4s. (For Contents see page 742.)
BRISTOL, ESMOND.—"The old, bold Mate." Song for Baritone. The words by JOHN MASEFIELD. 2s.
DEN, RODNEY.—Little Suite, "Pan." For Pianoforte Solo. 2s.
ELGAR, EDWARD.—Prelude to "The Kingdom." (No. 20, Organ Transcriptions by A. HERBERT BREWER.) 3s.
GROVES, R. E.—"The Apostles' Creed" and "The Lord's Prayer." Arranged for Choral Recitation. 3d.
HAM, ALBERT.—"Music, when soft voices die." Part-Song for Mixed Voices. 3d.
HOLST, GUSTAV.—"Ode to Death" (Op. 38). For Chorus and Orchestra. Poem by WALT WHITMAN. 1s. 6d. String Parts (5), 3s. 4d.
PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, REV. W.—Processional Hymn No. 2 ("Pray for one another"). 1d.; 2s. 6d. for 50.
PRYOR, MARION.—"At Rest." Song for Contralto or Baritone. 2s.
"If you forget." Song. For Mezzo-Soprano. 2s.
PURCELL, HENRY.—"The Gordian Knot untied." Incidental Music. Suite No. 2. For Strings. Edited by GUSTAV HOLST. Score, 5s. String Parts (4), 2s. 8d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 364, contains the following music in both notations.—"All among the barley." Arranged as a Unison Song. Music by ELIZABETH STIRLING. 2d.

SMITH, B. M. BRYAN.—"Red Poppies" and "The Chain of Gold." Two Songs. 2s.

SMITH, B. M. BRYAN, AND MATTHEW CLARK.—"The Prayer of Dawn" and "Her Image." Two Songs. 2s.

THOMAS, REV. J. I.—"My Comrade." An unaccompanied Part-Song for S.A.T.B. 4d.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:

LINTON, A. H. "Sweet and Twenty." Two-part Song. 1½d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

- No. 2389. "London Town." For T.T.B.B. EDWARD GERMAN 3d.
" 2391. "A Slumber Song." For T.T.B.B. FREDERIC LÖHR 3d.
" 2392. "The earth is the Lord's." Harvest Anthem. ALBERT LOWE 3d.
" 2393. "The God of Abraham praise." Harvest Anthem. HAROLD E. WATTS 2d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

ANDREWS, MARK.—"John Peel." Arranged for S.S.A.A. 15 cents (8d.).

CUSTANCE, A. F. M.—Benedictus es Domine. For S.A.T.B. 12 cents (6d.).

DIECKMANN, C. W.—"Caprice." For Organ.

FORSYTH, CECIL.—Part-Songs for Men's Voices:

- | | |
|---------------------------|----------------|
| "Queen and Huntress" ... | 12 cents (6d.) |
| "When thou must home" ... | 12 cents (6d.) |
| "Roses of sixteen" ... | 12 cents (6d.) |
| "Rose Aylmer" ... | 10 cents (4d.) |
| "Twenty years hence" ... | 12 cents (6d.) |
| "When lovely woman" ... | 10 cents (4d.) |
| "You and me" ... | 10 cents (4d.) |
| "Late leaves" ... | 10 cents (4d.) |
| "Remain" ... | 12 cents (6d.) |
| "Catullus" ... | 10 cents (4d.) |
| "With leaden foot" ... | 12 cents (6d.) |
| "Silver Key" ... | 10 cents (4d.) |
| "The Cave-Men" ... | 15 cents (8d.) |

LEMARE, E. II.—"Romance Triste" ("Marche Funèbre"). For Organ.

MACDOUGALL, H. C.—Vesper Hymn. For S.S.A.A. 10 cents (4d.).

PEELE, DUDLEY.—"Cradle Song" and "Curfew Bell." For Organ.

—Fugato in D. For Organ.

REED, W.—"Sortie Triomphale." For Organ.

WEBBE, W. Y.—"Bless and sanctify my soul." Anthem. 15 cents (8d.).

DOUBLE-BASSES FOR HIRE. Any period. Or would SELL. All in good condition. "W." 26, Macfarlane Road, Shepherd's Bush, W.12.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O.—Eight model Essays on the two books set for January exam. next. Valuable hints on writing the Essays. Send 5s. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BECHSTEIN GRAND. Fine condition. Ebony case. Offers. Snell & Co., Blomfield Court, Maida Vale, W.9.

PIANO PEDALS.—Malkin Patent Pedal Attachment with octave coupler complete. As new, with stool, all accessories, and plan. Scarcely used. Sacrifice £6 for. Apply "K. E." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

NOV 15 1922

No. 957

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

NOVEMBER 1, 1922

Price 6d.

SPENCER PIANOS

GRANDS * UPRIGHTS * PLAYERS

Sole Agents

MURDOCH MURDOCH & CO

Piano & Player Piano Experts

461 & 463 OXFORD STREET

And at BRIGHTON * PORTSMOUTH * SOUTHAMPTON
POLKESTONE * DOVER * CHATHAM
BIRMINGHAM * CAMBRIDGE

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN LTD.

PATENT THREE COMPARTMENT TOP LID FOR GRAND PIANOS

We have already fitted over

1000 PIANOS

by most of the leading makers with this New Device.

Kindly send for Booklet giving particulars.

CECILIAN HOUSE,
65, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON.
12, Park Row, LEEDS.

Exported to AMERICA - FRANCE - GERMANY

THE GREAT
ENGLISH PIANO

□
ACTUAL
MANUFACTURERS.

Factories :
LEIGHTON ROAD,
KENTISH TOWN, LONDON.

□
Proprietors of
JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'
TUNING CONNECTION.

THE INSTRUMENT DE LUXE
OF THE
PIANO WORLD

□
GRANDS,
PLAYER PIANOS,
UPRIGHT PIANOS,
WITH DETACHABLE PARTS.

□
SHOWROOMS :
56-60, WIGMORE STREET,
W.1. LANGHAM 1418.

ESTEY ORGANS
ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.

Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317.

Telegrams: "ESTEY OX. LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.

- 12 -

RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

TWELVE NUMBERS NOW READY.

Historical Songs and Ballads of Ireland

ARRANGED BY

HERBERT HUGHES.

SILENT, O MOYLE
KITTY OF COLERAINE
THE DEAR LITTLE SHAMROCK
THE WIDOW MALONE
THE WIND THAT SHAKES THE BARLEY
RORY O'MORE

SHE IS FAR FROM THE LAND
THE LOW-BACKED CAR
GENERAL MUNROE
THE WINDING BANKS OF ERNE
THE BARD'S LEGACY
ERIN, THE TEAR AND THE SMILE

Price, 2s. each net.

METZLER TRIO SERIES

(Trios for All.)

FOR PIANO, VIOLIN, AND VIOLONCELLO. PRICE 1s. NET, EACH TRIO.

(Extra parts may be had for 1st violin, 2nd violin, 'cello, bass, and harmonium, price 4d. net, each.)

20 celebrated familiar numbers easily arranged for Cinemas, Restaurants, and for use in the HOME CIRCLE.

METZLER & CO. (1920), LTD.,

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

142, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON. W.C.2.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

NOVEMBER 1 1922

WHAT IS 'MODERN' MUSIC?

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

I heartily dislike and despise the term: and never more intensely than when I see how often, by using it, I have fallen into the trap which it holds for the unwary. I feel that many opportunities for vagueness on the part of writers, and misunderstandings on the part of readings, will be removed so soon as the word is ruthlessly extirpated. Meanwhile, the best we can do is to inquire, no less ruthlessly, into its meaning.

As often as not we see it used as a shibboleth on the sole strength of which people will feel justified in commending or running down composers and critics, works and judgments. It is quite usual, for instance, to hear it said that 'So-and-so cares for nothing but modern music,' or 'is utterly incapable of understanding modern music.' People who proudly stand by the slogan, 'I do not care for all that modern stuff,' and people who pose as sole possessors of the capacity to understand the beauties of 'modern' music, constitute a not unimposing fraction of the musical world. For the term 'modern' let us substitute the term 'to-day's,' and the inanity of such utterances becomes apparent forthwith.

To-day's music ranges from Elgar to Fauré, from Holst to Bartók, from Ravel to Milhaud, from d'Indy to Strauss, from Holbrooke to Obukhof, from Schönberg to Malipiero, and so on usque ad infinitum, or nearly. The term is seen to cover the output of two generations (not to say three), the older of which comprises many men who may still be described as prophets and explorers, whereas many of the younger obviously are the very reverse. Let us consider for a moment how extraordinarily varied in scope and style are the works in which to-day's tendencies are exemplified, and we can hardly fail to realise that if we take the term 'modern' at its true value, a man liking nothing but 'modern' music may nevertheless be endowed with a vast range of sensitiveness and understanding: so vast, in fact, that the absurdity of the description becomes flagrant. Conversely, our man who does not care for 'modern' music will have so narrow, so puny an outlook, that we may well feel justified in doubting whether his attitude towards older music is founded on any degree of genuine sympathy and understanding.

But we know quite well that in no such case does the word stand for its full value. It is used to denote something more, and something more special, than its natural, colourless equivalent,

'to-day's.' If we analyse its meaning, we see that for detractors 'modern' music means 'music now being written according to principles and methods different from those to which we are accustomed, and which we approve.' For those to whom novelty is the sole thing worth considering, it means 'music written according to principles and methods which, in so far as they are novel, are preferable to all others.'

It is all very well to run down the results of innovatory tendencies. Indeed, the tune is old enough to satisfy those who intone it the most willingly. I noticed with interest the excerpts from old judgments on Beethoven which Miss Muriel Silburn reproduced in last month's Musical Times. All students of musical history are familiar with countless instances of this kind, some of which refer to Bach and some to Wagner, others to Monteverdi, to Brahms, or even to Gounod. Indeed, rather than compile a list of composers who have been treated as anarchists when they were nothing of the kind, it would be shorter to compile one of good composers who have not.

The standards in which judgments of that kind originate are founded either on faith in certain fixed rules (or alleged laws), or in certain trends and habits of thought. The opposite attitude is that of people who would willingly use, with reference to any composer whose works they happen to admire despite any infringements of rules or laws noticeable therein, the very words which Edgar Allan Poe applies to Shelley: 'He disdained that Rule which is an emanation from Law, because his own soul was Law in itself.' It is needless to emphasise that both attitudes may be equally uncritical.

How great or how small is the part played by habit, rule, and law respectively in establishing the standards in question? We cannot proceed without elucidating the problem. Just now a number of able writers are sedulously applying themselves to this hitherto neglected task,* and fair headway is being made. The point is not yet reached, however, when we shall be able clearly to discriminate between laws and mere rules. But so far as rules are concerned, I think we may consider all that can be said as summed up in this dictum of Alfred Ernst (one of the most lucid and earnest of those who fought Wagner's battle in France), that 'in music, rules are merely intended to provide practical means of avoiding effects which are usually unsatisfactory'—which clearly shows that the mere matter of rules broken or observed has no bearing upon the exercise of the critical faculty. What we must find out is whether, when a rule is broken, it is broken to good purpose, and to a purpose which renders the breaking as necessary and unavoidable as we should feel the observance to be necessary under different circumstances.

Let us now ask ourselves whether music is 'modern' in so far as it does not conform to the standards according to which older generations sought to avoid 'effects which are usually unsatisfactory.' The reply is, emphatically, No; although history may seem to afford reasons for asserting the contrary. It is true that in proportion as music pursues its course we notice a series of landmarks provided, firstly, by the breaking of certain rules, then by their total rejection, making way for new departures in diction, style, form, and scope. But what mattered was the thing signified, not the mere sign.

* See, for instance, Prof. Watt's excellent essay on 'Rule and Law in Music,' in the current issue of Music and Letters.

This is where the problem of originality crops up—a formidable problem which affects the very crux of æsthetics. Let us content ourselves to-day with noting that if it can be solved at all, its solution is pointed out by two axioms (whose authors, I believe, are Chamfort and Ruskin respectively): one, 'Il n'y a que les expressions critiques qui comptent,' and the other, 'Originality is not novelty, it is genuineness.'

When we attempt to discriminate between 'created expressions' and mere fabrications, to acknowledge genuineness (which may or may not be accompanied by novelty), we see that the presence or absence of novel features provides at best collateral evidence, which may be misleading even when it appears most helpful. Indeed collateral evidence of all kinds, real or imaginary, is one of the worst curses of criticism in general, and especially of musical criticism, which is so hard put to find direct evidence in support of anything it chooses to assert.

Take the case of musical idiom—considering, for the sake of simplicity, on one hand the idiom of 'classical' periods, whose every term is familiar to us not only in itself but in its possible relation with every other term; and, on the other hand, the idiom of to-day's 'modernists,' which consists largely of unfamiliar terms or of terms in unfamiliar relationship to one another. Obviously, we shall expect no man of fairly keen sensitiveness and fairly educated ear and mind to feel ill at ease when facing a work couched in the former idiom, to overlook genuineness, to confuse eloquence with twaddle. The latter idiom, abounding as it does in features which, for short, we shall call neologisms, presents far greater difficulties.

The comprehension of music, as of all works of art, depends upon a full apprehension of the relationship between its elements—twofold relationships, concrete and more or less positively determinable on one hand, purely spiritual on the other. And it is merely in this latter aspect that the relationships are significant from the point of view of art.

A listener who would never dream of contending that the relationship between any two or more terms in the music of Bach or Beethoven does not make sense, and who is perfectly aware that in the music of their imitators outwardly similar relationships are mere empty shells and do not make any sense worth making, has reached the stage when he is able to perceive spiritual relationships, beyond the tangible relationships which go to the making of a certain idiom and style. For all that, he may be no nearer the same stage when facing an idiom containing a proportion of neologisms than are the people who, blinded by the glamour of neologisms, are satisfied with noting their presence without inquiring into their meaning.

In his Essay on Hawthorne, Edgar Allan Poe (whose investigations of the principles of criticism deserve far greater attention than they have yet received) remarks that 'absolute novelty of combination tasks and startles the intellect,' and that 'excessive originality may deaden all capacity for its appreciation.' In other words, it is not before we have fully conquered the impression of unfamiliarity and surprise (pleasant or unpleasant) which neologisms may produce upon us that we are able to consider their artistic value; it is only when the machinery ceases to arrest our attention that we may profitably turn to the question of the spiritual content.

Uncritical distrust of neologisms, and uncritical delight in neologisms, have co-operated in robbing the term 'modern' of any value which it may have possessed. How the question of right or wrong in the matter of judgments in which the word is used or implied will eventually be solved we know full well: those works will survive which owe their inception to the desire to convey a genuine message, served by the capacity to convey it in genuine terms, not in mere clichés, old or new, nor in mere approximations.

Among such works, some correspond more obviously than others with certain currents of thought and feeling which prevail at a given moment. Others will find a less ready welcome because the correspondence is less obvious, less direct—in which case a near or distant future will reverse the judgment of contemporaries. Another order of works, less genuine, of more restricted significance, will correspond quite closely with the particular requirements of the moment, and therefore find ready appreciation pending the time when they will be no less readily consigned to oblivion unless they contain something less perishable.

The deflections and variations observable within the general flow of artistic evolution are further and even more plainly marked by the attitude of each generation towards certain parts of the heritage of the past. Time after time it has happened, as it happens just now, that a generation evinces a keener interest in certain old works, and a lesser in others, than the foregoing may have evinced or the next one will perhaps evince. Similarly the tendencies of any given periods differ (within limits, but often sharply enough) from country to country, as regards both old music and new. But the amplitude of such variations, all told, is never very great; nor is their duration. Withal we know that works which have survived the test of a very few variations of that kind will endure despite further temporary variations.

This is the reason why we may confidently say—and not for the sake of paradox—that musical works do not age. Whatever true freshness and vitality they possess at their birth they retain for ever. When we see that a work which at first seemed instinct with vitality withers and stales, we may be sure that it was born as stale and withered as it will ever be. It is by instinct, and not by reasons deduced from the presence or absence of neologism, that the true critic is led to assert—perhaps rightly, perhaps wrongly—that a new work is endowed with vitality. Music may or may not bear the most unmistakable signs of the date of its inception: the question of its artistic significance remains in either case unaffected.

Genius consists neither in adhering to established methods regardless of their fitness, nor in inventing new terms and new relationships for the mere sake of their novelty, but in using fit terms to express a worthy message. What genius accomplishes is always 'modern,' and will always remain 'modern,' if by the word we mean 'live,' which is its only possible meaning. History shows that of the works written during any given period only a small proportion lives. There is no reason to suppose that our own period is producing an unduly large proportion of music endowed with vitality—a fact of which the writers who indiscriminately praise all forthcoming novelties seem to be totally unaware. But certainly there is no more reason to suppose that the proportion is unduly small. And if we are to ascribe any value to the teachings of history, we should be prepared to find out, if we live long enough, that 'modernity' of methods is a sign which accompanies vitality far more often than the detractors of those methods are aware of, but far less often than their more excitable panegyrists suspect.

PAINTED MUSIC

BY ALEXANDER BRENT-SMITH

Music seems to exercise a fascination over painters. I should think that there must be a hundred pictures with musical subjects for every ten with poetical and every five with pictorial subjects. I do not refer to portraits, because in that class of picture musicians do not hold a marked advantage over poets or painters. They seem to lack a certain something—influence, affluence, call it what you like—which makes them unsuitable as sitters to the eminent painters of the epoch. Nor do I refer to the many imaginary portraits of musicians, though in this branch their greater popularity begins to be noticeable. Does not everyone know the picture of the child Handel astonishing his parents with his playing—as well he might with his very modern pianoforte technique? Who is there who does not know a picture of Beethoven playing to four friends? It is called 'Symphony by Beethoven,' though its sub-title might be 'Picture of four men, trying to keep awake during a performance of a Symphony by Beethoven.' There is no record as to which Symphony he was playing, but I am certain it was not the eighth, the seventh, or the fifth; beyond that I can say nothing. Who is there who has not seen a picture of Liszt extemporizing upon a given theme (presumably, from its four-line notation, a Gregorian tone) on a miniature pianette, with his left foot jammed down upon the sustaining pedal?

Where are the poetical or pictorial analogies to these imaginative portraits? It is true that there is a picture, or a photograph, of Charles Dickens reading to his daughters, and another of Milton dictating Paradise Regained to his daughters (how happy the artist with dutiful daughters!), but where is there a picture of Browning making rough drafts—the poetical equivalent to extemporizing—for 'Red-Cotton-nightcap country,' or Swinburne reciting a newly-finished poem to Watts-Dunton? Perhaps the reason for its non-depiction is that Watts-Dunton never had time to listen, having 'so much work on hand just now.' Where is the picture of Raphael painting the 'Madonna,' or Fra Angelico painting 'The Annunciation'? The truth seems to be that painters hesitate to enshrine pictures within pictures lest their own work suffers by comparison or by lack of unity of style; just as a composer would hesitate to use a melody of Beethoven in his new work lest his own invention should sound poorer than it really is.

But neither of these tabularum genera are quite what I mean by painted music. What I refer to are pictures which have for their subjects, not musicians but music, and not music prisoned within bars by the pen of man, but music in its native freedom. We can only judge of its character by the expression produced upon the performers' faces. In Sir Joshua Reynolds's picture, 'The Cherub Choir,' we do not need to know what music the cherubim are singing. It is enough for us to see them exult and to achieve without effort what we poor mortals ever miss—perfect combination without visible control. In Gerard Torborch's picture, 'The Concert,' we are not curious to know what music these dignified ladies are playing. From their silent instruments streams music, passionless yet lovely, like the Earl of Salisbury's Pavane of William Byrde. In Canziani's picture, 'The Piper of Dreams,' we cannot guess what tune the piper played, which was of such varying, yet simultaneous emotions, that it induced some fairies to dance upon a twig, others to whirl about a tree, and others to glissando down a hazel-branch.

So great is the fascination of music over painters, that if it were necessary we could deduce the history of music from a study of the picture galleries of Europe. Evidence for the existence of the bass viol with seven strings would be obtained from the picture by Domenichino of St. Cecilia, who manipulated that troublesome instrument with as much ease as she manipulated the portable 13th century organ in Worcester Cathedral. Carlo Saraceno has left us a picture of St. Francis, who bears in his face unmistakable signs of martyrdom, listening to an angelic performance on the violino piccolo, an instrument used by Bach in the F major Brandenburg Concerto. The popularity of that now almost obsolete instrument, the recorder, is testified by the presence of two recorder players in the background of the picture of Madame Camargo, by Lancret, in the Wallace collection. This Madame Camargo, who was a celebrated dancer, is accompanied by an orchestra consisting of two recorders, a bassoon, and one or more viols; near her stands a boy with a pipe and tabor.

Where, in either poetry or painting, can we parallel this long line of abstract musical subjects? Sir Joshua Reynolds has given us a picture of cherubs singing in concert, but where shall we find a picture of seraphs reciting poetry? Still more difficult, if possible, would it be to find analogous pictorial subjects, for although painters utilise the mechanical means of music for their pictures, showing the world how seraphim make the music of the spheres, they never utilise their own mechanical processes and show us the seraphim tinting the rainbow in the sky.

When first I began to examine these musically-minded pictures I had an unwelcome suspicion, which has since grown into a horrible certainty, that what these painters loved in music was not its effect, but its production. Why, for instance, did Gerald Dow paint a portrait of himself as a violinist? Was it because he wished to proclaim his violinistic skill to posterity? If so, he would have done better to have had at least one lesson in holding the violin. Or why did Carlo Saraceno, in his picture of St. Francis, let the angelic violinist play above the bridge? Even in an angel's hands the result can only have been excruciating. No. The answer forces itself unwillingly from these pictures: painters use music in their pictures either for its sentimental appeal or else for its attractive setting.

Sometimes painters, dissatisfied with the mere depiction of music being produced, attempt to turn their ears to eyes and paint the music as it passes by. This device, occasionally used by early painters, who appended streamers bearing the chanted word to the mouths of the singers, is the stock-in-trade of every comic artist. If he has to draw a trumpeter, he is not content to show him moist with emotion, but he actually sketches the notes being blown into the air. From the bell of the trumpet there straggles an ill-disciplined crowd of notes, freed from the rules which bound them in the stave—a sort of fancy-dress ball for the notable employees of the great composers. Minims dance in bacchanalian frenzy, their large, vacant faces being supported by frail, semiquavering bodies; demisemiquavers, hitherto chained like Roman prisoners into bands of eight, caper ecstatically in their momentary freedom; sharps, flats, and naturals, who have hitherto waited patiently at the sides of their relentless masters, demand the right to be considered as free and independent citizens of the musical world. Rests there are few, but whoever wanted a rest on Hampstead Heath?

Does, then, the music of to-day possess a visible charm? From the tendency of audiences to drift towards the starboard side of the hall for a pianoforte recital, it would seem that there is some real charm in seeing music made, and seeing music made is more than the fascination of watching nimble fingers—it is an aid to a more complete understanding of the intentions of the player. The poise of a pianist's hands, sometimes a carefully-cultivated affectation, may also be in all sincerity part of the musical interpretation. To hear the Bach-Tausig Toccata in D minor played on a pianola is sufficient to make us realise the necessity for seeing in addition to hearing. Those abrupt questions and ill-tempered answers sound, as played on a pianola, almost ludicrous, but when we see the pianist's hands leap to the interrogation and pounce to the reply, the passage becomes as meaningful as a dialogue of Molière. The pauses between the question and the answer are not, as in the pianoladed performance, the mere passing of time; they are the negation of time by the action of sight.

So, too, a pianist may defer one chord from its exact temporal position in order to give the succeeding chord greater emphasis. If so played by a pianola it would sound incorrect; but when we see it played by a pianist, though it is metronomically wrong, it is humanly right, because the curved flight of the hands suspends, through our sight, the passing of time.

Performers may comfort one another with these words, because they prophesy the perpetual supremacy of the Human over the Mechanical. But, stay! if music-visible is a delight in itself, will there arise a series of filmed concerts? Shall we have the pleasure of watching Coates conduct a silent symphony or Busoni perform an inaudible sonata? Will the future produce a special film star—conductor or performer—equipped with all the filmy graces of gesture and expression? Is it possible that our spectacular executants will desert the legitimate platform for the screen?

None can tell us, but in that last interrogation there is hope.

CREDO IN MOZART

BY MRS. FRANK LIEBICH

It was a simple and concise declaration of faith, that of the musician in Richard Wagner's short story, An End in Paris. On his death-bed his last words were: 'I believe in God, Mozart, and Beethoven.' The tale was written eighty years ago to keep the pot boiling when Wagner was domiciled for a while in the French capital. In the interval that has elapsed since it was printed faith in Mozart has fluctuated. During the latter part of the 19th century the Mozart Society's assemblies and concerts were a trysting-place for lovers of the Salzburg composer. But when a man's works are in public favour societies for the propagation or preservation of faith in him are not required. It is significant that the Mozart Society was needed during the closing years of the last century. Since the Armistice there has been a welcome Mozart revival in England and on the Continent, and Mozart has now an assured place in the modern composer's compendium of belief.

The unceasing exploitation of musical sound and of the unending possibilities of harmonic combinations, together with the adjustment of the various instruments to musical ideas and the consequent newer appraisements of their functions and amalgamated timbres and qualities are often a strain on the hearing even of those who have carefully followed the many manifestations of the development and progress of modern music during the last thirty years. 'The ear sometimes wants rest and relaxation. To none better than to Mozart can it turn for a respite which will refresh and re-sensitise it.

Though he worked in the now demoded and outworn forms and methods of his day, with a harmonic system which has been transcended almost out of all recognition, yet in his elimination of superfluous details, his avoidance of introspection and appeal to emotion, and in his consequent direct and fluent utterance, Mozart is in touch with the best of the moderns.

I remember reading an interesting book by a writer who took no pains to disguise his contempt for Mozart's mentality. He complained that Mozart's music did not compel him to think. And he added that he would acknowledge with gratitude any commentary on any of Mozart's Symphonies that would establish conclusively that its composer had plumbed to their depths the abysses of man's thought. I found myself making thanksgiving that Mozart's work had escaped such spectacled pedagogic treatment, and that he had shown no inclination to peer into abysses which when deep are often dismal.

Yet with all his sunny, child-like simplicity of nature, Mozart possessed a delicate sensibility which was ill-suited to confront the rough usage he was subjected to by the Archbishop of Salzburg and his courtiers; or to bear the poverty and hardships of his later years. Though he often wrote to his father that he could not compose unless he was cheerful, yet even in his happy moods his music reflected sorrow as well as joy. Wistful and regretful as are many of the poetic Adagios and Andantes of his Sonatas, Symphonies, and Quartets, there is no touch of morbidity or passionate resentment or despairing cries such as sentimental persons discover and appreciate in Beethoven.

That most perfect Symphony in G minor reveals a nature tremblingly alive to the most delicate and transient manifestations of the beauty of the world around him. Though free from and unpractised in jealousy and malevolence yet he was sensitive to the finger-tips to the good or bad natures of those with whom he came in contact, and kept sane and brave in the midst of trouble by his delightful sense of fun and humour. The roguish countenance of the Salzburg Hanswurst peeps out again and again in his Rondos and Finales :

'I cannot write poetically, for I am no poet [he says in a letter to his father]; I cannot make fine, artistic pictures, for I am no painter; I can neither by signs nor by pantomime express my thoughts, for I am no dancer; but I can by tones, for I am a musician. . . . I place no value on any man's praise or censure. . . . I continue to follow and express my own feelings.'

It is this straightforward simplicity that sums up the charm of his personality as well as of his music. Beethoven outstrips him far and away as a master of form, and as unrivalled in his generation for structural extension and free and varied polyphony. But he is plastic to his moulds, and when he hammered at the themes from his sketch-book he rapped into them too much of the physical agony endured during the process of composition. He is superb in his volcanic passion; he is the interpreter of the age of a Napoleon; he is in touch with all Romantics, with all the forces that were working up for the late world-war and with much of the heroism that was displayed in it. But with the impersonal modern musician who is removed from cataclysms, personal or universal, he is not so closely in touch.

Eugène Goossens, giving a lecture on 'Modern Tendencies in Music,' in describing the main features of the newest path in musical expression with Stravinsky as an outstanding example, enumerates certain of its characteristics. They are, he said, a forcible directness of both colour and form; a rigid economy of means which eliminates all but essentials; and a concise and intense objectiveness of emotion which relegates traditional practice and dull introspection to the background.

And Stravinsky, quoted in the same lecture, says:

'I want neither to suggest situations nor emotions, but simply to manifest, to express them. . . . Though I find it extremely hard to do so, I always aim at straightforward expression in its simplest form. I have no use for working out in dramatic or lyric-music. The one essential is to feel and to convey one's feelings.'

It is easy to deride the idea of simplicity connected with Stravinsky or with any of those who are termed ultra-modern. The unfamiliar sonorities disconcert the unskilled hearer: were he as familiar with the resources of modern harmony as he is with those of the 18th century, he would recognise that a modern composer can be as direct and simple with the profusion of means at his disposal as Mozart within the circumscribed confines of his straightened harmonic resources.

It is the constant use of labels in musical history which is so crippling to anyone who recognises the unbroken evolution of the art. The terms classic, romantic, modern, induce partisanship and camps for and against. One and all they succeed each other through the ages, and proceed from one another as surely as the musical sounds, which are their material, are derived from and manifested in the natural harmonics of the single note that in itself most probably sufficed to delight the ear of the primitive savage.

Unorthodox as it may seem to say so, nevertheless many a contemporary, if asked to sum up his creed in as trenchant terms as Wagner's imaginary hero, might begin by eliminating Beethoven. With no space left for precautionary defence against the verbal brickbats such a statement may provoke, or for explanatory reservations, yet it is possible to say that he might reveal his affiliations and his modern heretical notions by summing them up in such a concise form as: I believe in Mozart, Schubert—even, perhaps, Mendelssohn.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

That a good many writers on music are well able to handle sport is well known. Mr. Ernest Newman, for example, could turn out a far better report of a boxing match than could most sporting journalists. He frequently draws on the ring for a simile, and bearing in mind the Carpentier debacle, it is interesting to recall that in one such passage written about a year ago he expressed the opinion, supported by technical reasons, that Georges had seen his best days in the ring.

At the present time one of the Sunday papers gives pride of place among its football reports to that written by Mr. Thomas Moulton, an occasional contributor to the Musical Times. The report, by the way, is headed, 'By Thomas Moulton, Novelist and Poet.' There is something very intriguing about this. Imagine a report of a musical festival signed 'Pelham F. Warner, Cricketer.' We can't imagine it, of course. Still, there is at least one cricket reporter to whom we could safely go for a good concert report—Mr. Neville Cardus, who 'does' the game for the Manchester Guardian. I have just read his A Cricketer's Book (Grant Richards) from cover to cover with great delight. A reader of the strict sort, to whom a musical journal must be a musical journal and nothing else, says, 'Maybe; but why drag it in here?' Well, the heading 'Ad Libitum' was not chosen for nothing, and if a writer with a nom de plume borrowed from the musical clown in Twelfth Night, and with 'Ad Libitum' on his banner, may not leave the track when he is so disposed, who may? As a matter of fact, however, there is little 'dragging in' on this occasion; the book is mentioned here because it bristles with musical allusions, many of them very apt.

For example, Mr. Cardus sees Bardsley and Macartney bat, and instead of telling us that the former is easy-going and the latter brilliant, he says:

Bardsley's cricket might have moved to the serene and contented rhythm of the music which is known as Handel's Largo, but Macartney's called for wild and whirling music, some impudent scherzo, and Dukas's L'Apprenti Sorcier would have done.

Speaking of an innings by Frank Woolley, he says: 'It was all cricket that touched the senses as Milton's L'Allegro touches them, or as the Little Night Music of Mozart.'

Various allusions show Mr. Cardus to be musically up-to-date in his responsiveness to Mozart. All who recollect William Gunn at his best will see the rightness of this:

You will find in every pavilion in the country to-day men who speak of Gunn's batting as musicians speak of Mozart. His was the batting of felicity. It was content with sheer grace.

Elsewhere he calls Macartney the 'Figaro of batsmen—Mozart's Figaro.'

Here is a comparison between a bowler of the old Alfred Shaw 'length' school and the Parkinson type of to-day:

When we take a glance at the modern slow-to-medium-paced bowler's technique, and compare it with the technique of a cricketer like Alec Watson, it is like looking from a music score of Stravinsky to one of Haydn. The one depends on its complications—one might even say its chromatic complications—a swerve, 'googly,' and variation in pace and flight; the other is content with sturdy diatonics—a good mechanical length and an off-break as obvious as the nose on your face.

I cannot resist the temptation to make one more quotation. Discussing the methods of the Hampshire run-machine, Philip Mead, Mr. Cardus says:

His batsmanship to-day had a certain freedom ['to-day' was the second day of the Australian match wherein Mead helped himself to about 180 runs—a record for a test match in England; the previous day Mr. Cardus had found his batting slow and ugly], the movements of it suggested to the fancy the movements of the dancing bear in Ravel's Suite, Mother Goose. . . . Elephantine he is, may be, but, like one of the big beasts in the nursery books, he is elephantine with a most likeable agility.

This shows that on the second day Mr. Cardus looked at the right end of Mead; most people find him unattractive because they look at the wrong end of him—or, rather, at what may be called his equatorial region, for his breadth of beam is obtrusive. The beauty of Mead's batting lies almost entirely in his footwork—indeed, more perhaps than any other cricketer of to-day, he may be said to bat with his feet. I am sure that if Mr. Cardus's musical experiences had embraced organ music he would have said that Mead's neat stepping and shifting on that magic square yard at the crease reminded him of a first-rate organ pedallist. If Philip is not a capital dancer, he ought to be.

These extracts—only a few out of many similar passages—remind us in passing of the general public's growth of interest in music and its readiness to grasp allusions that formerly would have been lost on them. Mr. Cardus writes for the games-loving public—perhaps the largest public there is—and the fact that he and his editor take it for granted that references to Handel and Mozart, Dukas and Debussy, Stravinsky and Strauss, will not puzzle the bulk of his readers, is significant. A few years ago sporting similes drawn from the arts—and, above all, from music—would have been blue-pencilled.

Well, I wave a greeting to Mr. Cardus. If ever he and I meet I am sure we shall talk cricket and music till we have to be fairly levered apart. Meanwhile I envy him his job of touring around with the Lancashire team and telling the folk at home all about it, for I don't mind admitting that from the time the first cuckoo clears his throat until the leaves begin to fall my heart's at the wicket, my heart is not here. At a 'Promenade' concert a few nights ago a friend said, as he settled himself down, pipe well alight, to the opening chords of an old favourite, 'Well, "Feste," if you knows a better 'ole, go to it.' A sudden pianissimo forbade a reply, or I might have said, 'I do know one, though its an 'illock rather than an 'ole—the mound stand at Lord's. Give me a comfortable perch thereon, a day in early summer, and a couple of good bats working hard for runs, and the best seat at Queen's Hall has no attraction for me, though the concert be the finest ever.'

Since the above was written I have come across concert notices—very live ones, too—in the Manchester Guardian, signed 'N. C.,' so Mr. Cardus is an even luckier man than I thought. Most of us have to limit our writing to one congenial subject; he can spread himself on two. The moment the bats, duly oiled, are laid up in their winter quarters, he can repair to the concert-room. In May, when most of us have had just about as much public music-making as we want, he can leave us at it, and stroll off to the Game of Games. I wonder if he ever happens to want a deputy during the summer. If so . . .

It was perhaps too much to expect that the singing classes held at the training centres for domestic servants should be allowed to continue without protest, but we looked for a reasoned objection rather than the hysterical screech emitted by the Weekly Dispatch and a few chosen reactionaries. After all, the scheme is a modest one, carried out at a trifling cost. The responsible body is the Central Committee on Women's Training and Employment, working under the Ministry of Labour. The girls remain at the centres for thirteen weeks, during which they receive all-round training in domestic work, at a cost per head of £20. As each girl receives a subsistence allowance of £1 per week, skilful arithmeticians will discover that this leaves about 10s. per week per damsel for running the centres and paying the various instructors. The singing class is an affair of a mere hour a week, so the actual cost of this extra per head for a whole term is less than you and I spend on sweets and/or tobacco in a week.

Such dull things as facts, however, count for little when a newspaper is hard up for a stunt, and the Weekly Dispatch rose to the occasion with large capitals: COOKS MADE TO SING. DOMESTIC TORTURE AT YOUR EXPENSE. SILLY WASTE.

Headlines have to be lived up to, even at the cost of fair play and truth, so in the first half-dozen lines we find this misleading statement:

The Central Committee on Women's Training and Employment is responsible for the innovation. The Committee is under the wing of the Ministry of Labour, which has already provided £50,000 towards expenses.

Towards the expenses of what? The hasty reader, weighed down with taxation and ever ready to be aggrieved, at once assumes that the singing has already cost him £50,000. In fact, I have heard the assumption put forward, not without heat, by taxpayers in the 'Tube. It is plainly implied by the Weekly Dispatch, whereas of course the sum has been spent on the general work of the various branches, and the amount earmarked for music is practically negligible. But the W.D., now well away, cannot be bothered over details; instead, it proceeds to state the case in such a manner as to make it appear even a hardship to the girls as well as to the taxpayer:

Once a week, at the various training branches, the girls are marshalled to the music rooms. Here they are taught to expand their chests, to breathe like a prima donna, to sing scales, and to learn tuneful songs. Whether she be a cook, a housemaid, or a governess, she must learn to sing.

All alike come under the iron heel of the oppressor, and the W.D. clearly scents a dreadful levelling tendency, smacking of Bolshevism, in this herding together and 'marshalling' of the incipient governess and the housemaid that is to be. All the same, it is surprising to find our capitalist press objecting to Anna Maria being taught to expand her chest, seeing that one of the results of the expansion will be increased aptitude for hard work.

The W.D., anxious that we should not regard the protest as a mere Carmelite House stunt, proceeds to give 'some opinions on this new phase of squandermania.' Here they are, and it is to be hoped that the authors realised their fatuousness when they saw them in print:

Lady Rice Oxley (Kensington's Mayoress): I should prefer my own maids not to sing! There are so many more useful things a maid could be taught. The maid's mistress cannot afford nowadays to have her own voice trained.

Perhaps Kensington's Mayoress would prefer that her own maids should not read, or dance, or do anything that is not of practical use to Kensington's Mayoress. But we may safely assume that she does herself injustice. Like some of the other protesters, she appears to think that the girls are being taught in order that they may sing about the house. This of course would never do, though the vocal efforts in the kitchen are hardly likely to be worse than many of those given off in the drawing-room—in fact they couldn't be.

Lady Fildes dismisses the affair as 'nonsense,' on the ground that 'it is not necessary to teach a domestic servant to sing.' When her Ladyship is consistent and lives up to this Spartan pronouncement by cutting off from her own life all the things that are 'not necessary,' her protest will carry more weight. Meanwhile she may be reminded that even domestic servants have a right to some at least of the amenities, especially when they can be given at so trifling a cost.

Mrs. Hudson Lyall, L.C.C., lays about her with a will:

This waste of public money is most disgraceful.
 . . . Why not restrict the training to practical work, such as polishing, cleaning, making beds, and so on?
 . . . This singing and elocution proposal could only come from the pig-headed visionaries who believe that all women should be pampered.

Well, if an hour's singing class per week is a form of pampering, I gladly declare myself one of the pig-headedest of visionaries.

The gem of the protests is from the Principal of the Domestic Workers' Bureau, Ltd. Like Kensington's Mayoress, she (it may be a he, but the protest has 'woman'—not to say 'cat'—in every line), she, I say, too hastily assumes that the object of the classes is to enable the girls to sing about their work. This mistaken impression gives her an opening for a little light badinage, so, after a preliminary and explosive 'Preposterous!' she becomes withering, calling in alliteration's artful aid:

We are being taxed in order to have Carmen from the cook and Pagliacci from the pageboy, Beethoven from the butler and Two Eyes of Grey from the twenny maid.

Roars of laughter! With aching sides we are moved to carry on the good work with 'Charpentier from the chauffeur, Handel from the housemaid, Gluck from the governess, Franck from the footman, Grieg from the gardener, and Thomas Haynes Bayley from the boot-boy.'

However, I was glad to read in the same issue of the Weekly Dispatch that the Committee is quite unrepentant, Miss Lilian Barker, the head thereof, saying that the singing classes will not be abolished even though every newspaper in the kingdom protested. She pointed out, too, that in addition to the recreative side the classes made for efficiency. 'Many of our girls are taken from factories, where they have to shout in order to make themselves heard. Their voices are far too raucous for the home.' The singing helps to produce a pleasant speaking voice—ever an excellent thing in woman—and the gymnastics not only improve the health but lead to a general handiness in negotiating the lares and penates. 'To the male mind it may seem ridiculous,' says Miss Barker, 'but we have many letters from mistresses telling us that the results are highly satisfactory.' As we have seen, it strikes some female minds, too, as ridiculous; but these letters, being based on practical experience of the results of the scheme, merely show that the ridiculousness is in quite another quarter. Groan as we may when quarter-day comes round, there are very few taxpayers among us who will not cheerfully disgorge the few ha'pence necessary for such a human and useful little bit of social work. I hope Miss Barker will stick to her guns in the teeth of all the howling dervishes of Fleet Street, backed up though they be by hordes of wild Gradgrinds with or without titles.

People often ask how Sir Henry Wood manages to keep up his extraordinary freshness. For a good many years he has surely directed more rehearsals and concerts than any other living conductor. Promenades, symphony concerts, Sunday afternoon and evening concerts, with occasional provincial engagements—the mere thought of it all makes us tired. We are told that he has the valuable gift of being able to detach himself from the music as soon as it is over, and possibly that may be the reason for his ability to do three men's share. Yet I have sometimes wondered if there is not a good deal to be said for a busman's holiday as a refresher. At all events, Sir Henry is constantly seen at concerts in the modest rôle of listener, whereas most conductors rarely hear performances other than those they boss. I was reminded of this admirable trait of Sir Henry's at Westminster Cathedral on October 12, when I saw him, a most attentive listener, among the audience at Dr. Alcock's recital on the new organ. Sir Henry was there at the start (6.30), and remained till 7.20. This left him precious little time before Promenading at eight. Is there any other conductor who would rush himself like this for an extra bit of music—and organ music at that? I may add that Sir Henry was seen on the same afternoon at the entrance to Æolian Hall, where Miss Nellie Chaplin was giving an exposition of old dances and music. I don't suppose he came from Chorley Wood so early in the day in order to admire the outside of Æolian Hall, so we may assume that his busman's holiday began right there. Whether he does this sort of thing because he is amazingly young and fresh, or whether he is amazingly young and fresh because he does this sort of thing, are questions worth thinking about by his brother and sister professionals.

The Editor has handed me a batch of letters dealing with my comments last month on the 'Promenades.' As there is not space for these in the correspondence column, he asks me to deal briefly with the main points of a few of them.

Mr. Claude Trevor suggests that if Queen's Hall is so packed in the cheaper parts, a move should be made to the Albert Hall. He does not subscribe to the popular verdict that the Albert Hall is unget-at-able, and adds that, as famous singers have no difficulty in filling it, a fine orchestra should do so quite as easily. But orchestral concerts draw only on the musical public, whereas the famous singers attract merely those who want to hear and see famous singers—which is quite another thing. Moreover, the Albert Hall, admirable for fancy-dress balls and performances by massed choirs or bands, and as a Tom Tiddler's ground for famous singers and prize-fighters, is notoriously bad for orchestral concerts. There are a few spots where an orchestra may be heard to advantage, but there are many more where we get the balance all wrong, and sometimes even hear a ghostly second orchestra hard on the heels of the real one. As these spots are not labelled, you never know what you are in for until you have got it.

Mr. Harold Rawlinson writes a good deal to the point. He thinks that the 'Proms.' have a decided pull in taking place before the amateur performers of all kinds start their winter's work with the local choral and orchestral societies. He is sure, too, that they succeed largely because of the excellent advertising methods of Messrs. Chappell. As an example of intelligent publicity he mentions the fact that every year since 1910 he has received an advance copy of the season's programmes, merely because he subscribed for a season ticket in 1910. (That's the way to catch and retain a public.) On the other hand he has sent many times for tickets for L.S.O. and Philharmonic concerts, but has never received a prospectus of their season. (And that's the way to do the other thing.) He ends by drawing attention to the visit of the Belgian Royal Fanfare Band, as a tragic example of a fine opportunity missed through want of advertising. (This matter is touched on in 'Occasional Notes.')

Another reader is emphatic—even profane—on the absurdity of charging high prices for front seats. As he says, at the cinema you pay extra to sit a good way back where you may see to advantage. But then the cinema is a new form of entertainment, whereas the concert is sufficiently old to have grown a crust of convention. In its early days, when performances were mainly by soloists, when the biggest forces employed were little more than the chamber music of to-day, and when keyboard instruments could do little more than emit a stringy tinkle, a front seat was obviously the one to make for. But why make for it now, in these days of big orchestras and choirs, and thunderous concert grands?

Finally, a letter signed 'Student,' pleading for more cheap seats. He says 'it is financially impossible for us young fellows to attend more than three or four good concerts per year, however keen we may be.' Concerts as a rule have always done too little for 'young fellows.' They can drop into the cinema or the variety theatre on any night of the week, sure of comfort and a good show at a low cost. This 'dropping in' is half the battle. Save in the case of the 'Proms.,' going to a concert means looking up details as to halls, dates, times, programmes, prices, &c. Those of us who live the longest will see the most, but I am going to risk a prophecy that before you and I are ten years older London and most other big cities will have a real music-hall, bang in the middle of things, with a good orchestra, excellent programmes (changed weekly), with light relief in the way of good humorous singers, low prices, cheap refreshments, and smoking. Roughly, it will be an inversion of the so-called music-hall or variety theatre. At these places we find an entertainment on the amusing side, with a little good music thrown in. At our real music-hall we shall have a popular concert with a little amusement thrown in. There you will find 'us young fellows' enjoying a 'Prom.'-like programme, with comic relief, all the year round. Why not? We have a cinema public and a theatrical public, because the cinema and theatre doors are open as the normal state of things. We shall never have a musical public in the same sense so long as concert-going, instead of being a low-priced, easy, and normal thing to do, is a more or less expensive adventure. And when you come to think of it, there is irony in the fact that in a country calling itself musical, you may hear orchestras every night throughout the year, weekdays and Sundays, at restaurants, cinemas, theatres, and variety houses, wasting music on thousands of inattentive folk who are eating, talking, or going out to see a man about a dog, whereas if you want to hear an orchestra not wasting itself, but playing music to be listened to, you are limited to a comparatively small number of evenings and Saturday afternoons in the winter, and to the West-end of London. There's something wrong here.

SOME THOUGHTS ON UNACCOMPANIED SONG

BY GERRARD WILLIAMS

Although unaccompanied song is apt to be dismissed as a 'stunt,' it has very distinct and very interesting possibilities. After all, there is little that cannot be placed in that category if we are so minded, but similarly there is little that will not yield results to serious and sincere effort. It is with this in mind that I shall try to set out the possibilities, limitations, and essentials of unaccompanied song as I see them.

The selection of words for setting is a far more delicate problem than in the case of accompanied song. Not only must they be of the very highest standard—remembering that now, if ever, they will be audible to the audience, and will play an unusually large part in the creation of the atmosphere of the song—but also the choice of subject and its literary treatment are very severely limited. By its nature unaccompanied song seems to me to postulate a reflective intimacy, as though the singer were concerned with his own thoughts alone, not with any 'message' to be delivered to the audience in the conventional manner. Although, by association, words of the folk-song type may to some extent justify their choice, I feel that the ideal unaccompanied song subjects are those which, if years of convention be dismissed from mind, would strike the hearer as unnatural with all the paraphernalia of accompaniment. I believe this limitation is open to some argument; but although it may be slightly widened on occasion, I think that it must in general be respected if the song is to be convincing and avoid all suspicion of pose.

Having obtained suitable words, we are faced with at least equal restrictions in the setting. In spite of all arguments to the contrary, I do not believe that the human mind at its present stage can hear a melody alone qua melody; consciously or unconsciously (most often, of course, the latter) the hearer will supply some sort of harmonic basis, even if this amount only to a vague drone. He may not be able to translate it into actual sound, but it is there as the corollary of his understanding of the tune. Now let us divide melody into three general, but workable categories: the diatonic, the chromatic, and the modal. The broadest diatonic melody can be led off the beaten track by means of subtleties of accompaniment; but without accompaniment the hearer, taking as always the line of least resistance, will furnish himself with an obvious 'tonic and dominant' explanation, and the whole thing will remain commonplace. On the other hand, chromatic melody, by which I mean melody with constantly shifting and abstruse tonality, is dependent upon its accompaniment for explanation; without this accompaniment the mind cannot follow its wanderings, and the whole thing sounds vague and meaningless. There remains the modal type of tune, and here in general I think salvation lies. We can be clear without the risk of sounding commonplace; the tonality can shift constantly yet intelligibly; and there is always the element of freshness and unexpectedness in a well-written tune of this type. In my opinion—and this applies even more strongly if a diatonic or chromatic melody be attempted—the aim should be to define the tonality by the notes themselves, including in the melodic outline the essential underlying harmonies, so that the hearer may not have to fall back on his own 'explanation.' And in the result the tune should be such that if an accompaniment be added this would merely duplicate more or less what is already present in the vocal line, and thus prove itself superfluous technically as well as artistically.

Finally, I think that the limitations are just as strongly present when the possibilities of performance and popularity come up for consideration. By reason of the merciless exposure of every little fault of voice and phrasing, and owing to the absence of any help from an accompaniment in obtaining the atmosphere, none but the best singers, and very few even of these, will be able to carry off an unaccompanied song with complete success. On the other hand, we feel strongly that art of this intimate and reflective character is far better suited to the drawing-room than to the concert-hall; thus we are not likely to have many opportunities for hearing ideal performances in an ideal setting. Nevertheless, I think that very satisfying results could be obtained by amateur singers at home if only they could rid themselves of the conventional idea of 'someone to play accompaniments,' and pluck up the courage to raise their voices unsupported. But their hesitation to do this—and they have my full sympathy!—will, I fancy, prove a slowly-moved barrier to the popularity of unaccompanied song.

Are not these difficulties a worthy challenge to composers, publishers, and singers, professional and amateur, to make of unaccompanied song a thing of art and not a kind of 'precious' freak?

Occasional Notes

Mr. Hamilton Harty's speech at the Manchester Luncheon Club on October 2 has called forth a good deal of strong comment. A reading of the speech in full seems, however, to show that the comments were based on a few widely-quoted sentences. Without their context these certainly sounded a highly provocative note. In fairness to Mr. Harty we print below the main body of his address, as reported in the Manchester Guardian of October 3:

He set himself to answer the question whether the English were a musical people. His answer was that they loved music as much as any nation, but did not always consider it worth their while to cultivate it in a proper way. One of the reasons for the decline since Elizabethan times, when music was a necessary part of the education of a gentleman, was, he thought, the curious unwillingness of the English people to believe in themselves. 'They were too ready still to believe that what came from abroad, bearing a foreign name, must of necessity be better music than we could produce ourselves. Twenty years' isolation from foreign influences would make a vast difference. Free Trade, whatever might be thought of it in commerce, was certainly not a good policy for English music until we ourselves had something to sell.'

If the general public were to blame, our composers were still more guilty. We suffered from a lack of patriotism in music, but if composers would write really English music it would, he thought, help to awaken this patriotism. With few exceptions our composers had not learned the trick of saying really English things in English, instead of saying foreign things in broken French, German, and Russian. It seemed to him that since Purcell we had had only one really distinguished English composer—Sir Arthur Sullivan. He defined the qualities which constituted English music as sentiment and broad comedy, in alternate streaks—like bacon—soundness of workmanship, and a general kindly geniality, with no ostentation. Alluding to Sir Edward Elgar as the most distinguished English composer of the present day, he observed that his music was undoubtedly great, and because of its magnificent strength and nobility it would always live; yet Elgar's serious work appeared to him to be the music of a great religious mystic, and to lack the other qualities which he had suggested as necessary to the composer who would claim to be essentially English.

COMPOSERS WHO ARE TOO CLEVER

When he was reproached, Mr. Harty said, for not producing more music by our younger English composers he had to reply frankly that he considered most of it bad and insincere. He preferred to perform, rather than imitations, works by real French, German, Russian, or Italian composers. All these young composers of ours were full of cleverness and undoubtedly talented, but if he were asked by them for his advice he would say, 'Try not to be clever, but to feel something sincerely about your own country, and then write about it.' Mere cleverness in music was becoming so general that now it might almost be called a curse. It was better to write one sincere, simple English song like Cherry Ripe or Sally in our Alley than to write reams of symphonies and oratorios and operas that had nothing particular to do with English sentiment and English thought.

With much of this there will, we think, be general agreement. No one can listen to a great deal of new orchestral music without being conscious of a fatal defect in the composers' use of lavish instrumental resources as an end rather than a means. Of the novelties produced during the present 'Promenade' season, for example, how many have contained much more than mere proof of the composer's ability to score in a way that makes Berlioz seem a back number? The new works that have shown real creative power could be numbered on the fingers of one hand, and even then there may be a finger or two to spare. But Mr. Harty is mistaken in implying that English composers are singular in the matters of imitativeness and of 'cleverness that might almost be called a curse.' Every other European country is doing its share in the production of brilliant superficialities. Indeed, so far as can be judged from a frequent attendance at concerts and from a perusal of parcels of new works received from abroad, it appears probable that the proportion of vital new music produced is larger in this country than elsewhere.

Mr. Harty is not convincing in his definition of the qualities that make a work unmistakably English: '... Sentiment and broad comedy, in alternate streaks—like bacon—soundness of workmanship, and a general kindly geniality, with no ostentation...' are not peculiarly English qualities, save perhaps kindly geniality and a dislike of fuss. On the other hand the religious mysticism which Mr. Harty finds in Elgar, and which leads him to regard that composer as un-English, is a quality so common in our literature (especially in some of the older and most English of poets), that its presence in any of our music ought to be looked on as natural. And, as a matter of fact, it is so often present as to justify our claiming it as a characteristic. Holst and Vaughan Williams show plenty of it. Another strain of it—sometimes less definitely religious—is apparent in Butterworth, in Bax (in most of the works of a Celtic character, and, above all, in two of his latest—the carols Of a Rose I sing and Mater ora filium), and in Ireland (The Forgotten Rite, and in Obsession and certain other pianoforte pieces). Among the older composers Stanford discovers it frequently, especially in such songs as The Fairy Lough—in fact the more it is considered the more apparent it becomes that mysticism goes as much to the making of our music as of our literature. As to Elgar, a case may be made out for regarding him as a typically English composer even if the test be limited to the qualities set forth by Mr. Harty. Plenty of Elgar's music shows 'sentiment and broad comedy.' Sometimes they are found in the right streaky-baconlike juxtaposition—for example, in the Cockaigne Overture. They are present, too, though somewhat subtilised, in Falstaff and in the Enigma Variations. As for sentiment pure and simple, could more of it be laid out to the square inch than in such things as Salut d'Amour, Carissima, Sospiri, and a few other trifles vocal and instrumental? Even if we admit 'sound workmanship' as a 'made in England' stamp, something in the way of claim might be made out for Elgar!

The fact is, of course, there are as many kinds of English music as there are of English literature and English landscape. It is mere rhetoric to say that a composer does better to write one sincere, simple English song like Cherry Ripe than 'reams of symphonies and oratorios and operas that have nothing particular to do with English sentiment and English thought.' All we ask of a symphony or any other work, large or small, is that it shall be good—a test that we apply to all other art. How many of Shakespeare's finest plays deal with 'English sentiment and English thought'? Surely Mr. Harty would not say that it was better to write such simple and sincere English poems as Gossip Joan or A poor soul sat sighing than stacks of such things as Hamlet, Romeo and Juliet, Twelfth Night, Antony and Cleopatra, and a dozen other masterpieces that are English only in a few anachronistic passages that would not have crept in had the plays been written by a learned Bacon instead of by a mere poet.

There is another side to this question. Mr. Harty speaks of 'the trick of saying really English things in English.' Unintentionally he puts his finger on a weakness that has lately shown itself among some of our young composers—the obvious attempt to make their music sound 'English' by a plentiful sprinkling of certain roughnesses that are characteristic of Byrd and other old writers. So far as these progressions genuinely express a modern composer's idea, of course, their liberal use is justified. Nobody but the composer himself can tell us how far his message would remain undelivered without them. (This shows the weakness of Mr. Harty's denunciation of 'insincere' music. Who is to decide as to a work's sincerity? Sometimes the deciding factor may be the performance. And a composer may be tremendously in earnest, and yet, through some deficiency in the method of expression, fail to convince us of his earnestness. On the other hand it would not be difficult to take a piece of music of a frankly leg-pulling character, and perform it in such a way as to make it sound serious. Finally, what sounds sincere to A, may sound a hollow mockery to B. This by the way.) Clearly, if it is wrong to be merely imitative, the young English composer who tries to show his Englishry by copying old English traits, whether those of Byrd and others, or of folk-song, is no better than the young bloods who reproduce the latest 'sonorities' from Stravinsky or 'The Six.' We do not suppose that Mr. Harty, in using the word 'trick,' meant to suggest anything artificial, but the fact remains that national idiom can be suggested by tricks. The sham-antique and the sham-national are as easily managed in music as in any other form of art.

Mr. Harty's demand for sincerity as the one thing needful may lead him into strange company. A work may be a sincere expression of a person's feelings, but its value will surely depend on whether the person has anything to express worth our hearing. It is not difficult to imagine a piece of music being thoroughly sincere and no less thoroughly bad and commonplace. To put the case in a nutshell, sincere music may be bad but good music can hardly be other than sincere. The qualifying 'hardly' is important, because there are many familiar examples of composers deliberately writing in an archaic style, or in some idiom not their own (and therefore to some extent an affectation), and yet managing to produce a delightful result.

Something new in the way of competitions is promised in the 'Elizabethan Music Competitive Festival,' which will be held at Kingsway Hall on March 2 and 3, 1923. The event falls in well with the Byrd Tercentenary, and the incidence of the two events should give a great impetus to the study of our old music. At first glance it might appear that a syllabus drawn entirely from old music would lack variety. But the very comprehensive scheme drawn up for this Festival proves the contrary. As a matter of fact, many a syllabus of exclusively modern music is less lively. There are classes for choral societies (large and small), church choirs, soloists (vocal and instrumental), and string orchestras. The Festival has an influential committee and a powerful backing. The syllabus is to be had from the hon. secretary, Mr. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2. (A stamped addressed envelope with the request, please.)

'Bristolensis' writes defending his city against the charge that, because it gave the National Opera Company poor support, it is therefore unmusical. He contends that the N.O.C.'s season could hardly be other than a failure, because (1) the advertising was belated and inadequate; (2) Colston Hall is unsuitable for the purpose, and its seats are 'desperately uncomfortable,' and (3) the season fell during the summer, and few people knew anything about it until their holidays were either well under way or definitely arranged. We allude to the matter here, because it is only one of too many cases in which important musical enterprises are doomed from the start by reason of publicity methods that no well-managed business would employ. The recent visit to London of a famous Yorkshire choir was a fiasco simply because it was not properly advertised, and also because the day and time of performance were hopeless for the particular type of concert. Another case occurred so recently as a few days ago, when a Belgian band came to London to give three concerts, partly as an international courtesy and partly to aid our hospitals. Its first concert was given in the Albert Hall, which was half empty. Why? For the good reason that very few people knew of the visit till the band was practically on its way. So far as we could discover, no advertisement of the concert was made, either in the press or by poster. All we ourselves saw was a small paragraph the day before the concert. Now it takes a good deal more than this to fill the Albert Hall. Everybody knows that it can be filled for such diverse attractions as a prima donna, a prize-fight, or even an organ recital (when given by a foreigner). But in each of these cases a good deal of skilful and persistent press work is done first. London is too big and distracted an area to have things sprung on it, and the average Londoner, who works at the centre and lives on the outer edge, cannot be taken by the scruff of the neck and hauled to a show of any kind; he must be interested. The process is apt to be slow, but it is sure. His ear having been captured, all that is necessary is to keep a gentle but firm hold on it, and he can be led anywhere.

A reader sends a letter asking us to help him in finding a magazine that will publish compositions too slight for issue separately. He adds:

I have been trying to find a magazine a trifle lower down the scale than the Musical Times, but so far have not been successful.

On thinking this sentence over a bit, we see exactly what our friend means, otherwise we should be hurt.

Commercial Candour:

GREAT PIANO CLEARANCE SALE

Every instrument guaranteed
FOR TWELVE DAYS ONLY.

Advt.]

From Punch:

Mr. Asquith on the League of Nations:

I saw it was described only this week, by one of the few organs that still render loyal support to its Party, as a wheezing harmonium.—Provincial Paper.

Probably only professional jealousy on the part of the organ in question.

Our tactless reporters:

The preacher at Matins was the Rev. —, and the anthem was 'Ye shall go out with joy.'—Local Paper.

From a concert advertisement:

Violoncello obbligato	...	Mr. Lauri Kennedy
Flue obbligato	...	Mr. John Amadio

Daily Paper.

Mr. Amadio has our sympathy.

The Musician's Bookshelf

Shakespeare and Music. By Christopher Wilson.

[The Stage Office, York Street, W.C. 2. 7s. 6d.]

Here is a thoroughly live book on a subject of great interest—a subject, moreover, which has not hitherto been treated fully, so far as the present writer is aware. The material appeared in the form of a series of articles in The Stage, the last one being published a few days before Wilson's sudden death, in 1919.

Christopher Wilson was well fitted for this piece of research. He was a first-rate musician—he won the Mendelssohn Scholarship in 1895—and most of his work lay in the direction of composing and conducting music for the theatre. He wrote incidental music for practically all the most usually performed plays of Shakespeare, and had some acquaintance with almost every other composer's efforts of the kind. His opinions on the best ways of producing Shakespeare, so far as the music is concerned, are amusingly set forth in the Preface. The result of his wide experience was anything but a highbrow view. He says the ideal method is to take the whole of the music written for a given play by a composer of any period, and perform it as written, with no addition or alteration. But he adds that this method is very rarely put into practice:

'Even when commissioning a living composer, managers try to bring in a favourite number by Arne or Horn, and, unless the composer is a very strong or a very rich man, his musical scheme will be broken by some well-known tune not in the least in the style of the rest of his music.'

None the less he admits that

'A quite good method is to use the best of all the written music and make it into a hotch-potch. This is really a very practical way, and often gives good results.'

He has no patience with what he calls the 'tambourine school.'

'To some people a liberal tambourine part in two-four time denotes 'Old English' music :

(the same figure on the tambourine with the tinkling bells is called "Eastern").'

Was Shakespeare known to Bach? Apparently not, yet one of John Sebastian's contemporaries, Graun, must have had some acquaintance with the poet's work, for he wrote an Overture to Antony and Cleopatra. The author thinks that this is the earliest work of the kind. Unfortunately at the time of writing his articles (1918) it was impossible to get a look at the score, which was at Berlin, presumably in the Royal Library.

Of the many curiosities described in this book the prize must surely go to Sir Henry Bishop's operatic version of the Comedy of Errors. The title-page must be quoted :

'The Overture, songs, two duets, and glees in Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors, performed at the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden; the words selected entirely from Shakespeare's Plays, Poems, and Sonnets. The music composed and the whole adapted and compressed from the score for the voice and pianoforte by Sir Henry R. Bishop, composer and Director of the Music to the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden.'

The amazing thing about this work is that Bishop set no single line from the Comedy of Errors. Instead he drew the plums from other plays—'Blow, Blow,' 'It was a Lover,' the 'Willow Song,' 'Under the Greenwood Tree,' 'Come, live with me,' 'Take, O take, those lips away,' &c. As Wilson says, Bishop's avoidance of the play with which he was nominally concerned is 'equalled only by the manner in which Purcell did not set a line of Shakespeare in his Fairy Queen.' Wilson adds :

'It is not surprising to find that Sir Henry Bishop was knighted (in these days he might get the O.B.E.); but it is odd that he should have succeeded Dr. Crotch in the Chair of Music at Oxford.'

Another curiosity mentioned, by the way, is the fact that in Ambrose Thomas's Hamlet the opera is given a happy ending, the Queen, Laertes, and Polonius all surviving, and Hamlet being crowned King of Denmark. Even 'happier' is the ending sometimes played in this work, one that Sir Alexander Mackenzie told Wilson he had once seen at Paris. In this jolly affair Ophelia marries Hamlet, and the Ghost gives them a 'Bless you, my children,' with melodrama-musical accompaniment. 'It is a dull thing,' says Wilson, 'to be a simple Anglo-Saxon !'

Twelfth Night is so popular a play that it is surprising to find no operatic enterprise taking up Humperdinck's musical version, written for Reinhardt's production at the Deutsches Theater, Berlin, in 1907. Wilson describes it as 'the ideal music for a Shakespearean production, both in form and expression.' We draw on Germany and Austria for so much poor stuff in the way of musical comedy that it seems a pity to let a perfect setting of Shakespeare's most poetic and delightful comedy remain unheard in London. Perhaps Wilson's book will draw some likely manager's attention to this Humperdinck version.

It remains to be added that the unnamed editor of this extremely interesting book has done his work well. He is to be specially thanked for leaving Wilson's work in its originally pleasant and informal style. We are glad to see reprinted by way of preface the memoir of Wilson that appeared in the Musical Times of April, 1919. C. W.

La Musique et les Nations. By G. Jean-Aubry.

[London : J. & W. Chester.]

We live in an age of passports, frontiers were never so many or so bristling, the tendency is all towards the requiring of a visa for the journey from Paddington to Penzance. At Prague and Antwerp, at Carnarvon and Cork, it is any citizen's proudest boast that he speaks a language understood by the least number of his fellow-men. Music for a time lagged behind this merry craze for mutual incomprehension. We are quickly changing all that. In a hundred years' time Bach and Beethoven will no doubt be in the respected position of Cicero's prose, but the contemporary musical productions thenadays will be like Welsh newspapers and Catalan poetry—for local consumption only. Music clearly has everywhere passed under the sway of nationalism, whatever nationalism may be. An eminent virtue it looks in some aspects, but in others nothing but a disease; perhaps it is a question of whose nationalism.

Take an example to show how far we have gone : who in Mozart's day would have dreamed of mentioning him as 'the prominent young Austrian composer'? Mozart was a European musician. But to-day a composer without a specific national label is as awkwardly placed as a traveller without a passport, and anyone in a modern musical company hearing mention, say, of 'So-and-So, a Swiss-Jewish composer who lives at New York,' naturally wonders with blankness of what featureless, cosmopolitan flatness and dreariness must not the compositions of such an one be. Oh, wrongly, no doubt; only that is the way in which the modern mind works, and an art without national features becomes as inconceivable as a race-horse without legs.

Is not England likely to divide again on the lines of the Anglo-Saxon heptarchy? Is not an attempt to be made to restore the lost Gaelic of Cornwall? In Wales they have grasped the root of the trouble, and at the Eisteddfod an opinion on Welsh music is forbidden to all save the Welsh-speaking. M. G. Jean-Aubry is a forerunner of the musical couriers and interpreters who will be commonly needed in the next century to explain the musical idiom of one province to its neighbour. He agreeably takes you on a personally conducted tour of the disunited musical States of Europe—of which England is announced as quite one of the most resoundingly secessionist, musically as passionately set on self-determination as in the pleasures of politics are some smaller islands. He starts with Liszt, the grandfather—as Napoleon was perhaps the great-grandfather—of our frenzied nationalism. That prominent Hungarian spent a long life practically everywhere in Europe save in Hungary. But that is one of the little antinomies of nationalism, like the residence in London of so many of green Erin's fondest sons.

The English reader turns with most curiosity to our author's interpretation of English music addressed to the Frenchman who shows as little aptitude, it seems, for grasping it as for grasping English poetry. Our author is an expert at detecting the salient national feature of any musical idiom from Archangel to Algeciras. Only the very keenness of this detection limits his range of vision. One rather has the suspicion that some quaintness of patois is what these expert interpreters consider the really national feature, and, disappointed of quaint patois, they will pass anything by. Else how could our intelligent author, in a review of English music, relegate to a contemptuous foot-note of four lines Hubert Parry and all his works:

‘... a kindly man whom, in spite of himself, people tried to make out to be a great composer. Framed far less spaciouly, certain of his works of small scope might not be uninteresting.’

And Elgar does not meet the nationalist case either. He is an English counterpart of Saint-Saëns, inclining however towards Brahms, as did Saint-Saëns rather towards Liszt—a strange verdict, will say a reader with a recent impression of one of Elgar’s major works; and these are the French critic’s epithets for Elgar’s music: ‘grave, sévère, ample, ardent parfois, parfois brutal.’ The English reader does not recognise the original in the interpretation.

And again we are a little disappointed in the interpreter when he comes to Vaughan Williams and Gustav Holst. There, we should have said, was the grand chance for the analyst of national art, but M. Jean-Aubry falters a little; he overrates Dr. Vaughan Williams’s sojourn with Max Bruch and with Ravel, and his few words on Holst come some pages later—Holst is coupled with Goossens on the ground of ‘continental origins’! If only all French musicians were as French as Holst is English! But M. Jean-Aubry has appropriate words for several composers, and can especially commend Goossens, Lord Berners, and Arthur Bliss, on the strength of whom he foretells a fresh English expression of comedy in music. C.

The Country Dance Book. By Cecil J. Sharp.
Part 6.

[Novello & Co., 2s. 6d.]

The revival of folk-dancing is now well past the stage when it was regarded in some quarters as little more than a ‘precious fad.’ Some of the most scornful critics of a few years ago are now ready to admit that in this branch of popular art England is well able to take her place beside other countries. The odd thing was that it should have been necessary to convince anybody that a revival of our old dances is as natural and sensible a proceeding as a revival of our old music—in fact, the two are so often linked together that we can hardly take one and leave the other. For example, popular music of the 17th century cannot be discussed without reference to John Playford, and although Playford was a notable music publisher, we think of him first as the author of The English Dancing Master, a work which ran through no less than fourteen editions from its production in 1650 to 1709. Mr. Cecil Sharp’s new book contains fifty-two dances selected from Playford’s collection. In an interesting preface he discusses some of the difficulties met with in reconstructing these old dances, and admits that one or two have so far baffled him. He prints in facsimile Playford’s notation of one of the dances in question, in the hope that some ingenious reader may be able to come to the rescue. The book gives full directions for the fifty-two chosen dances, the music of which is published separately (Country Dance Tunes, Sets X. and XI., for pianoforte solo Novello). Speaking of this music, he says:

‘It is impossible to examine the dances of the later editions without being impressed by the beauty of a large number of the tunes. . . . The volumes themselves give us no information whatever about their origin. . . . I suspect the majority were contemporary airs pressed into the service of the dance by the Playford editors. “The Siege of Limerick” (Country Dance Tunes, Set X.) is the tune of one of Purcell’s songs, “O how happy’s he,” and I cannot resist a suspicion that the same master-hand was responsible also for several of the other triple-time hornpipe airs, e.g., “Dick’s Maggot,” “Mr. Isaac’s Maggot,” “The Hare’s Maggot,” &c. Two of the airs to the dances in this volume were later on used in The Beggar’s Opera—“Of Noble Race was Shinkin” (set to “Nowill Hills”) and “Greenwich Park.”’

We have only to open the two books of dance-tunes almost at random to agree with Mr. Sharp that, whatever their origin, the beauty of many of the airs is incontestable. Like the dances to which they were set, they are thoroughly English in character. If a reader asks how one decides this, the answer is that the test is none the less convincing for being of a negative character, i.e., we cannot imagine any other country producing the bulk of them. It is good to have them as music, but it is even more pleasant to feel that they are once more being used as a medium for the jolly dances with which they were originally associated. H. G.

A pile of books and pamphlets of special interest to teachers may be dealt with briefly, the more so as in some cases the authors’ names are a sufficient guarantee to discerning educators.

The Growth of Music, by H. C. Colles (Clarendon Press, 10s. 6d.), is a reprint of a work that has already established itself as a standard guide. It originally appeared in three volumes, dealing respectively with ‘From the Troubadours to J. S. Bach’; ‘The Age of the Sonata, from C. Ph. E. Bach to Beethoven’; and ‘The Ideals of the 19th century.’ The publishers have now issued the three volumes in one—a stout, handy book of about five hundred pages, delightfully clear and attractive in style. The fact of its being described as ‘A Study in Musical History for Schools’ does it less than justice; it is emphatically a study for lots of us who have left our school-days far behind. Books on ‘musical appreciation’ have poured forth of late. Here is one of the best of them, though it happily bears no such shibboleth on its title-page. Among its helpful features is a frequent use of cross-reference in the text. This, with the copious index to each part, and a synopsis of chapters, makes the book a convenient hunting-ground for data. There are numerous musical examples, some of considerable length.

Percy A. Scholes’s Second Book of the Great Musicians (Oxford University Press, 4s. 6d., gilt, 5s.) will of course find its public waiting for it. Mr. Scholes is an adept at simple exposition, and here he is chatting to the kiddies as usual, and persuading them that music is a tremendously interesting and jolly thing. The composers dealt with are Schubert, Field, Mendelssohn, Wagner, Verdi, Debussy, and Sullivan—a decidedly mixed bag. Variety is further ensured by the interpolation of chapters on miracle plays and masques, oratorios, the earliest operas, organs, military music, army bands, &c. But the result is not a medley, seeing that the chapter on miracle plays naturally leads the young idea on to Wagner a few chapters later. Similarly, Sullivan, the son of an army bandmaster, comes in very well after a discussion on military music (with excellent pictures of instruments). A third book, to complete the series, is under way, the author's preface tells us. I venture to suggest that eventually the three parts be published in one, like Mr. Colles's work, though of course they should be available separately as well.

Leigh Henry's Music: What it means and how to understand it (Curwen, 2s. 6d.), is a pleasant surprise in that it shows the author well able to express himself simply and clearly. There has never been any doubt as to his wealth of information, but so far it cannot be said that he has been in the habit of setting it forth to the best advantage. Here he writes for children, and does it so well that we can only hope he will in future forget that his other readers have ever grown up. Mr. Henry is not concerned here with composers or compositions. He sticks to his title and deals with music in the abstract—its origin and development, and its relation to other arts. This is a difficult job to do unhelped by the human interest of biography or by the variety afforded through illustration and anecdote, and Mr. Henry is to be complimented on his success. The book bears the dedication, 'To my son, Emain.' If young Emain doesn't grow up bursting with sound ideas on the subject, it won't be the fault of daddy's book.

There is more than one way of stimulating a child's interest in music, and what we may call the jam-and-powder system will always be a good one, because it is human and practical. Ernest Austin is one of its most skilful exponents. As a composer of children's music he has long since shown a peculiar understanding of youngsters, and in his book, The Fairyland of Music (Methuen & Co. and J. H. Larway, 3s. 6d.), we see the same quality put to good use in the way of story-telling. The wrapper tells us that:

'... the theme of this very original and entertaining work is the power of music not only to enchant, but to promote whimsical, fantastic, and delightful invention. The book will create and stimulate a child's love for music better than endless music lessons.'

The wrapper might have made its point without the 'endless,' for we are all beginning to see that music lessons of the type usually understood by the term are for the exceptional rather than for the normal child. For the latter, dancing, musical games, listening to music, and other methods of kindling and retaining enjoyment and interest should come first, and set lessons a long way after. Mr. Austin's book is well calculated to fulfil its object, its text being helped out by characteristic little pianoforte pieces to be played by the parent or guardian—who, of course, should be a child of larger growth.

A very ambitious scheme on different lines, though with the same idea at the back of it, is that described in Satis N. Coleman's Creative Music for Children

(Putnam, 17s. 6d.). Mrs. Coleman some years ago came to the conclusion that the conventional idea of musical training of the young—the unprepared plunging of the little victims into a course of lessons on an instrument, usually the pianoforte—was all wrong, because it started not at the beginning but at the middle. She looked back at her own early experiences at the keyboard, and remembered how she was forbidden to play by ear, and how she was 'greatly discouraged and nervous over the complicated feat' of getting her hands in the right position, deciphering the note's place on the staff, finding out its time-value, and striking the right key, all at the same time. Her only incentive and comfort 'lay in the hope that, finally, music would come out of all this mental strain and nervous worry.' But it doesn't always. Don't we all know the youngsters who, at the end of a year of this kind of toil, decide that music is a thing to be hated rather than loved? Only a few days ago I had a letter from a disappointed parent, asking what she should do with ten-year-old Egbert, who had to be driven to his daily task at the pianoforte, although he had started a couple of years ago showing distinct signs of aptitude. Useless to tell Egbert's mamma that he would be better employed listening to gramophone records of good music, and in being allowed to follow his bent for a year or two, whether it took him in the direction of composition, or singing, or picking out tunes on the fiddle—or even the penny whistle! Egbert (who has my sincere sympathy) is to go on at the pianoforte until his present indifference turns to loathing—a poor return for hard money spent in fees. Mrs. Coleman says her own progress started when her first lessons ceased, and she began to play by ear and improvise to her heart's content. She soon found herself reading notes, 'and grew, all unaided, in musical feeling and understanding.' As a result of her experience she says:

'Some singing, some dancing, and some playing seemed to me to be the proper formula for a child's music lesson.'

She found the plan work well:

'Children who had been baffled by the printed page found it easy and delightful to play the pianoforte by rote and by ear, and to improvise, with nothing but the keyboard to think of... And what about notation? I gave it to them when, out of their own experience, they realised a need for learning to read notes, wanted it, and asked for it. Then it was easy.'

But all this is mere preliminary to Mrs. Coleman's scheme, which was nothing less than the development of rhythmic feeling, an elementary knowledge of the laws of sound, and a general perception of the origin and growth of music. How? Not by reading, but by doing, and by doing all sorts of things in which childhood delights. She set her class of pupils to work making instruments, beginning with primitive examples of the drum type, and proceeding videlicet such things as wind instruments made from reeds, three-note keyboards of the xylophone family, musical glasses, stringed affairs produced from cigar boxes, and so forth. The experiment cannot be described in a small space, and those interested must read the book, which is supplied with numerous excellent reproductions from photographs of the young musicians and their instruments. No doubt such a course is impracticable save in very special circumstances, but there seems to be no reason why a modified form of it should not be successful in the average school. The instruments would have to be bought ready made, for one thing. This would be a pity, because much of the value of the scheme lies in the development of the creative instinct. There would remain, however, the stimulation of interest on the musical and historical side, as well as the valuable rhythmic work. All who are interested in the musical training of children, and especially those who have classes of very young ones, and who are not hedged about by too rigid a time-table, should see what Mrs. Coleman has done, and then follow on by seeing how much of it they can do themselves.

Mr. R. J. Pitcher has issued the fourth edition of his Short Treatise on Hand Development, with special reference to his appliance, the 'Techniquer' (The Author, 21, Boundary Road, N.W., 1s. 6d.). This edition includes fifteen photographs, by means of which the reader is enabled to follow the text with ease and to do the exercises with more certainty from the start.

The Cat and Fiddle Book is a set of eight dramatised nursery rhymes for nursery performers, by Lady Bell and Mrs. Herbert Richmond (Longmans, Green & Co., 2s. 6d.). The musical part of these capital little plays is limited to the nursery rhyme round which the action takes place, set for solo or unison singing, with a very simple pianoforte part. A preface gives suggestions as to the production. The playlets are in prose, and the dialogue is spirited, simple, and natural. Here is a fund of entertainment for the forthcoming Christmas holidays.

H. G.

Music in the Foreign Press

BY M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

GABRIEL FAURÉ

The October number of the Revue Musicale is entirely devoted to Gabriel Fauré, and for more reasons than one would be worthy of a special article rather than of the brief notice to which I must restrict myself in this column. It contains, besides a few pages of recollections by Fauré himself, articles on Fauré's personality and career by E. Vuillermoz, on his songs by Maurice Ravel, on his dramatic music by Charles Kœchlin, on his orchestral music by Florent Schmitt, on his chamber music by Roger-Ducasse, on his pianoforte music by Cortôt, on his religious music by Nadia Boulanger, on his outlook on poetry by René Chalupe, a complete catalogue of his output, and a Homage Musical consisting of pianoforte pieces specially written by his pupils Aubert, Enesco, Kœchlin, Ladmiraute, Ravel, Roger-Ducasse, and Florent Schmitt.

As a document on Fauré's activities and on the way in which his works are admired in France, this number is of course invaluable. From the latter point of view, a comparison with what critics of other countries have written and write about Fauré might afford a typical instance of that diversity of currents to which I refer elsewhere in this issue. It will show how very much more Fauré means to French music-lovers than to those of most other countries. Reading through the various articles, we feel that they contain nothing perfunctory, nothing wilfully exaggerated, and that the agreement on all main points at issue, by men so different in temperament and outlook as, say, Kœchlin and Ravel or Vuillermoz and Cortôt, cannot be devoid of significance. Whether the perusal of this number will lead some of the writers who are wont to dismiss Fauré's music somewhat summarily to reconsider their attitude is difficult to foretell. Personally, I doubt whether it is equally difficult to foretell towards which side the judgment of posterity will incline, and should not be surprised if this very number of the Revue Musicale were to be considered as a landmark in the history of the musical world's attitude towards Gabriel Fauré.

BRITISH MUSIC AS SEEN BY A VIENNESE CRITIC

In the Musikblätter des Anbruch (July) Paul Becher writes :

We have heard examples of British music ranging from Elgar, Delius, and Cyril Scott to that of the younger men and of the very youngest, such as Bliss, Bax, Holst, and Ireland. We have been enabled to see how British music has progressed, and under which influences. Elgar—the first modern Englishman whose works found their way here—derives his origin from the German classics entirely. His sensitiveness is that of a Brahms; his orchestral idiom is that of a Wagner, and often that of a Strauss in his youth. The musical tradition of England, as represented in Ethel Smyth's works as well as Elgar's, accrues from Brahms, Wagner, and Strauss. Likewise Delius, another of the founders of the modern British school, is a melodist and a musician of feeling (Gefühlsmusiker), strongly influenced by Wagner. Cyril Scott is under no German influence, but has sought contact with the French impressionists. At times, however (for instance in his songs), he does not steer clear of cheapness. It is in the works of the youngest men—Bliss, Bax, Holst, and Ireland—that we notice the first attempts to create an idiom of individual 'national' colour. Love of tone-colour and utter freedom of rhythm constitute the chief merits—and shortcomings—of these modern English composers. Rejoicing in music-making, eager to achieve striking and bizarre orchestral effects, they sometimes overdo good things. Fancy, wit (more often than humour), a sense of grotesque, spirited characterisation are theirs, and they are adepts in the art of assimilating the most modern tendencies. The German observer will miss several stages in the evolution of British music, which, starting from Brahms, has overlooked the contrapuntist Reger and the new-romanticist Mahler, and leaped boldly forwards to pitch upon the harmony of Stravinsky and the art-spirit of the recent Strauss. For the German listener, this music has a strong exotic charm which appeals to the senses more than to feeling.

BRITISH MUSIC AS SEEN BY A FRENCH COMPOSER

In the Revue Musicale (October) Roger-Ducasse writes :

To-day French music reigns unchallenged over the world. It seems as though the 'Prussification' of Germany had withered her musical soul for ever. England, precise and practical, realises that she need seek no longer what she has hitherto failed to find.

Non-committal remarks on Italy, Spain, and Russia, conclude his swift survey.

A POINT OF FORM IN A KODÁLY QUARTET

In the Neue Musik-Zeitung (August) Dr. Hermann Erpf writes :

In Kodály's String Quartet, Op. 10, the form is the outcome of a technique which was introduced by Schönberg. We encounter no 'theme' out of which 'motives' crop up and are 'worked-out,' but a group of motives which is the original unit. Several brief motives by their combination constitute a first section (Satzabschnitt) which we can discuss as such only by marking the way in which the motives co-operate within it. For instance, in the first movement of this Quartet, Kodály has seven sections, in the sequence a-b-c-d-c-b-a. These sections, however, are not so sharply differentiated as we find them in the sonata form. Here the charm lies rather in the relationships discovered between motives within each of these groups (sic, query 'sections'), and the progressive extermination of contours which were at first clear-cut.

ON EARLY CHRISTIAN MUSIC

In the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (July) A. Z. Idelsohn shows that numerous affinities exist between Gregorian song and Hebraic tunes. Herman Abert examines the early Christian hymn published in Part 15 of the Oxyrhynchus Papyri.

RUMANIAN MUSIC

In Cecilia (October) Henry de Groot refers to the activities of contemporary Rumanian composers—E. Candella, G. Enesco, Stan Golestan, and A. Catargi. Golestan, de Groot tells us, is an expert folk-lorist, who considers that the folk-tunes of Rumania are derived from Indian tunes, and who uses Indian scales in several of his compositions.

MUSIC AND LETTERS

The centenary of César Franck (born December 10, 1822, at Liège) calls forth a leading article of the October Music and Letters (22, Essex Street, 5s.), by W. Wright Roberts, and excellently judicious and readable it is, not straying into sheer idolatry (the Franckian idolatry rather palls on an irreverential generation), but picking out the great things for sounding praise. Egon Kornstein, of the Hungarian Quartet, writes in a thoughtful way on 'How to Practise a String Quartet,' and is much won by the quartets of Bartók, which, of post-Beethoven quartets, have the greatest resemblance to those of Beethoven's last period.

Eugène Goossens discusses 'The String Quartet since Brahms'; but somehow we do not recognise the vivacious, ranging Mr. Goossens under these rather formal observations. Prof. Henry J. Watt's article on 'Rule and Law in Music' is not to be missed by those interested in the philosophy of art. Lady Dean Paul, too, has some pages ('Musings') on æsthetics. 'Life is the interlude between creation and disintegration, and art the expression of man's yearning for constancy.' She takes a line that results in depreciation of Mahler ('who conceived intellectually always and thus gives us vast effigies of philosophy and spiritual memorials') and appreciation of Berlioz. 'The Jonsonian Masque' is described by Jeffrey Mark.

R. B. Hurry writes of the musical life of Shanghai and its symphony orchestra. Adam Carse sketches the history of the bass instruments of the orchestra. Louis Fleury most gracefully carries on his advocacy of the flute—'The Flute and its Means of Expression.' Composers and conductors, note certain of his words of gentle reproach! Yorke Bannard 'corrects a chapter in musical history,' by pointing out that under the Commonwealth music was by no means obliterated as royalist historians would have had the world believe. But this correction was made years ago in Henry Davey's History of English Music. Dr. Grattan Flood discusses the sources of some of The Beggar's Opera airs. In short, a capital number of our distinguished English musical quarterly, which the musical ought to make a point of honour of supporting and disseminating. C.

New Music

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Despite the fashionable chatter in favour of music being 'pure sonority,' 'free from literary associations,' composers are slinging titles about as freely as ever. Soon the supply must give out, and a return will be made to plain Andantes and Sonatas. William Baines has hit on a novel name for the first of his set of three pieces, Milestones (Elkin). He heads it 'Ave! Imperator,' followed by 'Hail, Cæsar!' in brackets. It is a fine, sonorous Prelude, calling for a player good at long shots and extensions. 'Angelus' is a weak treatment of a repeated dominant pedal point in the middle of the harmony. We expect simplicity in a piece bearing such a title, but there should be interest as well. Here there is little. 'A Walking Tune' is far better, full of life and colour. It is difficult. Robert Elkin's The Light Heart (Elkin) is a pleasant and easy piece of no marked originality. The jolly 'Danse du Meunier' from de Falla's Three-Cornered Hat is now available as a pianoforte solo (Chester). Two excellent additions have been made to John Ireland's steadily swelling list of pianoforte works. On a Birthday Morning is a vigorous affair, strong on the rhythmic side (as is usual with this composer's work), and full of the harmonic roughness that makes his music wear so well. Difficult. Its companion piece, Soliloquy, gives us a folk-song-like tune which would have been better served by a more consistently simple harmonization. Out-of-the-way chords tacked on to a simple theme often justify themselves in a movement where the pace is quick, but in a slow piece such as this we have so much time to take them in and think about them that we can't help seeing they are out of the picture. Save for a few of these extravagances Soliloquy is a charming and expressive piece (Augener). Oscar Merikanto has made a double mistake; he has taken a very poor Finnish folk-song, and has written some equally feeble variations on it (Chester). The difficult art of doing a great deal with a very few notes is well exemplified in the Suite of Six Short Pieces by Ralph Vaughan Williams (Stainer & Bell). These slender works run the risk of being laid aside after a try-over by a clumsy sight-reader. 'Skinny! Nothing in 'em,' says the clumsy sight-reader. Let him get them up to the required pace, and he will alter his verdict. The pieces consist of a Prelude (largely in two-part writing), a Slow Dance, a Quick Dance (very jolly), a highly expressive Slow Air in old style, a Rondo, and a Pezzo Ostinato. Apart from its charm, the Suite would be valuable material for study in clean, finished playing.

Two books of Country Dance Tunes—Sets X. and XI.—arranged by Cecil J. Sharp (Novello), though primarily intended for use with Mr. Sharp's book on the dances (reviewed on page 778) are on the whole so delightful that they may well be used as pianoforte solos. They would make capital pieces for marching and drill purposes, being strongly rhythmical, frankly tuneful, and easy to play.

Rather more sophisticated, of course, is Nellie Chaplin's Dances of the Suite (Curwen). The book gives full instructions for dancing the Allemande, Courante, Sarabande, Passepied, and Bourrée. The pleasant music is drawn from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, Playford, and a couple of old French composers. There are some admirable photographs.

Stravinsky's Les Cinq Doigts (Chester) are supposed to be eight very easy pieces on five notes. So they are, so far as the right hand is concerned. But having finished No. 1, the composer seems to have forgotten the limitations under which he had set out to write. In the remainder of the set the left hand has to cover a good deal more ground, even octaves and sevenths, sometimes with intermediate notes to sustain. The right hand part, however, plays up conscientiously by moving only in the prescribed fifth. Is the teacher to play the left hand, or had Stravinsky in view a child whose left hand is about a year in advance of its right? Moreover, there are several rhythmical complications that are quite out of place in elementary work. If the music itself were of any value all might be forgiven, but there is little to be said of such puerilities as these:

Ex. 1.

Ex. 2.

However, many men, many minds. No doubt the out-and-out modernists will rub their hands over the 'reticence' and 'juxtaposition of sonorities' and 'bi-planar harmony,' as per above sample. The reviewer in the Musical Courier, by the way, thinks the pieces are not practical for children's use, but finds them fascinating as compositions, and opines that 'as advanced work they will surely find their rightful place.' The rightful place for my copy is the shelf reserved for curiosities. H. G.

PIANOFORTE DUETS

Apparently the whole of Delius's orchestral works are to appear in the handy form of pianoforte duet. Several numbers have lately been reviewed in these columns, and now comes Dance Rhapsody No. 2, arranged, like its predecessors, by Philip Heseltine. (Augener.) As usual, Mr. Heseltine gives indications of the instrumentation, so the version is also a modified form of full score. The arrangement is not overloaded with notes, and is far clearer and easier to play than most duet forms of orchestral works. Too often the arrangers forget that their job is to give no more than a sketch of the original. A comfortably-playable sketch is of far more practical use than a reproduction calling for a couple of virtuosi.

Alfredo Casella's Pagine di Guerra, however, belongs to the type of work of which anything less than a very difficult transcription is impossible. Here is a duet version made by the composer himself, who spares us none of the acute dissonances of the original. In fact, some of them sound worse on the pianoforte, owing to the lack of that variety of tone-colour which makes all sorts of combinations tolerable—even enjoyable—on the orchestra. A pair of good players could make these five 'Films' (as the composer calls them) very exciting (Chester).

After this hot stuff a collection of six duets, Leisure Hours, by MacDowell, Moszkowski (four), and Poldini, are innocuous, the more so as they are not particularly good examples of the respective composers. The difficulties are mainly in the primo part (Bosworth).

The millions of amateurs who murder Rachmaninov's C sharp minor Prelude will be well advised to sort themselves out in couples and give the work and their neighbours something like fair play by attacking it in the duet arrangement made by Hatherly Wentworth (Paxton). H. G.

SONGS

A distinguished Paris musical critic, writing fourteen years ago in the Mercur de France on 'The Future of Music,' prophesied the advent of the wordless song and of the place in the orchestra of the voice, without any declamation and used simply as an instrument. Both these predictions have been fulfilled, though the instances, as yet, are still exceptional. Egon Wellesz's Aurora (Curwen), for high soprano voice, is the only specimen of this kind in a parcel of many songs. It is an effective wordless tone-picture of dawn, delicate as an aquarelle. In its dim morning light the lark is heard—and more than one echo of Schönberg.

Five songs by Josef Holbrooke (Goodwin & Tabb) are versatile in matter and manner. Caswallawn is finely dramatic. The words are by T. E. Ellis. The vigorous sweep of C. M. Masterman's lines To the East Wind, and the droll Irishry of Alfred Perceval Graves's Dolly, are well reproduced. The Price is a beautiful, richly-coloured setting of a poem by Charlotte Bacon. The pathos of the words of the Old School is delicately realised, especially in the final bars of the Andante and Tempo lento.

Song of Indian Women, by Cyril Jenkins (Goodwin & Tabb), is a beautiful lament, with a richly-harmonized accompaniment.

C. Armstrong Gibbs's Gray and Gold (five songs, Enoch), to words of Helen Taylor, will meet with success by reason of their truth and simplicity. More especially, perhaps, will The Miracle make a direct appeal to an audience on account of the telling effect of its climax. The same composer's settings of two Elizabethan songs (Elkin), In Youth is Pleasure (R. Wever) and Love is a Sickness (Samuel Daniel) are in harmony with the period and the quaint words.

Kaikhosru Sorabji's Trois Poèmes (London & Continental Publishing Co.) are settings of poems by Baudelaire and Verlaine. They give evidence of the influence of the work of the French composers of the end of last century. The setting of Baudelaire's exotic Correspondances is clever but overwrought. The poem, and also that of Verlaine's Crêpuscule du Soir Mystique, are both overweighed by the accompaniments. But in Pantomime (Verlaine) the composer has reproduced the lightness and vivacity of Harlequin as well as the airy grace of Colombine.

G. Francesco Malipiero's settings of three poems of Angelo Poliziano (Chester) are very perfect in balance of words and music. They give evidence of the link between the composer and the great masters of the Italian school of the 16th and 17th centuries, who renounced polyphony, which they said took no heed of words and violated poetry (laceramento della poesia), and who sought to make 'a species of song in which music would be a kind of speech.' And thus it is in these songs of Malipiero. The first, a hymn to Maria nostra Donna, is followed by L'Eco and Ballata. Their charm and cultured simplicity will find many admirers. The words are printed in French as well as in Italian. L. L.

STRING MUSIC

There is little this month that calls for comment. Kreisler has transcribed for violin and pianoforte Cyril Scott's Lotus Land (Elkin), with his usual felicity and grace. Thomas F. Dunhill's Four Pieces for violin and pianoforte (Schott) show a care in the harmonization that is, unfortunately, rather rare in music that does not pretend to classical dimensions or importance. Messrs. Augener have published a slight, graceful Lullaby by Adam Carse (violin and pianoforte), and also an arrangement of Mozart's most popular Minuet for violoncello. A somewhat unequal Trio in A minor, by J. E. Barkworth (Goodwin & Tabb), concludes a brief and not particularly attractive collection.

Mr. Gerrard Williams's Quartet No. 2 (Curwen) shares the main features of his previous work. On the credit side we find a very genuine feeling for all that is new in music. His harmonies are generally tasteful and striking without ever touching the limit beyond which lie oddity and incoherence. This is all to his advantage, for it stamps the music with a certain distinction and individuality. There is, unfortunately, also a debit side which shows a weakness Mr. Williams shares with many another young and gifted composer. Perhaps it is natural that we should all of us in our young days think highly of our own work, of our own witticisms, of our tricks and our repartees. This is probably a sort of shield of defence nature has given us in order lightly to bear adversities—such as hostile criticism—on the way to a certain definite goal. As time goes on and we are either nearer to that goal or else convinced of our own unworthiness, self-criticism becomes a sixth sense and reveals to us what before was hidden. Then comes the wholesale condemnation of 'sins of youth.' In the special case of Mr. Williams it is quite clear that he has not yet reached the second stage, and consequently over-estimates now and then the value of certain idioms, such as the phrase which appears at No. 4 in the first movement of the Quartet. The little episode is not of a piece with the rest, and mature judgment would either alter it or obliterate it altogether. But the general impression of the work does not by any means suggest immaturity. All that he needs in order to achieve something really striking is to cultivate the habit of ruthlessly slaughtering ideas and intentions which he feels to be at all below his best, the habit of probing his music so

That the probation bear no hinge or loop
To hang a doubt on.

Therein lies the secret of success.

B. V.

ORCHESTRAL SCORES

The second of the two Suites put together by Gustav Holst from Purcell's The Gordian Knot Untied, has just been published by Novello. Like the first Suite, it may be played by strings alone (the original version), the wind parts added by Mr. Holst being so arranged that any (or all) of them may be used with good effect. There are three movements—a Chaconne (a splendid example of Purcell's treatment of one of his favourite forms), an Air, and a Minuet. Nothing could be better for school orchestras and amateur bands than these Suites.

Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb have just published miniature full scores of Parry's Symphonic Fantasia (played at the Leeds Festival) and Holst's The Planets. The production is clear in the simpler pages, but blurred in the more complex. Evidently the print has been made from a photographic reduction—a method that is apt to fail when the score is very full. However, as miniature scores are used mainly for more or less leisurely reference, the drawback is not serious. Musicians will be so glad to get a handy score of The Planets, that an occasional haziness won't worry them. H. G.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

No more enjoyable orchestral record than that of the H.M.V. of the Bartered Bride Overture has so far come my way. The players are the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Eugène Goossens. The clearness and precision of the bustling fugal work by the strings is first-rate, and the whole record is an achievement (12-in. d.-s.).

A selection from A Princess of Kensington, played by the 1st Life Guards Band, is well reproduced on a 12-in. d.-s. (Æ.-Voc.). From the same Company comes a 10-in. d.-s. of Leslie's May Breezes and Titt's Serenade, played by the Regent Symphony Orchestra—a very clear reproduction of commonplace music.

Only two chamber music records call for notice, and both are excellent. An Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.-s. gives us the London String Quartet in the third and fourth movements of Mendelssohn's Op. 12. (The first and second movements drew admiring comments in last month's notes.) The Catterall Quartet is heard to great advantage in the Minuet from Glinka's Quartet in F, and in a quaint and pleasant movement, 'The Little Girl and the Old Shepherd,' from Herbert Howells's Lady Audrey's Suite (H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s.).

Remembering Mrs. Gordon Woodhouse's delightful harpsichord records, made a couple of years ago, it is good to hear her again. She returns with the opening movement of Bach's G minor English Suite, and everybody's old friend the so-called Harmonious Blacksmith air and variations (H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s.). The recording is better than in the previous harpsichord examples, being more distinct. Even so, users must be prepared for a good deal less power than a pianoforte record gives. No doubt the harpsichord imparts the right flavour to this old music, but we wonder whether the gain in this way makes up for the loss of tone and variety obtainable from a pianoforte.

We have some light on this in the next record that comes to hand. On one side is Mark Hambourg playing a couple of pieces by Couperin—Le Carillon de Cythère and Les Barricades Mystérieuses. No doubt the tone is too big and full for this delicate music, but the gain in clearness and audibility is a good offset. After all, we want to be able to take in music without having to prick up our ears all the time. The other side of this record provides a vivid contrast—Ravel's Ondine. It is a capital reproduction of a fine performance.

The violoncello is so telling and popular an instrument for solo purposes, that we are surprised at the comparatively small number of its records. Here is a first-rate example (Æ.-Voc. 12-in.) of Warwick Evans playing a Serenata by Toselli and Jensen's Murmuring Breezes, with pianoforte accompaniment, by Ethel Hobday. The tone of the violoncello is very rich, especially in the Jensen, and the balance between the two instruments is unusually good in both pieces.

A brilliant little affair is Heifetz's playing of Kreisler's version of Paganini's Caprice No. 13 (H.M.V. 10-in.).

The H.M.V. Company has issued three operatic vocal records, two first-rate and one poorish. The latter is a 10-in. of Marcel Journet singing 'Enfants, je ne vous en veux pas' from Saint-Saëns's Ascanio, with far too much wobble and roughness. Michele Fleta is passionate in 'Giulietta! son io!' from Zandonai's Romeo and Juliet, and shows, as usual, great range and a fine command of nuance (12-in.). Giovanni Martinelli is light, bright, and telling in 'È un riso gentil' from Leoncavallo's L'Zaza (10-in.).

Splendidly sonorous is a 12-in. d.-s. of Robert Radford (H.M.V.). The songs are 'If I were prince,' from Prince Igor, and Flégier's I love to hear the horn. The former is as good as the second is poor and pretentious. Flégier's song seems to be having quite a vogue lately. Yet it belongs to that large and feeble family of which The Diver is a familiar specimen. Radford sings it so well that we forget its weakness. His resounding low E flats will set all the young domestic baritones draughtily plumbing the depths.

Chaliapin at his most fervid is heard in Malashkin's O could I but express in song (H.M.V. 12-in.). Again the singing is far better than the song.

'Chant Hindou,' from Sadko, feelingly sung by Rosing, is recorded on an Æ.-Voc. 12-in.

The faded 'Una voce poco fa' is sung by Celys Beralta, who, fluently as she fireworks her way along, does not succeed in convincing us that it was what Americans would call a worth-while job (Æ.-Voc. 12-in.). Both the two last-named records have explanatory notes on the reverse side.

Three Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.-s. provide material for a miniature ballad concert. No more than the bare names of singers and songs need be given: Carrie Tubb (Oliver's The Nightingales of Lincoln's Inn and Down Vauxhall way); Malcolm McEachern (Hamblin's The Rolling Stone and Monk Gould's The Curfew); and Captain H. E. Stevens (two revivals—The Bandolero and The Trumpeter).

A perverse taste makes me lay these aside in favour of a couple of fox-trots—Do it again and Stumbling—played by Yerkes S.S. Flotilla Orchestra and Bar Harbour Society Orchestra (Æ.-Voc. 10-in. d.-s.). They are capital fun, and a musician may get more real entertainment from the rubato and mock sentiment (I presume it is mock) of the first, and the comic noises of the second, than from heaps of songs labelled 'comic.' Not a bad test is the effect on the small daughter of the house, who punctuates Stumbling with gleeful noises, and encores it. So we do it again, with assumed reluctance.

The West Middlesex Musical Society gives its first concert at the Victoria Hall, Ealing, on November 15, at 8 o'clock, when Coleridge-Taylor's A Tale of Old Japan will be performed, in addition to orchestral items and unaccompanied part-songs.

SIR CHARLES SANTLEY

1834—1922

There is a well-known story of the man who boasted that he had conversed with the great Duke of Wellington, and on inquiry it turned out that the conversation was limited to the Duke having told him, with a curse, to get out of the way. My only personal contact with Santley was something of the same kind, though of a less objuratory nature, for I remember how (when a youth, ardent to hear as much music as possible) I was smuggled up on the steps leading to the concert-platform, and caused Santley as he passed to make some good-humoured observation on boys getting in the way. My first opportunity of hearing him came in 1876, when he was forty-two, and in his prime. It was at a Philharmonic concert in the lamented St. James's Hall, conducted by the immaculate Mr. Cusins, whose cuffs were more brilliant than his interpretations, and whose position as conductor of the chief London symphony concerts afforded a striking commentary on the state of orchestral music in this country before the advent of Richter. Equally suggestive was the choice of Santley's songs, which on this particular occasion were Gounod's There is a green hill far away, Mendelssohn's The Shepherd's Lay, and Hatton's To Anthea. The last I remember well, for it was a characteristic performance. Up to then he had not roused me, but when he began this stirring song he gave it a passionate expression that was quite intense, and made me feel that he had been saving up for this effort—which was, of course, encored. This was typical: he would often begin a concert with a certain reserve, waiting for the supreme moment, when he would let himself go and shake off a curious huskiness that frequently troubled him. This Philharmonic concert was in June, and in the following November I heard him for the first time in opera. It was at the Lyceum Theatre, where the Carl Rosa Company was having a season, and gave The Flying Dutchman for the first time in English. Santley had sung in it at the Italian Opera in 1870, when, according to his Reminiscences, it was not brought out till ten days before the close of the season, and played to very poor houses. He knew, however, that the part of Vanderdecken would suit him well, nor was he mistaken. He tells us, indeed, that it was only the prospect of playing this part again that induced him to accept the engagement, and that this, the first appearance of any of Wagner's operas in English, was a success, both artistically and financially. I witnessed the performance from standing-room at the back of the pit, and youth and enthusiasm sustained me to the end. It was a part after Santley's own heart: he had just the right touch of the romantic and picturesque in him to do it justice, and his personality suited it, for he had an air of grave distinction that became the character well. But it did not convert him to Wagner's methods, and in the same Reminiscences—which are franker and more sincere than most of their kind—he makes the same complaint so often uttered by vocalists ever since Grétry's time, that the composer put the statue in the orchestra, the pedestal on the stage. I always regretted I never heard him in Don Giovanni, for he must have made a striking figure as the hero, and Mozart's orchestration would not have embarrassed him—though in Mozart's time it was considered to 'overpower the voices'!

(Continued on page 792.)

ANTHEM FOR CHRISTMAS

Isaiah xlix. 13; lli. 9; ix. 6; Luke ii. 11;

Verse, Bishop PHILLIPS BROOKS

Music by ALFRED HOLLINS

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro con spirito. ♩ = 132

f Gt. 8 & 4 ft.
Sr. 8 ft. Reeds coupled

Gt. to Ped.

SOPRANO

Sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth; and break forth in - to sing - ing, O

ALTO

Sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth; and break forth in - to sing - ing, O

TENOR

Sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth; and break forth in - to sing - ing, O

BASS

Sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth; and break forth in - to sing - ing, O

f mf moun - tains: for the Lord, the Lord hath com-fort-ed His peo - ple; He hath re - dim.

mf moun - tains: for the Lord, the Lord hath com-fort-ed His peo - ple; He hath re - dim.

mf moun - tains: for the Lord, the Lord hath com-fort-ed His peo - ple; He hath re - dim.

mf moun - tains: for the Lord, the Lord hath com-fort-ed His peo - ple; He hath re - dim.

mf moun - tains: for the Lord, the Lord hath com-fort-ed His peo - ple; He hath re - dim.

deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem. Sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth;

deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem. Sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth;

deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem. Sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth;

deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem. Sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth;

sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth; for the Lord, the Lord hath comfort-ed His sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth; for the Lord, the Lord hath comfort-ed His sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth; for the Lord, the Lord hath comfort-ed His sing, O heav'ns; and be joy - ful, O earth; for the Lord, the Lord hath comfort-ed His peo - ple; He hath re - deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem, He hath re -

peo - ple; He hath re - deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem, He hath re -

peo - ple; He hath re - deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem, He hath re -

peo - ple; He hath re - deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem, He hath re - deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem.

deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem.

deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem.

deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem.

Ch. 8 & 4 ft.

senza Ped.

mf For un - to us . . a mf For un - to us . . a Child is born, for un - to us a mf For un - to us . . a Child is born, a mf a mf Gt. reduced

Ped.

cres. poco a poco Child is born, for un - to us a Child is born, A cres. poco a poco Child is born, for un - to us a Child is born, A cres. poco a poco Child is born, for un - to us a Child is born, A cres. poco a poco Child is born, for un - to us a Child is born, A increase Gt.

Allargando*marcatoTempo 1mo.

Sa - viour, which is Christ the Lord. For

Sa - viour, which is Christ the Lord.

Sa - viour, which is Christ the Lord. For un - to us . . a

Sa - viour, which is Christ the Lord.

AllargandoTempo 1mo.mp Sw. 8 & 4 ft. without Reeds.*

un - to us . . a Child is born, is born, . . . for

For un - to us . . a Child is born, for Child is born, for un - to us a Child is born, for a Child is born, for cres. poco a poco

un - to us a Child . . is born ; A Sa - viour which is

cres. poco a poco

un - to us a Child . . is born ; A Sa - viour which is

cres. poco a poco

un - to us a Child . . is born ; A Sa - viour which is

cres. poco a poco

un - to us a Child . . is born ; A Sa - viour which is

Allargando

ff. increase Sw.

ff rit. marcato

Christ the Lord . . . Sing, O heav'ns ; and be joy - ful, O earth ; and break

rit. marcato

Christ the Lord . . . Sing, O heav'ns ; and be joy - ful, O earth ; and break

ff rit. marcato

Christ the Lord . . . Sing, O heav'ns ; and be joy - ful, O earth ; and break

ff rit. marcato

Christ the Lord . . . Sing, O heav'ns ; and be joy - ful, O earth ; and break

Tempo 1mo.

ff rit.

forth in - to sing - ing, O moun - tains : . . for the Lord, the Lord hath mf

senza Ped.

cres. f

com - fort - ed His peo - ple ; . . He hath re - deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem.

cres. f

com - fort - ed His peo - ple ; . . He hath re - deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem.

cres. f

com - fort - ed His peo - ple ; . . He hath re - deem - ed Je - ru - sa - lem.

cres. f

Ped.

f

Sing, O heav'ns ; and be joy - ful, O earth ; sing, O heav'ns ; and be

f

Sing, O heav'ns, sing, O heav'ns ; be

f

Sing, O heav'ns, sing, O heav'ns ; be

marcato

For un - to us . . a Child is born ; be reduce (ft. slightly)

The image displays a musical score for the hymn "The First Noel." It includes four vocal staves (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "claim the ho - ly birth, And prais - es sing to God the King, And peace to men on earth." The score is marked with "Poco lento" and "fff" (fortissimo). The piano part features a prominent bass line with chords and a melodic line in the right hand.

claim the ho - ly birth, And prais - es sing to God the King, And peace to men on earth.

claim the ho - ly birth, And prais - es sing to God the King, And peace to men . . on earth.

claim the ho - ly birth, And prais - es sing to God the King, And peace to men . . on earth.

claim the ho - ly birth, And prais - es sing to God the King, And peace to men . . on earth.

Poco lento

Digitized by Google

(Continued from page 791.)

For many years Santley was a constant figure at our musical festivals, and the quartet of principals, 'Albani, Patey, Lloyd, and Santley,' became quite stereotyped. With one exception he sang at all the Leeds Festivals from 1858 to 1886. (That of 1858 was his first festival engagement: Birmingham came three years later.) The exception was in 1880, when he had a disagreement with the Leeds committee. According to the official history of the Festival, his terms of two hundred and fifty guineas for the entire Festival—consisting of eight concerts—had been accepted, but it was found his services would not be required for the eighth concert, on the Saturday night, so the committee, taking the business view of the transaction to be expected in a commercial community, proposed to reduce his fee to two hundred guineas, which he curtly, and not unnaturally, declined to consider. He took part in the first performance of Macfarren's Joseph in 1877, and his King David in 1883, and in each case the composer laid great stress on his co-operation. In 1886, at his last appearance at a Leeds Festival, he sang in the first performance of Bach's B minor Mass at a provincial festival. But as an oratorio singer his name will be inseparably linked with Mendelssohn's Elijah. Those whose memories carried them back to the first performance in 1846 (there cannot be many left now!) have naturally sworn by Staudigl, the original representative of the Prophet, but in our own times no one has quite come up to Santley's interpretation. His noble style, his fine declamation, and, above all, the fire he could put into his singing, made his impersonation memorable. According to his custom, always—and especially in his later years—did he create the impression that he was saving himself for Is not His Word like a fire? to which he gave a really inspired interpretation. The nervous habit which caused his music to shake in his hands occurs to memory here; it was a part of his nature, but it had an unfortunate effect in that it detracted from the general impression of dignity and power left by his singing. The charm of his ballad singing should not be forgotten—the raciness of Father O'Flynn, and the unctuous humour of Simon the Cellarer, are instances which, after a good many years, are still unfaded. The impressions left by an executive artist are necessarily fleeting: they linger in the memory of his survivors, and at length become only a tradition; but those of Santley, as one of our greatest singers of the 19th century, will not readily be forgotten.

HERBERT THOMPSON.

London Concerts

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS

It cannot be said that the Promenade novelties this year have been very thrilling. Only one work in the last month has been really of the first class, and that came two days before the end of the season.

We begin on September 26 with Alfred Wall's Thanel, a plucky attempt to express the spirit of jollity-cum-romance of the Londoner by the sea. This is cheery music, that runs along trippingly enough. It reminds one a good deal of Cockaigne, but there is no great harm in that. The chief trouble is that nothing of real note grows from out the themes. They are branches, not roots.

The Englishmen have had the bulk of the 'first performances.' Only one French novelty has been heard—Roussel's For a Spring Festival. It has all the orchestral cleverness we expect from to-day's composers; also, there is some meat in it. It is in one-movement symphonic form, compact and symmetrical, with the slow section sandwiched in between two parts of a Scherzo. The lively sections, rhythmical and brilliant, go off with excellent effect. Only when he comes to the slow movement is the composer at a loss for something vital to say. That seems to be the weak spot in nearly all new works from over the water. Dr. Malcolm Sargent, whose Nocturne and Scherzo were heard the next day (October 4), succeeded better; in his first piece, because he attempted less. He is not afraid to give us plenty of tunes, and to treat them lusciously. He causes us no concern, and pleases by the high spirits he puts into his work. The Scherzo went 'with a bang,' not a little of its effect being due to the tremendous energy of the young conductor, who bestrode the whirlwind in fine style.

In place of the Bliss Oboe Concerto, which was down for October 12, we had three Miniatures for that instrument by H. Greenbaum, under the title of Parfum de la Nuit (why a French title, by the way?). The Nature spirits that watch over the flowers at night have a language of perfumes, which Mr. Greenbaum attempts to translate for us. Their songs and thoughts have produced music delicate, somewhat piquant, often sketchy, and rarely coherent. Some of the perfumes might be described by another name. Mr. Léon Goossens played the pieces with the artistry that places him among the very finest of our instrumentalists.

Among the very best works heard this season is Arnold Bax's Symphonic Variations for pianoforte and orchestra, played on October 18. The variations are entitled respectively 'Nocturne,' 'Strife,' 'The Temple,' 'Scherzo,' and 'Triumph,' with an intermezzo 'Enchantment,' occurring between the last two. Here is beauty peculiar to Bax, originality that is strong enough to create, and the deep mystical feeling that makes his work, at first apparently so complex and elaborate, perfectly satisfying and clear when you have got to the heart of it. There is a reserve and subtlety in it that charms and delights. Miss Harriet Cohen was the splendid interpreter of these lovely thoughts.

Latest of the novelties is a Fantasy, Promise, by Miss Ethel Scarborough, a composer with whom this is, for most of us, the first acquaintance. It has as motto a saying of Emerson's: 'Every promise of the soul has innumerable fulfilments.' I wish Miss Scarborough had decided more definitely, when she began her work, just what sort of fulfilment she wanted. The music is turgid, and depends a good deal on naïve and obvious sequence. It goes on and on for quite a long time, and we seem no nearer the end. That does come at last, and, as the programme so sweetly tells us, 'the motives of Fate and Fulfilment are united in a perfectly satisfying combination.' Well, if Miss Scarborough is satisfied, that's the main thing. But I hope her next promise will not turn out quite so pie-crusty as this.

A word of thanks to Sir Henry Wood for giving us several performances of recent, but not brand-new, British works of real value—Ireland's Symphonic Rhapsody (a fine, strong work, that one likes better each time it is heard); three of Holst's ever-welcome Planets (but we should like still better to hear the lot); the beautiful miniature for strings by F. Lawrence, Tristis; Frank Bridge's impression of Summer (a very clever essay in the objective-contemplative mood); and Gerrard Williams's fragrant Pot-Pourri—all worthy and welcome items.

W. R. A.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERT

The Symphony was Schumann in D minor and the Concerto Beethoven in E flat, at the first of the Saturday afternoon Symphony Concerts at Queen's Hall. Mr. Herbert Howells and his Procession came after these and various other things, what time the ear was rather tired and unjust. The orchestra had given signs of becoming tired some time before, but then this was its sixth full dress concert that week, and perhaps one needs just to have had a holiday to take a vivid interest in the Emperor Concerto. Young M. Mitja Nikisch, the soloist in this immortal work, had no doubt just had a holiday, or rather is at the happy age when all life wears a holiday freshness. Anyhow, his playing pleased. There was the happiest balance between youthful freshness and adult musical understanding. He is a strong, able pianist; others are more scintillating, none more agreeably sane. He so has the root of the matter (music) in him, that one says surely he will not always go on being merely a pianist. He did everything right (oh, a few of the keys were accidentally brushed at times, but that did not matter); still 'more power to his elbow' is not the appropriate salutation.

Schumann's Symphony: Did the performance wear some sort of apologetic air, or was it our fancy? We were ungrateful, indeed, if we weren't glad to welcome so dear, nice, neglected an old friend. There is no reason why the Schumann Symphonies should not share equally the popularity of the four of Brahms. The faults of Schumann's orchestration are too old a tale; the simplest of us know that our masterful conductors to-day do exactly what pleases them with the scoring of the ancients. C.

SYMPHONIES FOR THE EAST END

The British Symphony Orchestra, under Dr. Adrian C. Boulton, gave the Flying Dutchman Overture, Schubert in B minor, and Vaughan Williams's Wasps music to its Stepney audience at the first of the People's Palace symphony concerts. No wonder that Dr. Boulton and his friends like going to the East End. What a delightful audience to play to! The question was, Did they know the tunes of the Unfinished (from indulgence perhaps in the 'cinema'), or did they drink them in naturally, first go? Anyhow, Schubert meets the case of Stepney's taste to perfection. Will anyone in north, south, east, or west confess to the depraved and hideous taste that Schubert does not meet? Hearing Schubert, all men are brothers. Naturally M. Leff Pouishnov's superb execution of Rachmaninov's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor was a little more applauded still. It was felt proper to acknowledge such stupendous labours directed towards one's entertainment. There was immense wonder at this frail young man's uncanny powers of endurance, and every invitation was extended that he should do it all over again. It is sad that the financial question precludes any more than three symphony concerts this autumn at the People's Palace. C.

THE L.S.Q.

The concert of the London String Quartet at Æolian Hall was mainly notable for the first performance of Mr. Waldo Warner's new quartet Suite. It consists of a series of brief sections, every one of which is concerned somehow or other with an aspect of the fairy world. Each of these movements bears evidence of Mr. Warner's deftness in handling string instruments. Indeed, as an essay on the resources of 'the quartet' and its suitability to fairy-like effects, the work is remarkable. Yet even though not the best of us can claim so much as a nodding acquaintance with fairies, we have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Warner's music does not do anything like justice to those ghosts of children's imagination. His touch is clever, but not light and delicate; his fairies are the fairies of the Christmas pantomime, not the fairies of the dream world. His music would be most suitable as an aid to stage action—it cannot alone kindle the imagination of the listener. And the audience of Æolian Hall made no mystery of its preference for the one episode in which the fairies are disturbed by the robust song of 'a mortal'—a capital, friendly, unsophisticated tune which more than held its own against the music of the supernatural beings. The new work had a most finished performance from the composer and his colleagues, Messrs. Levey, Petre, and Warwick Evans. B. V.

THE MUSIC SOCIETY

The Music Society (which should change its name so as to avoid confusion with the British Music Society) is doing good work by providing interesting and enterprising programmes under pleasant conditions (smoking allowed), at a time convenient for many people who are occupied during the day and do not want to come out in the evening, and in a place easily accessible to those of them who are in business in the City or the central parts of London. The time is 5.30, and the place the Hall of the St. John's Institute, Tufton Street, just behind Westminster Abbey. The subscription is two guineas for six concerts, but—'professional musicians and composers can obtain a pass for any concert by sending in a request, with a stamped and addressed envelope, to the secretary.'

At the opening concert of the season (October 17) Ernest Bloch's Pianoforte and Violin Sonata received its first performance in England (the composer's String Quartet was heard at one of the Society's concerts late in last season, and his rhapsody, Schelomo, for violoncello and orchestra, at a Promenade concert a few weeks ago).

The first (Agitato) movement of the Sonata is possibly the best; it expresses a mood of intense striving. The second (Molto quieto) begins beautifully, but goes on too long. The third sounds like nonsense. Both first and third take too long to get under way; Bloch seems to have a knack of over-preluding. There is power in the work, but one longs for cleaner and more definite construction. The composer appears to have gifts—but not that power of self-criticism (all his works seem unequal), nor that of a sense of humour (all seem heavily serious). The performers were Yvonne Arnaud (the leading lady in Tons of Money—also a very competent pianist) and Jelly d'Aranyi. They did the work justice. P. A. S.

WILHELM BACKHAUS'S RECITAL

Herr Wilhelm Backhaus played the pianoforte at the Albert Hall after a long absence occasioned by the events of 1914-19. He is no longer quite the pale and languid youth à la Burne-Jones of yore, but his remarkable dexterity at the keyboard has in no wise deteriorated, and of this the audience showed warm approval. But while such a virtuoso has every reason to place the highest value on his services, was he wise in making his reappearance in a hall less suited to pianoforte playing than to any other musical enterprise? Echo, that mocking nymph, gave us Backhaus's left-hand effects over again with obstinacy, and it became a puzzle how anyone could listen to Chopin, Liszt, or even Pick-Mangiagalli in such conditions for the pure fun of it. It would have been far more satisfactory to stop at home and play Herr Backhaus's selections for oneself on the pianola.

C.

LONDON CONTEMPORARY MUSIC

This (the London) Branch of the British Music Society is now constituted in addition as the 'British Section of the new International Society for Contemporary Music' (the Society born at Salzburg during the Summer Music Festival).

At the first meeting of the season, held at the new headquarters (6, Queen Square, Bloomsbury) on the evening of October 17, there were performed a Pianoforte Quintet (The Masque of Fear, founded on Edgar Allan Poe), by Dr. Cecil Hazlehurst, which was quite effective; a Pianoforte Quintet, Dance Fantasy, by Cliffe Forester (which was rather dull); a Pianoforte Quartet by Alfred M. Wall (long and unoriginal); and a String Quartet by Ernst Krenek (Miniature score, Universal Edition, 4s.). The last makes abundant provision for highbrows, being nothing less than a collection of a large number of short sections each occupied with its own little exhibition of harmonically reckless but cleverly contrived neck-or-nothing counterpoint. Probably this work will be useful in the year 1932 as a series of technical examples of the would-be Mus. Docs. of that day, but much of it is but crusty provision for a concert audience. It is very difficult, and the McCullagh Quartet did wonders with it. In the other works they were joined first by Dr. Hazlehurst, and next by Mr. Josef Holbrooke.

P. A. S.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Feodor Chaliapin sang twice. Perhaps with not full ease at the Albert Hall; the second time, at Queen's Hall, supremely well. But I have to acknowledge that since the Boris of 1913 I admire this man nearly to the point of idolatry. This fair-haired giant who croons lullabies to us or hurls at us thunderbolts of song has strayed into our century from the age of sagas. Wasn't he, you say, made for some grander end than singing? Anyhow, as selfish mortals, we thank the stars that he is here and now what he is. What is his secret? Which comes first, the quality of his voice or the power of his character? Something in his performance transcends by far the results of his superb vocal gifts (which comprise perfect breath-control, a palate no doubt exceptionally arched, great muscular strength, and so on). He is unlike all other singers in being a supreme histrionic artist. But, just as a singer, he triumphs by his complete command of his natural gifts. His whole body vibrates with every note. He plays with his breath on the instrument. It is the variety in this singing that so lends it to the great actor's needs and keeps the listener enthralled. He never sings a vuoto, but by the slightest readjustment or reinforcement he shifts his resonance, suggesting an organist lifting his hand from manual to manual. He is now a Fafner, now a Mephistopheles. In his complex art the virtues of all other singers are at moments suggested. He hints at Plançon and at Caruso; he can 'spin' his tone (as in his ravishing singing of Rubinstein's Persian Love-Song) much as did Battistini. I speak of course of Chaliapin when he does himself justice. In the classic German songs of the first concert his art overstepped the frame, no doubt. Some of his songs, compositions by the minor Russians, are far from first-rate music, but they serve his purpose better, and such pieces as When the King went forth to war (Koenemann) and Ah! could I but express in song (Malashkin) consequently justify themselves, it seems to me, though I do not want them from other singers. They are not in themselves really bad, and they are good vehicles for the infinite humanism of Chaliapin's singing. His reading of the 'Catalogue Song' from Don Giovanni broke all known bounds of Mozart-singing; such richness in the buffo style could never have been imagined. At the second concert there were excerpts from Boris. New York is about to witness the 'real thing.'

Titta Ruffo was one of the first-comers of the season at Albert Hall. The voice is magnificent, but whether he is exuberant to excess, or whether he is consciously restraining himself, he is clearly not at home on the concert-platform. The music at this concert lacked interest, and that at Madame Tetrassini's was not superior. Madame Tetrassini's performances are superb, and at the same time so invariable that the hearer fails at last to gape as perhaps he should. Then somehow it all seems to have so little to do with music. Dame Clara Butt was on the same scene a few days later, likewise in splendid voice. She followed Chaliapin in choosing her songs as she went along, announcing the numbers in a published booklet. Dame Clara's booklet will not supersede The Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics. She baffles this sincere admirer of her grandly imposing voice by devoting it to infantile themes. One song asserted that the singer was 'a wee bird.' Dame Clara introduced a new ballad, The land of might have been, which fell quite flat. So there are limits even to the Albert Hall's large hospitality to inferior music.

Madame Frieda Hempel sang twice at Queen's Hall: the first time in Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, and one song of Wolf. It was singing as perfect in a way as singing can be, and showed how easy singing ought to be (or to appear), and how futile for all their strenuousness are so many desperately strenuous singers. She is for some reason known as a coloratura singer, but she is incomparably at her best in cantilena. She beautifully demonstrated how small, effortless tone can fill wide spaces, provided there is instinctive breath-control. She resorts to no trickery. In her voice is the whole considered art of song—the technique to make it possible, the measured style to make it pure and holy. Most of her tones are soft as sarcenet. From start to finish I heard no bad tone. Intimate little inflections were given to every word (but without any suspicion of odious 'word-painting'); this delicate attention to detail (not absorption) is evidently second nature to her. There was, apart from this characteristic, no actual variation of tone-colour, and without it I can imagine her voice a thought monotonous. Was she a shade too serene in her detachment of spirit? Well, it was delightful still. And then, half-way, the audience (unaccountably cold at first) warmed—it was a spark for the singer, and the voice instantly acquired a deeper feeling. Mr. Clarence Raybould accompanied—perhaps hanging a shade too devotedly to the singer's course.

Mr. Paul Reimers, who sang at Æolian Hall, commands no great voice, over-elaborates detail, and is often throaty, but he earns regard by a taste for charmingly musical programmes. We feel that he chooses a song for its musical worth, and often for its freshness. And then his incisive utterance of consonants gives a valuable brightness to his singing. He is commonly charged with sentimentality. But this may, perhaps, be largely due to the singular natural sweetness of his voice. Mr. Clarence Raybould accompanied.

Miss Greta Rost and Mr. Foster Why can hardly expect that the commentator should gently pass over the bad taste shown in the compilation of their programme at Æolian Hall (October 4). One or two classical songs in the list found themselves with the most disreputable neighbours—examples of American balladry of the lowest order. It was a noisy concert, for both performers had big voices and were very emphatic in all they did. So much misdirected energy was the greater pity, as both singers gave proof of sound training and had valuable physical resources; and Miss Rost, whose beautiful voice was free from the usual throatiness of contraltos, showed good musical feeling when she sang Schubert and Gretchaninov. Only too often her consonants were glossed over, with a consequent lack of incisiveness and a tendency towards monotony. Mr. Why called himself bass-baritone. Why not simply bass? There was no baritone nature, there was little flexibility in the upper ranges, and none of the baritone's voix mixte quality and soft mellow shades. His middle and low notes were excellent (except one 'gritty' low D), his delivery was free and unrestrained—but, like Miss Rost, he was invariable and over-opulent.

Cav. Carlo Ballin's was another noisy concert (Wigmore Hall, October 11). There has been some trumpet-like heralding of the new season on the part of certain singers. No dreamy reawakening, but a clarion réveillé! Mr. Robert Easton, a bass with a nobly resonant voice, sang at this concert. Then there was a soprano whose shafts of piercing song rent the air. A song of hers about a swallow ought, we felt, to be about peacocks. The tenor, Ballin, who comes from Milan, gave us some fine Italian singing marred for our senses by ridiculously overdone emotion, as in 'Vesti la Giubba.' The proportion of ten sobs to ten notes is extravagant even in 'veristic' Italian opera. The voice was beautiful; the phrasing was sometimes disputable, as in the 'Flower Song' from Carmen, yet we couldn't but like his full-throated middle voice and his pealing high notes. And his messa di voce testified to good breath control.

Miss Gertrude Entwhistle had chosen a delightfully musical programme, including lute-songs by Dowland and Campion and arias of Bach and Mozart for her concert at Æolian Hall, and she was accompanied faultlessly by Mr. F. B. Kiddle; the more pity then that her accomplishment was so far from catching up her ambition. And of another vocal concert of that same evening (Steinway Hall) absolute silence were best.

A newcomer to the world of song, Mr. Ben Williams (tenor), inspired in me such lively admiration and hopes, in the music of Saint-Saëns's Samson, that I had to recall many instances of promising singers coming to naught to ward off an unduly sanguine mood. A charming natural gift may be nullified by lack of brains, of ambition, of vivid character. Or a first success may make a young singer think solely of filling his pockets instead of deepening his art. Further, an immature vocalist is not helped by full, day-by-day stage work; faults in production may indeed be strengthened in the course of fatiguing rehearsals, unless proper delivery is automatic. Then in the course of operatic wear-and-tear the inevitable 'film' appears—first sad sign of an abused voice. These thoughts were salutary to my enthusiasm at first hearing Mr. Ben Williams, over whose performance immaturity was largely written. Yet his voice is glowingly beautiful, he had a deserved success, and, if all things work favourably for him, he ought, I think, to reach the dizziest heights of fame. He has a gift for soliloquy, and can be impassioned. He never sang harshly or with a sign of bad taste. At present his declamation is not cultivated, and there was a deal of fogginess of tone. The proper thing, of course, for a singer of such extraordinary promise is a further course of the best possible training, and, for the moment, the least possible public work.

H. J. K.

OPERA AT THE 'OLD VIC.'

For the first time for many a long day a season of opera in English began with an English opera. But then it was at the 'Old Vic.' and the opera was Dame Ethel Smyth's The Boatswain's Mate. The house was packed. This fact is worthy of record, for it justifies many points I have long maintained. No need to enumerate them; it is sufficient that my contentions have been upheld, my prophecies realised. The cast was the same as earlier in the year, and the audience was equally appreciative. The composer conducted, and at the end called the 'Old Vic.' patrons 'the most delightful audience in the world.' And she ought to know. Let me add in commendation of the 'Old Vic.' policy that there is to be a Mozart Opera Festival in November, but that there is no news to hand about the resetting.

F. E. B.

THE IMMORTAL HOUR AT THE REGENT THEATRE

It was until lately a music hall, this now re-named Regent Theatre in the Euston Road, but it has been so radically reformed in character that music is now to be heard there. The Immortal Hour, by Rutland Boughton, occupies the scene where ventriloquism, patter-songs, and similar entertainments of the people used to rage.

This opera was the pride of the earlier years of the Glastonbury Festival. Travellers talked much of this shy violet of the musical art. It was transplanted to Bournemouth, Bristol, and Birmingham. It was produced at the 'Old Vic.' imperfectly in 1920. At the Regent Theatre, given by the Birmingham Repertory Players, it had every chance—scenically the production was beautifully worthy of the charming music.

It is an opera, in two Acts, of the Celtic fairy-world—that is to say, a world of suggestive fantasy, bewildered sadness, and no humour. A mortal king and a fairy princess meet in a haunted wood on a wet night. They love. But life as an Irish queen fails to recommend itself to the fairy, and an elfin prince lures her back whence she came. The story is slight, and Rutland Boughton has decked it with music that has none of the pompousness of a conventional operatic way. He has not had Covent Garden at the back of his mind, there are no parts for a Tetrassini or a Caruso. There is a small orchestra, there is a slender vocal line without any alien inflation.

Nothing of the character of Debussy's Pelléas is, by this, to be understood (though the 'Celtic' vagueness and unhappiness of the libretto are no doubt derived from the Flemish author of Pelléas). Rutland Boughton is no subtle impressionist, but primarily a plain singer, a melodist. There is nothing far-fetched about his tunes (which one goes out of the theatre whistling), and the harmonic scheme is as homely. What odds? Within its scope this art is adequate; it is fresh, it is beautiful. The cut suits the material; the material chosen was home-spun, and because it was appropriately cut and not as velvet brocades and cloth of gold would have been cut, we know the maker for an artist. His purely musical judgment has never failed him.

What was a little less certainly right was the extent of his faith in Celtic ghosts on wet nights. These damp spirits are allowed excessive licence in Act 1. The prologue (in the dark) threatened to take on the proportions of some scene of Erda or of Notns, while the composer was expressly forbidding himself a Wagnerian orchestral orgy, and consequently we did not know whereabouts to look for entertainment. It speaks for Mr. Boughton's gifts that, for the love-making of the two royal waifs, his music woke up to such effect that the tedium of the opening was blotted out. Dramatically, again, there was an hiatus between Acts 1 and 2, and no special explanation was offered for the discontent of Queen Etain and her sudden dis-interest in a fond husband. Nothing is more wearisome than pointing to the holes in operatic libretti—which, for that matter, a composer of forcible music easily covers up. But in Mr. Boughton's scheme the drama and the verbal poetry seriously count, and the holes are as it were deliberately disclosed. However, again in The Immortal Hour sweet music comes to the rescue, and the wan queen's elopement back to fairyland is accomplished in a witching air of romance. So we see that there is genius in the little work, and a happy indication of a new way of sincerity for lyric drama. Miss Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies was in everything, voice, looks, gesture, truly the homesick fairy princess. Her king was Mr. Johnstone-Douglas. Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted a performance admirable in all things save the pitch of the chorus.

C.

Elgar's Pianoforte Quintet is to be performed at Guildford on November 8 (afternoon) at the third of Mr. Claud Powell's subscription concerts.

The third season of Sunday evening concerts given by the municipality at Battersea Town Hall opened on October 1, and is to continue fortnightly through the winter.

THE LEEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL

BY HERBERT THOMPSON

In attempting to revive the Leeds Festivals, the last of which was in 1913, the committee ventured a good deal. For a number of years before that date the receipts had been diminishing, and the great profits once made had receded to a vanishing point. It was some comfort, no doubt, to reflect that this state of things was experienced at Birmingham and other Festivals, but to do so did not relieve the financial strain or remove the risk that attended a revival under new and unknown conditions. Nor was this the only hindrance encountered by the committee. In smaller centres, such as the Three Choirs cities, there is an intense local feeling in favour of these Festivals—from the gentry, who appreciate the social element, to the trades-people, who have realised that the cult of St. Cecilia, as in another apposite case, 'brought no small gain to the craftsmen.' But at Leeds there is no such local feeling, but chiefly apathy, if not actual opposition. The two leading choral societies declined, officially, to have anything to do with the affair, though in the event a considerable number of their members 'joined up.' So an appeal was made direct to the choralists of the West Riding, and, as at some previous Festivals, singers, after being tested by an independent judge (Mr. C. H. Moody, of Ripon), were recruited not only from Leeds, but from Huddersfield, Bradford, and other neighbouring towns, and a chorus of some three hundred voices was collected. Great were the prophecies of evil concerning a choir from which many experienced local singers held aloof; yet if some of the singers lacked experience, they probably made up for its absence by being the more teachable, and Dr. Tysoe, the new chorus-master, managed to make of them as amenable and intelligent a chorus as Leeds has ever heard, capable of any variety of effect, good in phrasing, very clear in diction, and most sensitive to a conductor's indications. One of my colleagues from the Midlands found it not quite equal to the spirituality of Bach's music, but into such a subtle question as this I do not feel able to enter, and leave it as one of the very few adverse criticisms I have noticed. For brilliance and staying power it was unsurpassable, and even at Leeds, where the Choral Symphony has always seemed child's play to the singers, I have never heard the Finale sung more brilliantly and with less sense of effort.

Another matter which many capable judges considered might be fatal to the success of the Festival was the nature of the programme—always a vexed question. There were the ancients and the moderns, the lovers of choral music and those who were more interested in the orchestra. In each respect it was the latter who carried the day, and never, I imagine, has there been a Festival with such a preponderance of modern orchestral music, including a couple of Scriabin's latest symphonic poems and the whole of Holst's Planets, as well as samples of Richard Strauss. Not a note of Mendelssohn—who in 1886 occupied more than a quarter of the entire Festival—while Handel was represented by a few choruses from Israel (and misrepresented by having The Lord is a Man of War sung by all the tenors and basses, recalling the bad old days of the Albert Hall). The turn of the wheel is perhaps almost too complete, but the reaction against the exclusive worship of these two composers is inevitable. A further complaint was the absence of any 'important'—by which is signified 'long'—choral work. If, however, we measure music other than by a yard-stick such works as the Choral Symphony, Bach's Magnificat and Church Cantatas, Brahms's Schicksalslied, and Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens may surely be styled as of some importance, and if a composer cannot reveal his greatness in anything less than a couple of hours so much the worse for him.

For my part, I have never known a Festival at which the interest was so sustained: there was nothing one could skip, and though the result was rather exhausting to a conscientious listener, it was very enjoyable. The sole complaint which seemed to me justifiable was the paucity of new works. If a Festival is to justify its existence it is by encouraging native composers to produce works upon which they would otherwise hardly dare to embark. There was, indeed, only one absolute novelty—Holst's setting for chorus and orchestra of Whitman's Ode to Death, which was a distinct success. It is a really beautiful, sincere interpretation of the words, which, I feel convinced, will be heard of a good deal in the future, and its difficulties, which obviously troubled the chorus, will disappear with familiarity. Native composers were, however, well represented; in addition to Byrd (whose Madrigal, This sweet and merry month, anticipated the centenary we are to celebrate next year), Parry, Elgar, Delius, Butterworth, Holst, Bax, Ireland, W. H. Reed, and Dame Ethel Smyth were all in the programme. And now that the Festival seems to be firmly reinstated, the committee may be encouraged to look out for new works worthy of production, and not to leave the task (which I do not envy them) till too late.

One English composer, Hubert Parry, was especially well represented, the first half of a programme being devoted to a series of his compositions, most judiciously chosen by Sir Hugh Allen, who conducted them. Considering what Parry did for music in the broadest sense of the word, and considering his long association with the Leeds Festivals, at which were given St. Cecilia (1889), De Profundis (1892), Invocation to Music (1895), Blest Pair of Sirens (1898), Song of Darkness and Light (1901), Voces Clamantium (1904), The Love that casteth out Fear (1907), Pied Piper (1910), Ode to Music (1913), there was an obvious appropriateness in this memorial celebration. The unison song, Jerusalem, which is becoming a second National Anthem for us, opened the concert, and was orchestrated for this occasion (and for this occasion only) by Sir Edward Elgar as a tribute to the composer's memory. The Ode on the Nativity, Blest Pair of Sirens, and three of the noble Motets from the Songs of Farewell were the choral works; the Symphonic Variations and the '1912' Symphony (in B minor) the orchestral. It was a selection which displayed Parry at his best, and showed a versatility for which many may not have credited him. It was followed by the first Symphony of Brahms—a happy choice in this connection—of which Mr. Coates gave a very fine interpretation.

The whole of another concert was given to Bach, and this also was arranged and conducted by Sir Hugh Allen. Some have expressed surprise that the great Mass was not chosen, but when it is remembered that it had been heard already at five previous Leeds Festivals, and had been given on three occasions by the Leeds choral societies, there seems to be good reason for giving a selection that should display all sides of his genius. As a matter of fact this turned out to be one of the most enjoyable concerts of the Festival. The cantatas O Light Everlasting and Since Christ is all my being, were contrasted with the Magnificat, which is in a very different vein, and the unaccompanied Motet, Come, Jesu, come. The two instrumental works were the second Brandenburg Concerto (in F) and the Concerto for three pianofortes in C. In the former the soloists were Messrs. W. H. Reed (violin), D. S. Wood (flute), W. S. Hinchliffe (oboe), and H. Barr (trumpet). The performance of the trumpet part was an amazing tour de force. Mr. Barr used one of the revived instruments of Bach's time, a 'clarino' of high compass, over which he exercised a superb control, playing all the brilliant passages as they were written, and never an octave lower, as has been necessary with the modern trumpet. It is doubtful whether this had ever been done, at any rate in this country, since Bach's time. The perfect balance that was observed between his instrument and those of the other soloists was remarkable, and though something of the thrilling quality which we associate with trumpet-tone was necessarily sacrificed, the effect was admirable. An interesting feature of the Clavier Concerto was that the three pianists were all of the locality: Miss Kathleen Frise-Smith, Miss Dorothy Hess, and Mr. Herbert Johnson. The idea was Sir Hugh Allen's, and it resulted in an excellent, finished, and well-balanced performance, probably more satisfactory in general effect than if three expensive virtuosi had been engaged, for they might have found it more difficult than did these young artists to play into each other's hands.

Of the native works, Holst's Planets was the most considerable, and it certainly furnished one of the chief sensations of the Festival. It was most brilliantly played under Mr. Coates's direction, and it may be doubted if it has ever received such a fine interpretation. The distant chorus in 'Neptune' was admirably managed. The Appalachia of Delius was also well done, but it does not improve on a closer acquaintance, for the tune on which the variants are constructed is not very distinguished, and hardly fits its environment. Mr. W. H. Reed's Lincoln Imp, on the other hand, had a performance whose brilliance and clearness put this work in a more favourable light than ever before, and its good construction, it was realised, lifted it above a mere piece of 'programme music,' though it is remarkably vivid as such. Mr. Ireland's Symphonic Rhapsody seemed to me rather uncouth, but a further hearing may knock off some of its angularities. Mr. Arnold Bax's Tintagel is a tone-poem which really suggests something of the majesty of the sea, being spacious and noble in quality; and Dame Ethel Smyth scored a great popular success with her lively chorus, Hey, nonny no, which she conducted with characteristic energy. Butterworth's Banks of Green Willow struck me again as being as charming as it is unpretentious.

Verdi's Requiem received an exceedingly fine interpretation, quite in the Italian vein, and, though it did not efface recollection of Nikisch's memorable performance in 1913, it suffered little by comparison. The Grail Scene from Parsifal suffered from the chorus being too big, and too near at hand, to bring out all its mystical effect. A copious selection from Die Meistersinger was happier, and afforded one of the brightest spots in a brilliant Festival. It may be doubted whether this music can ever have had a finer interpretation, and as much may be said, with even greater confidence, of Brahms's Schicksalslied, the inspiration of which was fully realised by conductor, choir, and orchestra. The instrumental Introduction and Epilogue reached a great height of refined beauty. Two supremely fine instrumentalists appeared as soloists: M. Cortôt in Beethoven's fifth Pianoforte Concerto and Franck's Symphonic Variations, and Mr. Albert Sammons in Elgar's Violin Concerto, of which he is the acknowledged exponent. Among the orchestral works were Scriabin's last two symphonic works, Poème de l'Extase and Prometheus, which furnished hard nuts for the audience to crack, but left the impression of marvellously fine performances. It might be questioned whether it were judicious to put both into the programme, but the fact that Mr. Coates is in close touch with Scriabin's music affords a sufficient reason.

The choice of principals has been adversely criticised because some vocalists of less than world-wide fame were included. As a matter of policy, it may be well to have artists whose names will decorate a poster, and the extent of whose fees will make subscribers feel they are having their money's-worth, but this at least can be said, that the performances suffered nothing in efficiency. Mr. John Coates, Mr. Robert Radford, and Mr. Norman Allin are, of course, at the head of their profession, and Miss Dorothy Silk has in recent years risen to a similar height; while Miss Margaret Balfour, who also made her first appearance at a Leeds Festival, showed what strides she has of late made in her art, and left a most pleasant impression by her beautiful voice and artistic singing. A soprano whose charming voice and musicianship made her a worthy colleague of the two artists just mentioned in the Bach Magnificat, and a finished Eva in the Meistersinger Quintet, was Miss Elsie Suddaby, a Leeds singer whose fame is rapidly extending beyond its borders, and whose engagement showed that she is not without honour in her own county. Miss Eleanor Paget, another newcomer, powerfully sustained the trying soprano part in the Choral Symphony, and Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. John Adams, Mr. Raymond Hartley, and Mr. Percy Heming (the last an excellent Amfortas) were efficient in their respective tasks. Mr. Percy Richardson's useful work at organ and pianoforte (in the continuo of Bach's Cantatas) deserves mention. Mr. Albert Coates was at his best, putting great vitality into his conducting, and altogether it was a Festival which roused more general enthusiasm than any I can recollect since the occasion in 1886, when ecstatic chorus girls pelted Sullivan with roses after he had conducted his Golden Legend.

J. B. MCEWEN'S SYMPHONY AT BOURNEMOUTH

Sir Dan Godfrey began his twenty-eighth season of Symphony Concerts at Bournemouth on October 12, with no beating about the bush whatever. The chief number in his programme was a new Symphony, a British one, and the work of J. B. McEwen. The fact is frank acknowledgment of the policy Sir Dan has pursued for so long, and that there was a good audience in spite of weather that tempted to sands and sunshine more than to symphonies and seriousness, showed that he has won the public to his side in his character of champion of the British composer. Mr. McEwen, like Sir Dan, has been doing it all along, for if any man has striven to represent British music worthily, it is he. Mr. McEwen has always written in the British idiom, but now that such a quality in our music has become the fashion after much hard fighting, for which everybody but the right people take the credit, there are some brilliant scribes who are beginning to discover him. I certainly class him as a representative British composer. We shall turn back to this work in time to come, and revel in its national flavour. It is a 'programme' work, a fact I rather regret, for I think our composers can command sufficient of the right material to enable them to supply absolute music free from anything in the nature of a guide to meaning. The Symphony is entitled Solway, and the composer deals in actualities. He provides a literary, or, rather, poetic basis, and entitles his three movements 'Spring Tide,' 'Moonlight,' and 'Sou'-West Wind.' They are all mood pictures, and there is a strong feeling for the poetic aspect of things. In the second the composer is wholly true to the land of his birth. We are given more than a hint that it is 'the hills of the Highlands for ever I love,' and he cleverly keeps Scottish characteristics to the fore. Indeed, the second movement, with its insistent melodic figure, freely suggests that there is revelry by night going on across the mountains, and its strains, wafted to us, are graphically depicted. Though I can never listen to 'programme' music with the same freedom of mind as to music that leaves me to find out the story for myself, it is nevertheless impressed on the hearer that this is a thoughtful, individual piece of work not to be lightly dismissed. It is a pleasant example of 'atmospheric' work, and always, happily, an atmosphere in which one likes to linger and has no desire, as with some 'atmospheric' pieces, to get outside of as soon as possible. Sir Dan Godfrey gave it careful presentation at the hands of his excellent orchestra, and the audience paid the composer the compliment of calling him to the platform.

The rest of the programme testified to the pliability of the orchestra, for there was first the Meistersinger Overture and afterwards Ravel's quaint fairy Suite Mère l'Oye and Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte Concerto in F, with Mr. Arthur Shattuck as soloist. While at Bournemouth I learned that the Easter Festival is an established fact, save that next year there there will be more of it. There cannot be too much, say I.

F. E. B.

Church and Organ Music

THE ORGAN

The October issue of this quarterly journal shows no falling off in variety and interest. The organs of Bristol Cathedral are discussed by the Rev. Andrew Freeman, and those of St. Paul's Cathedral by Mr. Somers Clarke. Mr. Stuart Archer writes about the Cavallé-Col organ, Mr. W. F. Muckle on the Table Organ of William Mace, and Mr. James Matthews on the organ built on the Praetorius model for Freiburg University. Dr. Eaglefield Hull continues his frank discussion of organ tutors, old and new. Other articles are by Mr. Meyrick Roberts ('The Founders of Modern Organ Building'), Mr. Ernest Adcock (a beautifully illustrated account of some organs at Paris, Rouen, and Chartres), Dr. Audsley, and Mr. Abdy Williams, who relates his experience as a temporary maestro di cappella at Capri. Correspondence, reviews, and specifications make up the balance of a capital number, in which, as usual, illustrations are a strong feature.

THE NEW ORGAN AT WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL:
RECITAL BY DR. W. G. ALCOCK

The first of a series of fortnightly recitals on the Westminster Cathedral organ took place on October 12, Dr. Alcock being the player. He chose an admirable programme—the Mozart F minor Fantasia, a Bach group consisting of 'Schmücke dich,' the great Fantasia on 'Komm, heiliger Geist, Herre Gott,' the first movement of the C major Sonata, and the Fantasia in G, Parry's Elegy and the Wanderer Fugue, Franck's A minor Choral, Wolstenholme's Andantino, Lemare's Rêverie, and Harwood's Pean. Dr. Alcock played splendidly throughout, being especially good in the Mozart, Bach, and Parry works. His phrasing was an object-lesson, and a proof that an organ need not be the unrhythmical instrument it is too often made out to be. Of this instrument of Messrs. Willis it is difficult to speak too highly. The diapason tone is magnificent, and the reeds rich and telling. Save for a deficiency of 8-ft. tone on the pedal (noticeable in the Bach Sonata and the 'Komm, Heiliger Geist' piece) there was no effect of incompleteness. The remaining stops will, of course, add to the resources on the recital and orchestral transcription side, but for a programme of pure organ music, such as was played on this occasion, little seemed to be wanting. One great advantage to the instrument is that the acoustic properties of the Cathedral are so good that the texture of the music remains clear, even to the listener at the far end of the building. Messrs. Willis are to be congratulated on this fine organ; even in its unfinished state it is one of the finest and most effective in the country.

H. G.

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL

A Musical Festival will be held at this Church on November 13, 14, 15, and 16. An organ recital will be given at 1 o'clock each day, the players being Dr. Harold Darke, Dr. Henry Ley, Dr. W. H. Harris, and Dr. W. G. Alcock, in the order named. The evening concerts are at 6. On the 13th the St. Michael's Singers will perform a Bach programme: Bide with us, How brightly shines, &c. On the following evening will be given a recital of English church and organ music, with Mr. Thalben Ball at the organ. On November 15 a string orchestra will join the St. Michael's Singers in works by Byrd, Bach, Holst, Parry (Blest Pair of Sirens), &c. The Festival will end with a programme that includes Brahms's Song of Destiny, Parry's Beyond these voices, Darke's The Kingdom of God, and Bach's O fire everlasting. There is a fine list of soloists, and Dr. Darke will conduct.

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH

As usual during Festival week a fine list of music was sung at the Parish Church. The settings of canticles included Alcock in B flat, Macpherson in E flat, Bairstow in D, Noble in B minor, Purcell in G minor, Wesley in C, Lee Williams in F, Gibbons in F, Harwood in E minor, &c. Among the anthems were Wesley's The Wilderness, Stanford's The Lord is my Shepherd, Bach's Sing ye to the Lord, and Purcell's O give thanks. The organ music reached the same high level—Stanford's Fantasia and Toccata, Macpherson's Fantasy-Prelude, Bairstow's Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Franck's third Choral, Parry's Wanderer Fugue, &c. The whole shows that Dr. A. C. Tysoe is maintaining the high traditions of this famous centre of Church music.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS: BATTERSEA AND CLAPHAM BRANCH

A very successful meeting was held on Saturday, September 30, when a party of members—by kind permission of His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury—visited Lambeth Palace. An enjoyable time was spent in and about the old buildings, the library and chapel being found especially interesting, the organ in the latter being shown by Mr. C. M. Wood (organist to the Palace Chapel). A visit was afterwards made to Lambeth Parish Church, where an organ recital was given by Mr. Herbert Hodge, and the history of this old Church and its organs explained by the Rev. Andrew Freeman, who also allowed members to inspect his collection of drawings of organ cases.

ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE, TENBURY

At the Dedication Feast the music sung included Palestrina's Mass Aeterna Christi munera, a MS. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis by Thomas Hunt (about 1600), Purcell's Te Deum in D, and Ouseley's How goodly are thy tents. Dr. W. H. Harris, of New College, Oxford, gave an organ recital, playing his own Fantasia on Campion's By Babylon's Streams, Buxtehude's Prelude and Fugue in G minor, Franck's Pastorale, the slow movement from the London Symphony, and two of Bach's Choral Preludes.

THE LATE GEORGE HERBERT GREGORY

It is proposed to place in the Parish Church of Boston a memorial to George Herbert Gregory, who for over forty years served this famous Church as organist and choir-master. Any of his old friends who wish to help are asked to send their subscriptions to the 'Gregory Memorial Fund' to Lloyd's Bank, Boston, or to the hon. secretary and treasurer, Mr. F. Pratt, 15, Wide Bargate, Boston.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

The Saturday Musical Services which have been so notably successful during recent years will be resumed on November 11, when Brahms's Requiem and Elgar's For the Fallen will be sung, with the London Symphony Orchestra.

The Bristol branch of the Church-Music Society opened its season on October 5, with a congregational practice and Evensong at All Saints' Church, directed by Mr. Arnold Barter, with Mr. W. E. Kirby at the organ. There was a large attendance. On Saturday, November 18, at 3, Dr. Walford Davies will conduct a Hymn Festival at St. Mary Redcliffe, and on November 28, at the Cathedral Chapter House, the Rev. Maurice Bell will lecture on 'The musical rendering of the Evening Canticles.'

We have received the programmes of the twenty-fifth series of recitals given at Glasgow Cathedral, by Mr. Herbert Walton. They cover a wide field, and it is good to see played at these popular recitals such works as Franck's Pastorale, the Preludio from Rheinberger's sixth Sonata, and the same composer's Fantasia-Sonata, Bach's Passacaglia, and Saint-Saëns's Prelude and Fugue in B. The amazing popularity of the recitals is shown by the fact that the attendance at the series totalled 12,683.

The Rev. G. R. Woodward will lecture on 'Carols' at St. Mary Aldermary, on November 4, at 3 o'clock. Illustrations will be sung by the choir, directed by Mr. Alan May. A lecture on 'Elizabethan Motets' will be given by Mr. Alan May, at St. Mary Aldermary on December 2, at 3, with illustrations by the choir. Some of the items sung will be from the syllabus of the forthcoming Elizabethan Competitive Festival.

Mr. H. Matthias Turton, organist of St. Aidan's, Leeds, recently gave a lecture-recital on 'Vierne's Organ Symphonies,' at Manchester Cathedral, before a gathering of the Manchester and District Organists' Association. He played the third Symphony, three movements from the second, and the Finale from the fourth.

The Liverpool Church Choir Association announces an excellent list of music for its fifteenth Annual Festival, which takes place at St. George's Hall on November 21. Dr. Charles Macpherson will be present, and will conduct his Te Deum in E flat and his anthem, The Heavens declare.

Mr. G. D. Cunningham will give a series of three recitals at St. Alban's, Holborn, on November 6, 13, and 20, at 6.30. The programmes are first-rate, and include works by Howells, Franck, Widor, Rheinberger, Bach, and Reubke.

At the Harvest Festival services held at Sutton (Surrey) Congregational Church on September 24, Spohr's God, Thou art great was sung by an augmented choir. Mr. W. Hedley Staniland was at the organ.

Mr. Herbert Hodge will play all the A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. test-pieces set for the January examination at his Tuesday one o'clock recitals at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, during November.

On November 7, at 8 o'clock Parts 2 and 3 of Gounod's Redemption will be sung at All Saints' Church, Battersea Park.

ORGAN RECITALS

- Mr. J. Albert Sowerbutts, St. Lawrence Jewry—Fantasy—Prelude, Bristow Farrar; Symphony No. 6 (first movement), Widor; Canzonetta and Siciliano, Reger; Prelude and Fugue in B major, Dupré. St. Stephen's Walbrook—Prelude in E flat, Bach; Prelude on a Theme of Tallis, Darke; Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Dupré; Finale (eighth Symphony), Widor.
- Mr. Patrick A. Black, Dumbarton Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Pastorale, Franck; Overture in C minor, Hollins.
- Mr. G. A. Birch, Wincanton Parish Church—Prelude on 'Sleepers, wake!' Bach; Overture, 'Magic Flute'; Grand Chœur in G minor, Hollins; Overture, 'Prometheus.'
- Mr. A. E. L. Burr, St. John's, Bognor—Prelude on 'In dulci jubilo,' Stanford; Pavane, Byrd; Fugue in E flat, Bach.
- Mr. A. Leech Wilkinson, All Saints', Princes Park, Liverpool—Fantasia (Sonata No. 13), Rheinberger; Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Howells; Prelude to 'Gerontius,' Dr. George P. Allen, St. Peter's, Mansfield—Overture Miniature from 'Casse Noisette' Suite; Arabesque in G, Debussy; Toccata, d'Evry.
- Mr. F. Kitchener, Bognor Parish Church—Grand Prelude and Fugue, Holbrooke; Polonaise in A, Chopin; 'On the Mount of Olives,' Kitchener; 'Ave Maria,' Arcadelt-Liszt.
- Mr. Philip Dore, Bognor Parish Church—Passacaglia, Bach; Allegro and Scherzo (Symphony No. 2), Vierne; Allegro (Symphony No. 1), Maleingreau; Pastorale, Roger-Ducasse.
- Mr. M. B. Kidd, Kelso Parish Church—Scherzo in B flat, Wolstenholme; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns; Serenade, Ole Olsen.
- Mr. John Newton, Christchurch Priory—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; 'Skandinavisches,' Rheinberger; Allegro (Sonata No. 1), Borowski.
- Mr. Maurice Popplestone, All Saints', Clevedon—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Evening Song, Baird; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme; 'Finlandia.'
- Mr. Harry Wall, St. Mary-le-Bow—First Suite, Lyon; Adagio (Sonata No. 3), Bach; Canzona and 'Pax Vobiscum,' Karg-Elert; 'Laus Deo,' Grace.
- Mr. Sinclair Logan, National Institute for the Blind—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Marche Héroïque, Saint-Saëns; Minuet Antique, Walling; Prelude in C and Rondino, Wolstenholme.
- Dr. R. Walker Robson, Christ Church, Crouch End—Allegro Maestoso (Sonata in G), Elgar; Fugue, Reubke; 'Skandinavisches,' Rheinberger; Rhapsody No. 1, Howells; Prelude and Fugue in A, Bach.
- Mr. Herbert Fillingford, St. George's Hall, Liverpool—Overture in C, Adams; Sonata in D minor, John E. West; 'The Storm,' Lemmens.
- Mr. E. E. Vinnicombe, St. Peter's, Sudbury—Imperial March, Elgar; Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Covenanters' March, Hailing; Concerto in D minor, Handel.
- Mr. Ambrose P. Porter, St. Matthias's, Richmond—Passacaglia and Fugue, Bach; Elegiac Romance, Ireland; 'The Sea,' Arnold Smith; Toccata, Reger.
- Mr. Bertram Hollins, Beckenham Congregational Church—Sonata in A flat, Rheinberger; Symphony No. 5, Widor.
- Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Stephen's Walbrook—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Mendelssohn; Allegro in F, Gade; Sonata in E flat minor, Rheinberger; 'Sposallizio,' Liszt.

APPOINTMENTS

- Mr. L. W. T. Arkell, organist and choirmaster, Parish Church, Blechingley, Surrey, and conductor of the Blechingley Choral Society.
- Mr. Edmund J. Doherty, organist, St. Mary and St. Michael, Commercial Road, E.
- Mr. F. J. Edwards, organist and choirmaster, St. Mary's Parish Church, Enniscorthy.
- Mr. Allan Fortune, organist and choirmaster, Ingrow Parish Church.
- Mr. F. H. Haywood, organist and choirmaster, Calry Parish Church, Sligo.

- Mr. Frederick W. Hicks, organist and choirmaster, St. Saviour's St. Albans, Herts.
- Mr. Claude P. Keeble, organist, St. Peter's, Cricklewood.
- Mr. J. E. W. Lord, organist and choirmaster, First Presbyterian Church; organist and choirmaster, Temple Beth Or; and Director of Organ Department at the Women's College of Alabama—all at Montgomery, Alabama.
- Mr. Albert Orton, organist and choirmaster, St. Anne's, Soho.
- Master R. Alwyn Surplice, organist and choirmaster, Pangbourne Parish Church.
- Mr. Leonard L. Wilkin, organist and choirmaster, Stratford Central Hall, E.

Sharps and Flats

Audiences are beginning to find out how easy it is, under modern conditions, to write music that bustles along energetically so long as it is saying nothing in particular, but collapses like a pricked bladder as soon as it aims at saying something arresting; any school-boy can keep a lighted stick twirling, but is apt to show himself a school-boy when he begins to talk.—Ernest Newman.

'What do you think of —'s music? I asked.

'I like it,' he enthused.—Interview in American musical journal.

'I don't mind being stared at. I am used to it by now. Tetrazzini.

Train your voice. Speak low. When you see you are losing your temper, if you drop your voice about a third you will find you will regain control of yourself. Don't mumble. Pronounce the consonants. Finish your sentences. . . . Don't argue. Discuss. . . . Be courteous. Practice at home. . . . Be polite to your baby.—Dr. Frank Crane.

Dr. Frank Crane is a profound influence in modern life.—Sarah F. Wilson.

Personally, I do not object to The Messiah, and can still enjoy much of its rugged boorishness, but most of Elijah has really become intolerable now.—Eric Blom.

No one, of course, can play Chopin like Pachmann. But doesn't he know it!—Hannen Swaffer.

For an orgy let us turn to Wagner; for strength in the soul and light in the mind we must turn away from him.—George Sampson.

I belong to none of the so-called modern schools. I just write as the thoughts come to me.—Ethel Scarborough.

Is the bass voice, after all, the characteristic voice of Englishmen, and, if so, why don't our composers write for it? Why do they idly look on while magnificent singers like those heard this morning [at Blackpool] are more often than not compelled for want of something better to do to go walking alone in the depths of the sea, or to groan out the notorious and alcoholic strains of 'Asleep in the Deep'?—Neville Cardus.

Let them give us a month's notice of an evening concert in Queen's Hall . . . with a programme devoted to Elgar's second Symphony, a manly interval for beer, and the first Symphony—and I wager they will not have cause to regret their choice.—Robert Lorenz.

What, I wonder, would happen if the 'manly interval for beer' were omitted, or insufficiently manly?—C. T. A. in the Daily News.

The cutting [on Alexander Gretchaninov] reached me at a moment when I was particularly busy at my pig farm.—M. Montagu-Nathan.

A critic is always missing something, unless he adopts the peripatetic method, allowing an impartial quarter of an hour to each event; in that case he runs the risk of missing everything.—H. C. Colles.

I do not know who invented musical festivals. And a good thing for him—the inventor. I would smite him with a heavy curse.—L. Duntun Green.

It is good to see these festivals in full swing again.—Eric Blom.

The Amateurs' Page

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

An Orchestra is being formed for a choral concert to be given at the Town Hall, Hampstead, and the advertiser would be glad to receive names of violinists, viola players, 'cellists, and double-basses (ladies and gentlemen) who would be willing to assist.—J. W. COLEMAN, 24, Hadley Gardens, Chiswick, W.4.

Hammersmith Orchestral Society.—There are vacancies in this up-to-date Orchestra for three 2nd violins, two violas, one 'cello, oboe, 2nd horn, 2nd trumpet, and trombone.—The HON. SECRETARY, 20, Castelnau Gardens, Barnes, S.W.13.

Violinist (lady) wishes to meet other instrumentalists with view to forming string trio or quartet for mutual practice.—B., 64, Parkstone Avenue, Emerson Park, Hornchurch, Essex.

Instrumentalist wishes to meet pianist (gentleman) for mutual practice.—L., 9, Westfield Road, Beckenham.

Flautist wishes to join trio or quartet party or small orchestra.—L., 9, Westfield Road, Beckenham.

Baritone would like to meet enthusiastic singers for study of Madrigals and Motets. Must be good sight-readers. Twickenham, Hounslow, St. Margarets, and Isleworth districts.—H. BIRCHALL HUDSON, 45, Kneller Road, Whitton, Twickenham.

Vacancies for sopranos, altos, tenors, and basses interested in the study of Bach's cantatas, &c. Good readers essential. Rehearsals, Thursday evenings. Near Aldgate Underground Station, within three minutes of Liverpool Street and Fenchurch Street.—E. A. S., 22, Shelley Avenue, Manor Park, Essex.

'Cellist and viola player required to complete trio and quartet. Times of practices to be arranged.—E. A. S., 22, Shelley Avenue, Manor Park, Essex.

Pianist would like to join vocalist or instrumentalist for practice, or would join amateur orchestra. Portsmouth district.—A. H., c/o Musical Times.

Amateur instrumentalists required for the Wallasey Orchestral Society. Conductor, Mr. Fred Hanley (of the Hallé Orchestra). Rehearsals, Wednesday evenings at 8.—Apply, Hon. Sec., Mr. G. F. RAWCLIFFE, 12, Westminster Road, Liscard, or to Mr. HANLEY, 35, Mount Road, New Brighton.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist and 'cellist for mutual practice. Good musicians. Coventry district.—W. H., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist, aged seventeen, would like to meet young pianist, good accompanist, one evening a week for mutual practice. Reading district.—H. WALSH, c/o Musical Times.

Percussion player (timpani, drums, &c.) would deputise or join orchestra which possesses instruments. North London district.—H. H. W., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist wishes to meet either vocalist or violinist for practice, or would join amateur orchestra. Within easy distance of Forest Gate.—F. V. D., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (lady), amateur, would like to join small dance orchestra, or join pianist to play at dances, concerts, or parties. Near Birmingham.—FAIRFAX, c/o Musical Times.

Amateur instrumentalists and vocalists are cordially invited to join the St. Katherine Cree Orchestral and Choral Society. The former rehearses at 5.30 and the latter at 6.30 on Thursdays in the Church Hall, India House, 84, Leadenhall Street, E.C.3.—Apply, The Secretary.

Dance and Jazz violinist with long experience, would like to hear from small amateur orchestra, or pianist interested in above, requiring leader.—236, Malpas Road, S.E.4.

Lady pianist would like to play for orchestra, or accompany for concert party. District not far from Romford preferred.—G. S. M. ROSEWELL, Squirrels Heath Avenue, Gidea Park.

Pianist and violinist (ladies) wish to meet other instrumentalists to practise quartets. Romford district.—W., c/o Musical Times.

Contralto, trained (deep natural production), desires mutual practice. Duets, quartet, or similar.—I. HILL, 97, Honor Oak Park, S.E.23.

The Kensal Rise Brotherhood Orchestra, of Kensal Rise Wesleyan Church, Wrentham Avenue, N.W.16, will welcome amateur instrumentalists, especially viola, 'cello, and wood-wind. Rehearsals on Thursday evenings in the Church Hall at 8.10.—A. FENTIMAN, secretary, 42, Bathurst Gardens, N.W.10.

Dorian Symphony Orchestra, Westminster, invites keen amateurs playing violin, viola, 'cello, oboe, or French horn, to rehearse best music (classical and modern).—For particulars of membership, write, stating instrument, &c.—to SECRETARY, The Green, Twickenham.

Violist and violoncellist wish to meet two violinists to complete string quartet. New Cross.—A. B., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist would be glad to meet a violinist for mutual practice of classical pianoforte and violin works. Must be a good player, and keen. Can also form a trio.—Mr. N. NUTBROWN, 5, Talfourd Road, Peckham, S.E.15.

Letters to the Editor

'WANTED: COMPOSITIONS FOR WIND INSTRUMENTS'

SIR,—I was much interested in Mr. Algernon Ashton's letter in this month's issue of the Musical Times, and thoroughly endorse all that has been said with regard to the scarcity of, and need for, original compositions for the wood-wind. But as one who for many years played and loved the bassoon, I cannot agree with Mr. Ashton in the unkind remarks he makes about it as a solo instrument. Anyone who heard the late Mr. E. F. James play must have been struck by the beautiful roundness of tone he evolved from his bassoon, and as a former pupil of his I must carry the challenge forward.

It is all a case of the artist in the player, and the art in perfection of the instrument played upon, just the same as in the pianist and the pianoforte. Who does not know and appreciate all the differences!—Yours, &c.,

30, Lithos Road, N.W.3.

FRANCES SHORTIS.

October 5, 1922.

SIR,—I have read Mr. John Parr's letter in your September issue, wherein he seeks the reason for the dearth of music for wind instruments. There are many of us who are aware of the considerable number of players on the flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, but publishers seem to show great reluctance to publish works for these instruments, especially if the composer is unknown.

About a year ago I wrote a Suite for clarinet and pianoforte. I showed it to Mr. Charles Draper, who liked it very much, and gave me a letter recommending the Suite to Messrs. —. I also obtained a letter of recommendation from my composition master, Dr. Vaughan Williams.

After a performance at a Royal College of Music chamber concert, the work was submitted to the publishers, who asked to have it played to them. A pupil of Mr. Draper, Mr. Frederick Thurston (to whom I am indebted for the Royal College performance), played the Suite to certain members of the publishing firm, and in due course I received a letter saying that they feared the heavy cost of publication would not be returned by the sales they might make of the work. This I fear is the experience of many young composers.—Yours, &c., H. STANLEY TAYLOR.

135, Lavenham Road, S.W.18.

October 10, 1922.

'AN EARLY GREEK HYMN'

SIR.—When the October number of the Musical Times arrived I opened it casually on page 724 and read that very interesting letter from Mr. C. F. Abdy Williams on 'An Early Greek Hymn.' I was surprised to learn that there is so much doubt and uncertainty among experts regarding Greek rhythms.

It happens that I am endeavouring—in a series of 'Studies for Children on the Appreciation of Music'—to explain the poetry of rhythm, and in my own studies on the subject I have alighted upon an alarming disagreement between Riemann's and Grove's Dictionaries of Music.

I had written a chapter explaining that in the line:

'Oh dear : what can the : matter be :'

the first rhythm was a Spondee ♩ and the second and third a Pyrrhichius ♪♪—information derived from Riemann. Before having my MSS. typed I wished to prove those points, so I consulted Cassell's Encyclopaedic Dictionary. There I discovered that Pyrrhic (Pyrrhichius) was ♪—and a most fascinating story: Pyrrhic dance, 'A species of dance said to have been invented by Pyrrhus to grace the funeral of his father, Achilles. It consisted chiefly in such an adroit and nimble turning of the body as represented an attempt to avoid the strokes of an enemy in battle, and the motions necessary to perform it were looked upon as a kind of training for actual warfare. This dance is supposed to be described by Homer as engraved on the shield of Achilles. It was danced by boys in armour, accompanied by the lute or lyre.'

Then I consulted Grove and found that Pyrrhic was duple ♪♪ (not ♪♪♪ according to Riemann), and that the triple rhythm I wanted to describe was Tribach ♪♪♪.

Will some kind person unravel this confusion, and explain which authority is right? In my book I want to relate—if possible to every important rhythm—any such fascinating legend as the one quoted above, but I cannot find any others. Will one of your wise and learned readers kindly refer me to some book that would help me? If ½-time can have such a delightful legend, why not some of the others?

SWISHING.

(With apologies to William Allingham.)

Ring-ting ! I wish I were a SPONDEE,

A slow-going SPONDEE, slouching through the Spring !

The ANAPÆSTS above me,

The AMPHIBRACHS to love me,

The CRETICUS to creep across,

The DACTYL for our King.

—Yours, &c., ERNEST AUSTIN.

Drove Cottage, Wallington, Surrey.

October 3, 1922.

ROYAL NORMAL COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND

SIR,—I am extremely sorry that my excellent friend, Mr. Guy M. Campbell, Principal of the Royal Normal College for the Blind, should have cause to feel aggrieved at the omission to mention his magnificent School in the report of the R.C.O. successes sent to you from the National Institute for the Blind, while at the same time (and quite inadvertently) another school was named in a further instance.

It is quite true that by far the greater number of successful blind candidates at the R.C.O. are those of Royal Normal College students. Owing to the exigencies of space, the National Institute—when reporting R.C.O. successes—usually omits the names of the various Blind Schools or of private teachers who prepare the candidates. In this very instance, where another school was named, we have since found that the principal credit was due to Mr. F. W. Belchamber, who coached the candidate after he had left school.

I hope Mr. Campbell will accept this frank explanation. The National Institute is concerned with all the interests of all civilian blind, and is only too anxious to place credit wherever it is due.—Yours, &c.,

EDWARD WATSON

(Director of Music Publications).

224-6-8, Great Portland Street, W.1.

October 4, 1922.

THE GLOUCESTER FESTIVAL

SIR,—At this excellent Festival Bach was, for some reason, only represented by his Motet, Now shall the grace. In various critical notices of the performances a feeling is somehow suggested that this work did not sound particularly effective. But what surely must be the true reason for such disappointment has not, so far as I am aware, been pointed out. In the Bach-Gesellschaft edition of the composer's works this Motet is given with accompaniment to the voices, mostly of an independent character, for three trumpets, three oboes, timpani, and strings. Thus, together with the eight voices, it is possible in places to count anything up to fifteen parts, all moving apparently at their own sweet will. A much-used figure of quavers and semi-quavers constantly appears in the orchestra, quite apart from the movement of the voices. And at times the essential bass is found in the 'continuo,' not in the vocal score. The effect of the work given in its completeness would no doubt be most exhilarating. Gloucester gave us but a 'maimed rite,' so far as I can see.—Yours, &c.,

Cheltenham.

GEORGE GARDNER.

October 6, 1922.

PURCELL FOR SMALL ORCHESTRAS

SIR,—In the October issue of the Musical Times mention is made of a West of England concert at which music arranged from Byrd, Purcell, &c., was performed by a small orchestra. To quote your notice:

'The Purcell Suite suffered from the fact that the conductor had scored the movements himself—a task which he frankly admits was above him. He feels strongly that a great deal of Purcell should be available for small orchestra, and we agree.'

Perhaps it would be of interest to this conductor and others to know that a Suite for small orchestra, arranged from the virginal pieces of Giles Farnaby, Byrd, and other Old English masters, is available.

This Suite, known as an Elizabethan Suite, is arranged from the music of the ballet, A Masque at the Court of Queen Elizabeth, performed at the Oxford Musical Festival in May of this year, and was scored by myself from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book. It is now deposited in Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb's Library of Manuscripts.—Yours, &c.,

1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

GORDON JACOB.

October 11, 1922.

MILTON'S ODE ON THE NATIVITY

SIR,—I am enclosing the first few bars of a setting of Milton's Ode on the Nativity, which I remember hearing some time ago. I should be glad if anyone could furnish particulars of composer and publisher:

—Yours, &c.,

O. H. HADAMS.

43, Ashted Road, E.5.

September 26, 1922.

WARNING TO
VOCALISTS, INSTRUMENTALISTS, Etc.

SIR,—May I bring the following to the notice of your musical readers? Yesterday a young lady vocalist called on me asking for an audition. I told her that I had over five hundred good artists on my books, and there was no prospect of an engagement in the near future. She informed me that she received a letter to come to London for an audition. Her fare was eighteen shillings, she had to pay twenty-one shillings entrance fee, and an extra five shillings for the audition. I think it is time this scandal was made public. There are many unemployed in our overcrowded profession, and artists should be careful before parting with any money to agencies or concert-directions of a kind which get their living by promising remunerative engagements if entrance and audition fees are paid. Such cases are happening daily, and it should be known that no genuine concert or theatrical direction accepts fees for auditions.

I trust you will publish this letter for the benefit of your readers.—Your-, &c., A. E. MILGROM.

317, Regent Street, W. 1.
October 17, 1922.

'A WORD ON THE ORGANIST'

SIR,—The letter of Mr. Eric Brough in your October number will doubtless be read with interest by that section of the organ world for whom his remarks are intended. We cannot, of course, get away from the fact that prestige in every profession, music perhaps most of all, is a matter of comparisons, but as one convinced that the English school of organ playing stands to-day pre-eminent, I would ask, Is it really necessary to suggest the comparison that Mr. Brough tacitly assumes when we have in our midst accomplished purists in organ playing of the type of Dr. Ley and Dr. Darke, or concert players equipped with unrivalled technique and a facility in recasting in terms of organ tone the many-voiced scores of the great masters, of the calibre, say, of an Ellingford of St. George's Hall, Liverpool, and others? English artists hoc genus can indeed be worthily coupled with a Dupré on the one hand and a Bonnet on the other without fear of contradiction.—

Chattisham, Ipswich. Yours, &c., A. H. STEVENS.
October 12, 1922.

'THE RAFF CENTENARY'

SIR,—Your correspondent's letter in praise of Raff's Symphonies, as played by the L.C.C. Orchestra, recalls happy memories of pre-war days. But it would hardly be profitable to advocate that his Lenore should figure at the Promenade or other concerts: for at Queen's Hall only the very highest class of music obtains a hearing. As one who has occasionally yawned on those premises, I sometimes long to hear a programme of thoroughly low-class music—a programme comprising some such items as the following:

March ...	'A Swedish Wedding' Södermann
Overture ...	'The Fair Melusina' Mendelssohn
Ballet Music ...	'Feramors' Rubinstein
Symphony ...	'A Rustic Wedding' Goldmark
Irish Rhapsody No. 1 ...	'Incidental Music' Stanford
Gipsy Suite ...	'Merchant of Venice' Sullivan
Scenes from the South German
1. Andalusienne. 2. Bolero. 3. Moorish Dance Song. Nicodé
4. Serenade. 5. A Provencal Tale. 6. In the Tavern. Meyerbeer
March ...	'Schiller' Meyerbeer

—Yours, &c., J. H. HOBBS.

11, Devonshire Road, S.W.8.
October 12, 1922.

THE 'GENIAL' SRIABIN

SIR,—The Bolshevik manifesto (if that be the right word) on proletarian and bourgeois music, which was reproduced in The Times a few days ago, has given rise to a good deal of discussion. I have no wish to join in it, but only want to draw attention to one small point. Most of the writers on this subject have expressed surprise, as well they might, at the mention of 'the genial Scriabin'—a most inappropriate epithet. The real explanation of it is probably far simpler than any we have had. I imagine that the document reached us via Germany, and someone was misled by the word 'genial.' In German it does not mean cheerful, kindly, or humane, but only 'possessed of genius.' Thus a German can talk of 'genial' inhumanity, meaning the unconscious cruelty sometimes exercised by genius. The word has come to have a slightly disrespectful tinge—as when Heine (I think it was Heine) spoke of artists who try to show how 'genial' they are, by wearing impossible clothes and not washing.—Yours, &c., A. K.

The December concert of the Novello Choir at Bishopsgate Institute will take place on the 21st—not on the 19th, as previously announced. There are vacancies for all voices, especially altos and tenors.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A new academical year opened with the Michaelmas term on Thursday, September 21, when in addition to a very large entry of ordinary pupils, there were nearly seventy entries for the Special Teachers' Training Course. For this course the Academy provides classes of children to which the various professors give model lessons, the student-teachers afterwards taking the classes in hand and giving lessons under the supervision of the professors. The course is therefore of an eminently practical character, and is of the greatest value to those who desire to become efficient teachers and also to qualify for registration.

On Wednesday afternoon, October 25, the Principal gave the first of a course of four lectures upon the 'History of Music,' dealing with the early development of music. The lectures are given on Wednesday afternoons in the Duke's Hall.

APPOINTMENTS

Pianoforte.—Leo Livens, A.R.A.M.
" Egerton Tidmarsh, A.R.A.M.
Elocution.—Mrs. Matthey, F.R.A.M.

AWARDS

The Broughton Packer Bath Scholarship (Violoncello).—Awarded to Albert E. Killick (a native of London), Emlyn C. Samuel being commended. The adjudicators were Messrs. J. T. Lockyer and W. E. Whitehouse.

The Sainton-Dolby Scholarship (Contralto).—Awarded to Violet S. Turnbull (a native of Cape Town, South Africa). The adjudicators were Mr. Marcus Thomson, Miss Mary T. Wilson, and Miss Pitt Soper (in the chair).

The Thalberg Scholarship (Pianoforte).—Awarded to Kitty M. Roe (a native of Queenstown), Dorothy B. Folkard and Olga M. Thomas being very highly commended, and Lilian J. G. Furze commended. The adjudicators were Miss Isabel Gray, Miss Ivy Herbert, and Messrs. W. J. Kipps and Herbert Lake (chairman).

The Campbell Clarke Scholarship (Soprano and Mezzo-soprano).—Awarded to Rose Alper (a native of Wynberg, South Africa), Doris G. Sheppard being highly commended, and Stella Brown and Doris Storey commended. The adjudicators were Miss Evelyn Langston and Mr. Frederick Keel.

The Ada Lewis Scholarships have been awarded as follows:

Pianoforte.—Awarded to Francis G. Britton (a native of London), Reginald G. Oakley and Gladys E. Lovell being very highly commended. The adjudicators were Messrs. Edward Morton, Septimus Webbe, and Thomas B. Knott (chairman).

Violin.—Awarded to L. Josephine Hurd (a native of London), Isidore Hoddes and Harry Sandler being commended. The adjudicators were Miss Elsie M. Nye and Messrs. James T. Lockyer and Frank Arnold (chairman).

Contralto.—Awarded to Nora E. Greene (a native of London), Doris K. Gibbs being highly commended. The adjudicators were Miss Mary T. Wilson and Mr. Arthur Thompson.

THE R.A.M. CENTENARY THEATRE

At the Centenary celebrations of the Royal Academy of Music, which took place during July, it was announced that as a permanent memorial of this important landmark in the history of the R.A.M. it had been decided to build a Theatre adjoining the Academy in order that adequate opportunities might be available for the production of operas and plays by the students as part of their training. A suitable site has been secured, and the plans of a small theatre approved, the cost of building and equipment of which amounts to about £30,000. The appeal which was made by Lord Burnham in his speech at the banquet which brought the Centenary celebrations to a close has had a gratifying response, and about half the sum required has already been subscribed or promised. It is felt, however, that there must be hundreds—probably thousands—of past pupils of the Academy not only in the British Isles but scattered over the British Empire who, though out of immediate touch with the Academy, would wish to be associated with the building and equipment of this Theatre and who would be delighted to send some small donation to the Building Fund. It is quite impossible for the Academy to communicate directly with such past pupils who have doubtless changed their place of abode several times since their student days. It is therefore suggested that all past pupils who have not received a copy of the Appeal sent out in July and who are willing to give a donation to the Centenary Theatre Fund, should send it as soon as possible to the secretary of the R.A.M., as it is intended to commence building operations in the near future.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

The Michaelmas term was inaugurated with an address by Dr. F. W. Russell, late principal of Brasenose College, Oxford. He dealt with the effect of music upon national characteristics, and appealed for the preservation of the musical traits and traditions of England. Music and morals were most closely interwoven, for music was the echo, the outcome, and the vocalisation of national sentiment. Hence if we valued our Anglo-Saxon character, and remembered the stifling effect of superinducing alien forms, we should oppose such 'dumping' as was illustrated in the past by the action of the Church in the Middle Ages with regard to Gregorian tunes, and should refuse to submit to the French, Russian, Negroid, and American influences now at work in our midst. It should never be forgotten that in the background of our insular race there existed beautiful masses of choral work, the madrigal and the mediæval concerted piece, which should form part of the study of all our musicians who desired to make a name.

The usual alternate weekly concerts and recitals were given during the month. Amongst the latter were included a pianoforte and vocal recital by Messrs. Fred Gostelow and Dawson Freer, and another by Miss Maud Agnes Winter and Mr. John Savile.

One of the College students, G. H. Skaer, who holds a University Scholarship, has just passed the first examination for the Durham degree in music.

Successful distributions of certificates took place during the period under review at such important towns as Aberdeen, Dundee, Glasgow, Hanley, and Newcastle, all of which were attended by Sir Frederick Bridge, who in making a comparison of the virtues of the Sol-fa and Old Notation methods, urged in favour of the latter that it was the universal language of music. 'An Englishman, a Russian, an Italian, and a Frenchman might meet together and without being able to speak a word of each others language, they could play a quartet from music.' The distribution at the Greenock centre was attended by the secretary of the College, Mr. C. N. H. Rodwell.

Music in the Provinces

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—At the first of a series of symphony concerts by the City of Birmingham Orchestra, given on Wednesday, October 4, at the Town Hall, Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted a stimulating, if unconventional, performance of César Franck's Symphony. The programme included also four of Bantock's Sappho songs, along with the Orchestral Prelude to the cycle. The composer conducted, and the vocalist was Miss Dorothy d'Orsay, who sang with admirable control and artistic insight. Hers is a beautiful contralto voice, finding a complement for the variety of its colouring in the intelligence of her interpretations. —The Sunday evening concerts of the City Orchestra, now a regular feature of the winter musical season, have provided some interesting music. Mozart's Jupiter and Beethoven's fifth Symphonies have been given, and, among lesser-known works, Gustav Holst's Marching Song for orchestra proved extremely enjoyable. —Miss Marjorie Sotham has introduced the mid-day concert to Birmingham, and the venture promises to be successful. A vocal recital by Dr. Tom Goodey included songs by Wolf, Martin Shaw, and some charming folk-songs. Miss Sotham co-operated with Messrs. Frank Venton and

J. C. Hock in the Tchaikovsky Trio at the opening concert, and at another with Mr. Arthur Catterall in a first Birmingham performance of Alfred Wall's Sonata for violin and pianoforte. Mr. Wall shows a sound working knowledge of both instruments and a good structural sense, but on a first hearing the Sonata leaves one with an impression of dourness, its thematic material being hardly grateful. —Of recitals there have been a goodly number for so early in the season. One by Miss Evelyn Stevenson and Mr. Samuel Saul devoted to Old English music drew a large attendance. Miss Edna Iles, who gave a pianoforte recital on September 28, is as yet too immature on the interpretative side to do justice to works like Franck's Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue, or Scriabin's F sharp minor Sonata, but her technical facility promises well. —At a recital by Miss Amy Carter, a singer with a rich-toned, well-produced mezzo-contralto voice, Miss Désirée Ames gave with Mr. Michael Mullinar the first Birmingham performance of Rutland Boughton's Violin Sonata. The main charm of the work is in its note of joy and exultation. It has a programme drawn from Nietzsche, and its inspiration is strongly psychical. —Miss Denne Parker is giving with Prof. Bantock a series of historical song recitals under the auspices of the University. They are intended to illustrate the development of song during the 19th century. Schubert, Loewe, and Wolf were represented in the opening programme on October 13. —A season of opera by the Allington Charsley Company provided some unfamiliar works. What was inaccurately described as a first performance in English of Hérold's Zampa was given, Verdi was represented by his Ernani and The Masked Ball, and Rossini by The Barber of Seville. —Choral singing has not yet got into its stride, but on November 15 the City of Birmingham Choir is to give the first public performance of Vaughan Williams's new unaccompanied Mass. —Pachmann has been here to play before the usual crowd, followed by Rosing, with Misses Myra Hess and Irene Scharrer.

BISHOPSWORTH (Somerset).—A new Choral Society has been formed, under the conductorship of Mr. Frank Owen.

BRADFORD.—On behalf of St. Dunstan's Home, a special musical service was held on October 10 in St. Luke's Church, Bradford. Rheinberger's rarely-heard Suite for organ, violin, and cello was played by Mr. Hartwell Robertshaw (organ), Mr. W. Holmes (violin), and Mr. H. Ambler (cello). —The fifty-eighth season of the Bradford Subscription Concerts opened on October 6 with a recital by Cortot and Thibaud in St. George's Hall. There is also a recital by M. Pachmann to put on record. —For the week commencing October 9 the British National Opera Company occupied the stage of the Bradford Alhambra, where in the early months of this year it made so auspicious a début.

BRISTOL.—For purposes of general convenience the headquarters of the Madrigal Society have been moved from the celebrated old Montague Hotel to the Musical Club rooms in Pembroke Road. The rules have been revised, and it is intended to give recitals of sacred music of the Tudor madrigal period in the Cathedral. —With special reference to the forthcoming series of concerts arranged by Messrs. Duck, Son, & Pinker, Mr. Alec Robertson lectured, on September 26, on 'Sonata form,' dealing mainly with the Elgar Violoncello Concerto, César Franck's Violin Sonata, and the Kreutzer Sonata. —Roy Lockwood, a youthful pianist, gave his first recital on September 28. —The inaugural meeting of the West of England Musical Education Society was held at the Victoria Rooms on September 30. Mr. Robert Percival, who presided, pointed out that the aims of the Society were to improve the present conditions of teaching in regard to music, standard of performance, and general musicianship, to prepare candidates and provide facilities for carrying out the conditions as laid down by the Teachers' Registration Council, and to provide lectures and recitals on educational subjects and informal meetings for discussion of the various aspects of teaching. The Society consists of teachers and performers of music, amateur and professional musicians, and others interested in musical education. —Lady Beecham's Opera Company opened a week's season at the Empire on October 2, the first night being occupied by Adrian Beecham's setting in opera form of The Merchant of Venice.—Mr. Herbert Parsons gave a pianoforte recital on October 11, playing d'Albert's arrangement of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D, a Menuet Antique by Ravel, and a Prelude, Sarabande, and Toccata by Debussy, also works by Dorothy Howell, Albeniz, and John Ireland.

BURNLEY.—The Halifax Glee and Madrigal Society, conducted by Mr. H. Shepley, sang at Burnley on October 6 unaccompanied music illustrative of three periods: From the 12th century to the 17th; the middle period to the end of the 18th century; and the modern period. Bach's Motet, Sing ye to the Lord, and pieces by Elgar and Vaughan Williams were given.

CARDIFF.—Mr. Lionel Falkman's Symphony Orchestra on October 8 played A Slavonic Rhapsody by Friedemann. —Mr. Garforth Mortimer opened an interesting series of orchestral concerts on the same date. —On October 14 Madame Clara Butt, Mr. Kennerley Rumford (who sang Ireland's Vagabond and Raymond Loughborough's Captain Danny), Miss Aileen d'Orme, Miss Adela Verne, and Melsa gave a concert in the Empire Theatre. —At the Park Hall concert on October 15 Mr. Montague Phillips and Miss Clara Butterworth rendered some new songs by the former, and the orchestra played the Rienzi overture and Saint-Saëns's Le Rouet d'Omphale. —At the Capitol, on October 15, Mr. Falkman's orchestra played The Spirit of Pageantry (Percy E. Fletcher) and Eric Coates's Suite The Joy of Youth.

CHATHAM.—The subscription concerts opened on September 27 with a pianoforte recital by M. Cortôt, which included César Franck's Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue and Liszt's twelfth Rhapsody and Melodie Polonaise. —M. Pachmann gave a Chopin recital on September 30, including several of the Études. This was the first of the 'international celebrity' series.

CLECKHEATON.—Handel's Samson was performed before a congregation of over two thousand in Providence Place Chapel on October 8. Mr. Norman Allin sang the bass solos, and Mr. Charles Archer conducted the augmented choir. The trumpeter was Mr. J. C. Dyson, Mr. Henry Wright was the organist, and other principals were Miss Nellie Judson, Miss Winnie Vipond, and Mr. Wilfrid Hudson.

COLLINGHAM.—The village of Collingham, near Leeds, is probably unique in England for its music. Owing to the enterprise of certain of its residents, recitals by some of the foremost musicians of the day are given frequently in the Memorial Hall. Mr. Hamilton Harty has been a visitor; but the most recent recitalist was de Greef, who, on September 28, joined Mr. Lloyd Hartley in a transcription for two pianofortes of Saint-Saëns's Concerto in G minor. On the same occasion the former played Mendelssohn's Variations Sérieuses, Chopin's Scherzo in B flat minor, the Moonlight Sonata, and a piece by Grétry.

EDINBURGH.—The Powell Subscription concerts were resumed on October 7, the artists being Madame Tétrazini, Mr. Lauri Kennedy, Mr. John Amadio, Signor Bazzio, Mr. Bratza, and Mr. Ivor Newton. —On October 9, the lecture session of the Reid Chair of Music opened with a lecture by Prof. Tovey on 'Some Postulates of Musical Culture.' —Chaliapin paid his first visit to Edinburgh on October 14, with M. Max Rabinovitch, and sang a long programme, chiefly of Russian songs. —On October 16, Miss Beatrice Parkes, soprano vocalist, gave a recital of songs by Schubert, Schumann, Hugo Wolf, Brahms, Vaughan Williams, Cyril Rootham, Elgar, Butterworth, and Arthur Somervell.

EXETER.—The military band of the Coldstream Guards gave two concerts on September 20, conducted by Lieut. R. G. Evans, and included in the programmes were the Finale from Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 and Svendsen's Carnival in Paris. —On September 27 the London String Quartet played Debussy's Quartet, Frank Bridge's London-derry Air, Percy Grainger's Molly on the Shore, and a fairy suite, The Pixey King, by H. Waldo Warner. —Exeter and District Organists' Association meeting, on October 7, reported a membership of fifty-four, a considerable increase. Dr. Ernest Bullock was re-elected president, and Mr. H. Gilberthorpe hon. secretary. —At the first meeting, on October 18, of the session of Exeter Chamber Music Club, of which Dr. Bullock is director of the music, MacDowell's Celtic Sonata for pianoforte, Handel's Sonata for flute and pianoforte, No. 5, in F, and Trios for three female voices by Vaughan Williams (Sound Sleep) and Elgar (The Snow) were among the items performed.

HARROGATE.—Mr. Howard Carr, the municipal director of music, gave on October 3 the first of three lectures on 'Music in the Home.' —On October 10 the opening concert of the winter session of the Three Arts Club took place, when a programme devoted to local composers was presented. —The last of the series of twenty-four Thursday Symphony Concerts at the Royal Hall took place under Mr. Howard Carr's conductorship on October 12, with a programme that included Saint-Saëns's Africa (Miss Ethel Davey being the pianist), Haydn's eighth Symphony, in E flat, and Mozart's thirty-eighth, in D.

HUDDERSFIELD.—At its concert on September 30, the Huddersfield Philharmonic Society presented orchestral music including the Scherzo and Finale of Dvorák's New World Symphony, also the Ruy Blas and Don Giovanni Overtures, besides lighter items by Moszkowski and Délibes. Mr. Wilfred Miller, one of the orchestra, played a Dream piece by Delafosse, as clarinet solo.

LEEDS.—An account of the Leeds Musical Festival appears elsewhere in this issue. On September 23, Haydn's Creation was sung at Oxford Place Chapel, under the conductorship of Mr. Robert Pickard. —The first of a series of six special orchestral concerts was held in Belgrave Central Hall on October 7, when a section of the Leeds Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Bensley Ghent, played Beethoven's Egmont and his Symphony No. 1; also an Old English Suite of Cowen. —During the week beginning October 9, Adrian Beecham's musical setting of The Merchant of Venice was staged at Leeds Theatre Royal. —The Leeds Committee of the British National Opera Company was entertained on October 13 at a luncheon, by Mr. and Mrs. Percy T. Leigh. It was stated that the Leeds subscriptions to the B.N.O. now amount to about £1,000 as against between £3,000 and £4,000 from Bradford. Mr. Percy Pitt, artistic director of the Company, said he understood that they were visiting Leeds Grand Theatre for one week, commencing on February 26 next. —The winter season of the Leeds Saturday Orchestral Concerts opened on October 14, when Borodin's second Symphony, in B minor, was performed for the first time at Leeds, Mr. Eugene Goossens conducting. —Mr. T. J. Hoggett, lecturer on Music to the University of Leeds, gave the first of a series of discourses dealing with 'The beginnings of Modern Music,' on October 16, when his special subject was 'Beethoven and his later works.'

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. Frank Roscoe opened a course of lectures on September 19, in Rushworth Hall, on 'Musical Appreciation.' —A recital was given by Mr. Arthur Shattuck, the American pianist, on October 4. On the same day the Crane Hall mid-week recitals were resumed, Mr. Joseph Greene playing two Sonatas by Dr. Arne, a Fantasy Ballade by Frederick Morrison, Norman Peterkin's The Centaurs, a Scherzo by Palmgren, a Fantasy in B flat minor by Swinstead, three Preludes by Scriabin, and Paderewski's Cracovienne Fantastique. —Mr. Dolmetsch and members of his family gave the first of their new series of chamber concerts on October 10. The programme included a Fantasy by William Lawes, a Chaconne in D for viole da gamba by Marais, a Trio by Rameau for harpsichord, violin, and viola da gamba, and Bach's E major Concerto for clavichord and strings. —Under the auspices of the British Music Society on October 11, Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser, Miss Patuffa Kennedy-Fraser, and Miss Margaret Kennedy-Fraser gave a recital of Gaelic song. —On October 12 Dr. A. W. Pollitt opened a series of lectures in the Arts Theatre of the University. Each lecture will deal with some of the music to be performed at Liverpool during the following week.—The thirty-eighth session of the Liverpool Welsh National Society opened on October 14, with a lecture by Dr. D. Vaughan Thomas in answer to critics of Welsh music, who were unacquainted with the language and the laws governing Welsh poetry and literature.—At the Mossel concert on October 14 Miss Irene Scharrer and Miss Myra Hess played Arensky's Minuet and Scherzo for two pianofortes, and Vladimir Rosing sang Cyril Scott's Invocation to Love, Moussorgsky's Death Serenade, and a Somerset folk-song, Lord Rendal.

LIANDUDNO.—The Pier concert season closed on September 30 with a special farewell to Mr. Arthur W. Payne, the conductor of the orchestra, Madame Pauline Donalda and Mr. Edward Holland being the vocalists.—The Winter Garden series of concerts was inaugurated on October 1.

MARGATE.—A notable musical Festival was held here from Saturday, September 23, to the following Thursday. It was under the direction of the Municipality, and the orchestral music was played by the Municipal Orchestra, of which Mr. Bainbridge Robinson is the regular conductor. In the first programme appeared Coleridge-Taylor's incidental music to Faust and movements from well-known Symphonies. The second brought Miss Myra Hess and Miss Irene Scharrer in music for two pianofortes, and Mr. Adam Carse's Boulogne Suite. On Monday came a 'Ballad' Concert—of a superior order. Tuesday's music was composed, and conducted, by Mr. Edward German, and included the Theme and Six Diversions. On the Thursday Dr. Vaughan Williams took charge of his London Symphony, and Mr. William Murdoch played César Franck's Symphonic Variations. The Festival came to a climax with a concert of Sir Edward Elgar's works, the composer conducting. The programme comprised the second Wand of Youth Suite, the Cockaigne Overture, a Pomp and Circumstance March, and, best of all, the Violin Concerto, played by Miss Margaret Fairless. The Festival was a great success, for which thanks are due largely to Mr. John E. Saxby, entertainments manager to the Corporation. A second Festival is confidently expected.

NEWCASTLE.—A new choral society has been formed, to be known as the Oriana Choir, with Mr. Arthur Milner as conductor. Its object is the study of unaccompanied music, with special regard to madrigals, &c., of the Elizabethan and Tudor periods.—The thirty-eighth season of the Chamber Music Society opened on October 12, the Lenin String Quartet playing Ravel's Quartet in F, and Mr. John Goss singing Campion's I care not and Dr. Boyer's Address to the God of War, with Mr. Edgar Bainton at the pianoforte.

NORTHAMPTON.—Mr. W. F. Marshman's orchestra gave a concert at the Poor Law Institution on October 8, when a well-varied programme was much enjoyed by the inmates. The Master (Mr. Samuel Twisleton) is a keen violinist, and for the past ten years has arranged for occasional concerts of this kind.

OSSETT.—To celebrate its coming of age the Ossett Orchestral Society gave a special concert on October 11, when its new conductor, Mr. Alfred Hemingway, first took up the baton. The programme included the Overtures to the Magic Flute and Raymond, and Elgar's Crown of India.

PLYMOUTH.—Members of the south-western district of the Incorporated Society of Musicians at their thirty-seventh annual general meeting, held under the chairmanship of Mr. David Parkes on September 23, were addressed by Mr. Hugo Chadfield on the reconstruction of the Society. He said that its chief aim was to provide an organization which should represent and protect the interests of professional musicians. The president, Dr. Mann, also spoke to the same effect, and the secretary, Mr. Hedley Lamerton, reported the resignations of several members.—Under the auspices of the Plymouth branch of the British Music Society, a choir consisting of approximately sixty of each of the four local choral societies and instrumentalists from three local bodies, the whole amounting to three hundred performers, gave Eaton Faning's choral ballad, The Miller's Wooing, Balfour Gardiner's Cargoes, the Epilogue from The Golden Legend, 'The Challenge of Thor' (King Olaf), and the March from Tannhäuser. The orchestra played a miniature Suite of Eric Coates and the William Tell Overture. Mr. David Parkes, Dr. Harold Lake, Mr. Walter Weekes, Mr. Douglas Durston, and Mr. Percy Butchers were the conductors. Miss Olga Haley sang Landon Ronald's settings of three Song Offerings from Rabinadrath Tagore.

PORTSMOUTH.—At the Storry concert, on September 18, the Symphony Orchestra produced a new Lament by the conductor, Mr. Charles H. Peters. The vocalists were Madame Saltini Mochi and Signor Ugo Fiorentino.—On September 24 Miss Marie Hall played an Old Chinese Folk-Song arranged for violin by Eugène Goossens, and Mr. Norman Allin sang Loewe's Edward.—On September 25 the Royal Carl Rosa Opera Company opened a fortnight's season at the Hippodrome.—The Town Saturday Concerts opened on September 30, when the R.M.A. Band, conducted by Lieut. R. P. O'Donnell, with Miss Eda Kerse as soloist, played Max Bruch's Scotch Fantasia and Elgar's Wand of Youth.—Contributing to the Municipal Concerts on October 7, Portsmouth Male Choir sang Elgar's Feasting I watch and a Sailors' Chorus by Perry.

ST. HELENS.—The Glee Club, conducted by Dr. B. S. Siddall, gave an enterprising concert on October 11. The scheme illustrated British music from Sumer is icumen in to Arnold Bax, with a programme that few male-voice choirs could attempt. The instrumental music of the evening was of appropriate quality, including as it did Elgar's Violin Sonata, played by Mr. Fred Brown and Mr. Arthur Dicks.

SWANAGE.—A concert of more than average merit was given at the Casino on October 2, in connection with the Isle of Purbeck Golf Club. Miss Nora Read, Miss Amy Howell, Mr. Roland Jackson, and Mr. Bertram Jackson sang songs by Dunhill, German, Rachmaninov, Saint-Saëns, &c. Miss Janet Smith played violin solos, and Miss Lilian Edwards recited.

YORK.—On October 7, Mr. Eugène Goossens lectured before the York Centre of the British Music Society, taking as his subject 'Contemporary Developments in Music.' He paid a graceful tribute to Mr. William Baines, the young York composer, whom he described as evidently endowed with genius. Mr. Goossens added that he felt that very soon a new kind of musical expression would appear, though he did not know what form it would take.—Among works proposed for performance by the York Symphony Orchestra are Bach's Concerto in D, for solo flute, violin, pianoforte, and strings, Parry's English Suite, the Elgar Serenade, Goossens's By the Tarn, and selections from Giles Farnaby and Holst.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

JOHN F. POWER, one of the oldest and most highly respected of Irish musicians, who died at Clonmel, Co. Tipperary, on September 21. Born in 1839, he showed an unusual aptitude for music at an early age, and was appointed organist of St. Peter and St. Paul's Church, Clonmel, in 1865, holding the post with distinction for close on fifty years. He was, also, for over forty years, professor of music at the famous Mount Melleray Seminary, Cappoquin, Co. Waterford, conducted by the Cistercian monks, and was noted as a voice producer. Some of his songs, notably She lived beside the Anner and Rare Clonmel, had a great vogue.

A special memoir by Mr. Herbert Thompson of the late SIR CHARLES SANTLEY (who died on September 22) appears on page 784. Below we give a summary of his career.

Charles Santley was born at Liverpool on February 28, 1834. Music entered into his early influences, for his father, a bookbinder, was an organist and his mother a singer. He made an early study of the violin, sang as an alto soloist, then as a tenor, and finally as a bass. At the age of twenty he went to Milan with £40 in his pocket. Here his singing-master, Gaetano Nava, became a friend and did everything in his power to encourage the young Englishman and to help him on his way. In 1857, Santley made his first appearance in opera as the Doctor in La Traviata. After this he fell on difficult times, until Chorley, the Athenæum critic, urged him back to England. An interview with John Hullah led to an engagement to sing Adam in The Creation. This was the beginning of a career which led gradually upward. In March, 1858, he sang the part of Elijah—afterwards his most famous rôle—for the first time at a performance of the Sacred Harmonic Society. For the next few years, however, he turned his attention to opera. He was Hoel in the first English version of Meyerbeer's Dinorah. In the winter season of 1860-61 he was with the Company at Her Majesty's Theatre, under Charles Hallé. Next year he made a great success in Italian opera at Covent Garden, under the management of Mr. Gye, but found that his success was unpopular with the Company. Again at Her Majesty's, under the Mapleson management, he appeared as Valentine at the first performance of Faust in England. For the next few years—until 1871—he ran a double career on the stage and the platform, always advancing by virtue of his great energy and versatility. After a visit to America, where he played in the Carl Rosa Company and joined Madame Patey and W. H. Cummings in a concert tour, he abandoned the stage and entered into his real career as a concert singer. It lasted thirty years and more, and its greatness is a living memory. In 1907 he celebrated the jubilee of his public career at the Albert Hall, and received the honour of knighthood. His formal farewell occurred at Covent Garden in May, 1911, when he played one of his earliest parts—that of Tom Tugg in Dibdin's The Waterman. During the war, at the age of eighty-one, he emerged to sing at a Mansion House concert in aid of the Belgian refugees. In 1889 he married Miss Gertrude Kemble, a niece of Mrs. Kemble.

EDWIN STEPHENSON, on September 20. Since 1914 he had been organist and choirmaster of St. Margaret's, Westminster, where his organ recitals had been a notable feature. He was no less successful as a choir-trainer. At the early age of fourteen he was appointed organist and choirmaster of Cartmel Priory, afterwards going to Sunningdale, St. Michael's, Brighton, the Parish Church, Brighton, and Birmingham Cathedral. From Birmingham he went to Westminster. Mr. Stephenson did good service in restoring to regular use a good deal of Old English church music of the Byrd school. His latest project of the kind was to do honour to Robert Whyte (who was buried in St. Margaret's, Westminster), by publishing, by the aid of the St. Margaret's congregation, Whyte's Lamentations, which had been specially scored for the purpose at the Christ Church Library, Oxford. During the early days of the war he adapted to English words, and included in the St. Margaret's service lists, some fine examples of Russian church music. He will be best remembered, however, as an organist of outstanding ability. His Saturday afternoon recitals during the winter months drew keen organists from all parts of the London district. He confined his programmes to real organ music, and had a knack of discovering and making known excellent works that were rarely heard elsewhere. He once explained to the present writer that he eschewed transcriptions, not because he had any objection to them; on the contrary, he described them as 'good fun.' He felt, however, that the genuine repertory of the organ received a good deal less than fair play, and, having a fine instrument and a steady public for his recitals, he considered it to be his duty to do propaganda work on behalf of pure organ music of all periods. His technical mastery enabled him to make light work of the most forbidding difficulties, and his audiences at Westminster were enabled to hear such rarely-played works as the Sonatas and larger Chorale Fantasias of Reger, the later Symphonies of Widor, &c. The less familiar works of Bach also appeared in his programmes, and he delighted in such schemes as a series of programmes in which the Little Organ Book and the Catechism Preludes were played as nearly as possible on the occasions of the Church's year with which they were connected. He was a man of singular modesty and personal charm, and his death at a comparatively early age is a great loss to church music.

JAMES JOHN WALKER, organ-builder, on September 19. He was born on August 21, 1846, and began his career in the workshop of his father, Joseph William Walker. (Walker the elder had been apprenticed to George Pike England, whose father was apprenticed to Richard Bridge, who in his turn was articled to John Harris, son of Renatus Harris. There is thus a direct line from Renatus Harris to the house of Walker. The present factory in Francis Street, Tottenham Court Road, was built in 1848, by Joseph William Walker, who moved thence in 1838 from Museum Street, hard by. Here, ten years before, he had taken over the business of George England.) Much of Mr. Walker's success as an organ-builder was due to the fact that he worked his way from boyhood through every department of the craft. A man of many hobbies, especially those of a scientific bent, he gave much of his leisure to colour photography and to various studies in matters concerning light and heat. He was a Fellow of the Royal Photographic Society and a Member of the Royal Institution. The result of his scientific leaning was shown in many successful experiments in regard to the details of organ-building. Of the quality of his work there is no need to speak: the name of Walker has long been, and will continue to be, honoured among organ-lovers. The best record of his life is his work, and we cannot do better than give a list of some typical instruments, small and large, for which he was responsible: York Minster (1903); Rochester Cathedral (1904); Bristol Cathedral (1907); Shanghai Cathedral, Hong Kong Cathedral, American Episcopal Cathedral at Manila (1909); Roman Catholic Cathedral at Trinidad (1913); Protestant Cathedral at Trinidad (1914); Sandringham Parish Church (1880, and a new instrument in 1909); St. Margaret's, Westminster (1897); Church of the Sacred Heart, Wimbledon (1912); Holy Trinity, Sloane Street (1891); the organ of the Royal College of Music, given by Parry, in 1901, and Harrow School Chapel (1921).

Photo by Emery

[Walton & Felixstowe

JAMES JOHN WALKER

The Cæcilia (Ladies') Trio Choir will resume work for the season after Christmas, to prepare for concert appearances in the spring of 1923. This body, which is honoured with the patronage of Her Majesty Queen Alexandra, meets for practice every Wednesday morning at the residence of the conductor, Mr. Herman Klein, 40, Avenue Road, N.W.8, to whom inquiries regarding membership (audition free) should be addressed.

MUSIC IN IRELAND

Mr. F. H. Sawyer was presented with a silver writing set and other gifts by colleagues and former pupils of the Methodist College, Belfast, on leaving that city to take up a position at Greenock. He had been organist of Elmwood Church, Belfast, since 1904.

The 'Mater' Carnival at Dublin, during the last week of September, was enlivened with some good selections of music—all of a popular class.

Prof. John McNeill has been appointed Minister of Education under the Irish Free State, and there is talk of a Minister of Fine Arts and Music.

A new theatre is shortly to be opened in the Rotunda Buildings, Dublin, to be called 'The Everyman Theatre,' yet the glaring need of a concert hall for the Irish metropolis is still unsupplied.

The Ulster Hall (Belfast) organ recitals opened on October 7, when Capt. C. J. Brennan, the City Organist, gave a varied selection, the vocalists being Madame Ella Johnston and Mr. R. M. Kent, with Mr. George Smith at the pianoforte.

The Teach Uiltain chamber music concerts (third season) were inaugurated on October 13, Miss Thompson being leader. The chief item was Brahms's Quartet in A (Op. 26).

Belfast music-lovers are on the qui vive for the appearance of Madame Tetrassini, who is billed to appear at the 'celebrity' concert in Ulster Hall on October 17.

In connection with the British Music Society an Irish Area Council has been formed at Belfast, with Mrs. Crofts as hon. secretary.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

Only a week intervened between the summer season—which came to an effective close at Scheveningen with Beethoven's Ninth—and the commencement of the winter season. Mengelberg appeared at the first subscription concert, after an absence of unwonted duration. Besides older pieces, such as Mahler's first Symphony, he gave us a first hearing of Henri Rabaud's Eclogue, a work that breathes the most tender emotions. The next concert was made conspicuous by Bronislaw Hubermann appearing as soloist for the first time at one of the subscription concerts, which with our audience always counts as a kind of hall-mark. He played the Concerto of Brahms superbly. Small wonder that the announcement of his solo recital a few days later caused the big hall to be filled almost to the very last seat. On this occasion Hubermann played two Concertos (Bach in A minor and Goetz in F), besides Beethoven's Kreutzer Sonata.

The French Musical Festival was a great event. Its alleged objective was to give a survey of the present state of modern French music. The realisation of this plan was, however, hampered, inasmuch as the momentary conditions in our operatic life did not permit performances of French opera in the scheme. Works of César Franck were excluded this time, since an entire concert is being reserved to celebrate the Franck Centenary on December 7.

The scheme of the first concert on September 27 included the Prelude to Le Déluge by Saint-Saëns, d'Indy's Symphonie sur un chant montagnard, Pierné's Paysages Français, and Dukas's L'Apprenti sorcier, and works of Debussy, viz., Fantaisie for pianoforte and orchestra, Prelude à l'Après-midi d'un Faune, and Iberia. No less interesting was the second concert, which took place on the following night. We heard Roger-Ducasse's charming Suite Française, a repetition of Rabaud's Eclogue, one of Roussel's new compositions called Pour un fête de printemps, which left rather a gloomy impression on the listener, as it certainly did not live up to its cheerful-sounding title. This was followed by Florent Schmitt's fragments from the Suite Antoine et Cléopâtre, which drew little response from the audience. The concert finished with Gabriel Fauré's beautiful Requiem for chorus, solo, and orchestra. Splendid work was done by our Toonkunst choir.

After this came two chamber concerts. At the first, the Amsterdam String Quartet played Saint-Saëns (Op. 112) and a Quintet of Pierné. At the second the famous Poulet Quartet, than which a finer body of artists is hardly to be imagined, played the String Quartets of Debussy and Ravel. Between these two works we heard three songs by Lili Boulanger, which gave ample evidence of the extraordinary talent of this young French lady, who died in 1918 at the early age of twenty-five. These were sung by Madame Croiza, who added two of Ravel's daintiest compositions, viz., Deux Epigrammes and Le Noël des Jouets, Ravel himself giving us a proof of his marvellously fine playing by interpreting the pianoforte parts. The finale of the French Festival, an orchestral concert, presented Widor's Overture and Prelude to Act 2 of his opera, Les Pêcheurs de Saint-Jean, songs by Henry Duparc and André Caplet, and the Suite, Prote, by Darius Milhaud, who, despite the often excruciating moments his music inflicted on the listeners, came in for a succès d'estime as soon as his presence among the audience was known. The climax of the evening was reached in the second part with three works of Ravel (La Valse, Schéherazade, and the Rapsodie Espagnole).

Of the numerous solo recitals I have to make special mention of Harold Bauer's reappearance at Amsterdam on October 9, after many years' absence. Once more he conquered his audience, not so much by his somewhat showy playing of Bach's Partita in B minor, but by his magnificent readings of works by Brahms and Chopin, winding up with a performance of Moussorgsky's Tableaux d'une Exposition that will not easily be forgotten. A recital of a young Hungarian violinist, Mlle. Ilona Fehér, was more of a curiosity than an artistic event. W. HARMANS.

GERMANY

Das Musikalische Freiburg offers a guide to the manifold musical life of this southern University town. Prominent in a long list are the opening orchestral concert of the season, conducted by Dr. Josef Müller-Blattau (Mendelssohn's Trumpet Overture in C and Strauss's Horn Concerto); a chamber concert—the third—by the Collegium Musicum of the University (living composers of Baden—H. K. Schmid, Franz Philipp, Herman Erpf); concerts of chamber music by Max Reger (two programmes), Paul Hindemith and Lendvai, Josef Haas, Straesser, and Schönberg; and the Harms chamber concerts, organized by a music-loving bookseller.

Kornelius Kun prefers to conduct modern orchestral works, while Fried devotes himself to the classics. Both conductors are also in charge of the operatic performances, chief of which during the last season was Wendland's very successful opera, Peter Sukoff, to a text by his wife, Olga Wohlbrück. Among the many choral concerts, mention may be made of Handel's Ode on St. Cecilia's Day, given by the Academic Musical Society, under Dr. Müller-Blattau.

BAYREUTH

The theatre on the hill outside Bayreuth has been closed for eight years. Sufficient funds have already been subscribed for the reopening of its world-famous performances, but although rehearsals are in progress, with the co-operation of first-class artists, an examination of the house and its appliances has convinced the authorities that the first public performances cannot take place before the summer of 1924. They will include Parsifal, Die Meistersinger, and Der Ring des Nibelungen. A limited number of patrons' tickets may be had by applying before September 1.

Max Koch, professor at the University of Breslau, has written a new Life, in three volumes (Ernst Hofmann, Berlin), which, though it does not supplant Glasenaff's standard work, presents Wagner in a new light, inasmuch as it shows him the product of a development. Koch not only makes use of all the published material that up to 1918 bears reference to Wagner's life, but he lays stress on the importance of Wagner's theoretical writings, leaving the discussion of the musical questions to the professional musician.

MUSICAL FOLK-LORE

In 1915 there appeared a book by Hugo Riemann, Folkloristische Tonaltitätsstudien (Breitkopf & Härtel, Leipzig), treating of the pentatonic and the tetrachordal melodic element in the Scotch, Irish, Welsh, Scandinavian.

and Spanish national songs, and on the Gregorian chant. The author's leading thought is the conviction that the melodic invention of a nation or a period is governed by certain melodic types whose discovery explains the idioms which at first sight appear so strange. Yet of greater importance is the historical development of the modern scales from the old forms of the anhemitonic-pentatonic or the diatonic-pentatonic scales, passing over into the tetrachordal old Greek modes and the Church tones of the Middle Ages. The book is to be looked upon as a continuation of the author's Lehre von den Tonverstellungen (Musikbibliothek, Peters, 1914-15).

HANS PFITZNER

It is a healthy sign of the times that Hans Pfitzner's romantic cantata, Von Deutscher Seele (A. Fürstner, Berlin), seizes the masses. The haste with which so many towns performed the work smacks almost of sensationalism, and reminds us of a performance of a new opera by Richard Strauss in pre-war time. This has nothing to do with the composer's solitary personality, and, indeed, the cantata offers no occasion for party wars. A new book on Pfitzner, by Arthur Seidl (C. F. W. Siegel, Leipzig), has just come to hand, and is a welcome addition to the various 'Lives' hitherto published. It is no biography and no prosaic essay, but a sketch dealing with the composer's personality as man and artist, as musician and organizer, as composer, conductor, and author.

THE FIRST ROMANTIC OPERA

A strange fate befell E. Th. W. Hoffmann's opera, Undine, when on July 29, 1817, after a most successful run of twenty-three nights, the theatre was burned down with the costly decorations and all the material necessary for its performance. The composer refused to have it staged at the opera-house, which seemed to him too large, a refusal for which he had to pay dearly, as, apart from an unsuccessful performance at Prague in 1821, the opera became lost to the world. Ninety years passed since the first performance of this unique work until Hans Pfitzner published a pianoforte score with text (C. F. Peters, Leipzig). This being the hundredth anniversary of Hoffmann's death, many German stages performed Undine, the first romantic opera, with great success. It remains to be seen whether this success is to last.

In addition to this event, Messrs. I. Engelhorn, of Stuttgart, have published a book of three hundred and twenty pages, containing Hoffmann's literary works, i.e., all his musical novels and those portions of his musical criticisms which are still of value. He was one of the first who recognised the real greatness of Beethoven, and few musical critics have written more enthusiastically, and at the same time more correctly, than did Hoffmann in the essay, 'Beethoven's Instrumentalmusik.'

NEW WORKS

The following works by Alfred Hartig, a pupil of Max Reger and Karl Straube, have been heard at Buchholz: Golgotha, a sacred cantata, the 23rd Psalm, the Lord's Prayer, and a Passacaglia for organ. All these compositions, which are looked upon as a gain to sacred music, left a deep impression.

A. Schultz-Stegmann's second Symphony, in G minor (called a Spring Symphony), was produced for the first time at Halberstadt under the direction of the composer. Walter Niemann's pianoforte compositions gain in popularity year by year at Berlin. Victor von Frankenberg played his third Sonata, Op. 83 (C. F. Kahnt, Leipzig). The Suite nach Hermann Hesse, Op. 71, and the Scherzo im strengen Stil, were played by Frida von Mikulicz for the first time, the Wasserspiele, Op. 69, by Georg Liebling, at Leipzig.

A NEW GERMAN OPERA

Some time ago the State theatre at Karlsruhe (Baden) produced, with considerable success, the first opera, Walpurgisnacht, of a young composer, Max Steidel, treating of the Wagnerian theory of salvation. It has a grandly romantic subject of psychological import, but the poet-composer Steidel walks under the shadow of Wagner. The music is here and there very beautiful, often of a lyrical, then again of a grim, fantastic or a mocking character. The orchestral language is characteristic and never obtrusive. The composer is a teacher of modern languages at the gymnasium at Karlsruhe. FR. ERCKMANN.

NEW YORK

As usual, it is Fortune Gallo, the manager of the San Carlo Company, who is first heard after the outdoor summer concerts end. During the last few years Mr. Gallo has taken larger and larger houses until his ambition has led him this year to take the Century Theatre for his annual four weeks' season at New York. His theory is that there are many people in this great city who would like to hear opera but who cannot afford Metropolitan prices, and who would be glad to pay a half of them. His theory is right, for his audiences have grown larger and larger each year, until now they are filling the immense auditorium of the Century. Of course it is idle to pretend that the performances compare in any way with those of the Metropolitan, but many good voices are heard, and often the best of them eventually get to the Metropolitan, so several objects are attained. Perhaps the giving of pleasure to many listeners is the principal one, but the affording of a training for singers who prove their ability for more ambitious appearances is not less important. As the operas given are generally the old standard Italian repertoire (with an occasional attempt at Wagner), the work of the Gallo Company also acts as a training-school for listeners, helping them to familiarity with compositions, and to discrimination between the merits of the performers.

This year Mr. Gallo has had a rival in the field of cheap opera. A new Company has been organized by Josiah Zuro, the director of the music in Mr. Reisenfeld's moving picture houses. Mr. Zuro has been connected with various operatic enterprises as conductor, and in his new venture has been directing almost all of the productions himself. He engaged the Brooklyn Academy of Music (possibly with the idea of having a theatre several miles distant from that occupied by Mr. Gallo), and made his first season a short one of two weeks. This was not entirely for prudential motives, for he was thus able to command the best of talent for his orchestra, securing many men who will later play at the Metropolitan but who were for the moment idle. This gave Mr. Zuro a great advantage over Mr. Gallo, as the latter tours the country for a good part of the winter, and cannot afford orchestral players of so high a rank. Neither, it may be added, can he afford such conductors as Mr. Zuro. The repertoire in both Companies was about the same, and good and indifferent voices were heard on both stages. The appearance of Mr. Zuro in the operatic field as both manager and conductor bodes well for the future of cheap opera.

Mischa Elman opened the concert season at Carnegie Hall after an absence from America for more than two years. When he last played, in May, 1920, it was announced that he would go abroad for rest, study, and composition. The compositions do not seem to have materialised, and it must be confessed that rest and study have not wrought any changes in Mr. Elman's methods or mannerisms. He returns with the same virtues and faults that have always marked his career. His tone is large and generally pure, and his technique excellent, but his affectations and sentimentalisms are continually in evidence, and mar almost all his attempts at serious work.

For real serious music played in a thoroughly artistic way we must not yet return to New York, but at this time of the year go to the 'Festivals' in various parts of the country. Chief of these is Mrs. Coolidge's annual Festival of chamber music held at her charming home in the Berkshire Hills. The opening programme was given by the Wendling String Quartet, of Stuttgart, Germany. The leader, Carl Wendling, was concert-master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Gericke. This first concert was devoted to Beethoven, Schumann, and Reger, the second to Brahms. The Sonata No. 2, in E flat, Op. 120, for pianoforte and viola, was superbly played by Mr. Ernest Hutcherson and Mr. Firestone (first viola player of the San Francisco Orchestra). A novelty at an afternoon concert was a Trio in C minor by Gabriel Pierné, who.

is best remembered at New York by his cantata The Children's Crusade. This was played by the New York Trio. The various chamber music societies that take part in this Festival come from far and near, the String Quartet of the Chamber Music Society of San Francisco appearing at the Berkshire Festival, and later (for the first time) at Æolian Hall, New York. The Coolidge prize for 1922 was won by a Quartet in F sharp minor for strings, written by Leo Weiner. Another piece played for the first time anywhere was a Suite Rhapsody for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn, written by Brescia and dedicated to Mrs. Coolidge herself. The munificent way in which Mrs. Coolidge entertains her guests, the quality of the music given in her charming home, so entrancingly set in mountain scenery, the camaraderie of the listeners—most of them professional musicians—all combine to make these Festivals as attractive as they are unique in the annals of art.

M. H. FLINT.

ROME

A bathing fatality at S. Benedetto del Tronto has deprived Rome of one of its most promising young artists in the person of Giacinto Spada, second 'first violin' of the Augusteum Orchestra, and founder of the Roman Quartet, of which he was the leading figure. His untimely death at twenty-three years of age is deeply deplored by the public and the musical press in general.

At the time of writing the cartelloni of the Augusteum and Costanzi have not yet been published, but it is known that the forthcoming season will not lack interest. Vittorio Gai, young but well-known in his native Rome, is to be the director of the Costanzi, and Otto Kiemper is to come from Cologne to direct Siegfried, with which opera the season will be inaugurated. The second opera is to be Puccini's Girl of the Golden West, and amongst the novelties for Rome will figure Franchetti's Christopher Columbus in a new edition, Strauss's Salome, and Charpentier's Louise. The new operas promised include Michetti's Grazia and Gioranetti's Petronio. Considerable interest has been aroused by the announcement of a visit of Johnson Sullivan, a new Irish tenor, who will appear in The Huguenots, in which opera he recently made his début at the Scala of Milan.

At the Augusteum a visit is promised from Stokovski, who is well known at New York, but visits Italy for the first time, and it is probable that Sibelius will also come to Rome this year. The season will be inaugurated at the end of November with Verdi's Mass.

The Accademia di Sta. Cecilia informs us that the Capet Quartet, of Paris, will visit Rome during the season, and will interpret all the Quartets of Beethoven.

Finally, December 10 being the centenary of the birth of César Franck, the Amici della Musica is organizing a special Franck commemoration for that date.

Messrs. Ricordi have just published the results of a 'referendum' instituted amongst their clients and readers of Musica d'oggi as to which are the most popular works of Verdi and Puccini, from which it appears that Aida and La Bohème are the best appreciated works of the two masters. There may not be any doubt about the popularity of Aida, but it is to be questioned whether the preference given to La Bohème is not more academic than practical. If we are to judge from the Italian répertoires, the choice would lie between La Tosca and Madame Butterfly.

The Prix de Rome has suffered a set-back this year, none of the competitors having succeeded in carrying off the first Grand Prix. The two seconds have been awarded to MM. Bosquet and Steck, and honourable mention has been gained by Mlle. Leleu, all three being pupils of Widor.

A glory of past generations, scarcely known even by name to modern music-lovers, has just died at Turin at the advanced age of ninety-nine years. Virginia Boccabadati-Carignani had been a great star in her day, and had even gained the fame of equalling Patti in certain interpretations. Intimate with all the great musicians of her time, it was a favourite boast of hers that she had been for a short time pupil of Donizetti. After she retired from the stage she dedicated her energies to teaching singing in the Pesaro Lyceum, where she remained up to her old age, when she retired to the Turin widows' retreat.

LEONARD PEYTON.

TORONTO

Unusual enthusiasm has been shown this year in the music at the Canadian National Exhibition. Radio-activity was responsible for wider publicity and more general interest, fully equipped cars giving open-air concerts from Canadian Broadcasting Stations. Band concerts were held in the outdoor stands afternoon and evening. The West India Regiment, Creators, and the Anglo-Canadian concert bands were specially engaged. About twenty local bands were also heard.

It is very gratifying to all interested in music that the Exhibition authorities are as keen to develop public interest in the arts as in the commercial side of our Canadian life. This year two features have made a great impression upon the visitor—a week of Grand Opera in the New Coliseum, which seats seven thousand six hundred, and a Pageant Choir of over eighteen hundred voices representing fifteen choral societies and a hundred and twenty-four church choirs of the city, and conducted by Mr. H. A. Fricker (through the courtesy of the Mendelssohn Choir).

The De Feo Grand Opera Company of New York presented Aida, Carmen, and Madame Butterfly with such evidence of experience and artistic conception, as to overshadow the general run of opera which is meted out to us from the States. Maestro Ugo Barducci merited very warm appreciation for his conducting, and for the fact that his splendid control of the orchestra enabled the audience to hear every bar of solo work in a building which covers eight and a-half acres. Popular prices of one dollar, seventy-five cents, and fifty cents drew large crowds who cannot afford the usual prohibitive figure in the theatres.

The large choir sang before the Grand Stand, which accommodates, roughly, twenty-five thousand people, on two evenings after the Pageant. Four rehearsals only were held, the numbers being chosen for their popularity and rhythmic melody. These were: Handel's Largo, Scots wha hae's, Men of Harlech, Home, Sweet Home, Rail, Britannia, Land of Hope and Glory, Soldiers' Chorus from Faust, and O Canada. A double band of a hundred instrumentalists accompanied.

The Canadian Bureau for the Advancement of Music has been responsible for a great deal of the enthusiasm and progress this year. 'An Association of those interested in the general music advancement of Canada through the development of music in the home, church, and school,' is receiving wide support in all its work, particularly from the business men of Toronto. A great deal is expected next year as a result of its activities.

H. C. F.

VIENNA

Even at its opening the present season suggests that Vienna's concert life is pursuing the development predicted in my last letter. The season threatens economic disaster. Public attendance for the majority of this season's concerts has been small beyond precedent, and even the Staatsoper is now playing to poor houses save at a limited number of important performances. One of the few productions that obtained a well-filled house at the Staatsoper, even at exorbitant admission prices, was the farewell appearance, prior to her second New York season, of Marie Jeritz. Her success has been phenomenal, both here and at the Metropolitan Opera House of New York.

While the Staatsoper and Volksoper count upon the support of the rich element, the newly-opened 'Opera House for the Middle Class' seems destined to play a vastly important educational rôle with the masses. The opening performance of Fidelio had been anticipated with great interest, and it is gratifying to state that such hopes were not disappointed. The singers, recruited chiefly from the Staatsoper, and the orchestra, under Leopold Reichwein, did highly satisfactory work; but the chief interest was the staging, by Dr. Georg Hartmann, of the Dresden Opera. The settings, based on the Stilbühne principle, were simple, yet novel and impressive, and effectively enhanced by a skilful use of light and colour contrasts. The financial scheme of the new enterprise is promising: an annual subscription fee of 12,000 kröner entitles the subscriber to one operatic performance a month and to two orchestral concerts a season at a considerable reduction on the box office prices, which are in themselves very moderate. The temporary home of the new venture is the Sophiensaal, a hall formerly used for society balls and sporting events, and Richard Specht, the Vienna musicologist, is its artistic director. It is his plan to produce classic operas and modern standard works, each opera to have a solid month's run. A branch enterprise of the new theatre will be organized for the purpose of producing, from time to time, radically modern and rarely-heard works such as the two 'monodramas' by Arnold Schönberg, Erwartung and Die glückliche Hand; also Franz Schreker's pantomime, The Birthday of the Infanta, and the three one-Act operas by Paul Hindemith.

The critical situation of the Vienna Symphony Orchestra, which I mentioned in my last letter, has suddenly become acute through an announcement by the Tonkünstlerverein and Konzertverein, that these societies are no longer in a position to support the organization financially. The Philharmonic Orchestra being engaged at the Staatsoper nightly, and available for only a few matinee concerts, the disbanding of the Vienna Symphony Orchestra would mean the end of the Tonkünstlerverein (Furtwängler) and Konzertverein (Löwe) series, besides the discontinuation of such important educational institutions as the Sunday afternoon popular concerts and the Workers' concerts—in short, the end of practically all orchestral activity at Vienna. Happily, this danger was averted at the last hour by the orchestral players themselves, who, quickly organizing on a co-operative basis, subscribed a large fund in which every player is a shareholder. Each member will participate, according to the size of his share, in the proceeds resulting from the fees paid to the orchestra as a whole for its services. The success of this co-operative plan is assured by now, and the example set by the Symphony Orchestra has already been adopted by some minor organizations such as the Municipal Opera at Salzburg, with the result that the imminent closing down of that opera-house has been avoided. The importance of this co-operative movement in the musical field can hardly be over-rated, for it promises to tide over many a suffering musical scheme in Austria in these critical times.

The poor financial results which have been the fate of most concerts at Vienna this season, would be a matter for little concern to the critic and music-lover were it not for the fact that such lack of public response will sooner or later inevitably put an end to all musical activity and to managerial enterprise. It would have seemed incredible a year ago that the mere announcement of a Gustav Mahler Symphony—the one modern composer who is particularly dear to the hearts of the Vienna public—should have failed to cause a rush to the box-office. The fact that this year Oscar Fried, generally—and not quite rightly—considered a Mahler expert, conducted the second and third Symphonies to remarkably cool and not over-numerous audiences, must be regarded as the writing on the wall. Even Vienna's favourite Mahler work, Das Lied von der Erde, drew a mere handful of people when directed by Paul von Klenau, the Danish composer-conductor (who has recently made Vienna his permanent home). Klenau has now taken charge of the Singverein choral concerts, in succession to Ferdinand Löwe, while Niels Grevillius, a young and gifted Swede, will direct a portion of the Tonkünstlerverein's orchestral concerts, replacing Wilhelm Furtwängler, who is curtailing his Vienna activities for the benefit of his foreign tours. Familiar, not to say hackneyed, pieces will form the nucleus of both his and Franz Schalk's programmes.

The number of resident Vienna conductors has this season been considerably enlarged. Apart from the advent of Paul von Klenau, alluded to above, Anton von Webern, the ultra-radical composer and disciple of Arnold Schönberg—it is he whose String Quartet caused such an uproar at the recent Salzburg Chamber Music Festival—is another newcomer among our conductors. He has assumed the directorship of the Konzertverein's Sunday afternoon popular orchestral concerts, and his début was surprisingly orthodox. The work of Clemens Krauss, a new and very young conductor, has quickly established him as a promising operatic Kapellmeister, and his symphonic début confirmed this favourable impression. His programme, consisting entirely of Richard Strauss compositions, was less happy.

Richard Tauber and Alfred Jerger, two young singers from the Staatsoper, and both more than ordinarily successful, attempted to display their all-round musicianship as conductors. Indeed the time has arrived when a good voice alone no longer suffices to counterbalance lack of style and musicianship, and it is gratifying to find that at least some of our singers have realised the advanced requirements of the era. Yet such passing excursions into realms foreign to the professional singer smack of sensationalism. This is particularly true in the case of Tauber, whose gifts as an orchestral conductor are palpably insufficient. On the whole such experiments are probably a symptom of waning artistic sincerity and morale. There are already too many composing pianists and conducting violinists to warrant the necessity for adding new recruits to the ranks of such semi-dilettanti. Alfredo Casella, whose four concerts displayed his astonishingly manifold talents as a composer, pianist, and conductor, is of quite a different order. As a composer, Casella's ancestral line leads straight to Stravinsky, whose rhythmic and harmonic effects Casella uses with more skill than genuine inspiration in his Pezzi Infantili for pianoforte and in the five pieces for orchestra entitled Pupazzetti. Casella's conducting is distinguished by repose, and by its absence of all mannerism. His pianistic style is eminently suited to the works of the modern and ultra-modern school, but lends itself less readily to classic works by Beethoven and Scarlatti, which suffered, among other things, from an excessive use of the pedal.

The sixtieth birthday of Emil Sauer, the revered pianist, was the occasion for a great festival concert in his honour, in which several of his well-known professional pupils were the participants. The programmes included his two Pianoforte Concertos—grateful and legitimate music of the innocent sort. On the eve of his birthday Sauer, in a recital of his own, played a number of familiar compositions from his programmes of the last ten or fifteen years. The return of the 'romantic' pianist, Germaine Schnitzer, to her native city was a social almost more than a musical event. Her sister in art, young Erica Morini, has developed remarkably during her year's absence, both mentally and technically.

Important vocal concerts have been conspicuously scarce this season. We heard two song recitals by a young American soprano, Harriet van Emden, who showed a pleasing light voice better suited to operatic than to lieder work. Dimitri Smirnov, announced as 'the second Caruso' and said to be idolised in his native Russia, met with deserved failure; his singing is 'operatic' in the worst sense of the term, and his voice proved to be a small tenor with a persistent nasal 'twang.' Equal disillusionment was in store for the numerous admirers of Michael Bohnen, who will shortly leave for an operatic season at the Metropolitan Opera House. This highly intelligent and strikingly original singing actor is out of his element at a concert.

The Rosé and Mairecker-Buxbaum Quartets both feature Schubert chamber music in their programmes this year. Schubert, in fact, promises to be the vogue of the current season. This month the Tonkünstlerverein and Konzertverein will jointly arrange a great Schubert Festival Week in connection with the master's hundred and twenty-fifth birthday, and in commemoration of the day when Schubert commenced work on his Unfinished Symphony (November 19, 1822). The Festival programmes will comprise practically all Schubert's orchestral, choral, chamber, and vocal music. Furtwängler and Klenau will direct the orchestral and choral concerts, while the Mairecker-Buxbaum Quartet has been chosen for the chamber concerts. Simultaneously with the Festival, the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde will hold an exhibition of the countless and precious Schubert manuscripts and relics embodied in that Society's celebrated museum.

PAUL BECHERT.

Eight lectures on 'The Qualities of Great Music' are being given by Dr. Arthur W. Pollitt at the University of Liverpool. The November dates are 9 and 13, and the hour 5.30. Admission is free.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. Mary Layton's choral concert on October 10 deserves more praise than there is space to give to it. Groups of mixed and female voices gave a long succession of choral pieces, interspersed with solos of various kinds. Among the works most worthy of mention were Mendelssohn's motets Laudate Dominum and Why rage fiercely the heathen, Wolstenholme's female-voice ballad The Voyage of Sir Humphrey Gilbert, Elgar's My love dwelt in a Northern land, West's Love and Summer, and two madrigals.

At Queen's Hall, on November 3, the Alexandra Male-Voice Choir of sixty voices will contribute to the Annual Bohemian Concert of the Manchester Unity of Oddfellows' Friendly Society.

CONTENTS.

	Page
What is 'Modern Music.' By M.-D. Calvocoressi	765
Painted Music. By Alexander Brent-Smith	767
Credo in Mozart. By Mrs. Frank Liebich	768
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	770
Some Thoughts on Unaccompanied Song. By Gerrard Williams	773
Occasional Notes	774
The Musician's Bookshelf	776
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	780
Music and Letters	781
New Music	781
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	783
Sir Charles Santley, 1834-1922	784
London Concerts	792
Opera at the 'Old Vic.'	795
The Immortal Hour at the Regent Theatre	795
The Leeds Musical Festival. By Herbert Thompson	796
J. B. McEwen's Symphony at Bournemouth	798
Church and Organ Music	798
Sharps and Flats	800
The Amateurs' Page	801
Letters to the Editor	801
Royal Academy of Music	803
Trinity College of Music	804
Music in the Provinces	804
Obituary	806
Music in Ireland	808
Musical Notes from Abroad	808
Miscellaneous	812

Music:

Sing, O Heavens. Anthem for Christmas. By ALFRED HOLLINS 785

TWO EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. Feasting I watch. Part-Song. By Edward Elgar
2. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BARRACLOUGH, J. G.—"Ave Verum." S.A.T.B. Latin Words, 3d.

BLAIR, HUGH.—"Serenata" ("Life and Love"). String Parts (5), 2s. Wind Parts, 3s. 4d.

HOLLINS, A.—"Sing, O Heavens." Anthem for Christmas. (No. 957, The Musical Times.) 2d.

MASSON, ROBERT.—"Sing me a song." For Soprano or Tenor. 2s.

MINTER, C. J.—Music Instructional Chart, No. 1. For Transposing music into higher or lower keys. Card. 6d.

PENNINGTON-BICKFORD, REV. W.—Commendatory Litany. "Jesu! Mercy!" 1d.; or 2s. 6d. per 50 net.

—Hymn for All Saints. No. 2, "Blessed Ones." 1d.; or 2s. 6d. per 50 net.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 365, contains the following music in both notations.—"Hark! the echoing air." Unison Song from "The Fairy Queen." By PURCELL. 2d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2394. "A Madrigal of Spring." Two Part-Song. PERCY E. FLETCHER 2d.

No. 2395. "Lavender." Two Part-Song. F. T. SWEETING 3d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).
PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—"Light at evening time." Soprano Solo. 60 cents (2s. 6d.).

DICKINSON, C.—"A Christmas Carol from Lapland."

TERRY, R. H.—A Bermuda Suite. Nine Pieces for the Pianoforte. $2 (8s.).

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

31st 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC AND TEXT BOOKS

AT BARGAIN PRICES.

A wide range of SECOND-HAND Copies of Standard Text-Books in good condition, also of Vocal and Pianoforte Music.

Send to us also for New Music and Books: quick delivery guaranteed.

Catalogue 122 (post free). Mention requirements.

Books on approval. Books and Music Purchased.

FOYLES, 121-5, CHANCERY CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2

TO MUSIC STUDENTS.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

Oxford Preliminary Arts and Durham Matriculation.

Also B.A. and B.Sc.

EXPERT PREPARATION BY CORRESPONDENCE.

For Terms, Testimonials, &c., address

MR. J. CHARLESTON, B.A. (Honours Oxon. and London).
14, Elsham Road, Kensington, W.14.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O.—Eight model Essays on the two books set for January exam. next. Valuable hints on writing the Essays. Send 5s. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPIED and TRANSPOSED. Copying, 9d. per twelve-stave sheet. Transposition extra. Mr. J. Morris, 114, Alexandra Road, Hampstead, N.W.8.

FOR DISPOSAL.—Fifteen Copies of Farmer's Mass in B flat. Board covers, good condition. 35s., or exchange for copies of another small work. Also several sets of short Anthems at 4d., or 5d. doz. Stamp for list. G. H. Hopkinson, L.T.C.L., 4, Newcastle Avenue, Beeston, Notts.

FOR SALE.—ORGAN (Karn), two-manual, pedal. Suit church, cinema, or chamber. Fourth Flat, 1, Stamford Brook Gardens, Hammersmith, W.6.

ST. ANDREW'S, Holborn.—BASS (not Baritone) REQUIRED. (Cantoris-side), Communicant. Full Cathedral Services. Salary £20 per annum, extra fees for additional attendances. Apply, enclosing copies of two testimonials, to Mr. F. G. Mitford Ogbourne, Organist and Director of the Choir, 42, Bernard Street, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER required for St. Michael's, Chester Square, S.W., to succeed Mr. Thomas Crawford, Mus.B., F.R.C.O., who is leaving shortly to fill a similar appointment at St. Paul's, Toronto, Canada. Four-manual electric organ. Paid choir. Letters marked "Organist," to Canon Mitchell, St. Michael's Vicarage, 205, Buckingham Palace Road, S.W.1.

BASS (or BARITONE) WANTED for Choir of St. Peter's, Bayswater. Salary, £20 per annum. Good reader. Church experience. Address, Leonard Butler, 28, St. Stephen's Avenue, Ealing, W.13.

SMALL TWO-MANUAL ORGAN, suitable for Mission Church or School Chapel, FOR SALE. Price £70. Full specification from Messrs. James Harris & Son, Estate Agents, Winchester.

MANCHESTER SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION FESTIVAL HYMNS.

Will composers accustomed to writing hymn tunes for Sunday School Anniversaries, &c., please send specimens of their unpublished music, with suitable words, stating terms for purchase, &c., to Mr. Ewin Pickstone, Sunny Bank, Radcliffe, Lancs., at once. Enclose addressed envelope for returned MSS. not accepted.

No.
958

Price
6d.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

DECEMBER 1, 1922

THE WORLD FAMOUS Bösendorfer PIANOS

(Established 1828.)

BUGONI "The Piano was ideal & helped me to give expression to my highest conceptions".....

PADEREWSKY "The Piano was quite wonderful".....

HAROLD BAUER "These instruments are sympathetic to me in the highest degree".

MORITZ ROSENTHAL "The Piano sounded ravishing".....

SOLE AGENTS

The WIGMORE HALL & PIANO GALLERIES Ltd.
32-40, WIGMORE STREET, W.1

The Name of

J. & J. HOPKINSON

*Stands for the HIGHEST ATTAINMENTS
in THE WORLD OF MUSIC*

REMARKABLE FOR THE EXQUISITE QUALITY OF TONE

J. & J. HOPKINSON, LTD.,

*44, FITZROY ROAD, PRIMROSE HILL,
LONDON, N.W.1*

(ONLY ADDRESS).

Registered

Trade Mark.

Melody Lectures

RECORDED BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc., LI. D., F.R.C.O.

Chairman of the National Council of Music in Wales, Director of Music in the University of Wales, and Professor of Music in the University College of Aberystwyth.

Illustrations played by

MARJORIE HAYWARD (Violin)

AND

THE LECTURER (Piano)

ON

“His Master’s Voice”

GRAMOPHONE RECORDS

12-inch Double-sided Records, 6/- each.

MELODY LECTURES

- | | |
|--|--|
| C. 1063 { 1—On Musical Outline
2—On Definitions | C. 1066 { 7—On Balance, Part 1
8—On Balance, Part 2 |
| C. 1064 { 3—On the Pentatonic Scale
4—On Melodic Meanings | C. 1067 { 9—On Completion
10—On Cadence |
| C. 1065 { 5—On Melodic Adventure, Part 1
6—On Melodic Adventure, Part 2 | C. 1068 { 11—On Simple Tune Building
12—On Movement Building
(piano illustrations only) |

LECTURE ILLUSTRATIONS

- | | |
|--|--|
| C. 1069 { 13—Tunes Built in Wa'es, Part 1
14—Tunes Built in Wales, Part 2 | C. 1070 { 15—Me'odies of Handel
16—Largo from "Berenice" (Handel) |
| C. 1071 { 17—Rondo in B Flat (Mozart)—Part 1
18—Rondo in B Flat (Mozart)—Part 2 | |

THE GRAMOPHONE COMPANY, LTD.

Education Department,

363 - 367 OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

(Reproduced from a photograph by C. Vandyk, Ltd., 41, Buckingham Palace Road, S.W.)

HENRY G. LEY

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

DECEMBER 1 1922

BRITISH PLAYERS AND SINGERS

VIII.—HENRY GEORGE LEY

A reader recently expressed the hope that this series of articles would include 'some British organist whose name can worthily be coupled with those of players such as Dupré or Bonnet.' There are several British organists of this standard—more than we shall be able to deal with in a series of articles that has to cover a wide field. For some time past we have had our eye on one of them in the person of Dr. Henry Ley, but we have not been able to pin him down until a few days ago, when he returned from an examining tour in South Africa.

Let us clear the decks by boiling down the biography. Born at Chagford on December 30, 1887; first tuition from his mother, followed by lessons from the then organist of Chagford, Mr. E. E. Vinnicombe; chorister of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, April, 1896; played voluntaries at St. George's when ten years old, and accompanied his first service there two years later. From St. George's Choir School went to Uppingham, obtaining the first musical scholarship awarded there; in January, 1905, went to the Royal College of Music, studying under Parratt, Bridge, Stanford, Charles Wood, and Marmaduke Barton, the pianoforte being his chief subject; in October, 1906, elected organ scholar of Keble; and in June, 1909, appointed to Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, at the early age of twenty-one. He is an A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O., a Mus. Doc. Oxford, a member of the R.C.O. Council, and an organ professor at the R.C.M.

Like everybody who has had much to do with St. George's Chapel, Dr. Ley speaks of Sir Walter Parratt with gratitude and affection:

'The secret of Parratt's influence can be fully grasped only by those who have been choristers at St. George's,' he says. 'He has a remarkable personality, and a gift for making boys fond of good music of a type which they would naturally be disposed to find dull—I mean such things as the services and anthems of Byrd, Gibbons, Tallis, and other old composers. His accompanying was a pure delight. Even to-day, at the age of eighty-one, he is a model. A week or two ago, for example, I heard him accompany the first part of Brahms's Requiem on the temporary organ now in use at St. George's during the repairs to the Chapel. It is a little instrument with only a few stops, but one forgets the meagreness of its resources, so skilfully are they used, and so finished is the playing.'

We discussed Parratt as a soloist:

'His strong points,' said Dr. Ley, 'were phrasing and accuracy. In phrasing he made skilful use of the Swell pedal. His registering was generally simple, with plenty of use of single stops, and his gradual building up of a crescendo very striking. However well he played elsewhere, he was at his best and most characteristic at St. George's. To watch him play, as constantly I had the privilege of doing, was an education in itself.'

Dr. Ley's organ studies while at Windsor were under Mr. Martin Akerman, to whom he owes his thorough grounding in such things as the Bach Trio-Sonatas. On going to Uppingham, however, he dropped the organ for a year, on the recommendation of Paul David (son of Ferdinand David), who considered that his rhythmic sense left something to be desired.

'For a year I did nothing but play the pianoforte to David's violin in the Sonatas of Mozart and Beethoven. It was a splendid experience. Equally valuable in a different way was the entrée to David's rooms on Wednesday evenings, when the professional quartet resident at the School played chamber music. I thus got to know practically the whole repertory of classical string quartets. Joachim often came and took part in the performances. I cannot overestimate the benefit I received from these chamber music evenings, and from my sonata playing with David. Organists, above all instrumentalists, need to take part in ensemble work of some kind. I refuse to admit that the organ is anything like as unrhythmical as it is said to be, but there is no doubt that organ-playing itself is apt to blunt one's sense of rhythm, owing to such factors as the echo in some churches, slowness of speech or action of a part of the instrument, the accompanying of a choir placed at a distance, and the natural tendency to make an occasional pull-up for stop changing. Some kind of ensemble playing is necessary as a safeguard. I ought to add that, my year of ensemble drill over, I took up the organ with Mr. Greateorex, the assistant music-master, an excellent teacher who is now music-master at Holt.'

With so famous a Bach-player at our mercy we naturally asked a string of questions. Here are the Doctor's replies, run into a monologue:

REGISTRATION

'In playing Bach there is an immense amount of variety and interest possible without fidgety registration. Personally, in playing a prelude and fugue I contrast the two when the music admits of it. In the D major Prelude and Fugue, for example, I like to treat the Prelude as a big thing, with full organ for the opening and close, and the Fugue as a light scherzo, playing it very quickly, with quiet and contrasted stops on the three manuals. The C major Prelude (the one in ♯) I treat as a bright, pastoral affair, and the five-voice Fugue that follows as a broad movement with plenty of diapason tone, and full organ at the last section.

'The texture ought to decide the treatment, surely. Look, for example, at the slenderness of the D major Fugue—a lot of it in two- and three-part writing. Again, in the three-section Fantasia in G, the first and third sections are best suited with light registration. I like to play these passages as if they were brilliant pianoforte music, on soft 8-ft. and 4-ft. stops. The Grave then makes a most impressive contrast. In the Trio-Sonatas I am more and more convinced that an 8-ft. pedal should be the rule. Exceptions may be made in (say) the fine Fugue that ends the C minor, and a 16-ft. is effective in some of the slow movements. But the general style of the works is that of chamber music trios, in which the bass is of course of 8-ft. pitch. Most of the Chorale Preludes in trio-form are, I think, best treated thus. Speaking of Chorale Preludes, by the bye, we shall help our recital audiences if we print a verse of the text in our programmes. It is even better to have the verse sung—if possible by the audience itself.

—AND PHRASING

'Everybody knows that good phrasing is vital in organ playing, but many players have yet to realise fully its importance in playing Bach. It can be got in a number of ways—varying degrees of staccato, a slight lengthening or shortening of a note, a touch of the Swell pedal, an almost imperceptible freedom of time, and so on. But got it must be, if Bach is to sound as he ought to sound. Too often we hear phrasing and rhythm sacrificed for some fussy bit of registration. Even when the registration is good, it is dearly bought at the cost of rhythm. After all, a fine fugue is so full of interest that there is no hardship in hearing it played through even on a single stop. But there is a real hardship in hearing it fall to pieces occasionally while the player registers.

—AND REGISTRATION AGAIN

'But please don't imagine I am underrating the importance of registration. On the contrary, I feel that it is an art, and one far too little studied. This is partly due to the multiplication of pistons and other aids which are apt to lead to a series of cut-and-dried effects, with very little use of single stops. Every organ has a lot of characteristic effects, due in some cases to such purely local causes as the acoustic of the building or the disposition of certain parts of the instrument. Only hand-registration can make the most of these. Students should be encouraged to devise their own schemes of registration without, as well as with, the aid of pistons. For example, in giving lessons I often make a pupil stand by my side while I play a lengthy work, letting him register (all by hand) as he feels inclined; afterwards, we go over his scheme together, with critical comments.

'Readiness and resource in hand-registering are great assets in playing on strange organs. Stops bearing the same name are pretty much the same everywhere, but there is no end to the combinations in pistons and composition pedals. With little time for getting used to a strange instrument, one can obtain plenty of variety by the use of well-contrasted single stops, plus the safest and most useful of the piston combinations.'

SOME COMMON FAULTS

Dr. Ley went on to discuss some common faults in organ playing:

'Organists think far too little about the foundation. I have heard players—by no means in the elementary stage—calmly holding down a wrong pedal note for two or three bars! A similar mistake on the manuals would be impossible. I believe this fault is often a result of the habit of using soft uncoupled 16-ft. pedal stops, the bass, when low, being so hazy that players unconsciously get into the habit of taking it for granted. Even in the quietest works the bass should be clearly defined; too often it is a vague murmur. Imagine a string quartet of two fiddles, a viola, and a double-bass playing its lowest notes! Yet we frequently hear a similar effect on the organ. In the matter of pedal touch there is, I think, too little staccato and mezzo-staccato. Both touches are great aids to clearness. And I like to see the foot lifted clear of the keys for this effect, just as a pianist lifts his hands. Staccato pedal effects often fail because of the use of too soft a stop. A detached pedal note can (and in fact should) carry more tone than a legato passage. The orchestral analogy is the pizzicato of the string basses, which is always of telling character even when the rest of the orchestra is playing its softest.'

Dr. Ley found in South Africa great enthusiasm for the organ:

'I played organ solos at orchestral concerts at Cape Town and Durban, giving them some Bach, which they evidently enjoyed; at all events they asked for more. The success of organ solos at such concerts down there makes one wonder why they are rarely if ever included in concerts in this country. Musicians generally are amazingly ignorant of Bach's organ music, and I believe they would welcome opportunities for getting to know it better.'

Among organ composers other than Bach, Dr. Ley has a special liking for Franck and Rheinberger:

'Rheinberger is very much underrated,' he said. 'The best of his Sonatas are fine—better for church than concert-hall, though. Their breadth, and a certain architectural quality make them sound their best only in a church, especially a big and resonant one. Transcriptions? Let's have plenty, so long as they are chosen with discretion, and with due regard to the particular instrument on which they are to be played—and the particular building, too. For example, it is ludicrous to attempt (say) the slow movement from Debussy's Quartet on an organ that has no delicate stops; or the Meistersinger Overture on a small two-manual. Yet one hears this sort of thing done.'

Speaking of Church music, he was emphatic on the importance of maintaining our old choral foundations:

'It has been a great thing for music in this country. In fact, it is the only department of our national music that has had an unbroken tradition for centuries, and, despite some weak periods, it has to its credit a fine list of music, genuinely English.'

He went on to speak with enthusiasm of the present revival of our old polyphonic composers. They are already well represented in the service lists at Christ Church Cathedral, and will be even more so in the future. The repertory of the Christ Church Cathedral choir—a copy of which is before us as we write—is a very fine one, and a convincing proof of Dr. Ley's assertion as to the great contribution made to English music by the long line of her Church composers.

A few days ago, the Daily Telegraph, in a laudatory notice of a recital given by Dr. Alcock at St. Michael's, Cornhill, said:

As long as we can hear such safe pedalling, such rhythmic precision, and such delicate and significant phrasing . . . there is no need to belittle our English organists in order to begrand the talent of other countries.

Exactly: and we hope our daily press will more and more see that there are many organ recitals that are at least as well worthy of critical notice as the average concert. The public is a long way from realising that in such organists as Henry Ley, and half a dozen others, we have players who, both as artists and technicians, are of the same rank as our best pianists and violinists. But they do their work behind a curtain, and the public dearly likes not only to hear, but to see. The pianist's hands, the fiddler's bow, and the conductor's baton are miraculous, no doubt; but a skilful organist's four hands—two of them in boots—are not a bit less wonder-working.

THE NEGATIVE IN MUSIC

BY ALEXANDER BRENT-SMITH

Though for many hundreds of years composers have been attempting to increase the expressive powers of music, they have not yet found the means of expressing a simple negative. In every language it is possible to conjure up clearly-detailed pictures and at the same time to deny their existence—a splendid Past that is no more, a dreary Future that shall never be. For instance, a man might write: 'We see no more the legions of Imperial Rome marching boldly over England's grassy roads, with silver eagles proudly carried in the van, with spears and shields and helmets flashing in the sun; nor can we hear the rhythmic tread of marching men, nor bleat of frightened flocks that scamper down some steep decline,' &c. Here the writer appeals to our sense of seeing and hearing, but the sight and sound, though definite, is never real. I have no means, however, of setting this passage to music so that it shall be at the same time positive and negative, because as soon as I have created the musical atmosphere for the marching soldiers I have breathed upon the whitened bones of two thousand years ago and clothed them with sinews and flesh, transforming them into a mighty army before whom sheep would scamper as wildly as they did in years gone by.

Or a man might write: 'Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh that thou shalt say I have no pleasure in them; while the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars be not darkened, nor the clouds return after the rain: in the days when the keepers of the house shall tremble . . .' Here he has given us a picture of gloom and depression, clearly seen and carefully drawn, yet non-existent. The evils foreseen are in the evil days which, for the present at any rate, come not.

How is a composer to set this famous passage to music? Is he to ask himself what the words really imply, or is he to fix his attention upon the words, which suggest an easily-obtained atmosphere, 'darkened,' 'tremble'? That little word 'not' having crept into the sentence upsets the obvious treatment of this passage which implies just the opposite of what the key words suggest. The words 'when the evil days come not' certainly imply that the Present is good; and the words 'When the sun is not darkened' no less certainly imply that to-day is bright. But would a composer be justified in flying in the face of the words to extract the sense? Not until music has discovered one single sound that shall negative its assertions.

Again, how is a composer to set the following lines from a poem by Elroy Flecker:

Mute is battle's brazen horn
That rang for Priest and King.

The poet has done two things: he has made us see the brazen horn, yet by the first word 'mute' he has silenced it for ever. How shall a composer realise these two thoughts? He might, quite justifiably and with impish humour, mute the horns; but muted horns are very different from horns that are mute. He is indeed in a dilemma, for if he does not somehow suggest the horn the thought is incomplete, and if he as much as suggests a horn the thought is incorrect. Compared to this, squaring the circle is as easy as playing snap.

Composers whose imagination is easily fired by a single word have frequently induced the wrong mood for a song, or misinterpreted the poet's meaning. Elgar, in his fine part-song Death on the Hills, has to set the following words (referring to the dusky shadows upon the hillside):

No wind blows chill upon them
Nor are they lashed by rain.

This sentence clearly visualises a fierce slanting rain and at the same time expressly states that it was not this fierce slanting rain which they encountered. Elgar has fixed upon this potent word 'lashed,' and has made audible the hiss and splash of the rain which, the poet assures us, never fell.

One of the most famous songs in the world, Ich grolle nicht, is surely a misunderstanding of the poem. The poet is here considering dispassionately an emotional crisis experienced in the Past. The exact nature of that crisis is never for a moment in doubt, but the mood of the poem is fixed by 'nicht,' and consequently the words 'Ich grolle nicht' must imply 'I am now calm,' otherwise the poet is contradicting himself, as though a man should say, 'I do not wish to be rude, but you are the ugliest man I ever saw'; or, as a preacher did once actually say from a London pulpit, 'My friends, I do not wish to speak evil of the dead, but Byron's life was rotten to the core.' Schumann, however, hurled himself into the poem and fixed his initial inspiration upon the 'grolle' rather than upon the 'nicht.' And very thankful should we be that he did so; the song might have been more truthful, but it is not likely that it would have been so fine.

If Elgar and Schumann nod, at least they nod in good company, for Bach himself frequently followed the attractive word rather than the underlying sense. In the St. Matthew Passion, immediately after the betrayal scene, the chorus sings 'Have lightnings and thunders their fury forgotten? Let Hell with its manifold terrors affright them.' This means that if lightnings and thunders will not fall upon this murderous throng (as indeed they do not), then let Hell open her mouth upon them. Logically, the passage should be, first, a simple question, 'Have lightnings and thunders their fury forgotten?' Then silence, followed by the terrifying alternative illuminated by all the horrors of Hell. But fortunately Bach did otherwise, and focussing his attention upon the word thunder, he gave to his basses a prolonged fury which the thunder itself had forgotten and which it certainly could not wish to emulate.

Perhaps after all it is better that composers should ignore Logic and follow Fancy, for Fancy gives us many joys, untruthful though they be; but Logic gives us little else but ponderous tomes of unreadable rubbish, and of course—this little essay.

CÉSAR FRANCK, ORGANIST:

b. DECEMBER 10, 1822

BY HARVEY GRACE

No one can read the steadily growing Franck literature without being struck by the comparatively scanty notice given to the composer's organ music. There is a double reason for this. Few of our musical writers have more than a slight acquaintance with the organ and its repertory, and they are likely to know little or nothing about Franck's organ music, for the good—or bad—reason that it is never heard in our concert halls. It is an absurd and lopsided convention that gives Queen's Hall audiences ample opportunities for hearing Franck's Symphony, the Symphonic Variations, Les Éolides, and the not wholly satisfactory Le Chasseur maudit and ballet music from Hulda, and yet allows no single hearing of any one of his organ pieces. It may be said in excuse that Franck's organ music is not suitable for concert performance. There is, however, very little in this argument. Every year we sit through dozens of orchestral works and scores of violin and pianoforte solos that are longer, duller, and of infinitely less value than the pick of Franck's twelve organ pieces.

However, Franck suffers in good company. Bach, Mendelssohn, Rheinberger, Saint-Saëns, Widor, Reger, Boëllmann, Vierne, Howells—all these and others have written organ music at least as good as, and often better than, the rest of their output, but we have to go to church in order to hear any of it. Think, for example, of the limited range of pianoforte sonatas that are played, year in and year out; it would be easy to point to at least a dozen organ sonatas well above the average pianoforte example. But they are never heard, partly because as a rule they bear on their title-page names outside the magic circle of accepted classics, and even more because they are written for an instrument that concert-givers refuse to regard as anything more than a machine for filling in backgrounds—usually of a saponaceous religioso character.

Somebody rashly dubbed the organ the king of instruments, and Berlioz called it the Pope. Both were wrong; it is really a bloated Cinderella.

However, I must resist the temptation to dwell on this curious neglect of the organ as a concert solo instrument—a neglect inexcusable in a country rich in fine organs and players, and with a very large organ public. It is touched on here because the matter is specially important in the case of Franck, the whole of whose creative work was affected for good and ill by his connection with the organ. It is no exaggeration to say that a full knowledge of Franck, both as man and musician, is impossible without an intimate knowledge of his organ music. On the other hand, we may obtain a complete insight into Franck's personality and methods by a study of his organ works alone. This being so, Franck enthusiasts might observe his centenary in less profitable ways than in considering his organ music (which I hope to discuss fully in a later article), his relations with the instrument, and its influence on his compositions in general.

The history of music is a cheering record of frustrated parental intentions. Had all the fathers and mothers—especially the fathers—of musicians been cursed with obedient sons, what a lot of masterpieces would have remained unwritten! The case of Franck, however, is out of the common run. His father urged him to follow a musical career, but set his mind on the one that we least of all associate with the name of Franck. Young César was to be a pianoforte virtuoso and a composer of showy pianoforte music—a Thalberg, in fact. Instead, Franck père had the mortification of seeing his son distinguish himself in organ-playing and fugue, marry an actress, and forsake the glories of the concert-platform for the obscurity of the organ-loft. His first post was at St. Jean-St. François au Marais, whither he went while still in the twenties, and soon after his marriage. Here he had a fine Cavaillé-Col, presented to the church a short time before by Players of to-day who pooh-pooh as clumsy any organ that does not bristle with accessories, might well bear in mind the improvisations of Franck at St. Clotilde; with all its tonal beauties, his organ must have been awkward to manage compared with those of the same size built at the present time. Judging from Rongier's picture of Franck at the keyboard, the mere drawing of a stop meant the pulling out of a young piece of timber not less than a foot in the famous builder himself. An even better example of Cavaillé-Col's art awaited Franck at St. Clotilde, where, about ten years later, he took up the post that he held until his death. Here for thirty-two years, every Sunday and Feast-day, and towards the close of his life every Friday morning too, Franck was at his organ. What it meant to him we know from a remark quoted by d'Indy: 'If you only knew how I love this instrument! It is so supple beneath my fingers, and so obedient to all my thoughts.'

J. Rongier, pinxt.

[Braun & Co., photo.]

FRANCK AT THE ST. CLOTILDE ORGAN

length. Yet Frank improvised on it in such a way as to cast a spell on his hearers. This is no mere fanciful estimate arrived at by a handful of affectionate disciples. We know how, a student of nineteen, he astounded his examiners by the complexity and length of his treatment of an extemporisation test. Set to improvise a fugue and a piece in sonata form, on themes given by the examiners, young César combined the two subjects, and developed them at such length as to bewilder his examiners, who disqualified him and gave the prize to a more orthodox performer. Only after persuasion by his master, Benoist, did they give him a second prize. In the opinion of d'Indy, 'no other modern organist, not excepting the most renowned executants, would bear the most distant comparison' with Franck in the matter of improvisation, and he adds that on April 3, 1866, Liszt, after hearing Franck extemporise, left the church lost in amazement. In a word, Franck was a born organist. His monument and the most famous of his portraits show him at the console, and his fellow organists, with natural pride, more easily figure him there than in the class-room or the concert hall.

In order to realise the influence of the organ on Franck's work as composer we have to begin by noting two facts. First, what is generally agreed to be his second period began at the time of his appointment to St. Clotilde in 1858, and, second, for nearly twenty years, i.e., until the beginning of his third period (1876) he wrote almost exclusively church and organ music, the exceptions being three songs and one pianoforte piece. Thereafter he widened his range, but he remained very much the church musician, his works during the last fourteen years of his life including the Fantasia, Cantabile, Pièce Héroïque, and the Three Chorals for organ; L'organiste, a set of fifty-nine pieces for organ or harmonium; three books of transcriptions for organ of Pieces and Studies by Alkan; The Beatitudes, Rebecca, La Procession, and Psalm 150.

This is in marked contrast to his first period work, which consisted chiefly of such pianoforte pieces as the duet on God save the King, the Grand Caprice, transcriptions of four of Schubert's songs, two Fantasias on airs from Dalayrac's opera Gulistan, the Fantasia on two Polish airs—in fact, the output that we should expect from a gifted youngster bidden by his father to be a Thalberg. But his real bent began to show itself ten years before the end of this first period. Thus, in 1846, he wrote a pianoforte duet on Grétry's Lucile; but he had already begun the eclogue Ruth, and the first sketch of The Beatitudes lay on his desk. Perhaps no chronological table of a composer's works shows a more definite change of character than that of Franck at the point when he took up his second and final organ appointment. Not without reason does d'Indy describe the organ-loft at St. Clotilde as 'that quiet and fixed haven which was the starting-point of a new phase in his art.' No doubt Franck lost something by this willing entry into a long period of seclusion and routine, but the fact remains that practically without exception all his best work was written during these thirty-two years. A maturity spent as a successful musician in the public eye might have produced music more varied in character and universal in appeal; it could hardly have given us much of greater depth and beauty. It might even have meant failure, for Franck had not a trace of the blend of egoism, arrogance, and pugnacity that enabled such men as Handel, Beethoven, Wagner, and Berlioz to compose with one hand while fighting or carrying on controversies with the other. It may truly be said of him that he never really found himself until he was lost; his disappearance into the dusk of St. Clotilde was the beginning of a great public career. It is no wild supposition that had there been no organ-loft there would have been no Symphony, no Quartet and Quintet, no Prelude, Choral, and Fugue, and no Symphonic Variations.

I said above that the influence of the organ on Franck was for both good and ill. So far as I am aware the matter has not hitherto been discussed in detail, probably because the organ is well-known to few outside the ranks of organists and their congregations.* It is easy to deal with the debit side, because the matter is one of the letter rather than of the spirit, and so we can point to chapter and verse. As to the credit side, we can do little more than generalise.

There are signs that just now Franck is under a cloud in France and in some English musical circles, mainly because of his prevailing seriousness and his tendency to lengthy development. The cloud, no bigger than a man's hand at present, is not likely to grow. The past decade has given us a surfeit of leg-pulling and tongue-in-the-cheek music, and more and more we are returning with relief to the classics and to the modern composers who derive from them. There will be room for Franck in our concert-rooms for a long time yet, despite the flavour of the organ-loft that he so often brings with him. Or, instead of 'despite,' may we not say 'because'? This leisurely self-communing is the very essence of Franck. It is not for all palates, but those of us to whom it appeals will agree that this was the good thing that Franck found in the organ-loft. It is a rare thing, too. We are not likely to be overburdened with music that says its say with so little regard to the gallery and the virtuoso.

Before discussing the less satisfactory results of the organ influence, we may note the indebtedness of one or two works so far as form is concerned. Thus, the Prelude, Choral, and Fugue and the Prelude, Aria, and Finale for pianoforte undoubtedly owe something to the organ Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, written about twenty years before. Even more plainly is the Symphony foreshadowed—its origin is obviously the Pièce Symphonique for organ. There are marked likenesses in regard to form: both works begin with a slow introduction, which is repeated; in both the slow movement contains a quick section which does duty as a Scherzo, and in both the principal subject in the first movement has a place in the Finale. Very striking is the strong family likeness between the dominating idea of the organ work—especially the passage in which its opening three notes are used as a question:

* Since writing the above, I find the point touched on in an admirable article by Mr. W. Wright Roberts, in the current Music and Letters.

and the beginning of the first subject of the Symphony :

Finale of the Symphony. In the former, the canonic treatment of the first subject heightens its urgent, striving character ; in the Finale it increases the headlong energy and jubilation. However, my object here is not to prove that Franck was singularly successful in the use of canon, but to show that it is one of the excellences due to his connection with the organ. Canon has always been a device specially favoured by organists, partly, no doubt, because of its scholastic character, but far more because the organ is the only solo instrument on which so exact a form of imitation can be shown with the utmost clearness, and with little

Alfred Lenoir

[Sculptor.]

THE FRANCK MONUMENT BEFORE THE BASILICA OF ST. CLOTILDE

Further, the canonic treatment of the Symphony is twice anticipated in the organ piece.

Mention of canon at once reminds us of Franck's liberal use of this device—indeed, it is sometimes said that he shows too great a partiality for it. In his hands, however, it becomes so powerfully expressive that the objection does not stand. It would be difficult to find in any one work finer examples of the expressive use of canon than those in the opening movement and the trouble, thanks to the contrasts in pitch, colour, and power easily provided by the simultaneous use of several keyboards.

Franck wrote few fugues, but we may be sure that he would have written even fewer but for his organ experience. The combination of a fugue and choral in his best-known pianoforte work may be traced to this source, and the beautiful fugal passage in the first movement of the Quartet is real organ writing.

But the influence of the organ was often less happy, it must be confessed. Look at the picture of Franck at the keyboard. All too plainly he is marking time with left hand and pedals, while the right hand is negotiating the cumbrous stops. His organ works suffer badly from stagnant moments that suggest halts for registration, and there can be no doubt that his long spell of organ-playing made him less and less susceptible to the irritating effect of such purely utilitarian bridge-passages. It is one of the snares of which all organists have to beware. Not for nothing have they acquired an evil reputation in the matter of rhythm. They are prone to hold up even so continuous an affair as a fugue in order to make some change in registration. The halt over, they carry on the thread unconscious of damaged rhythm, because they make up the deficiency mentally. But what of the hearer? He is concerned only with the texture of the music, and when the organist lets it go for a moment the result is as disastrous as it would be if an orchestral performance were held up while a horn player changed his crook. Franck's music abounds in passages suggestive of an organist improvising and repeating a short passage on a second manual while changing stops on the first. Sometimes the crossing over to a second manual is merely the easy and obvious way of obtaining contrast. Here, from the slow movement of the Quartet, is a typical passage that occurs to the mind at once:

The undue proportion of full closes and more or less exact repetitions of short phrases in this movement show only too plainly the hand of the organist—and an organist constantly playing on an instrument in which the bulk of the registration called for time. It would be easy to quote many examples of this unfortunate result of Franck's organistship.

His treatment of the orchestra, too, suggests registration rather than orchestration. He uses his forces like manuals or groups of stops. At such irritating moments as this in the Symphony:

we seem to see him in his loft at St. Clotilde dropping on to his Choir manual for no better reason than that the Choir manual is there to be dropped on, as an easy way of obtaining variety or breathing-space, or both. And his use of the brass often sounds like an organist bringing on his Great reeds.

Finally, we shall not be far wrong if we ascribe to the organ and to his constant improvising thereon the cloying chromaticism that weakens a good deal of his later works. There is comparatively little of it in the Six Pieces, but it is laid on with a trowel in some pages of the Three Chorals, so we see that the habit grew on him. There is this to be said, however: many of these passages are more tolerable on the organ than on any other instrument because the comparatively cold and fixed tone of the organ reduces their emotional quality. Moreover the resonance of a big and reverberant building treats them kindly by obscuring some of the details. But they are blemishes, and must be laid at the door of the instrument that with its hoary tradition of modulating over pedal-points and of providing short impromptu links between tonally unrelated details of a service is constantly tempting the player from the diatonic path. Is it far-fetched to suggest that the crawling and finger-shifting touch of the old school of organ-playing is partly responsible for the over-chromatic character of so much organ music? Even Bach was apt to be over-lavish with his accidentals in his slow treatment of chorals. I have never gone into the matter, but I hazard a guess that he is more chromatic in his slow organ movements than in any other considerable portion of his output.

A word should be said as to Franck's comparative failure as a writer of music for liturgical use. He was too early for the revival of the pure plain-song tradition—one of the most fruitful of musical events, outside as well as inside the Church—and the older polyphonic music was a closed book that had still to wait for its reopening. Speaking of Franck's shortcomings in this respect, d'Indy quotes M. Charles Bordes, who, after describing a noisy Quoniam tu solus as suggesting a 'chorister in a merry condition,' goes on:

Pages such as these fill us with bitter regret that Franck started his career too soon to take part in our movement to reform sacred music. Knowing little of Palestrina, with whose beauties, as he informed me himself, he had only superficially come in contact, and whose religious appropriateness he did not appreciate, as with so many musicians of his generation, his interest stopped short at the writing and artifices of that style of composition.

And d'Indy gives yet another reason for the inadequacy of Franck's Church music as a whole. During his term at St. Clotilde the funds were not sufficient for the purchase of music for special occasions, so the clergy continued the old custom of calling on their organist. Franck answered the call, but he was rarely able to devote anything like the due amount of time to the composition of these special settings of the offices.

An unequal composer, then, even in the field calculated to call forth the very best that was in so devoted a son of the Church. Probably no other composer of his rank holds so high a position by virtue of so small a proportion of a huge output. Yet he had the right flame in him, and the will-power to keep it bright through a long life of routine work in organ-loft and drudgery in classrooms. Mr. Ernest Newman wrote in 1910:

This gentle, humble, and retiring man was the biggest force in French music of the latter half of the 19th century, and has given it, by his own work and through his pupils, an influence so fecund that its vigour is still undiminished.

Organists may well be proud that so rare a spirit not only followed their calling, but gloried in it. The organ loft is narrow, but not necessarily narrowing. Because its occupants are out of sight and free from the temptations that go with popular applause, they may easily end by seeing farther and higher than any other public performer. This was the case with Franck, for when all is said as to the ill effect of the organ in regard to details of his music, the fact remains that when he reached his full height and began his third period in 1876 he had already spent nearly thirty years as an organist. And—a final and clinching fact—he wrote nearly all his greatest music during the last fourteen years of his life, during which period he seems to have been more assiduous in his Church work than at any other time in his long career.

NEW LIGHT

ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XXVI.—SIR WILLIAM HAWTE

Considerable confusion has been caused by the very name of this composer, for the simple reason that the prefix 'Sir' was applied to a priest as well as to a knight, inasmuch as some of the MSS. containing compositions by Hawte definitely give his full name as 'Sir William Hawte, miles,' there is no question that the composer is to be equated with a knight and not with a priest. However, strange as it may seem, there has been a new difficulty over the identity of the particular miles, for it appears that there were two individuals of the same name almost contemporaneous; at least, there were two knights of that name who flourished, one under Henry VII. and the other under Henry VIII. Yet the difficulty is easily solved, inasmuch as experts are agreed that the MSS. containing Hawte's compositions are almost certainly prior to the year 1500; in fact, the Pepysian Catalogue, MS. 1236, is tentatively dated as from the period of King Edward IV., that is to say, from 1461-82. Neither Burney nor Hawkins furnishes any biographical data for this early Tudor composer, and Mr. Henry Davey gives no help save that he prefers to date the period of Hawte's activity as '1480-1500' (History of English Music, New Edition, 1921, p. 81). As will be seen, Hawte flourished under Henry VI., Edward IV., Richard III., and Henry VII.

Sir William Hawte was son of William Hawte, Esquire, who made his will on May 9, 1462, and who desired that his body was to be buried in the church of the Austin Friars, Canterbury. The first mention in official records of William Hawte is on May 19, 1457, when he received a commission to see about the erection of beacons on the sea-coast. In this commission he is styled 'William Hawte the younger'—his father being still alive; and we may therefore assume that he was then over twenty-one years of age, which would place his birth as circa 1436. His father died in 1464, and on November 23, 1465, the name of 'William Hawte, Knight,' appears in a commission regarding forfeitures. In 1468 (October 9) he was one of the commissioners for musters at Sandwich; and in the following year was a commissioner of array (October 29, 1469)—the commission being renewed in the years 1470 and 1471.

Between the years 1471 and 1474 Sir William Hawte was an important county magnate, and in 1475 he appears as Sheriff of Kent. So highly was he esteemed by Edward IV. that the King, on May 29, 1478, granted him an annuity of twenty marks from the previous Michaelmas (Cal. Pat. Rolls, Edward IV., Edward V., Richard III., 1476-85, p. 100).

Under Richard III. we find other important commissions given to Sir William Hawte between the years 1483 and 1485; and he was in equal favour with Henry VII., who, on December 9, 1485, appointed him, with others, 'to deliver the gaol of the castle of Canterbury for this turn'—a similar commission being given him on October 16, 1487 (Cal. Pat. Rolls, Henry VII., pp. 70 and 213). On May 26, 1490, he was appointed a commissioner of array, and on April 5, 1491, he received another commission. His name appears first on the list of commissioners appointed to deliver the gaol of the castle of Canterbury on March 7, 1492, and again on October 28, 1493.

Meantime, between the years 1475 and 1495 Sir William Hawte had devoted much time to his musical studies, and co-operated with the great Benedictine Prior Sellyng in furthering learning in the Claustral School of Canterbury. From internal evidence there is good reason to believe that Hawte's musical compositions date from this period, that is, during the last quarter of the 15th century—practically coincident with the rule of William Selling, who was Prior of Christ Church, Canterbury, from 1472 to 1495. Selling, like Hawte, was also in favour with Henry VII., who appointed him one of his ambassadors to the Pope in 1486. And it is of interest to note that, as has been seen in the preceding article,* John Dygon studied at the monastic school of Canterbury, where he was a novice between the years 1497 and 1504.

On July 13, 1495, Hawte was joined in a commission for County Kent, figuring with such notabilities as the Duke of Buckingham, the Marquis of Dorset, the Earl of Arundel, the Earl of Oxford, the Earl of Northumberland, the Earl of Shrewsbury, and others. He received a similar commission on June 20, 1496, and again on October 24 of same year.

A close search of the Patent Rolls does not reveal any later mention of Hawte, and it is fair to assume that he died in 1498 or 1499, certainly before 1500. It is well to note that his name was variously spelled 'Haut,' 'Haute,' and 'Hawte'; and it is of common knowledge that the Hautes were important county people of Kent in the 12th-15th centuries. As Canon Jenkins writes in his Diocesan History of Canterbury, apropos of some of the greater houses failing prior to the 16th century, 'the Hautes,' like the Pluckleys and Surrendens, 'failed in the male line,' and we can thus conclude that Sir William Hawte died without issue in 1498 or 1499. The property then passed to his brother, Sir Thomas Hawte, who died early in 1503, leaving a son William, whose wardship was granted to Sir Henry Frowyk and Thomas Jakes, on July 20, 1503 (Cal. Pat. Rolls Henry VII., 1494-1509, p. 308).

* See Musical Times for May, 1922.

As to the value of Hawte's compositions the specimens that remain are sufficient to stamp him as a not unworthy disciple of the school of Newark and Fairfax. He was certainly a gifted musical amateur, as is revealed in his two beautiful settings of a three-part Benedicamus Domino, at Magdalen College, Cambridge* in the Pepysian MS. 1236. Other compositions by him will be found in the same MS., and also in Add. MS. 5665, in the British Museum, including a charming three-part Stella Coeli.

WHO WROTE GOUNOD'S FAUST?

BY A. KEAY

If it be permissible to doubt the authenticity of that which we have learned to call Shakespeare's works, and to say so publicly, why should we not dare to discuss the authenticity of the great opera which is commonly called Gounod's Faust? The following tale (for the veracity of which no guarantee was, or is now, given) was told to the writer in musical circles at Paris many years ago, and, it was said, had there obtained considerable circulation and credence:

One of the students at the Paris Conservatoire while Gounod was its director is said to have composed an opera which, before proceeding to its publication, he decided to submit to his director with a view to obtaining his opinion of the work. On various subsequent occasions he asked for that opinion, but Gounod always put him off with the excuse that he had not had time to examine the opera. Shortly thereafter a new opera by Gounod was announced for production. The said student went to the first representation to hear it, and was so upset by hearing his own work produced as the composition of another man that his mind gave way under the strain. In vulgar parlance, he became a lunatic.

Whether that story is true or not is now of little importance, for, as in the case of Shakespeare, we have the work, and, like his, it is unique in its way. But it may be worth while to inquire what there is in the French master's other works capable of repudiating or supporting the above legend.

Prior to the production of Faust, Gounod, as an operatic composer, was regarded as a failure. His Sapho and La Nonne Sanglante died almost as soon as they were born, and the Ulysse music did nothing to establish its composer's fame. Faust did. At first its reception at Paris was cordial only. It was different from anything which preceded it, and was fully appreciated only when better understood. Finally, it placed Gounod in the front rank of operatic composers of his day. Of the nine operas he subsequently composed, not one added to his fame. Romeo and Juliet is the only one of them which has survived, though we sometimes hear of Mireille.

Romeo and Juliet, when thoroughly analysed, is only to be compared with Faust in so far as the former is based upon the latter. The imitations (not to call them plagiarisms) are many, and quite cleverly introduced, but they are undeniably there, and they have saved the opera from sinking into the oblivion which has swallowed up so many of its fellows. So far as the English adaptation of the libretto is concerned, the music has to bear the added dead weight of a text—however beautiful in itself, and largely borrowed from Shakespeare—fitted to it, not a translation of the text which it was composed to express.

It is undeniable that Gounod possessed genius, that he had an eminent appreciation of melody, and that he was frequently happy in his orchestration; but, with all these points in his favour, he seems to have been unable to maintain equality of work. Hence we find frequent lapses from the sublime to triviality, if not banality.

Faust, it will be remembered, was at first published without the appendix, which consists of 'Dio possente,' 'Quando a te lieta,' and 'La Notte di Valpurgis.' That was an afterthought, added much later, in proof whereof its copyright has not yet lapsed, although that for the rest of the opera expired long ago. These three items are undoubtedly Gounod's own, and they are the only ones in the opera which, from a musical point of view, are not of a first-class order. The banality of the second is pronounced, and the poverty of the third is scarcely less so. 'Dio possente' is admittedly a beautiful song, and not inappropriate as introduced, but its accompaniment is not on a level with the rest of the opera.

In view of these considerations it appears that the French legend quoted is not without foundation. The idea of temporary inspiration during the period of the composition of a single opera, an inspiration lacking in twelve others, is scarcely to be regarded seriously. And it is almost incredible that a man should be able to change his style so absolutely as not to produce spontaneous characteristics of a similar line of thought during the thirty years which elapsed between the production of Sapho and that of Le Tribut de Zamora.

A PRECURSOR OF THE SAXOPHONE

BY TOM S. WOTTON

When, about 1840, Adolphe Sax invented the saxophone, he claimed no priority for the principle on which it was based, although it was one that differed from that adopted for any of the instruments in the orchestras of his day. His object was to create an entirely new tone-colour, one that should partake of some of the characteristics of the brass, wood-wind, and stringed instruments. After several attempts, he produced a bass instrument, standing in B flat, with a written compass from B below the bass to C in the treble clef, a semitone over three octaves. It made its first appearance in Kastner's biblical opera Le dernier roi de Juda, in 1844. Modifications were introduced later, involving the reduction of the compass to two octaves and a fourth or fifth, and, as with the saxhorns, the Belgian maker turned out a complete family, ranging from a sopranino saxophone to a double-bass. The principle was the same in all—a beating (single) reed combined with a conical tube, as opposed, on the one hand, to the clarinet, with a similar reed, but with a cylindrical tube; and, on the other, to the oboe and bassoon, with conical tubes, but played with double reeds. Another difference was, that the body of the new instrument was of metal, which had indeed been tentatively employed for the other reed instruments, but without success.

* Mr. Henry Davey writes of this composition as 'a five voiced Benedicamus Domino, but Mr. H. B. Collins assures me that the MS. consists of 'two separate compositions, each for 3 voices.'

Before leaving the saxophone, it may be as well to correct a misstatement, which, from Gevaert onwards, has appeared in most of the books dealing with instruments. We are told that Meyerbeer wrote for the saxophone—sometimes, more specifically, that he employed one in L'Africaine. To assert that there is no part for the instrument amongst his unpublished manuscripts would be rash; but it is certain that he wrote no part for it in his last opera, which was produced in April, 1865, eleven months after his death. The score was edited by Fétis, with a declaration that it was in exact agreement with the original manuscript. But such an assurance will have but little weight with the judicious, conversant with the manners and customs of the majority of editors. At the head of the score is a note that 'theatres which do not possess a bass-clarinet can replace it by a saxophone'; on p. 573, where there are parts for two bass-clarinets, there is another note that the part of the second can be taken by a saxophone; and, on p. 600, for Vasco's air, there is a part for bass-clarinet or saxophone, the alternative version being written out in full on a separate staff. To the thoughtful, there is something unconvincing about these indications. In 1865 opera-houses were much more likely to possess a bass-clarinet than a saxophone, and for a master of colour such as Meyerbeer undoubtedly was, the choice of the latter for Vasco's air seems an unhappy one. In any case, the suggestion of the employment of one instrument, should another be unprocurable, can hardly be taken as an example of the use of the first. To clinch the question, Saint-Saëns, in his article on Meyerbeer in Ecole Buissonnière, insists that alterations were introduced into the score, and that the references to the saxophone were due entirely to Fétis, in his anxiety to assist his compatriot, Adolphe Sax.

In the Harmonicon for 1830, in an article on the 'Oboe and Bassoon,' there is mention of a 'recent invention' of Mr. William Meikle, 'of Scotland.' It is termed an 'Alto-Fagotto,' but this is evidently a misnomer, and used only for want of a better word. It was not only played with a beating reed, but its dimensions differed from those of an ordinary fagottino, tenor (alto) bassoon, or dulcian. It was shorter—as much as 17-in. shorter than some models, and the bore was a much more pronounced cone. There were other minor differences. The compass was said to be from c to c^{III}, the best notes lying between g and g^{II}, and the instrument stood in B flat.* To all intents and purposes, Meikle's invention was a wooden saxophone, shaped like a diminutive bassoon. From Musical Instruments, Historic, Rare, and Unique (1888), by A. J. Hipkins, we learn that Lazarus, the celebrated clarinettist, played on such an instrument when he was at the Royal Military Asylum, Chelsea, and that he called it a 'Tenoroon.*' Lazarus's 'Tenoroon' (labelled as such) is now (or was) in the Museum of the Brussels Conservatoire, placed correctly, with the saxophones, amongst instruments with a beating reed and conical tube. There were two specimens in the Military Exhibition of 1890 (Nos. 157 and 158 of the Catalogue), made respectively by George Wood, late James Wood & Son, and Wood & Ivy, late George Wood, the first being stamped 'Invented by William Meikle.' Unfortunately the two instruments were most carelessly described in the Catalogue. They were said to be 18th century, although, according to the London Directory, George Wood did not succeed James until 1833. They were labelled 'Dulcians in c,' and placed amongst the double-reed instruments. But No. 158, then in the possession of the Rev. F. W. Galpin, was, like the 'Tenoroon' at Brussels, in B flat, and No. 157, only $\frac{1}{4}$ -in. longer, was certainly the same pitch. And they were neither dulcians nor played with a double-reed.

Meikle's invention became dead as a door-nail, and its very name of 'Tenoroon' was forgotten, or but remembered fitfully in connection with an organ-stop. Then, some twenty or thirty years later, a fagottino, or tenor bassoon, was discovered at the Foundling Hospital. It was at first believed to be a bassoon intended for a boy's use, although the basson quinte, as the French call it, was sufficiently well-known to be mentioned in Berlioz's Treatise on Instrumentation. The late Dr. W. H. Stone took an interest in the discovery, and either he or one of his friends christened it a 'Tenoroon.' Whether the name was re-coined, or whether in someone's mind there was some faint echo of Meikle's invention, matters little. From its analogy with 'bassoon,' the name was an appropriate one. But it must be clearly realised that during the past century there were two different instruments called 'Tenoroon.' Without a firm grasp of this undoubted fact it will be impossible to appreciate the curious confusion arising from this double-barrelled nomenclature.

In August, 1829, Rossini's William Tell was produced at Paris. In the Overture, as all the world knows, he placed an imitation of the Swiss Ranz des vaches, and assigned it in his score to the cor anglais. Whether he had ever employed the instrument previously I do not know, but being an Italian he noted it in the current Italian fashion—the real sounds given an octave below in the bass clef. Donizetti, eleven years later, in La Favorite, did precisely the same thing, although his opera, like Rossini's masterpiece, was both produced and published first at Paris. Verdi, eighteen years later, in 1847, for Macbeth, used a similar notation for his corno inglese, and Sandi, in his Trattato di Strumentazione pratica (1864), opens his section on the instrument with, 'For the corno inglese either the violin or the bass clef is employed.' He gives only three examples, and they are all three in the bass clef, viz., William Tell, Il Giuramento (1837), and Macbeth. Fortunately, there is no doubt as to the last, since in La Vita di Giuseppe Verdi, by Bragagnolo & Battazzi, there are numerous pages from the master's autographs in reduced facsimile, and amongst them is this particular page from Macbeth. Prout says that Italian composers only

* These details are mostly from other sources. The Harmonicon merely gives the compass, and says that the instrument was played with a clarinet mouthpiece.

* In Mahillon's Catalogue of the instruments in the Brussels Conservatoire, Vol. ii., p. 225, it is said, 'from information gathered from official sources,' that Lazarus left the Asylum November 27, 1821. But as then he would have been only six years old, it is a probable misprint for 1831.

employed this notation up to Verdi's time, but obviously this is erroneous. Verdi himself adopted it, and some Italian composers (possibly Verdi amongst them) must have practised it till the century was nearly three-quarters past. As there is no doubt as to the instrument intended by Verdi, Donizetti, or Mercadante, so there can be no reasonable misgivings as to Rossini's intentions, writing only a few years before them, and, like them, an Italian.

In 1829 the cor anglais was rather a favourite instrument at Paris. In the April Berlioz had published his Eight Scenes from Faust, which contains parts for two of the instruments (noted in the modern fashion), and also the beautiful obbligato to Margaret's air, afterwards incorporated in The Damnation of Faust. In Halévy's La Juive, produced in 1835, there are again parts for a couple of cors anglais, noted in the old French style—in the C clef on the second line, the real sounds being given. In the year immediately following the production of Tell the cor anglais was heard in the slow movement of the Fantastic Symphony, and in 1831 Robert le Diable had its first performance, with the solo for the instrument, beloved of the Treatises.

In Germany the cor anglais was practically unknown, and readers of Berlioz's Memoirs will recall the difficulties he often experienced in finding a player there, even as late as 1840-41. On the production of Rossini's opera in Germany, the solo of the Overture was played on an oboe, in the absence of the real Simon Pure. Oddly enough, in a German work on 'Instrumentation,' published as recently as 1911 (!), in which the different instruments are treated by absolute performers on them, the Tell solo is actually given as an example of one for the oboe, though the chapter is written by a player on both it and the cor anglais, who was then attached to the opera-house at Dresden. Such is the force of tradition!

In England the instrument was equally unknown, and when, in May, 1830, Bishop's mutilation of Rossini's opera was given in London under the title of Hofer the Tell of the Tyrol, the solo of the Overture (Rossini's) was, on the authority of Dr. Stone, played on a 'Tenoroon,' at the written pitch. There is not the slightest reason for doubting either of the statements, although I am unable to verify them. No assistance is obtained from the newspapers of the day. There is no mention of the Overture in The Observer, The Spectator, The Standard, The Morning Advertiser (with an historical sketch by Sir Walter Scott), or The Morning Post. The Times critic alone appears to have been in his place before the raising of the curtain, and he merely refers to the Overture in general terms as 'a singularly beautiful and characteristic composition.' The Harmonicon, however, has a review of Rossini's work, with the Overture described:

It commences with a graceful Andante in E minor for five violoncellos, the effect of which is no less pleasing than novel. A brilliant Allegro follows, and is succeeded by the subjoined movement, in which the Corno Inglese takes the melody—an imitation of a Ranz des Vaches.

The 'subjoined movement' is a pianoforte arrangement of the melody, with the cor anglais part labelled 'Cornetto Bassetto'! We shall presently be able to form a shrewd guess as to the reason for this strange term.

In all probability, for the production of Hofer the solo in the Overture was played on a 'Tenoroon,' and the information may possibly have come direct from Tamplini*, who is alleged to have performed on the instrument for the occasion. We can almost picture him and Bishop congratulating themselves on finding a substitute for the unattainable cor anglais. But it must not be forgotten that the 'Tenoroon,' on which Tamplini played, was not the 'Tenoroon' of the Foundling Hospital, but the instrument on which Lazarus played, the invention of Mr. William Meikle, 'of Scotland.' In 1830 there was no other 'Tenoroon'!

Music is responsible for many peculiar theories and ideas, but now we come to one of the most peculiar ever broached. Briefly, it is this: That, because a particular part is performed on a particular instrument, when a mutilated version of a composer's work is given in England, that therefore the composer intended that instrument, in spite of his having marked a different one plainly in his score. The absurd non sequitur leaves us breathless! No evidence is adduced that Rossini, though he lived for thirty-eight years after the Paris production of Tell, ever murmured a syllable about his supposed intention. There is no suggestion that Berlioz (who corrected the proof-sheets of the opera) or any other French musician of the day, so much as hinted that Rossini had not meant the instrument with which they were all familiar. There is not a shred of warranty for the assertion that the Maestro intended a 'Tenoroon,' beyond the fact that it was employed in London, and employed, not in a performance superintended by the composer, but in a version that in some respects must have been a burlesque of the original.

After this astonishing theory, it is by way of being an anticlimax when we realise that the 'Tenoroon' that Rossini is supposed to have intended was not the 'Tenoroon' on which Tamplini played. Dr. Stone jumped to the conclusion that for Hofer a tenor-bassoon was used, because he and his friends elected to call the instrument a 'Tenoroon.' The idea that there might be another instrument also called 'Tenoroon' never seems to have crossed his mind.

That Tamplini should have played his solo at the written pitch is quite understandable. Both he and Bishop, being ignorant probably of the cor anglais except from report, would be as little likely to know the Italian mode of noting it as the old French method, practised by Halévy. They were apparently equally ignorant of the pitch of a Ranz des Vaches, or—what comes to the same thing—credited Rossini with ignorance. The Alpenhorn, on which the Swiss tune is played, is usually from 4-ft. to 8-ft. long. But in the Brussels Conservatoire there was an exceptionally large one, 3.13 metres (10-ft. 3-in.) long, giving 'very easily' the following harmonics:

Ex. 1.

If we collate this natural scale with the opening bars of Rossini's melody (with the pizzicato chords omitted on the first quaver of the first four bars):

* Afterwards bandmaster of the 48th, 96th, and 24th regiments, and author of The Bandsman. (Farmer, Military Music.)

Ex. 2.

Cor. Ingl.

Cor. (real sounds)
& Fag.

we see that, by adding e'' , the thirteenth harmonic, they could be produced on the Brussels Alpenhorn, but in the higher octave. To perform them as written a gigantic Alpenhorn of 20-ft. 6-in. would be required, an impossible instrument for the Swiss peasant with his primitive methods of construction. Rossini may not be the fashion at present, but nevertheless he was sufficient of a musician to know the approximate pitch of a Ranz des Vaches.

Surely it might have struck Bishop that it was a very un-Rossini-like proceeding to write a solo for a double-reed instrument (as I presume he knew the cor anglais to be) plump in the midst of holding-notes for instruments of the same class, the bassoons, to say nothing of those for the horns. Tamplini's solo must have been somewhat blurred, especially as he was not making use of the best notes on Meikle's invention.

We now can see a probable explanation for the Cornetto Bassetto of the 'subjoined movement.' The arranger of the solo, being a truthful man, refused to mark the cor anglais, which had not been employed in Hofer, and he was too much of a musician to call an instrument with a beating-reed an 'Alto Fagotto.' He was shy at using the term 'Tenoroon,' which savoured of slang, and so invented a word recalling the Corno di Bassetto, which, both from its compass and mouthpiece, bore some resemblance to the new instrument. The word indeed may have been Meikle's own idea.

We need not follow Dr. Stone's further divagations. Apparently, because Tamplini played the Tell solo on a 'Tenoroon,' which was not the 'Tenoroon' that he (Dr. Stone) thought it was, therefore, in some mysterious way, the oboi di caccia of Bach were really tenor-bassoons, and were treated as tenor instruments. As a brief answer to this, we have merely to quote the opening phrase for Oboe di caccia I. in the first Church Cantata:

Ex. 3.

The part hardly suggests a tenor one. And it is extremely doubtful whether the f'' would be possible for any fagottino of about 1740, since in Walter's Musikalisches Lexicon (1732) the upward limit of the ordinary bassoon is given as being e' or g' , and probably the tenor instrument would be able to manage only the fourth or fifth above.

The first London performances of Rutland Boughton's Bethlehem will be given by the Streatham Philharmonic Society at Battersea Town Hall on December 28 and 29 at 8, and December 30 at 2.30; and at Streatham Town Hall on January 5 at 8, and January 6 at 2.30. The soloists will include some of the original Glastonbury cast.

Occasional Notes

The Competitive Festival movement is growing so fast that the amount of space hitherto allotted to it in the Musical Times is inadequate. Our old custom of confining such news to a four- or eight-column supplement had two drawbacks: (1) Important matter during the busy season had to be omitted, or cut down to fit the procustean bed of the supplement. (2) The fact of such news being published on what is technically known as an 'inset' seemed to imply that it was not sufficiently important to be included in the body of the journal.

This is very far from being the case. The Competition Festival is one of the most vital factors in the musical life of the country. Its educational and recreative powers far exceed that of all but a very few concerts, and as a means of familiarising great masses of people with fine music, both ancient and extremely modern, it has no rival. With the beginning of the new volume in January, therefore, the space available for Festival news and notes will be largely increased, and the matter will be embodied in the journal proper. This arrangement will enable us to carry out a project we have long had in mind—the inclusion of occasional articles on Festival topics from the pen of writers with a good inside knowledge of the movement.

Hearty congratulations to the two new musical knights. Sir Henry Walford Davies and Sir Richard Runciman Terry have long been among the most strenuous and successful of musical workers. To speak in detail of them and their labours would be to repeat what everybody knows, and we can pay them no more handsome compliment than by confining the expression of our feelings to a mere joining in the general cheers.

The balance-sheet of the Gloucester Festival shows a result of which the executive committee may well be proud. The gross receipts amounted to £8,239, and after payment of the very heavy expenses and £945 in entertainment tax, there is a net balance of £2,107. This is said to be a record for the whole two hundred years of the Festival's history, the next best profit balance being that of the Gloucester Festival in 1913.

Very appropriately this success is followed by a high honour conferred on Dr. Herbert Brewer in his appointment to the post of High Sheriff of Gloucester. At the meeting of the City Council at which the appointment was made, Dr. Brewer, in returning thanks, said that this was the first time a Cathedral organist had been elected to such a position, and he felt certain that his election would give immense satisfaction to the profession to which he belonged. He was now occupying two very ancient offices—in fact, two of the oldest in the kingdom, for his new one dated back to 1483, and his organistship, which he had held for nearly twenty-six years, dated back to 1544. At the Corporation Service at the Cathedral on the Sunday following his election, Dr. Brewer discarded his Doctor's robes and conducted and played in his Sheriff's robe and chain of office.

An unusually attractive programme is announced for the Novello Choir concert at Bishopsgate Institute on December 21, at 8 p.m. The choral items will include Bach's Sleepers, wake! Elgar's five Part-songs, Op. 45; Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols; and shorter works by Byrd, Cavendish, and Gibbons. A small orchestra, mainly drawn from the L.S.O., and led by Mr. W. H. Reed, will accompany, and will also play a Purcell Suite, and a Suite for Strings, arranged by Gerrard Williams from Bach's French and English Suites. The soloists will be Miss Gladys Marloe and Mr. John Buckley, and Mr. Harold Brooke will conduct.

The choice of music for use at memorial concerts and services is not easy, but it is generally felt that the funereal side should not be over emphasised. The following programme of an organ recital given on Armistice Day certainly passes the funerary limit:

- | | |
|---|-------------|
| 1. Funeral March on the Death of a Hero | Beethoven |
| 2. Requiem Aeternam | Harwood |
| 3. Marche Funèbre et Chant Séraphique | Guilman |
| 4. 'Good-Night and Goo-bye' | Brahms |
| 5. Dead March in 'Saul' | Handel |
| 6. Chorus of Angels... | Clark |
| 7. Funeral March | Chopin |
| 8. Chanson Triste | Tchaikovsky |
| 9. Trauermarsch, 'Götterdämmerung' | Wagner |

A few of these depressing items (especially the Rev. Scotson Clark's Chorus of Angels) should have made way for something heartening—say Elgar's Imperial March or Saint-Saëns's Marche Héroïque.

For some years past the public has been in no doubt as to the views of the Dean of St. Paul's on most subjects. Only recently, however, have we found him making a pronouncement on Church music. In one of his weekly Evening Standard articles Dean Inge, describing a Cathedral service which he attended during a holiday in Sweden, says:

The music consisted chiefly of five or six fine old hymns, sung slowly to the grand German tunes. The whole congregation joined in the singing, in perfect time and in musical tones, not bawling as they do in Prussia. The most striking thing was the size of the congregation. Upsala contains only twenty thousand inhabitants, and there are five or six other churches, but three thousand five hundred persons were packed into the Cathedral, many standing in the aisles during the whole service. I thought with regret of St. Paul's, half empty at the beginning of the Sunday morning service, of the continual disturbance caused by people entering and leaving the church (at Upsala no one moved till the end), and of the music, in which the congregation cannot join.

Most of us will feel that a Cathedral service, the music of which 'consisted chiefly of five or six old hymns,' left a good deal to be desired. This is the type of service that ought to be aimed at in small village and poor town churches where no choir is available. The service in Cathedrals and collegiate churches is rightly of another type. If the Dean feels that Cathedral services should include little music other than half-a-dozen simple hymns, what would he propose to do with the choral foundation? We agree with all he says as to the impressiveness of congregational singing, but there is room in most churches for the best efforts of both choir and congregation, separately and in conjunction. Most of the difficulties in English church music are the result of the gradual disappearance of the old distinction between the choir and people's part of the service. When the people try to sing everything they are well on the way to singing nothing.

Our October issue contained an article entitled 'Violins Old and New: Prejudice versus Facts.' In it the writer showed that the value placed on old violins was almost entirely fictitious. He cited as evidence a contest that took place at Paris a few years ago, whereat a number of violins, old and new, were played before a gathering of experts who, without knowing the dates or makers of the instruments, voted on them. The result was that first and second places went to brand-new fiddles, and the third to a 'Strad,' valued at over three thousand pounds—prior to the contest, that is. No doubt its price fell with mark-like rapidity as soon as the result was known. We revert to this article because it is further supported by an event at a recent London concert. A few weeks ago Mr. Albert Sammons gave a fine performance of the Elgar Concerto at Queen's Hall. Mr. Percy Scholes, in the Observer of the following week, mentioned that a member of the audience was heard to remark, 'What a lovely "Strad."!' But it wasn't. It was a violin made only a few weeks before at Chiswick, and this was the first time Mr. Sammons had used it for solo purposes. The maker is Mr. Alfred Vincent, who happens also to be leader of the orchestra at His Majesty's Theatre. The more widely such facts are made known the better. Nobody but the makers and fakers of spurious instruments will suffer, and the genuine practitioners of the beautiful craft of the luthier will gain.

Sinclair Lewis's Babbitt, one of the raciest and slangiest of recent American novels, contains an amusing passage that throws a ray of light on the origin of some of the millionaire-endowed orchestras in the States. At a lunch of the Zenith Boosters Club (Zenith is the city in which the action lies), one of the speakers—a poet and advertisement writer—made a plea for the formation of a symphony orchestra. He said:

Some of you may feel that it's out of place here to talk on a strictly highbrow and artistic subject, but I want to come out flatfooted and ask you boys to O.K. the proposition of a symphony orchestra for Zenith. Now, where a lot of you make your mistake is in assuming that if you don't like classical music and all that junk, you ought to oppose it. Now, I want to confess that, though I'm a literary guy by profession, I don't care a rap for all this long-haired music. I'd rather listen to a good jazz band any time than to some piece by Beethoven that hasn't any more tune to it than a bunch of fighting cats, and you couldn't whistle it to save your life! But that isn't the point. Culture has become as necessary an adornment and advertisement for a city to-day as pavements or bank-clearances. It's Culture, in theatres and art-galleries and so on, that brings thousands of visitors to New York every year and, to be frank, for all our splendid attainments we haven't yet got the Culture of a New York or Chicago or Boston—or at least we don't get the credit for it. The thing to do then, as a live bunch of go-getters, is to capitalise Culture; to go right out and grab it.

Pictures and books are fine for those that have the time to study 'em, but they don't shoot out on the road and holler 'This is what little old Zenith can put up in the way of Culture.' That's precisely what a symphony orchestra does do. Look at the credit Minneapolis and Cincinnati get. An orchestra with first-class musickers and a swell conductor—and I believe we ought to do the thing up brown and get one of the highest-paid conductors on the market, provided he ain't a Hun—it goes right into Boston, and New York and Washington; it plays at the best theatres to the most cultured and moneyed people; it gives such class-advertising as a town can get in no other way; and the guy who is so short-sighted as to crab this orchestra proposition is passing up the chance to impress the glorious name of Zenith on some big New York millionaire that might—that might establish a branch factory here!

I could also go into the fact that for our daughters who show an interest in highbrow music and may want to teach it, having an AI local organization is of great benefit, but let's keep this on a practical basis, and I call on you good brothers to whoop it up for Culture and a World-beating Symphony Orchestra!

We regret that we have no space to print the glossary of Americanese which Mr. Lewis thoughtfully provides at the end of Rabbitt. No doubt our readers will be able to understand most of the Booster's speech to his fellow go-getters.

Some of our readers may remember the very successful concert given in the spring at the Albert Hall by the National Organization of Girls' Clubs, when twelve hundred London Club girls took part. We are asked to announce that the programme will be repeated at the People's Palace, Mile End Road, on December 6, at 8, when five hundred of the choir will sing. The soloists will be Miss May Harrison, Miss Margaret Champneys, Mr. Plunket Greene, and Dr. Harold Darke, and Mr. Harvey Grace will conduct.

A reader sends us the following cutting from the Daily Express of November 20:

BEETHOVEN PIANO

A new Beethoven souvenir has been discovered in private possession in a Vienna suburb—a piano which the master used in the composition of the 'Thunder' Sonata and of the 'Misses Solemnis.' It is a so-called 'hammer piano,' giving the extra loud tone which Beethoven required on account of his deafness.

Our correspondent asks us to comment on this, but we refuse to paint the lily.

Music in the Foreign Press

BY M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

BAUDELAIRE'S FIRST LETTER TO WAGNER

The Revue Musicale (November) publishes the text of the letter written by Baudelaire to Wagner after the famous concerts which introduced excerpts of The Flying Dutchman, Tannhäuser, Lohengrin, and Tristan to the Paris public (January 25-February 1, 1860).

Until now this letter was known only by the reference which Wagner makes to it in his autobiography:

Baudelaire introduced himself in a letter in which he described to me the feelings awakened in him by my music. The singularly bold and fantastic tone of his effusions led me to acknowledge in him a remarkable mind, intent in pursuing with the utmost energy and to their utmost consequences the impressions which he had derived from my music. He did not add his address to his signature, because, he said, he did not wish me to think that he was planning to get something out of me. Of course I managed to discover his whereabouts, and soon afterwards he joined the circle of acquaintances who used to meet at my home every Wednesday.

The original now belongs to M. Jacques Doucet; it would be interesting, by the way, to know how it came to pass out of the hands of Wagner or of his family. The letter, which is in very much the same strain as Baudelaire's pamphlet on Wagner (a reprint of an article in the Revue Européenne, incorporated later in the volume L'Art Romantique), breathes impassioned admiration.

A comment by André Suarès refers to the matter from the historical point of view and calls attention to Baudelaire's insight as a critic:

Baudelaire judged Ingres as truly as Delacroix, Manet as truly as Flaubert, Poe as truly as Goya. He judged Wagner even more truly than any other of the artists he admired.

ALBERT ROUSSEL

In the same issue, Roland Manuel devoted a clever and judicious essay to Albert Roussel's individuality:

Roussel is essentially original, and belongs to no definite lineage or school. His originality is not deliberate, but is characterised by the fact that he uses no commonplaces. He does not even profit by his own experience, and has as little use for his own previously discovered processes as for those discovered by others. Hence the variety of his output, and the apparent gaucherie which, as M. Jean Marnold has pointed out, is in fact nothing but the avoidance of convenient tricks. This lack of set formulae renders the analysis of his technique practically impossible. Among the distinctive features of his music, the writer notes the tendency to omit or to indicate sparsely the bass of his harmonies, the effect being at times subtle, at others forceful and dramatic. Scoring is with certain masters such as Mendelssohn, Saint-Saëns, Rimsky-Korsakov, Ravel, or Stravinsky, almost an exact science; with others, such as Weber or Debussy, chiefly a matter of intuition. It is to the latter class that Roussel belongs. Contrary to Ravel, with whom the artistic problem almost becomes a wager and is made as difficult as possible, Roussel never strews his path with obstacles in order to delight in negotiating them with cheerful ease.

THE CONDUCTOR'S ART

In the same issue, Lazare Saminsky has some interesting remarks to offer on this point. They are founded upon his study of Nikisch's technique, and also of the methods used by Mengelberg and Rimsky-Korsakov. The writer complains of the lack of theoretical writings on the art of conducting. He does not appear to have seen Dr. Adrian C. Boult's little book on this matter.

DID BOSSI INFLUENCE CÉSAR FRANCK?

In the Bolletino Ceciliano (xvii. 3) Giovanni Tebaldini writes:

I can remember the day when, while I was practising at the organ, Enrico Bossi came in and proceeded to play his first Suite in my presence and that of G. B. Nappi. I still possess the manuscript of this work which, written ten years before Franck wrote his Trois Chœurs, contains progressions and other modes of working out of which the great Belgian seems to have perceived, if not very distinctly, but very persistently, an echo.

YOUNG ITALIAN COMPOSERS

In Il Pensiero Musicale (August), Antonio Veretti devotes an article to Franco Alfano's life and works:

Alfano (born in 1877) is the author of the lyric-drama Risurrezione, after Tolstói's novel, produced at Torino in 1904, of Don Juan's Shadow (Scala, 1914), and of the legend of Sakuntala (Bologna, 1921). His chief orchestral works are a Romantic Suite (1907) and a Symphony (1908). His String Quartet (1918) is one of his best achievements.

In the same issue Vittorio Gui praises the qualities of imagination and sensitiveness displayed by F. Balilla Pratella in his lyrics Canzoni del Niente.

YOUNG DUTCH COMPOSERS

In Die Musikwelt (October 15), Dr. Rudolf Mengelberg points out that Dutch composers of to-day remain unknown abroad. He considers that Diepenbrock (1862-1921) represents for Holland what Pfitzner represents for Germany. Cornelis Dopper (b. 1870) is 'the most Dutch of all Dutch composers.' Wagenaar (b. 1862) is essentially original in certain of his humorous cantatas and operas; but as their effect remains dependent upon their text, it is doubtful whether they will be found telling in other countries. B. Zweers (b. 1854) and J. Röntgen (b. 1855) represent a school which has affinities with that of the German Romantics. The most gifted of the younger men is Willem Pijper (b. 1894). Next to him should be named H. D. van Goudoever (b. 1898).

The Musician's Bookshelf

The Nietzsche-Wagner Correspondence.

[Duckworth, 21s.]

This is surely one of the most fascinating and deeply interesting books of the year. Nietzsche was already an enthusiastic Wagnerite at the age of sixteen. During the following years his admiration rapidly increased, but it was not, however, an unreasoning one, since he considered that 'the greatest beauties and virtues' of the Valkyrie were 'offset by equally great shortcomings and positive ugliness at times.' Nevertheless, his enthusiasm attracted the attention of the great composer, who in November, 1868, signified his royal wish of making the humble acquaintance of his passionate young admirer.

Shortly after this first meeting Nietzsche was appointed Professor of Classical Philology at the University of Basle. So great, however, was his enthusiasm for the creator of Tristan, that he at one time thought of sacrificing his career to the furtherance of the Wagnerian cause. The great composer himself, having—according to his own testimony—spent 'a long life in the company of inferior and rather stupid persons,' was very much impressed by the conversation and writings of his young friend, and he repeatedly invited him to Tribschen, his villa on the Lake of Lucerne. Though the irregular relations of Wagner's household at first greatly distressed Nietzsche, he soon came to be regarded not merely as one of the family, but even as 'a messenger from a purer and nobler world.' Wagner sent him the manuscript of his autobiography to correct, assuring him that he alone should be 'the custodian of these memoirs when I am dead and gone.'

Two years later Nietzsche published The Birth of Tragedy out of the Spirit of Music, which—owing to its warm championship of the Wagnerian music-drama—met with the enthusiastic approval of both Wagner and Cosima. This work, indeed, inspired Wagner to new creative effort, and in a comparatively short time he completed the second Act of Götterdämmerung.

But already Nietzsche began to feel impatient of the restraint imposed on him by his 'revered master.' Indeed, even short separations often led to painful misunderstandings, and Wagner's suspicious temperament and malicious little hints occasionally almost drove his devoted pupil to despair.

In the autumn of 1874 Nietzsche was, however, induced to pay Bayreuth a visit. Unfortunately, he took with him a score of Brahms's Song of Triumph, which he greatly admired. The result might have been foreseen. Several months later Wagner recounted the scene to Nietzsche's sister:

Nietzsche [he said] laid the red-bound book on the pianoforte so that my eye fell on it every time I came into the room, and it enraged me as a red flag does a bull. I knew perfectly well that Nietzsche wished to say to me, 'See here! Here is someone else who can compose something worth while.' I stood it as long as I could, and then one evening I let go of myself, and how I did rage! Nietzsche, however, did not utter a word; but he grew red in the face and stared at me with a look of astonished dignity. I would give a hundred thousand marks all at once if I were as well-bred as Nietzsche; he is always the aristocrat, always dignified.

This little incident was characteristic of both men. Wagner, indeed, was apt to indulge in fits of uncontrollable temper at the expense of hapless persons who had 'composed something worth while.' Nietzsche was deeply hurt, and Wagner's incurable tendency of making vulgar jokes alienated him yet further. At that very moment he experienced also a revival of his early feelings as to the inherent coarseness of much of the Ring music. Moreover, he considered a symbolical interpretation the most tyrannical of all restraints on 'the inner, free fantasy of the imagination.' Nevertheless, he strove to conceal his growing antagonism; he even resumed work on his book, Richard Wagner in Bayreuth, and—having completed it in 1876—forwarded a copy to Wagner. 'Your book is tremendous. Where did you learn so much about me?' was the delighted composer's reply.

This encouraged Nietzsche to set out for Bayreuth, where he discovered the depressing confirmation and justification of all his inner doubts and scruples. The festival audiences—'men and women, all very much enamoured of each other, all very much bored and unmusical to the point of nausea'—drove him to distraction. Wagner pandering to the sensationalism of inartistic persons, Wagner holding grand audiences, Wagner neglecting his old friends, for whom he seemed to have no further use—this Wagner surely had nothing in common with the man whom he had once loved and revered.

Wearily, ill, and disappointed he fled to Sorrento; but even on his way thither he learnt to his astonishment and mortification that the Wagners had also chosen it as their place of sojourn. The two men kept up a show of friendship for a little longer, but on the last evening they were together Wagner began to talk of Parsifal not as an 'artistic conception, but as a personal experience.' This was too much for Nietzsche. It was impossible for him to believe that such an avowed atheist as the composer of Siegfried could have all of a sudden become a believer. To him this was merely the most ignoble of attempts to further the material success of the Bayreuth undertaking. It was then that he recalled a remark of Wagner's at Bayreuth:

The Germans do not wish to hear anything about gods and goddesses at present; they are only interested in something of a religious character.

Nevertheless, his so-called 'apostasy' was mainly owing to his artistic convictions:

I was weary with disgust [he writes] at the effeminacy and undisciplined rhapsody of this romanticism, at the whole tissue of idealistic lies and enervation of conscience, which here again had won a victory over one of the bravest souls, weary of the bitterness and harrowing suspicion that, from now on, I was doomed to be more deeply alone than ever before. For I had never had anyone but Richard Wagner.

At the height of his fame, a few months before his death, the master of Bayreuth—in a conversation with Frau Foerster-Nietzsche—gave utterance to a similar thought: 'Tell your brother,' he said softly, 'that I am quite alone since he went away and left me.'

J. W. K.

How to use a Player-Piano. By Harry Ellingham.

(Grant Richards. 6s.)

For some years up to August, 1914, there existed a monthly for player-pianists, called The Player-Piano Review. This was founded by three enthusiasts, and written and conducted by them (with the help of other contributors to the literary pages). One of these three enthusiasts was Mr. Harry Ellingham, an expert in the matter of player mechanism, a gifted musician, and an admirable performer on this instrument. Being associated with the player in the way of business, he had been taught, and he naturally played, in the manner prevalent ten or fifteen years ago among the sales-rooms; but being also a musician and an enthusiast for the advancement of this particular executive art, he sought constantly to improve his system of control and execution, and he therefore evoked the interest, and the resulting criticisms and suggestions, of professional musicians. In the end Mr. Ellingham became one of the finest player-pianists of all the present writer has met.

Mr. Ellingham contributed to the Player Review a series of articles; he has made a selection from these, and has issued them in book form. The first chapter gives the history of the pneumatic pianoforte, and an outline of its present condition. The second chapter provides a course of elementary instruction in playing:

A month spent on the exercises I have given here already, using, say, one and a half hours a day, would give you that command over your player which will place you for all time in a position far ahead of the average performer. My own efforts during my initiation period were confined to three rolls. I worked five hours a day for rather more than three weeks; perhaps 120 or 130 hours all told.

The third chapter shifts the character of elementary practice to song accompaniments. The author believes that much can be quickly learnt by playing with a friend who sings songs. Friendship is, of course, a wonderful thing; but of late a system of providing songs as solo pieces has been devised, and these may take the place of the actual singer. Later chapters in the book give an account of the construction of the player, for the convenience of performers who, like the organist, wish to know something of the innards of their instrument, so as to be able to remedy minor defects. Here the author is splendidly clear. Mr. Ellingham discusses certain problems of roll-making, and describes some of his personal experiments in the matter of pneumatic mechanism and 'touch'; he becomes technical, but these papers were popular in the Review, evidently appealing to many player-pianists.

The book ends with a glossary of terms. It must be said that some of the definitions are rather rough and ready: accelerando and rallentando, for example, mean more than simply to play faster or slower. This, however, is a slight matter; and there is nothing in the book to hinder a reviewer from very cordially recommending it to beginners in player-pianism.

S. G.

Introductory Sketch of Irish Musical History. By W. H. Grattan Flood.

[William Reeves.]

This is a digest of the author's History of Irish Music, made for the convenience of those who want a cheap and handy book.

Those of us who know our Grattan Flood are not surprised to find him leading off with somewhat extravagant claims on behalf of his country's contributions to the art. In his first page he says:

'Not alone did Irish monks propagate sacred and secular music throughout France, Italy, Switzerland, Austria, Germany, and the far North, but they made their influence felt at Lindisfarne, Malmesbury, Glastonbury, and other centres in England.'

If they propagated music from the far North to the Mediterranean, it is not surprising to find them doing something for benighted England on the way. But did no English monks or other early musicians do anything for music on the Continent? Again:

'Scotland owes her music to Ireland, as is admitted by all historians. . . . Wales, too, is indebted for her music to Ireland. . . . The Eisteddfod is merely a replica of the Irish Feis. The invention of organum must be credited to the Irish. . . . The Irish of the 6th to 8th centuries discovered the art of part-singing or plural melody.'

And so on. Dr. Flood is a trifle too sure about things of this kind. After all, in dealing with periods about which records are scarce and not too reliable, we can do little more than surmise as to who was first in the field in any department. Many otherwise well-informed musicians are hazy as to who among modern composers began to develop the possibilities of the whole-tone scale. If such haziness is possible in the case of a feature so recent, and with printed copies galore, what must it be in regard to matters belonging to a period when musical compositions existed—or were lost—in manuscript only, and when even notation itself was in an unsettled state? But does it matter much, anyway? Surely a nation's position in the world of art to-day depends next to nothing on what it did in the 9th century. The question is, What is it doing in the 20th? When we come to Dr. Flood's chapter on Irish music from 1877 to 1919, we read:

'During the past forty years Irish musicians have contributed their quota to musical art. The outstanding names from 1877 to 1919 are Sir Frederick Ouseley, Rev. F. Scoason Clark, Sir Arthur Sullivan, Augusta Holmes, Sir Charles Stanford, Arthur Hervey, Victor Herbert, Dr. Charles Wood, Dr. Sinclair, Dr. Buck, Norman O'Neill, and Mrs. Curwen.'

After expressing relief that the Rev. Scotson Clark was, after all, not an Englishman, we may point out that of these hardly any received their training or did their life-work in Ireland. Two were born at Paris, and one of them—Augusta Holmes—is a French composer if ever there was one. Would any other nation (save, perhaps, Wales), if asked for a list of composers during that period, be so hard up as to fall back on one of the Scotson Clark type? Apparently Dr. Flood regards the reverend gentleman seriously as a composer on the strength of his works numbering over five hundred. He ends this chapter by saying that,

‘... given a generous measure of Home Rule, there is every reason to believe that in the new social order music will develop on right lines, and we may hope for a national school of music such as the world has never seen.’

Well, hope springs eternal, but there is little likelihood of a national Irish School such as the world has never seen, so long as most of Ireland's musicians prefer to live anywhere but in the Isle.

Of the heart-searching beauty of Irish folk-music there can be no question: it stands without a rival. Nor are the interpretative gifts of her sons and daughters to be disputed. But more than these two constituents go to the making of a great national school of composition. It would be of interest to speculate as to the reason for Ireland's comparative failure in this respect. Troubled history cannot altogether be blamed, for we do not find this factor preventing other small nationalities from expressing themselves in art. Perhaps the fatal defect so far has been that the most gifted of Irish musicians have left their country (if they were born there), have settled in England, and have ended by writing music that suggests very little of Ireland, but a great deal of England. For example, Sullivan was born at Lambeth, and wrote music that was English to the last semiquaver—when it wasn't German. But as his parents came from Cork and his grandfather from Kerry, Dr. Flood says he was ‘through and through Irish.’ But how many of us ever think of him as Irish? We are influenced by his music and his life-place, not by his parents' birthplace. The national school of music that was helped along was that of England, not Ireland. Even Stanford, than whom no composer is more delightfully Irish when treating the folk-music of his country, is always regarded as one of the group of men to whom the growth of the present English revival of composition is due. What can be more English than his settings of Elizabethan poetry? However, the most important thing about Dr. Flood's book is that it does give us a great deal of information that is otherwise hard to obtain, and his facts we accept as readily as we shy at some of his deductions. I venture to suggest to the Doctor that at present his method as a historian suffers from patriotic bias—which ceases to be a virtue when there is more than a mere flavour of it. Some of the grounds on which he claims a musician as Irish call to mind the jest in cricket circles some years ago when the Middlesex eleven included a large proportion of players recruited from the other end of the world; it was said that one could qualify for Middlesex by drinking a glass of beer at Charing Cross.

H. G.

The Liturgical Use of the Organ. By Godfrey Sceats.

[Musical Opinion Office, 3s.]

One may easily escape an organist's in- and out-voluntaries by the simple expedient of arriving just as the service starts and leaving the moment it ends. But during the service he has us at his mercy, and only the deaf are spared the various little bits of filling-in that he is so often called on to supply. This is a misfortune, because so many players are at their best in the voluntary and recital and a good deal short of it during the service. The anomaly would not exist if it were merely a matter of keyboard technique; it is something far more difficult to inculcate—a sense of style and fitness. Mr. Sceats deals with the organ as a solo instrument in connection with a liturgical office. This rules out accompanying and recitals, and leaves the interlude and the voluntary. The interlude is a feature that is becoming more and more important, owing to the increasing number of churches at which the choral Eucharist is sung at least weekly. At such churches, too, Magnificat is usually sung with full ceremonial, and this frequently calls for a good deal of resource on the part of the organist. Mr. Sceats discusses the voluntary first, and rightly shows that though it is not an essential it may easily be made a valuable adjunct. An increasing number of people in the nave are beginning to feel that a voluntary has to do more than justify itself on the purely musical side. It should as often as possible be appropriate as well as good, and it will be appropriate in the most natural way when it is based on an ecclesiastical theme, and above all when this thematic basis is a feature in the service to which it forms the postlude. Failing such fitness the least we can do is to play music in which, as Mr. Sceats says, there is as a rule ‘no violent assertion of rhythm—especially conventional march rhythm, or three-four rhythm.’ He tells us, too, to avoid ‘everything showy, and to use sparingly, or never, music which consists of a melody on a solo stop of orchestral timbre with an accompaniment of arpeggi or staccato chords,’ and not many will disagree with him. Everything points to various forms of the choral prelude as the best material for voluntary purposes. The term is a comprehensive one, as it includes all the music based on ecclesiastical themes, whether plainsong, chorale, psalm tune, or modern hymn tune. As Mr. Sceats says, the supply of good music of this kind is so large that an organist need have no difficulty in going on playing his way through the Church seasons with something appropriate all the time. Mr. Sceats gives lists of suitable material. These lists might with advantage have been fuller and more detailed for the benefit of organists who live a long way from well-stocked music shops. (By the by, he includes Herbert Howells among the English composers who have written preludes on psalm tunes, but Howells's Three Psalm-Preludes are independent pieces treating verses from the Psalter, and have no connection with psalm tunes.) Mr. Sceats mentions two collections by Parry; a third set of Three Chorale Fantasias on ‘St. Anne,’ the ‘Old Hundredth,’ and an 18th century tune is too good to be neglected. The list of pieces on plainsong themes could be amplified a good deal. It is true that Mr. Sceats does not profess to be exhaustive, but the value of a work of this kind depends so much on completeness that it is a pity he remained satisfied with anything less than fat lists with, moreover, some particulars as to style, degree of difficulty, &c., especially as the works mentioned range from the very easy to the forbiddingly difficult. Organists must be encouraged to adventure among this unfamiliar music—much of it published abroad—and they need all the information an author can give them, from music-type illustrations down to the price.

Mr. Sceats ends his book with twenty-six Interludes and Postludes in the eight modes, for use with plainchant. A few of these pieces are excellent, a few are bad, and some do no more than raise doubts. But this is not surprising seeing that the author himself says that 'one or two are frankly experimental.' There are a good many misprints here, the worst being the key signature of No. 17, from which the D sharp should surely be removed. Played as written the piece not only gives us some weird progressions, but begins and ends on a diminished triad on D sharp. As Mr. Sceats on page 26 says that our discords should be 'really discordant, with a wholesome jar about them,' some readers will naturally wonder if No. 17 is an example of the wholesomely jarring. The book is important because it is apparently the first attempt to consider the organ in its purely liturgical relations, and in gratitude to the author for having broken so important a piece of ground we may easily forgive him a tendency to sketchiness and some weakness in matters of detail.

H. G.

REVIEWS IN BRIEF

In The Annals of the Three Choirs of Gloucester, Hereford, and Worcester, Mr. C. Lee Williams and Mr. H. Godwin Chance carry on the story of the Festivals from 1906 to the present year (Chance & Bland, Ltd., Gloucester, 2s.). The booklet contains reproductions from photographs of the three Cathedrals, and portraits of Sir Edward Elgar, Sir Ivor Atkins, Dr. Herbert Brewer, and Dr. Percy Hull.—A Guide to the best Flute Music of all Kinds has been compiled by Captain H. Macaulay Fitzgibbon, who has also set up the type and published the book off his own bat (The Bungalow, Greystones, Co. Wicklow, Ireland, 2s. 6d.). Captain Fitzgibbon has examined some thousands of works, and here gives a selection of five hundred, classified and with brief notes as to style, degree of difficulty, &c. He includes also lists of songs with flute obbligato, duos, trios, and quartets for flutes alone; and chamber music in which the instrument has a share. A fair amount of modern music is included, but the author evidently jibbed at a good deal more than he put in. He says:

'Several recent composers have written pieces for the flute in an ultra-modern style, full of strange harmonies and discords. These outré effects do not seem to me to be suited to the flute, and I have not included them.'

A list of the principal publishers of flute music is given. It is a pity Captain Fitzgibbon did not signify the publisher of each work. A system of initials would have enabled him to add this information at the cost of very little extra labour and space.—Neither Mr. Frank Kidson nor The Beggar's Opera need any introduction to our readers, so there is call for little more than bare mention of the fact that Mr. Kidson has just published, through the Cambridge University Press (5s.), a book entitled The Beggar's Opera: Its Predecessors and Successors. Here is all that the most curious can want to know on the subject. The book deals also with the sequel, Polly, which is shortly to be produced in London. The illustrations consist of some old cuts and facsimiles of the title-pages.—From Messrs. Chester come four additions to the series of Miniature Essays. The new ones deal with Lord Berners, Malipiero, Palmgren, and de Falla. Each is in English and French, and each contains a portrait. Messrs. Chester have published also in a similar size and style a couple of booklets that deserve to be widely read—Malipiero's The Orchestra, translated by Eric Blom, and Alfred Cortôt's The Piano-forte Music of Alfred Debussy, translated by Violet Edgell.—A highly provocative pamphlet is George Sampson's Rhythm: Its Power and its Neglect, with the Principles and Laws which Govern the Performance of Music (Chester). Mr. Sampson delivers himself of some swinging blows at musical education in general, especially in regard to rhythm. Much of what he writes is true enough, but his method is too often that of the man who says, 'I'm not arguing; I'm telling you.' It is difficult to take seriously some of Mr. Sampson's subdivisions of bars for the purposes of determining accents. The worst example is one of a bar of 12-8 set forth in forty-eight demisemiquavers, each semiquaver being numbered in the order of its strength. Mr. Sampson anticipates a stumbling here:

'The above chart [he says] to the superficial is mere foolishness. How, reasons the shallow mind, can anyone preserve thirty-six or forty-eight strengths in a bar? Because frail human nature is incapable of perfection is it any reason why perfection should not be proclaimed?'

To which the obvious answer is another question: If the human voice or finger is incapable of showing forty-eight strengths in a bar, or if, the forty-eight being shown, the human ear is incapable of distinguishing them, what is the practical use of talking about them? Mr. Sampson's pamphlet, however, is not all on this worrying plane; it contains much that needs to be said to-day, and teachers should study it carefully.—A good deal of interest is now taken in negro songs and folk-lore, so there should be readers for Thomas W. Talley's Negro Folk-Rhymes, Wise and Otherwise (Macmillan, 11s.). The author (a professor at Fisk University) has made a substantial collection of material, and follows it up by a hundred pages of discussion. In a few cases he adds the music to which the verses are sung. A point that strikes the English reader is the large number of negro songs with a familiar ring, e.g.:

Ten liddle Niggers, a-eatin', fat an' fine;
One choke hisse'f to death, an' dat lef' nine.
Nine liddle Niggers, dey sot up too late;
One sleep hisse'f to death, an' dat lef' eight.

And so on with the calamitous tale until number ten is left, 'a-foolin' wid a gun,' with the inevitable result. Again, our old friend, 'Baa! baa! black sheep,' is here, set to a tune that is first cousin to Schumann's Merry Peasant. And there are others. A pleasant book, and none the worse for the fact that the rhymes as a whole are otherwise rather than wise.

H. G.

New Music

SONGS

Chanson du Feu Follet and Chanson du Chagrin d'Amour (Chester) from El Amor Brujo, will delight the many to whom Manuel de Falla's beautiful Three-Cornered Hat Ballet and his essentially Spanish pianoforte music have given pleasure. The words are printed in Spanish and also in French.

Quite charming are Lady Arthur Hill's Songlets for Children (Novello), to words of Fred. E. Weatherly. The accompaniments contain the melodies, so that the child has only to listen to its accompanist and sing the words in unison with the pianoforte, and thus the six songs will be quickly and easily grasped.

The Golden Age (Curwen) is a whimsical little song by Gerrard Williams to humorous words of W. J. Ibbett. The old, bold Mate, by Esmond Bristol, to words of John Masefield (Novello), will please audiences who are out to hear a good rollicking song. It would put any advocate of 'prohibition' in the dumps for a week.

Eric Fogg's setting of Shelley's When Passion's Trance (Elkin) is directed to be sung Andante languido con moto, which makes for sentimentality; and the treatment of the poem is hardly original enough to lift the song out of a somewhat demoded atmosphere.

Last Hours, by Maurice Jacobson (Curwen) is a good transcription of John Freeman's lyric describing a quiet, gray day of a lingering winter.

Five songs of Felix White (Goodwin & Tabb)—The Neophyte, a setting of Alice Meynell's sonnet; a Cradle Song of William Blake; The Northern Star, an anonymous North country ballad; 'The Minion Wife,' from Ralph Roister Doister (1550); and The Love of the Archer Prince, a street song of Tibet, together with Leap into a Dance! (Curwen), to words of Francis Beaumont (1612)—though not of striking originality, can be recommended to singers who wish to please their audiences with pleasant, melodious songs.

At Morning, a lyric of Temple Thurston, and Let all the Strains of Joy, from Tagore's Gitanjali (Enoch), by Landon Ronald, will meet with the same popularity as many previous songs by this composer have enjoyed.

My father has some very fine sheep (Enoch) is a version of an amusing Antrim song taken down by Herbert Hughes from the singing of a Ballyclare man in 1906. The singer records his father's fine cows and ducks and pigs, and their moos and quacks and grunts; and it is left to his imagination to add to the length of the song by bringing in any other animals that could live in 'the bonny fields of Doochary,' with the sounds appropriate to each.

Messrs. Elkin & Co. have published four Albums of English Songs severally for soprano, contralto, tenor, and baritone. Each volume contains five well-known songs, and the contents of each are different. They are by such popular composers as Reginald Clarke, William Wallace, Ethel Barnes, Stanford, Howard Hadley, R. Somerville, and several others.

The following ten songs are all in the Curwen edition:

In The sleep that flits on baby's eyes, Maurice Besly, has captured the mystery and fancy of Tagore's little fairly prose-poem. Many of the harmonic progressions of the accompaniment are exceedingly pleasing. Sung with its violin obbligato this song ought to be very effective.

The Quest, by Frederick Nicholls, to words by Eva Gore-Booth, is a quiet, reflective song. There is artistry in its simplicity, and its effect is gained by austerity and economy of means.

Maurice Jacobson has caught the Irishry of W. M. Letts's witty little poem Boys. Sung with the right spirit and verve the song would meet with success.

Rupert Erlebach's setting of Irene McLeod's Lone Dog will appeal to all lovers of dogs. Its accompaniment cleverly suggests the loose, swinging footfall of the half-wild North country collie on the 'lone trail,' with its constant longing to be 'out with the 'wide wind and wild stars.'

Hazel Eyes is a dainty trifle by Toupie Lowther. It is an apposite reflection of an expressive little triolet by Oscar Wilde.

Salutation and The Garret are two bizarre and clever arrangements of poems of Ezra Pound by Josef Holbrooke. Salutation apostrophises the 'generation of the thoroughly smug and uncomfortable.' After this unmusical congeries of words it follows on with fishermen picnicking with their 'untidy families and their smiles full of teeth.' It is also of fish who 'swim in the lake and do not even own clothing.' In The Garret two lovers remind one another that 'the rich have butlers and no friends,' while they have 'friends and no butlers'; and they invite each other to 'pity the married and the unmarried.' To this sharp recoil from the sugary sentimental love-song Josef Holbrooke has contributed richly-harmonized, resonant accompaniments. In the competitive irony of the music and the words music wins easily by reason of its own sheer power of unending subtlety and suggestion.

Owen Mase's music to Bliss Carman's There is no more to say, with its two reiterated extended chords, suggests finality and despair. It is a sad lament, with no gleam of hope in words or music.

Galsworthy's Tittle-Tattle is given a rapid pulsating rhythm and a lightly swinging accompaniment which suits the flashlight rapidity of the gibing words.

Felix White's The Little Brother is a pretty, pleasing trifle. The words are by W. B. Rands.

Armstrong Gibbs's music has decided affinities with Walter de la Mare's delicate, shadowy lyrics. In Mistletoe he has sensed the gentle unseen presence of the ghost in the dim candlelight under the mistletoe. There is spontaneity and ease in the way the composer has reflected the poet's theme.

The Shepherdess of Alice Meynell has been given a melodious and clever setting by Ivor Atkins (Augener). It is a well-wrought song, picturesque, with varying rhythm and well-worked-out ideas.

Indian Serenade, by Percy Judd (Augener) is pleasing because of its apparent spontaneity and on account of the composer's sympathy with Shelley's passionate words.

Cradle Song, Ecstasy, Memory, Roadways—all four by Vivian Hickey (Augener)—will commend themselves to singers requiring bright, tuneful songs, facile for both voice and accompaniment, and easily assimilated by audiences who would be unresponsive to music of a more advanced kind.

The same may be said for Paul Edmonds's Four Indian Songs (Enoch), for low and medium voice. The words are by Sarojini Naidu.

Two volumes of Scottish Lyrics, set to music by Francis George Scott (Bayley & Ferguson), will be welcomed by lovers of Burns. (Book 1, for female voice; Book 2, for male voice.) The Lyrics are in the Scotch folk-song idiom and rhythm, and are well and mostly simply set. Amongst the Burns songs are 'The Lovely Lass o' Inverness,' 'The Wren's Nest,' the beautiful 'O were my love yon lilac fair,' and 'Mary Morison.' Alan Cunningham's comic 'Gruel' is printed with them; also John Imlah's 'Weel I lo'e Mary,' and the anonymous 'I'll gar our gudeman trow.' L. L.

NEW STRING QUARTETS

Two new string quartets have been sent to us from America, both published for the Society for the Publication of American Music. One is the work of D. S. Smith, the other of Tadeusz Iarecki. The latter is by far the more ambitious of the two. Mr. Smith contents himself with one movement, while Mr. Iarecki has three. Mr. Smith looks towards modern ideals with his feet solidly planted in the past, while Mr. Iarecki is not afraid of being caught unashamed coquetting with modernity. But in spite of different length and different methods both composers reveal much the same mind, the same delight in competent rather than brilliant work, the same quest after material rather than spiritual originality. This at least is the impression gained by a reading of the score; it is possible that a carefully prepared performance might alter it in some way. In any case even if the Society for the Publication of American Music has not gained with new quartets complete success, it has done more—it has deserved it. The printing is as good as anything produced in Europe, and one cannot praise too highly the Society's custom of sending with the score and parts a short biographical sketch of the composers. We want to know more about the works of young Americans, and we also want to know something of the composers themselves. B. V.

STRING MUSIC

Messrs. Durand et Fils, of Paris, have published M. Gabriel Fauré's second Quintet—which can also be obtained now in a four-hand arrangement for pianoforte. The arrangement testifies, we take it, to the popularity of M. Fauré's music in his native land, which is rather singular, considering how deep-rooted in that country is the prejudice against conservatism in music. M. Fauré, it may be suggested, is far from being a champion of conservatism in technique. In this Quintet, as in most of his other works, there are moments in which he is tempted to stray beyond the limits of the out-and-out conservative, the 'last-ditcher' or 'die-hard' of music. But these things are all on the surface. When Samson and Delilah was first written it also made people believe that Saint-Saëns tended towards reform, while nowadays even his most gushing admirers dare not claim for him a place amongst the prophets. Similarly, in M. Fauré's Quintet, the occasional novelty of harmony is only part of the general equipment of the composer—it is not an end in itself, or a deliberate attack on conventionalism. A certain elegance and distinction are as typical of Saint-Saëns as of M. Fauré—in neither case do we find daring and originality going beyond the canons of the drawing-room. There is grace and there is sentiment in this music. But while grace and polish are much to the fore, sentiment is held in so strong a leash that it appears quite tame. In some way its finish and rare workmanship remind us of the poetry of Tennyson—but not the Tennyson of Maud.

The same publishers have issued also an Allegro for violin (or flute) and pianoforte, entitled, D'un Matin de Printemps, by Madame Lili Boulanger, the young French composer who died a few years ago before her prime, much regretted by many who had learnt to love and admire her personality. The little piece under review would hardly justify in itself the praise bestowed upon the composer on other occasions. It has a certain naïve simplicity not devoid of charm, but it holds little evidence or promise of a great, if undeveloped, talent. The unrestrained freedom which she apparently conceives to be the hall-mark of modern harmony does not appear to have given wing to her imagination—it rather ties her to conventional patterns of rhythm and to a melodic design which is sometimes unconventional but often unconvincing. B. V.

Messrs. J. & W. Chester have just issued a selection from La Boutique Fantasque arranged in such a way that it can be played by any combination of instruments—an orchestra almost as large as that used by the Russian Ballet, or a pianoforte and a couple of fiddles. It is known, of course, how this music came into being, and how Signor Respighi put together various chips from Rossini's workshop so as to form an exceedingly attractive interlude for the ballet. The success of the Boutique on the stage makes it unnecessary to consider such characteristics of the music as its aptness for mimic action and dance, and its general effect. But this little 'Pianoforte Conductor' score, so modest that it cannot remind us of the gorgeous lavishness of the stage, so cold that it cannot recall the warm atmosphere of the theatre, suggests considerations very much at variance with the feelings of the spectator at the ballet. It is like eating the bake-meats of the wedding-feast—cold, after the guests have departed. Some sweetness there is still left in them, but the glamour, the joy, are gone. It is as if all the ablest work of Signor Respighi had achieved nothing, and we had under our eyes the airy trifles of a clever, slightly bored, successful composer—successful, above all things. The successful composer is betrayed by his tricks, as is the profiteer by his manners. There is almost a touch of arrogance in the ease with which the mystery of composition is performed. This is obviously a man who has known not one of the passions that embittered the lives of so many other musicians, who never desired this man's art and that man's scope, who on waking could proclaim every morning, 'all's well with the world.' Undoubtedly these later sketches of Rossini will have to be taken into account by his future biographer—should there be one.* The average musician or student of history who studies Rossini is so much at a disadvantage that nothing that throws light on his extraordinary mentality can be neglected. He was so skilled in the art of music that he dazzled the majority of his contemporaries, and yet he was the most unemotional of all the prophets of the most emotional art of all. The interest of the new publication is, however, topical—and Messrs. Chester are, presumably, more concerned with the immediate appeal the music will have for patrons of the Russian Ballet than with its value for the scholar and the critic. It is music which could have never affected even so sensitive an amateur as Boswell—pleasant, on the whole, and almost too facile for lasting impressions. F. B.

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

Judging from the unusually large number of records sent for review there has been a good deal doing lately in the recording rooms. Far more important, however, is the fact that the standard is distinctly above the average.

From H.M.V. issues one of the best orchestral records I have so far come across—two 12-in. d.s. giving, without cuts, the Siegfried Idyll conducted by Albert Coates. The Band of the 1st Life Guards is to be heard in a selection from Princess Ida (Æ.-Voc., 12-in. d.s.). From the same house comes something distinctly out of the common in a 12-in. d.s. of the Æolian Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Cuthbert Whitmore, playing the March from Prince Igor, and an arrangement by Mr. Whitmore of Bach's Choral Prelude on Sleepers, wake! This Prelude is one of the best known of all Bach's works in the form, and is frequently heard at pianoforte recitals. It is good to have this latest version, though both arrangement and performance leave something to be desired. The chief fault in the former respect is that the chorale melody does not stand out plainly enough as a whole. This is partly because the general effect is fogged by the harmonics of the bells. A hint of bells would have been enough; here they are used far too much. The playing suffers from too brisk a pace, and even more from the abrupt phrasing of the long-drawn melody. But what a gem this work is! Even in this not wholly satisfactory arrangement it gets hold of one in a curious way, thanks chiefly to its spacious tune. I dwell on it at some length because a transcription and record of this kind mark a new departure. Many of these Choral Preludes are arranged for pianoforte, but as a matter of fact such versions are rarely successful, owing to the absence of the sustained effect of the organ tone. They can be made into delightful pieces for small orchestra, or for a chamber combination, and I am glad to hear that the Æolian Vocalian people are going to follow up this line. I hope, however, the arranger will moderate his transports with the bells, and in a general way aim at simplicity and clearness.

Chamber music is a good feature this month. Two first-rate H.M.V. records are a 12-in. of the Adagio Cantabile from Haydn's D major Quartet, played by the Flonzaley Quartet, and a 12-in. d.s. of the Andante from Debussy's G minor, and the Scherzo from Tanéïev's A minor, the Catterall Quartet being the performers. I have so often complained of vagueness in records of this kind, that I am glad to be able to note in these a marked increase of sonority and clearness.

The repertory of the viola is so limited that Lionel Tertis is making up the deficiency by arrangements. Here he is playing Mendelssohn's On Wings of Song and Grieg's I love thee, to the pianoforte accompaniment of Ethel Hobday. I am not quite convinced that the Mendelssohn song was worth the trouble, and in the Grieg we certainly feel the need of words. But the harmonic warmth and the expressive tone of the viola make an effective little piece of it (10-in. d.s.). More elaborate is

Mr. Tertis's arrangement for violin, viola, and pianoforte, of a couple of Dvorák's Bagatelles, originally written for harmonium (or pianoforte), two violins, and violoncello (12-in. d.s.). There is a suspicion of fussiness here and there—in the music itself, I imagine—but the balance and the recording generally are excellent. Mr. Tertis's fellow-players are Ethel Hobday and Albert Sammons, so the quality of the performance goes without saying (Æ.-Voc.).

Dvorák figures again in an arrangement of his Indian Lament, which Kreisler has transcribed for violin solo. It is played by Sasha Cuthbertson, a fiddler from the U.S.A. On the other side of this 12-in. d.s. is Schubert's Ave Maria. The Dvorák item strikes me as poor, and the Schubert air is one of those overrated and threadbare works that might well be given a rest (Æ.-Voc.).

The taste of some famous violinists is very little better than that of mere singers. Kreisler is disappointing in this respect. Is the repertory of his instrument so bad as he implies at his recitals and in his arrangements? H.M.V. sends a 10-in. record of him playing his version of Brahms's Waltz in A flat, No. 15 of the well-known set. It is a pity Kreisler has chosen one of the weakest of the whole lot. Of course he plays it perfectly, but it is skill wasted.

There is some jangling tone in the record of Rachmaninov's playing of his own Prelude in G sharp minor, but it is a good one. I am glad to see this additional proof that Rachmaninov wrote more than one Prelude for the pianoforte. Moiseiwitsch devotees should note the 10-in. d.s. record of his playing of the Vivacissimo from Schumann's Traumeswirren and the Schumann-Liszt Frühlingsnacht—a really dazzling affair (H.M.V.).

The English Singers have added to their records, and their latest effort is surely the best. It is a 10-in. d.s. giving Benet's All creatures now are merry-minded, Edwards's In going to my lonely bed, and John Farmer's Fair Phyllis I saw. These are all thoroughly enjoyable, especially the first. I advise all users of these records to make their enjoyment complete by spending a few pence on copies of the madrigals (H.M.V.).

Successful operatic records are Galli Curci singing the 'Hymn to the Sun' from Le Coq d'Or (10-in. H.M.V.); Giacomo Rimini in the Drinking Song from Verdi's Otello (sung in Italian) (10-in. Æ.-Voc.); and Rosing in the Cavatina from Romeo and Juliet (12-in. Æ.-Voc.). Less successful is one of Celys Beralta in the 'Mad Scene' from Lucia. Her voice has not enough brilliancy for work of this sort—at all events, it does not come out on my gramophone. The flautist is first-rate—so good, that I found myself once more returning thanks for the convention that makes coloratura singers arrange to go mad or show their paces as a rule only when a good flute player is around. (Æ.-Voc. The three last-named records have explanatory notes on the reverse side.)

The best operatic record, however, is one that pretends to be something else. It is a 10-in. of Caruso singing the 'Crucifixus' from Rossini's Messe Solennelle, with orchestral accompaniment. As this capital operatic aria is set to a Latin text it automatically becomes sacred, of course. However, we forget the indiscrepancy between words and music, thanks to the way the wonderful voice is poured out.

Here, for those who like such things, are particulars of a few records of first-rate singers lavishing their voices on fourth-rate songs: Carrie Tubbs,

(Continued on page 863.)

Say, Shepherds, say

December 1, 1922

No. 2 OF "6 AYRES TO 4 VOICES".

By MICHAEL CAVEDISH (1598)

Transcribed from the Original Edition by PETER WARLOCK & PHILIP WILSON

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Moderato

SOPRANO
 Say, shep-herds, say, where is your jol - ly swain, Or

ALTO
 Say, shep-herds, say, where is your jol - ly swain, Or what hath

TENOR
 Say, shep-herds, say, where is your jol - ly swain, Or

BASS

Moderato. ♩ = 63
 (For practice only)

mp what hath bred, or what hath bred his an - guish? On i - dle

mp
 bred, or what hath bred, hath bred his an - guish? On i - dle

mp what hath bred, or what hath bred his an - guish? On i - dle

mp
 On i - dle

N.B.—There are no indications of tempo or expression in the original edition. Those suggested here may be varied at the discretion of the conductor.

bank he rest - less doth re - main, re - main, Oh, for love, for bank he rest - less doth re - main, For love, for bank he rest - less doth re - main, For love doth

bank he rest - less doth re - main, For love doth love doth make him lan - guish. mf I - - dle love doth make him lan - guish. mf I - - dle lad, his wit is make him lan - guish. mf make him lan - guish. mf I - - dle lad, his wit is lad, his wit is bad, mf There a - lone, there a - lone to bad, mf There a - lone, there a - lone to make such moan, there a -

I - dle lad, his wit is bad, mf There a - lone to make such bad, mf There a - lone, there a - lone to make such make such moan, there a - lone to

- lone to make such moan, there a - lone to make such moan, moan, there a - lone to make such moan, there a - lone to moan, there a - lone, there a - lone to make such moan To the weep - - ing foun - tains, oh, to the weep - ing, to the weep - ing foun - tains,

make such moan To the weep - - - - ing foun - tains,
make such moan To the weep - - ing foun - tains,

f $\text{♩} = \text{♩}$

While she plays sweet roun - - - de - lays, Up and down.

While she plays sweet round - de - lays, round - de - lays, Up and down, up and down,

While she plays sweet roun - de - lays, roun - de - lays, Up and down, up and down,

While she plays sweet roun - - - de - lays, Up and down, up and down,

f

ff

up and down, up and down, up and down the moun - tains.

ff

up and down, oh, up and down the moun - tains.

ff

oh, up and down, up and down, up and down the moun - tains.

ff

up and down, up and down, up and down the moun - tains.

ff

(Continued from page 858.)

The Dancing Lesson and Buy my Strawberries, both by Herbert Oliver (12-in. d.s.); John Buckley O Falmouth is a fine Town, by Landon Ronald, and A Ballad of Gretna Green, by May H. Brahe (10-in. d.s.); Malcolm McEachern (one of the best 'recording' voices of to-day), The Nomad, by Bernard Hamblin, and Casey the Fiddler, by Haydn Wood (10-in. d.s.). All these come from the Æolian Vocalian Co.

Records of a similar type from the H.M.V. are a 10-in. d.s. of Leila Megane singing—in Welsh—Heaven, by Osborne Roberts, and My little Welsh Home (two lachrymose ditties; the two sides of a record should surely be contrasted), and John McCormack singing (far too nasally) Alston Waters's Somewhere (10-in.).

Roland Hayes's beautiful voice is heard to advantage in Steal away, arranged by Lawrence Brown. On the other side of a 10-in. is Go down, Moses, arranged by H. T. Burleigh. Here the emotion seems to be a trifle forced. Both these old negro songs suffer from over-sophistication, in harmonization as well as in performance (Æ.-Voc.).

Once again I have to admit that for clearness and all-round enjoyableness some fox-trots issued by the Æolian-Vocalian Company are the pick of the basket. Especially good is The Dancing Fool, played by the Bar Harbour Society Orchestra. The alternation of dry slickness and burbling sentiment is very amusing. There are some good effects of colour and cross-rhythm in Truly, played by Selvin's Dance Orchestra. That there are stages even on the fox-trot Parnassus is shown by the fact that A Baby in Love is merely ordinary, and Are you Playing Fair not much better. The composition of such things seems to be a preserve of the Chosen Race, judging from the names of the concocters of the above—Ted Snyder, Vincent Rose, Siegrist Cohen, and a pair who compose in double-harness—Goodman and Benatsky.

The Æolian Vocalian Company has sent particulars of a batch of records for use during Christmas. I have been unable to hear them, as they are not completed at the time of writing. They will be issued on December 1. Among them are carols and Christmas hymns, sung by the Æolian Male Quartet and soloists, with orchestra; a pot-pourri of plantation songs played by the Band of the 1st Life Guards, a variety of fox-trots, and a 10-in. d.s. giving a couple of tangos, played by the Vocalian Dance Orchestra.

Church and Organ Music

ST. MICHAEL'S, CORNHILL, FESTIVAL

Thousands of people who enjoy music (or who are capable of learning to enjoy it) are at present deprived of the opportunity for doing so by the fact that the music is in one place and they in another. Londoners nowadays live in the suburbs, and it is in Central London that their music awaits them—necessarily, therefore, often in vain. A hard-working city clerk who likes a little music has now to choose between wasting two hours in London—between the close of his business and the opening of the concert—or, instead, rushing hastily home and back, which he is very little likely to do. In two ways attempts are being made to overcome this difficulty: (a) 'decentralisation' of music, i.e., the setting up of concert schemes in the suburbs, and (b) lunch hour and early-evening activities in the business centres. Both are necessary if the suburban worker and his wife are to be fairly fed.

In the provision of lunch hour and early-evening music in the centre of London nobody is more usefully energetic than the Rector of St. Michael's, Cornhill, the Rev. J. H. Ellison, and his organist, Dr. Harold Darke. Weekly organ recitals are given, and there are regular practices of a body called 'The St. Michael's Singers: a Choral Society for City Workers.' Once a year the strong current of musical enthusiasm overflows its usual banks and spreads out into a whole week's Festival such as that which ended on November 16.

The general scheme of this consisted in daily organ recitals at one o'clock and daily concerts of sacred music at six o'clock. The organists were Drs. Harold Darke, H. G. Ley, W. G. Alcock, and W. H. Harris. The solo vocalists were Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Vivienne Chatterton, Miss Constance E. Taylor, Miss Margaret Champneys, Mr. John Adams, Mr. George Tinney, and Mr. Charles G. Young. There was a string orchestra led by Mr. Kenneth G. Skeaping. Mr. G. Thalben Ball and Mr. E. Norman Greenwood accompanied at organ and pianoforte respectively, Mr. Albert Fransella played the flute in a Bach Suite, and Dr. Darke conducted throughout. The St. Michael's Singers, of course, took a large part in the programmes. The Bach Cantatas Bide with us, How brightly shines yon star of morn, and O Fire Everlasting, Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens and Beyond these voices, Brahms's Song of Destiny, Darke's England, awake, Holst's This have I done, Byrd's Motet, Have Mercy, and a great many smaller things were sung. A good deal of English music, old and modern, was included in the organ programmes, and there was an evening performance of English Church and Organ music.

This was a most comprehensive scheme and a plucky venture, and so far as the present writer's experience goes, the standard of performance was in keeping. The audience filled the Church—indeed, probably on most occasions a good many people were turned away.

P. A. S.

SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL

Elgar's For the Fallen, Brahms's Requiem, and Parry's There is an Old Belief, were sung at the special service on November 11, with orchestral accompaniments by the London Symphony Orchestra. Mr. E. T. Cook conducted excellent performances. It is good to be able to state that public appreciation showed itself solidly in a collection of £150.—On December 16 a programme mainly of seasonable music will be given: Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols, Herbert Howells's Here is the little door, Parts 1 and 2 of the Christmas Oratorio, and Haydn's Symphony in D. On December 30 carols will be sung. The services are at 3 o'clock, and no tickets are required.

NONCONFORMIST CHOIR UNION

At the recent annual meeting of the above Union Mr. E. Minshall was re-elected president for the thirty-fourth year in succession, and Mr. Arthur Berridge continued in office as hon. secretary. Other officers elected were Mr. Frank Idle and Mr. J. Arthur Meale, festival conductor and organist respectively; and Mr. John A. Langford, chairman of committee. The reports read by the secretary showed a successful year's work and a substantial balance in hand.

NEW WORK BY KARG-ELERT

Messrs. Novello have just published a set of Fifty-four Studies in Variation Form on the ground-bass of Handel, by Sigfrid Karg-Elert. The theme is only four bars in length, and the studies are of special interest in regard to registration. Mr. Arthur Meale will play them at his 1 o'clock recital on Wednesday, December 13, at Central Hall, Westminster. No doubt this will be the first English performance.

ST. ANNE'S, SOHO

Mr. A. W. Goldsbrough has left St. Anne's to be assistant at Westminster Abbey. Mr. Goldsbrough came from Manchester Cathedral about three years ago. A fine player, he has worthily maintained the prestige of St. Anne's. His successor, Mr. Albert Orton, who was a pupil of Dr. Thorne, now lives in Thorne's old house at Maida Vale.

THE LLOYD MEMORIAL WINDOW IN GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL

We reproduce opposite a photograph of the window recently erected in Gloucester Cathedral in memory of Charles Harford Lloyd. As a further memorial a fund is being raised to endow a Scholarship for old Gloucester Cathedral choristers who are taking up music as a profession. It will be remembered that a similar step is contemplated in connection with the Parry memorial at Gloucester.

Mr. Thomas Crawford is leaving London at the end of the year to take up the post of organist and choirmaster at St. Paul's Church, Toronto, Canada. This Church possesses one of the largest organs in the New World, with over a hundred speaking stops. Dr. Vogt has also offered Mr. Crawford an appointment at the Toronto Conservatory of Music. For the past twenty years Mr. Crawford has been organist and choirmaster at St. Michael's, Chester Square. He is a professor and examiner at Trinity College of Music, and was for five years associated with Sir Dan Godfrey as choirmaster of the Bournemouth Municipal Choir. For twenty-two years he has given regular recitals to City men at the fine old church of St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C. —As announced elsewhere, Mr. Crawford will be succeeded by Mr. Reginald Goss Custard, who, since 1917, has been at St. James's, Muswell Hill, where his recitals on the fine Harrison organ have been a prominent feature in North London music.

Mr. Alban Claughton, music-master of Giggleswick School, sends some programmes of organ recitals he attended at Munich during his holiday. The player was Anton Schmid, and his programmes were:

Sonata in C minor, Renner; 'Ave Maria,' Arcadelt-Liszt; Fantasia and Fugue on 'Sleepers, wake!' Reger.

Sonata in B minor, Rheinberger; Andante Cantabile, Widor; Scherzo, Vierne; Sonata No. 1, Guilmant. Scena Pastorale, Bossi; 'St. Francis preaching to the Birds,' Liszt; Symphony No. 5. Widor.

Mr. Claughton says there was barely standing-room in the church, and he himself sat on the floor at two of the recitals. Both organ and playing were magnificent.

On November 9, at Grafton Square Church, Clapham Common, a concert was given by the Wandsworth Male-Voice Choir under the conductorship of Mr. J. C. Clarke. The programme included David's The Desert, accompanied on the pianoforte and organ by Mr. Thornton Lofthouse and Mr. Redman respectively. Other choral items sung with great effect were Mendelssohn's The Word went forth, Foote's Into the silent land, and the anthem God, Who madest earth and heaven, by Löhr.

Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise will be sung at St. Stephen's Walbrook, on December 1, at 6 o'clock. The collection at this service will be given to the Choir and Dome funds. The dome of this beautiful church—a miniature St. Paul's, it is sometimes called—has had to be re-covered at a cost of over £1,500. It is hoped that this experiment of a week-night oratorio performance in the City will be so successful as to encourage Mr. Francis Sutton and the choir to follow it up with others.

A war memorial organ was opened at the Baptist Tabernacle Church, Laygate, South Shields, on September 27. The instrument is a two-manual of nineteen stops, built by Messrs. Blackett & Howden, Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Mr. James M. Preston gave the opening recital, his programme including de la Tombelle's Rapsodie Béarnaise, Darke's Fantasia on Darwell's '148th,' Wolstenholme's La Bohemesque, and Sullivan's In Memoriam.

Mr. Willan Swainson gave a Bach recital at Queen's Cross Church, Aberdeen, on October 17, playing the Fantasia in G, the 'Short' E minor Prelude and Fugue, the Adagio from Sonata No. 1, the Prelude and Fugue in B minor, the Toccata in F, and two of the 'Schübler' Preludes. The choir sang the choral portions of the Cantata Bide with us. The programme contained some unusually helpful annotations.

A special Musical Service was held at New College Chapel on November 5, when the choir, conducted by Dr. W. H. Harris, sang Palestrina's Veni, Sancte, Spiritus, Brahms's Motet Wherefore hath the Light, Verdi's Hymn to the Virgin, for boys' voices, Parry's There is an Old Belief, J. M. Bach's Blessing, Glory, Wisdom, and Arcadelt's Give Ear. Dr. H. G. Ley played organ works by Bach and Parry.

Stanford's Last Post was sung at St. Mary's, Haverfordwest, on November 12 by the local Choral Society, the occasion being a service in memory of those killed in the war. The programme included also Handel's Sing unto God and Sullivan's In Memoriam Overture. Mr. W. E. Dixon conducted, and Mr. Cyril Robinson was at the organ.

A two-manual organ has been erected in the United Methodist Church, Old Basford, Nottingham, as a War Memorial. The builders are the Sweetland Organ Building Company, Bath. Mr. F. Gostelow gave the opening recital on November 4.

Mr. Ernest Chastaney has recently given a series of recitals at Cromer Parish Church, collections being taken in aid of the organ fund. The handsome sum of over two hundred pounds has been raised in this way.

Mr. H. V. Spanner will play the R.C.O. Fellowship test-pieces at the National Institute for the Blind, 224, Great Portland Street, on December 6, at 3 o'clock. The organ is a replica of the R.C.O. instrument.

Recitals will be given on the new organ at Westminster Cathedral on December 7 and 21 at 6.30 by Mr. G. D. Cunningham and Mr. H. Goss Custard respectively.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have built an organ for the Old Hall School, Wellington, Shropshire—a two-manual and pedal, with nine stops.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. Herbert S. Mountford, St. Michael's Wesleyan Church, Birmingham—Prelude and Fugue in E minor, Bach; Selection from 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast'; Fantasia and Impression, Mountford.

Dr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church—Fantasia on 'Ye holy angels bright,' Darke; 'Finlandia'; 'Souvenir Joyeux,' Lemare.

Mr. James M. Preston, St. George's, Newcastle-on-Tyne—Pastorale, Roger-Ducasse; Toccata, de Maleingreau; Impromptu-Caprice, Jongen; Fantasia and Fugue in G, Parry; Ronde des Princesses, Stravinsky; Toccata di Concerti, Lemare.

Mr. Norman Collie, St. Margaret's, Westminster—'Summer Sketches,' Lemare; Scherzo in F minor, Sandiford Turner; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach.

Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. Mary's, Tenby—Sonata No. 5, Mendelssohn; Chorale Preludes by Parry and Vaughan Williams; Fugue in B minor, Bach; Lament, Grace.

Mr. W. Hunt, St. George's, Belfast—Sonata in F minor, Rheinberger; Cantabile and Choral, Jongen; Variations on a Ground Bass, Farrar.

Mr. Wilfrid Greenhouse Allt, St. Baldred's, North Berwick—Prelude on 'Sleepers, wake,' Bach; Pax Vobiscum, Karg-Elert; Prelude on Darwell's '148th,' Darke; Ronde des Princesses, Stravinsky. St. John the Evangelist, Edinburgh—Variations Poétiques, Eaglefield Hull; Triumphal March, Elgar; Rhapsody in C sharp minor, Howells; and a Bach programme.

Mr. Hugh W. Wood, St. Paul's, Southampton—Introduction and Fugue, Raff; Overture to 'Semiramide.'

Mr. Alban Hamer, Bloemfontein Cathedral—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Plaint and Cradle Song, Grace; Lament and Mood Fantasy, Rowley; First movement of the 'Unfinished' Symphony.

Mr. Ambrose P. Porter, St. Matthias's, Richmond—Sonata No. 4, Bach; Toccata and Fugue, 'The Wanderer,' Parry; Prelude on 'In Deepest Need' (six-part), Bach.

D

Mr. Claude A. Forster, St. John's, Forfar—Prelude and Fugue in D major, Bach; Festival Toccata, Wolstenholme.

Mr. J. E. R. Senior, Govan Public Hall—Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Berceuse and Finale, Stravinsky; 'The Storm,' Lemmens.

Mr. J. Macrae, Parish Church, Skelmorie—Evening Song, Baird; Fugue in E flat, Bach; 'Pomp and Circumstance,' Elgar.

Mr. Eric Brough, Hounslow Congregational Church—Choral in A minor, Franck; Irish Fantasy, Wolstenholme; Chant de Mai, Jongen. St. Gabriel's, Bounds Green—Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; Three Versets, Dupré.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, McLaren Memorial Church, Chorlton-cum-Hardy—Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; 'Dithyramb,' Harwood; First movement of Symphony No. 5, Widor.

Mr. R. Buchanan Morton, House of Hope Presbyterian Church, St. Paul, Minn.—'The Sea,' Arnold Smith; Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Chant de Mai, Jongen; First movement of Symphony No. 6, Widor.

Mr. A. E. Jones, Bolton Town Hall—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Triumphal March, Guilmant; Overture to 'Tancredi,' Rossini.

Mr. Paul Rochard, Kendal Parish Church—Prelude and Fugue in B minor; Bach; Prelude on 'Rockingham,' Parry; Variations, Bonnet.

Mr. George Punter, Luton Parish Church—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Sonata No. 2, Lyon; Finale from the 'New World' Symphony.

Mr. Andrew Dall, Dysart Parish Church—Concert Fantasia, Stewart; Noel, with Variations, d'Aquin.

Mr. Arthur Fountain, All Saints', Northallerton—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Two Sketches, Schumann; Carillon, Vierne; Fantasia and Toccata, Stanford.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Stephen C. Chantler, organist, St. Luke's, Bermondsey. Mr. Reginald Goss Custard, organist and choirmaster, St. Michael's, Chester Square, S.W.

Mr. W. H. Davies, organist and choirmaster, Parish Church, Oughtlington, near Warrington.

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson (organist and choirmaster, High Pavement Chapel, Nottingham), to be also choirmaster, Wesleyan Church, Sherwood.

Mr. Ernest A. Moore, organist and choirmaster, St. Margaret's, Ilkley.

Mr. Cecil G. Price, organist and choirmaster, Ashby Parish Church.

Mr. Reginald Silver, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, Blackpool.

Letters to the Editor

HANDEL'S WATER MUSIC

SIR,—Among the numerous more or less authentic stories connected with Handel, none is more familiar nor has been more frequently repeated than that of his reconciliation with George I. by means of the performance of the Water Music. The tale is first told by Mainwaring, in his anonymous Memoirs of the Life of the late George Frederic Handel, published in 1760. The composer obtained leave from the Elector of Hanover (afterwards George I.) to pay a second visit to England, 'on condition that he engaged to return within a reasonable time.' But Handel stayed on, 'whether [as Mainwaring says] he was afraid of repassing the sea, or whether he had contracted an affection for the diet of the land he was in, so it was, that the promise he had given at his coming away had somehow slipped out of his memory.' The accession of the Elector to the throne of Great Britain, on the death of Queen Anne, put Handel in a difficulty, and 'conscious how ill he had deserved at the hands of his gracious patron . . . he did not dare to show himself at Court.' Mainwaring then relates how Baron Kilmannsegge, a 'noble friend' of Handel's, 'with some others among the nobility,' contrived that King George should be:

'... persuaded to form a party on the water. Handel was apprised of the design, and advised to prepare some music for that occasion. It was performed and conducted by himself, unknown to His Majesty, whose pleasure on hearing it was equal to his surprise. He was impatient to know whose it was. . . . The Baron then produced the delinquent, and asked leave to present him to His Majesty as one who was too conscious of his fault to attempt an excuse for it. . . . This intercession was accepted without any difficulty. Handel was restored to favour.'

No date is given by Mainwaring for this performance, though from the context he clearly placed it in 1715, and it has generally been identified as the excursion on August 22, 1715, mentioned in Malcolm's Manners and Customs of London during the 18th century, when 'the King, Prince and Princess of Wales, and a large party of nobility, went in barges with music from White Hall to Limehouse.'

In the August and September numbers of the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft of 1922, Dr. Wolfgang Michael has printed an extract from a report of Friedrich Bonet, the resident envoy of Brandenburg in London in 1717, which has recently been discovered in the State Archives at Berlin. The report is dated July 17-30, 1717. Omitting superfluous details, it runs as follows:

'Il y a quelques semaines que le roi témoigna au Baron de Kilmanseck le désir qu'il aurait d'avoir un concert de musique sur la rivière, par souscription. . . . Ce baron s'adressa pour cela à Heidecker, Suisse de nation. . . . Celui-ci répondit que quelque envie qu'il eût de complaire à S. M., il devait réserver les souscriptions pour les grands coups. . . . M. de Kilmanseck, voyant S. M. chagrinée de ces difficultés, se chargea de lui donner ce concert sur la rivière à ses dépens. Et là-dessus. . . . cette fête eut lieu avant hier. Le roi se rendit vers les 8 heures du soir dans sa barge, où furent admises la duchesse de Bolton, la comtesse de Godolphin, Mad. de Kilmanseck, Mad. Were, et le comte d'Orkney. . . . A côté de la barge du roi était celle des musiciens, au nombre de 50 qui jouèrent de toute sorte d'instruments, savoir des trompettes, des cors de chasse, des hautbois, des bassons, des flûtes allemandes, des flûtes françaises à bec, des violons, et des basses, mais sans voix. Ce concert avait été composé exprès par le fameux Handel, natif de Halle, et premier compositeur de la musique du roi. Elle fut si fort approuvée par S. M. qu'Elle la fit répéter par trois fois, quoiqu'elle durât une heure [à] chaque reprise, savoir deux fois avant et une fois après le souper. . . . Afin de rendre cette fête plus accomplie, Mad. de Kilmanseck sut ménager un souper délicat dans la maison de plaisance du feu comte de Ranelagh à Chelsea sur la rivière, où le roi se rendit à une heure après minuit, il en sortit à trois, et sur les quatre heures et demie du matin, S. M. fut de retour à St. James.'

Dr. Michael considers that this report settles definitely the date of the Water Music, and, since he shows from previous reports of Bonet's that George I. had from the date of his accession repeatedly visited the opera when Handel's works were performed, he concludes that Mainwaring's story of the reconciliation of the King and his Kapellmeister is a myth.

Bonet's report, as it happens, contains very little that was not already known. The water-party on July 17, 1717, was described in the Daily Courant of July 19 and in the Political State of Great Britain for 1717. It is mentioned by Schoelcher, Rockstro, Streatfeild, and Chrysander. The last-named does not seem to have been able to decide whether the expedition of 1715 or that of 1717 was the scene of the reconciliation. In the first volume of his Life of Handel (published in 1858) there is no reference to the 1717 performance, and 1715 is accepted without hesitation. But in the third volume, which appeared in 1867, he corrects the earlier statement and prints the contemporary accounts of Baron Kilmansegg's fête in 1717, which he concludes was the real date of the production of the Water Music, though he avoids any reference to the reconciliation story.

In the article on Handel which he contributed, in 1880, to the Dictionary of German Biography, Mainwaring's tale is repeated and the Water Music reconciliation is placed in 1715. In his edition of the music for the Händel-Gesellschaft (1887) the uncertainty of the date is referred to, and finally, in the Vielfahrsschrift für Musik for 1887 he repeats the original story, and accepts 1715 as the right date.

Both Rockstro and Streatfeild consider that the evidence in favour of 1715 is strong—'almost overwhelming' is the expression used by the last-named. The former suggests that the first performance took place in 1715, and that it was repeated in 1717; and Streatfeild (Handel, p. 74, note) considers that 'it was quite possible that the Water Music as we now know it was not all written for the same occasion. Its twenty-five numbers may very well represent Handel's share in numerous water-parties.'

Where so many authorities differ it is difficult to arrive at any conclusion; but on the whole the evidence seems strongly in favour of the 1717 date. There is no mention of Handel in the contemporary accounts of the 1715 water-party, nor is there any particular emphasis made on the music performed, which would probably have been the case if it had been contributed by so prominent a composer and had required so large a band as that employed in the Water Music. With the 1717 performance the case is different. We are told that the music was 'composed express for this occasion by Mr. Hendel,' and Bonet's report shows that it must have been a long work, for each repetition took an hour in performance—which probably agrees with the time the twenty-five numbers of the Water Music would take to play.

The difficulty lies in Mainwaring's story of the reconciliation. Dr. Michael rejects it as a myth, and if it is true that Handel accompanied George I. to Hanover in the summer of 1716 it would at first sight appear that some sort—if not of reconciliation—at least of modus vivendi had taken place before that date. But Mainwaring's story is so circumstantial that it is difficult to reject it entirely as apocryphal. Several explanations are possible, but what seems most probable is that Handel, though not deprived of his post as Court Kapellmeister after the Elector became King of England, remained personally in disgrace and had no intercourse with his Royal master. It was not the first time that Handel had offended by outstaying his leave from Hanover. He was evidently well aware of his own value, and King George was equally well aware that a Handel was not easily to be replaced. The situation was a difficult one, though not without its humorous side. That it lasted for some three years, and then was solved in 1717 by Baron Kilmansegg's little plot, seems a not unreasonable explanation.—Yours, &c.,

W. BARCLAY SQUIRE.

14, Albert Place, W.8.
November 8, 1922.

PIANOFORTE PEDAL NOTATION

SIR,—The increasing complexity of modern music, with its abundance of accidentals and involved rhythms, makes specially desirable all possible simplifications of the printed page. With such an object in view, it would seem that many of the damper pedal indications might well be omitted from pianoforte music, either because they are superfluous or because they contradict the notation of the passages under which they appear. The recognition of two distinct functions of the damper pedal would enable the editor to decide exactly when to indicate its use, and when to omit any such indication.

Firstly, the pedal part may be used for the sake of resonance to allow the 'sympathetic vibration' effect to occur. This takes some little time to reach its maximum. Secondly, the pedal may be used to hold a note during the short time needed for the hand to quit the note and to assume the playing position for the next note. I suggest that this second use of the pedal should never be specially indicated, as it can be more conveniently implied by careful attention to the notation for the duration of the notes. Many typical examples in which this convention would be useful are to be found in the Chopin Valses. In passages of the following type:

it is clear that the damper pedal must be taken with the first crotchet of each bar, in order that the note may be a crotchet and not, say, a dotted quaver. In these Valses the special indications for the use of the pedal by means of Ped..... almost always lead to over-pedalling—as, for example, in the edition of R. Pugno, where the use of the pedal is indicated for two-thirds instead of for one-third or less, of the bar. The Rachmaninov Prelude in C sharp minor furnishes many good examples in which pedal indications are superfluous; and yet another type of passage, where pedalling is clearly implied, is that in which the theme lies in the middle register of the instrument, and has harmony below and widely spread decorations above. In all these types of passages I suggest that damper pedal indications are superfluous, and should be omitted.

A typical example of the inconsistencies referred to is shown in the following passage from the Chopin Study, Op. 10, No. 8, as edited by Klindworth and revised by Scharwenka:

Here we have four rests and two staccato marks, none of which can be followed with the given pedalling. This is not, of course, an isolated example of inconsistencies. They occur many times in the same Study, both in this and in other editions; and, in fact, throughout the whole of pianoforte literature.—Yours, &c., W. H. GEORGE.

Beeston, Notts.

November 8, 1922.

GRAUN'S ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA

SIR,—In 'C.W.'s' review of Shakespeare and Music, by Christopher Wilson (published at The Stage Office), it is stated: 'one of John Sebastian's contemporaries, Graun, must have had some acquaintance with the poet's work, for he wrote an Overture to Antony and Cleopatra. The author thinks that this is the earliest work of the kind.'

Both Christopher Wilson and your reviewer seem to be unaware of the fact that there are in existence more than fifty French, Italian, Spanish, and German plays founded on the love story of Antony and Cleopatra. Many were written and produced long before Shakespeare became known as a dramatist. All are, of course, based on Plutarch's 'Life' of Antony, which will be found in every edition of his Lives (original and translated). Besides, Graun's Cleopatra is an opera, and was produced at Berlin in 1742. The maestro di cappella, Hiller, in his biography of Graun, gives an account of its production. He does not even mention the name of Shakespeare.

Graun, a successful courtier, would have been the last composer in the world to offend his powerful patron, Frederick the Great, who heartily detested Shakespeare and all his works. The King of Prussia read Shakespeare's plays in the French translations of La Place and Letourneur, and there is no record of his having ever given permission to his 'comedians' to produce any adaptation of the great English dramatist's works at the Court Theatres in his kingdom.—Yours, &c., ANDREW DE TERNANT.

36, Somerleyton Road, S.W.9.

'PAINTED MUSIC'

SIR,—In the course of an article in the November Musical Times on 'Painted Music,' the writer, after asserting the fascination that music exercises over painters, and quoting examples of pictures with either musical subjects or incidental references to music, proceeds to inquire where are the 'analogous' cases of pictures representing the painter engaged upon his own work?

It is not difficult, however, to find examples. In one of Velasquez's most noted pictures, 'Las Meninas,' there is not only a full-length portrait of the painter at work with palette and brush upon a large canvas, but the subject upon which he is engaged can be seen reflected in a mirror. Again, there is Goya's spirited portrait of himself at work in his studio; and, as a present-day example, may be quoted a water-colour of Sir W. Orpen's, showing a studio with an artist and his picture on one side and the model on the other.

But that a painter at work on a picture is analogous to a musician performing a piece of music can surely hardly be conceded. The one is engaged upon a creative and constructive work, occupying perhaps some months, and complete only when his brush is finally laid down; nor can the full expression of his conception be realised until then. The musical performer, on the other hand, is the human agent, the interpreter, upon whom the composer (who also may have spent months in fashioning his music) must rely for the expression of his work. If analogy there be, it must be sought rather between the composer and the painter: between the picture and the performance.

No doubt, as Mr. Brent-Smith says, painters used (and still use) music in their pictures because of its attractive setting, and also, surely, because it was a natural feature of many of the sacred subjects painted in the days of Raphael or Fra Angelico, when the chief patron of the art was the Church. (As to whether the studio with an individual in a paint-besmeared overall would be an attractive setting is another matter.) But the somewhat startling suggestion that a History of Music can be deduced from a study of the picture galleries of Europe must, it is to be feared, be discarded, when we consider the lamentable ignorance of the painters. Men who apparently knew neither the correct use of a violin-bow nor even of a pianoforte pedal cannot be accepted as reliable 'evidence.' Even the seven-stringed viol may be merely a careless mistake in arithmetic.

Mr. Brent-Smith thinks musicians seem unsuitable sitters to the eminent painters of the epoch. They lack affluence [he says], and that may be generally true. They would certainly prove unsuitable if they couldn't afford to pay. But some painter managed to get a remarkably fine portrait out of J. S. Bach as a sitter, and this year's Academy showed us a portrait of a present-day musician by an eminent painter which in both subject and execution was certainly one of the finest things there.

Finally, it is not surprising that the Bach D minor Toccata should when performed upon the pianola prove 'ludicrous,' apart from its lacking the vision of the pianist's hands 'leaping to the interrogation and pouncing to the reply,' for many of us are hardly satisfied with it even when played by a Busoni. But let us hear it upon the organ in some noble church, and we can certainly dispense with the sight of the hands and yet enjoy the music.—Yours, &c.,

November, 1922.

LOUIS A. HAMAND.

A CHOIR-TRAINER'S DILEMMA

SIR,—For a considerable time I have been a frequent attendant at the larger competitive Festivals held in the North of England. This has not been done for the purposes of 'pot-hunting,' but out of a sincere desire to hear the criticism of acknowledged authorities on choral matters. The benefits which have accrued are enormous, but I must confess that on certain occasions I have witnessed an inconsistency which is baffling. At the Morecambe Musical Festival, held in May this year, Sir Ivor Atkins, organist of Worcester Cathedral, stated in his remarks that 'what pleased him most was the fact that throughout the performances he never saw an odd boy take his eyes off the conductor.' At the Lytham Musical Festival, a month later, Mr. Julius Harrison said of the same choir that 'the observance given by the boys to the baton was splendid.' In October, when this choir attended the Blackpool Festival, Mr. Geoffrey Shaw, H.M. Inspector of Music in Schools and Training Colleges, stated that he 'hated to see a choir with its eyes glued on the conductor from start to finish.' This observation was made after the singing of a most difficult duet in quaver movement by J. S. Bach, M.M., ♩ = 178. The choir sang from memory throughout, to the accompaniment of an absolutely strange pianist. I do not doubt the sincerity of all the above statements, but the utter conflict is surprising. Up to the present time my slogan as a conductor has been, 'Keep your eyes fixed on the beat'; but now I am like a man groping in the dark. As Blatchford says, I want someone to hold my hand.—Yours, &c., 'QUO VADIS.'

[We sent 'Quo Vadis's' letter to Mr. Shaw, who replies as follows:

SIR,—I was much interested in the letter from 'Quo Vadis.' It certainly looks as though the blame is mine for the apparent inconsistency. I must have failed to make my meaning clear in this particular adjudication.

I think perhaps 'Quo Vadis' did not quite 'get' my use of the word 'glued.' I, too, like other judges, like to see choirs pay attention to the beat. But I don't like to see a choir glaring with basilisk-like fixity at its conductor. Virtue rampant easily becomes a vice, and this particular virtue reduces the singing to a rigid and mechanical utterance very far removed from spontaneous expression.

I don't think the Bach duet is so difficult as 'Quo Vadis' imagines. It is in itself so strongly rhythmical that any choir with a sense of rhythm could, after plenty of rehearsal, sing it without being conducted at all. 'Quo Vadis' may find this an interesting experiment. I fancy the real value of the baton is more in rehearsal than in performance. Of course, if the choir is singing under a strange conductor, the case is altered, and it must watch the conductor much more carefully. But the best singing I have heard has not depended upon a paralysed glare at the baton.

I wonder if some Festival will be brave enough to start a class for unconducted choirs? I think it would be a most valuable experiment, and conductors could learn a lot from it.

I certainly don't want 'Quo Vadis' to think I am encouraging choirs not to look at the beat. (I devoutly hope my own choir won't get that impression from this correspondence!) On the contrary, inattention to the beat should be considered a crime and not a misdemeanour. All I want to get rid of is that state of strain which is set up when a choir never blinks once in looking at its conductor; for surely something very much more valuable becomes atrophied in the singer if he is a 'glarer.' Let us be freer, easier, and much more natural. Tyranny is not Discipline.

I do hope I have cleared up 'Quo Vadis's' dilemma. I sympathise with him, and hope he will accept my expression of regret at not having made myself clear in the first instance.—Yours, &c.,

GEOFFREY SHAW.]

WHY COMPLAIN?

SIR,—Our younger composers are apt to complain that they are neglected, and that their influence does not extend far. The other day I had occasion to visit an exhibition of paintings by employees of the Post Office, in which I failed to detect any traces whatever of the influence of contemporary art. There was a good deal of ability in the pictures exhibited, but they might all have been painted in the 'eighties of the last century. Now I am sure that if among our civil servants there was a musical organization analogous to the society which arranged this exhibition, it would not exist long unless its programmes, at least occasionally, contained such names as Holst, Vaughan Williams, Ireland, and Bax. The only organization of the kind with which I am acquainted is the Langham Choral Society, members of which, I believe, are recruited from the London Telephone Service. It is still young, but it has already included some recent works in its programmes. Contemporary painters at any rate have not the opportunities for penetrating into broader strata of the population, as are offered to composers by means of the Competitive Festivals. In this way, for every one person who is able to see contemporary painting, perhaps a thousand will be studying a choral piece by a living musician. Let us take comfort in this consideration.

Why is it that when non-musical people begin to talk about music they invariably talk nonsense—more nonsense than musical people talk about other things. Thus we see the author of 'Tonic Talks' in a contemporary suggesting that children should be taught to sing at meals. I will not discuss the moral effect of such a scheme, but any musical person will see at a glance how pernicious from a musical point of view it would be—both the music and the meal would be spoiled. How the children will learn to love music, if they have to let their food get cold while they are finishing the Coffee Cantata or whatever other piece they are singing!—Yours, &c.,

A. K.

GARBLED REVIEWS

SIR,—Your columns have recently contained examples of garbled and misleading use of reviews and concert notices. Here is another: An advertisement in the Daily Telegraph of November 4, calling attention to the vocal score of Holbrooke's Bronwen, has, underneath, the following quotation from the Evening News:

'A pronounced success. A vivid affair—with drama in every bar. Holbrooke at his best.'

Now this criticism applied only to the Prelude to Bronwen given some time ago at a 'Prom.' The whole opera has never been heard in this country. Isn't it time a stop were put to this practice?—Yours, &c.,

26, St. James's Mansions, N.W.6. ROBERT LORENZ.
November 1, 1922.

GRESHAM LECTURES

Sir Frederick Bridge's Gresham Lectures for this term were given on November 6 and following days. Arne's Masque of Alfred was the subject of the first of the series. This Masque has for its Finale the national song 'Rule, Britannia.' It was produced in 1740. The lecturer gave interesting particulars of this production, which included six songs only, and was a very different thing from the Masque which a few years later was revived at Drury Lane. The original Masque included a scene in which the future greatness of England was given in a vision to Alfred. The figures of King Edward III., Queen Philippa and the Black Prince, Queen Elizabeth, and William III., were all conjured up. The words of the Masque alluded to George I. and Frederick Prince of Wales. This Prince had ordered the Masque to celebrate the accession of the Royal House of Hanover to the English throne. The whole story was full of interest, and Arne's songs were very effective. The second lecture was on the subject of 'The real Rule, Britannia,' and gave the lecturer an opportunity for commenting on the extraordinary corruption, both as regards words and music, which this fine song has had to endure. Sir Frederick had examined twenty-one different versions, and all were incorrect. Amusing examples of the improvements which various editors have made in the song were given—not the least amusing being arrangements of the air for trumpets by Thalberg and Czerny. The correct version was finely sung by Mr. Graham Smart. The splendid diatonic harmony of Arne (without a single chromatic chord) was a joyful contrast to the sentimental harmony which editors of various times have introduced. The third lecture was devoted to a selection of Motets by Byrd and his contemporaries, recently edited by the lecturer, and the fourth to a continuation of the series on 'The Evolution of the Violin Solo.' Mr. Jeffrey Pulver contributed a series of admirable examples. The attendance was, as usual, very good, particularly for the lecture on Rule, Britannia.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Young lady accompanist would like to meet good vocalist; practice one or two evenings a week; North London.—M. B., c/o Musical Times.

Lady pianist desires to meet good violinist for mutual practice. South Birmingham district.—X. L., c/o Musical Times.

Lady Pianist (22) would like to meet instrumentalists for practice of chamber music, or would act as accompanist to singer or musical society. Considerable concert experience. Wolverhampton or Dudley districts.—B., c/o Musical Times.

The Mary Ward Settlement, Tavistock Place, W.C., is anxious to hear of amateur instrumentalists who would give their services to act as orchestra (or to help in forming a local orchestra) to play at occasional Saturday night entertainments.—Please write to the WARDEN, at above address.

Organist wishes to meet amateur organist for mutual study. Free use of organ offered.—E. D., 11, Albert Road, Dalston, E.8.

Lady viola player seeks practice in orchestral and chamber music. Streatham or neighbourhood preferred.—'OMEGA,' c/o Musical Times.

Flautist wishes to join small orchestra. Classical or dance.—TAYLOR, 'Shirley,' Chester Road, Highgate, N.19.

Amateur violinist, violist, harpist, is open to join orchestra, quartet, &c., in district, Saturdays or Sundays.—Address, 'VIOIA,' 6, Hauberk Road, S.W.11.

Cellist (male) wanted by pianist and violinist to form trio. Classical and modern music.—'TRIO,' 52, Kimberley Gardens, Harringay, London, N.4.

Young lady vocalist (trained) wishes to meet lady or gentleman pianist for mutual practice. Crouch End.—L. G., c/o Musical Times.

Dorian Symphony Orchestra, Westminster, invites keen amateurs playing violin, viola, 'cello, oboe, or French horn, to rehearse best music (classical and modern). Rehearsals, Monday evenings.—The SECRETARY, 30, The Green, Twickenham.

Amateur instrumentalists (except pianists) are cordially invited to join select city orchestra playing best classical and modern music.—G. A. ABBE, 59, Sloane Street, S.W.1.

Well-known Insurance Company Orchestra requires amateur brass and wind. Rehearsals 5.30 every Thursday, near Bank.—W. T. STONE, 50, Fleet Street, E.C.4.

Lady, moderate vocalist and pianist, wishes to meet another lady for mutual practice of duets and accompaniments. Need not be an expert, but must have genuine love for good music. Paignton (Devon) district.—C. M. H., c/o Musical Times.

Wanted, a soprano and deep alto to complete madrigal party meeting on Saturday afternoons in Baker Street district. Elizabethan and similar music. Good sight-reading and enthusiasm essential.—REGINALD TANSLEY, 10, Colville Gardens, Talbot Road, W.11.

Young well-trained tenor desires to meet a pianist, lady or gentleman, for mutual practice. London district.—H. M. W., c/o Musical Times.

Young gentleman pianist (experienced) desires to meet a good contralto, soprano, or violinist for mutual practice. S.E. district.—V. H., c/o Musical Times.

The League of Arts Amateur Orchestra is rehearsing for a concert to be given at Christmas. Good amateur players are invited to communicate now with the SECRETARY, League of Arts, the Guildhouse, Eccleston Square, S.W.1. Rehearsals Wednesday evenings.

Young tenor would like to meet another vocalist for practising duets, &c. London district.—H. M. W., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist would like to join small dance orchestra.—H. GLEDHILL, 345, Rochdale Road, Todmorden, Yorks.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of December 1, 1862:

MR. EDWARD CRUSE has the pleasure of informing his friends that the action brought by him for the recovery of damages for his wrongful dismissal from his situation of organist at St. Barnabas's Church, Pimlico, has this day been settled by the payment of the full sum claimed, and the costs in the action. Mr. CRUSE is now open to another engagement.—81, Oakly Street, Chelsea, W.C.—November 19, 1862.

LAUNCESTON, TASMANIA.—The opening of the new organ recently erected in St. John's Church, Launceston, took place on Sunday, August 24. The organ, which was built by Mr. Charles Brindley, of Sheffield, is of great power. The tone is full, rich, and musical. Its cost in England was about £350; but the freight and other necessary expenses swell it to nearly £500.

TONBRIDGE.—On November 5, at Tonbridge Castle, there was an entertainment provided by Mr. Fleming, including an intensive pyrotechnic display. In the evening a concert took place in the large room of the Castle, to which the admission charged was 5s., in order that a sum of money might be collected for the distressed factory operatives.

Sharps and Flats

Shades of Shakespeare and Bandello! That a dirty little scrub of a Gounod should take on himself to maul the deathless story of Romeo and Juliet!—Percy A. Scholes.

If Gounod had been living Mr. Scholes would not have dared to describe him in print as 'a dirty little scrub of a Gounod,' for fear of a libel action.—Thomas F. Dunhill.

The cinema may be described as a cross between a thought-saving machine and a cocktail.—John Galsworthy.

Mr. J. C. Squire, in The Journey, speaks of 'a kiss like a song.' Can you, Sir, from your experience, inform me if this is a loud, smacking kiss, or does it allude to a long, wet one, reminiscent of 'Water Music'?—Edith Sitwell (in a letter to 'Beachcomber' of the Daily Express).

My own impression of a kiss like a song is the resonant bravura kind which gives you singing noises in the head. It is, I am told, often delivered on railway platforms.—'Beachcomber.'

You should see my mail in the morning! Quiet time? Good heavens! If you only knew how many people write to me imploring me to hear their voices.—Dame Nellie Melba.

LAUGH as much as possible. . . . And SING, if you can. If you have a tableful of children, let them sing often during the waits of meal-time.—Dr. Frank Crane.

I hope no head of a family will ever act on this advice, and if he does may I never be asked to take a seat at his festive board. It is bad enough to have to eat our meals to the accompaniment of negroid noises at all but a few restaurants, but if meals cannot be had in peace at home a new terror will be added to life.—Alfred Kalisch.

I spent a happy hour listening to Josef Holbrooke, who is years in front of his time, playing, among other drinking songs, The Song of Stout.—Hannen Swaffer.

What do I think of the ultra-modern music? I don't think of it at all. Rather than ask me to hear Schönberg or Stravinsky, play me a good honest fox-trot.—Sir George Henschel.

The following announcement appeared last week outside a church in Wood Green:

Sunday next:

How to Endure Indefinitely

Vocal Solos by Mrs. G—

Pianoforte Solos by Mrs. H—.

It would have been kinder to have put a point at the end of the second line, but to add it would be to take it away.—Daily News.

I am often amazed at the industry of my fellow scribes.—Hannen Swaffer.

Miss — will sing 'With Verger Clad,' from Creation!—Provincial Paper.

The musical critic of the Moscow Izvestia declares that a pianoforte piece ought to be rendered quite contrarily to the intentions of the composer. We are bringing the splendid openings in Russia to the notice of the parents of the little girl-pianist next door.—Punch.

I've got a wonderful programme fixed up. . . . Of course, I shall sing a group of English songs—they must never be left out.—Dame Nellie Meiba.

[Dame Nellie's programme contained one English song—Maude V. White's John Anderson. The encores included two more—Comin' through the rye and Home, sweet Home.—EDITOR.]

BALLAD OPERA: ITS PLACE IN THE 18TH CENTURY

The forty-ninth session of the Musical Association opened on November 7 with a paper by Miss Caroline Lejeune on 'Ballad Opera: Its Place in the 18th Century.' She said that the history of the Beggar's Opera and its sequel, Polly, formed one of the most amazing adventures in that age of adventure. When Gay produced the Beggar's Opera he unconsciously lighted a social and dramatic bonfire which had been smouldering for nearly two hundred years. It was an age which had no poetry in any of its arts; everything was clipped and correct and elegant. There was much talk about going back to nature, but it did not ring true. The country was all very well in theory, but one lived in London or Bath or Dublin. Pope's Rape of the Lock is typical of the age at its best; and Addison's opera Rosamond perhaps shows what it was at its worst. Genius and imagination were comparative strangers to the early 18th century in England. Art in general was struggling in a swamp, following a pseudo-classical will-o'-the-wisp. It was an age which added a capital letter to an abstract quality and hailed it as a divinity. As for a sense of humour—a thing quite distinct from satire or burlesque or farce—it was conspicuous by its absence among the men who practised the polite arts. But Gay had it in abundance, and just because of that Trivia, the Beggar's Opera, and a few short poems are alive to-day.

Ordinary people loved Gay, for he was himself ordinary. There was a danger, because of the fame of the 18th century writers, of forgetting the quite-ordinary man, but numerically if in no other way he mattered the most of all. Social and dramatic history followed him, and it is here we must look for the cause which brought the Beggar's Opera into being. The ordinary Londoner was bored with Pastorals à la Virgil, and with drama about goddesses and demi-gods, and Virtue with a capital V. Gay was a happy, inconsequent little man, who never thought very long or very deeply on anything. There was something ironical in the fact that he should be the man to produce the greatest dramatic sensation of his century. He never considered the possibility of his opera making history. It was absurd to suppose that the Beggar's Opera set out to glorify roguery and depreciate goodness, but it was difficult to believe that Gay, under the cover of a romantic drama, was really trying to sweep clean the morals of the country. The Beggar's Opera was not propaganda; Gay studied the bias of the age, found out what the ordinary man wanted to see and hear, and above all, what the ordinary man had seen or heard too much of already at the opera. Instead of a legendary plot, he chose one of a character to appeal to every contemporary Londoner. Instead of the blue-blooded hero and mythical heroine of Handel's librettists, Gay created a hero out of a highway robber and a heroine out of a thief-taker's daughter. Finally, and this was a real innovation, he exchanged recitative dialogue for broad, colloquial English prose, and discarded the florid Italian aria for folk-songs which everybody could hum.

The central theme of the plot—Macheath and two women—was one that could be treated in various ways: Gay chose to treat it comically. This was an important point, closely allied to the question of the opera's morals, or lack of them, which distressed so many worthies at the time of its first production. This situation could only be comic in the complete absence of any recognised moral standard. The opera, therefore, must be regarded not as immoral, but as non-moral, and to appreciate it we must lay aside all ethical bias and judge entirely by the criteria of dramatic art. It must be remembered that the acceptance of non-morality in art was a thing infinitely old—or new. In the middle period of history it was a very rare phenomenon, and in the 18th century of all centuries practically unknown. The Beggar's Opera in this way was born out of its time, and many people fought shy of it quite naturally—but about its popularity there could be no doubt at all. The general public was sick and tired of legendary opera, sung in a language it could not understand. People did not want to be educated; they wanted to be amused. Of course the Beggar's Opera was a success. It was just exactly what the easy-going Londoners had been waiting for, and when it came people lost their heads completely. Gay found himself in the extraordinary position of a national hero, without having done anything to his knowledge to deserve it.

Gay had struck a new dramatic mould containing possibilities of appeal quite unsuspected till then. The ballad opera offered a chance for a realistic story dealing with every-day people and every-day problems. It could hold sentimental humour for the boxes and crude comedy for the gallery. As for satire, the advantages were remarkable, for point was given to every line of verse by the familiarity of its musical setting. Words were never obscured by tune, but the association of tune, carefully treated, could be made to emphasise and underline a stroke of satire. And the music made no serious demands on orchestra or singers: dramatic sense was far more important than regular operatic technique.

In the first blaze of ballad opera enthusiasm, authors big and small, with talent and without—mostly without—seized their pens and began to write in imitation of Gay. It did not take long to turn out a ballad opera—a few weeks at most—and several had appeared before the Beggar's Opera had ended its first run. Between that time and the middle of the century nearly a hundred were produced, of which not more than half-a-dozen were works of art in any sense of the word, many others a blot on dramatic literature, and the vast majority commonplace. Then about the middle of the century the whole crop vanished as suddenly as it had come.

Happily there were a few ballad operas which realised the potential qualities of their art-form more or less completely. Out of the whole mass there were four which could be called good. Fielding wrote two, Don Quixote in England and The Intriguing Chambermaid. Another was called The Village Opera, which gave Bickerstaffe the hint for his more famous Love in a Village; and the fourth was The Jovial Crew.

Though ballad opera was dead, it had left behind a handful of works infused with real genius, and certain qualities of comedy and realism, simplicity and ease, which were quite new to English music-drama. Before Gay they did not exist. Now they were full grown and lusty, and were to play an important part in the shaping of yet another fashionable madness. For on these traits of ballad opera were to be grafted the avowed comic purpose, the new range of dramatic motif, and the musical technique of opera buffa, but lately arrived from Italy; the action was to be gathered together and sharpened by the use of a dramatic finale, and the resulting production was the true comedy-opera of the second half of the century.

CZECHO-SLOVAK MUSIC

MRS. ROSA NEWMARCH'S LECTURES

There is no withstanding so zealous a propagandist as Mrs. Rosa Newmarch. Once she has made up her own mind she knows how to convey the processes that have led to that consummation in so clear a way that the listener or reader has no other course but to agree. As Mr. H. C. Colles pointed out, when in the chair at the first of the two lectures on Czecho-Slovak music given in Wigmore Hall in October, Mrs. Newmarch is not a professional critic. She has not to form rapid judgments, to weigh the scales of appreciation in a hurry. Hers it is to allow music to soak in until she has captured its very essence, and then to give us the benefit of her impressions.

But though Mrs. Newmarch is able to reach her conclusions at leisure, she was limited in the time at her disposal for their communication. Two lectures proved all too short for the purpose in view, more especially when they were curtailed by the musical illustrations, which in the first were contributed by Miss Fanny Davies and Mlle. Tonci Urbankova, and in the second by M. Mischa Leon, who gave the first London performance of Janacek's song-cycle, The Day Book of One Who Vanished. Unfortunately the space at my disposal is still more limited than the time at Mrs. Newmarch's, and it is impossible for me to follow her in her survey of Czech music, which went back to the Middle Ages when the Czechs were already famous for the beauty of their choral singing, and Prague was the most musical city of Central Europe. This love of music, which showed itself in a second vein of folk-song, was not lost during the German domination. Even in the 18th century, when national ideals were at their lowest ebb, their musical abilities recommended Czech domesticity to the Austrian nobility, whilst such men as Dussek, Czerny, and the various members of the Stamitz family, Carl being the greatest, had an influence on the music of Europe. Prague remained true to its traditions by freely recognising the greatness of Mozart, and his cult lingered there throughout a good part of the 19th century, long after it had passed away at Vienna.

With the careers of Dvorák and Smetana, Mrs. Newmarch dwelt at some length. Smetana—the darling of the Czech people and the singer of their renaissance national life, who became conductor of the National Theatre at Prague in 1886—found fullest expression for his genius in opera, and his many works in this genre have sunk deep into the Czech national consciousness. Only one, however, has achieved an international reputation, The Bartered Bride. Whilst Smetana built up a national opera on folk-song, Dvorák, also not neglecting the stage, carried Czech-Slovak dance and folk-song into the realm of absolute music, and made for himself an international position second only to Brahms. Mrs. Newmarch in passing referred to the vogue Dvorák enjoyed in this country a generation ago, a popularity which did not embrace a real comprehension of his genius.

Fibich, whose influence on opera has been second only to that of Smetana, and Suk, son-in-law of Dvorák and familiar to concert-goers as player of the second violin in the Bohemian Quartet, were also dealt with by Mrs. Newmarch. Miss Fanny Davies gave some of the latter's pianoforte pieces, including the charming Things lived and dreamed, which Suk wrote on the recovery of his son. Miss Urbankova's interpretations of songs by Fibich, Smetana, and others in the original showed the native qualities of directness and fire for which Czech singing is noted.

More interesting, in being more novel, was Mrs. Newmarch's second lecture, which in view of the short time available she wisely limited to Janacek, the most original of the modern Czech school and, in the lecturer's view, the most interesting figure in contemporary European music. She insisted that though he was born as far back as 1854, he was no fossilised senior but the most energetic young man she had ever met. Nor did she think that the many years Janacek had to wait for general recognition (his opera, Her Step-Daughter, which definitely placed him in the front rank of Czech composers, was produced only in 1916) had impaired his genius. His nature was one of slow development, and his deep researches into the springs of human expression through natural speech—in and by which song lives—had contributed to his present consummate command of style. The result was a fused language, capable of expressing the most varied emotions, and an orchestration with a colour and a tang of its own, owing nothing to others, and having little superfluous tissue, its chief object being to heighten and illustrate the psychological situation. Mrs. Newmarch dwelt at some length on Janacek's three operas which form the bulk of his work, Her Step-Daughter, The Excursions of Mr. Broucek, and Kate. Another opera has been completed by him this summer.

M. Mischa Leon's singing of Janacek's gipsy song-cycle was a very considerable feat, for the songs take some forty minutes in performance and bristle with technical and dramatic difficulties, the tenor part not infrequently being taken up to C. A few of the songs are allotted to the gipsy, and were sung by Miss Cecilia Brenner and a female chorus. These songs cannot be described briefly. They are cast in a dramatic form, the intensity rising to the catastrophe and being heightened by the alto soloist, who speaks for the gipsy lass, and by the chorus off the platform which intervenes something after the manner of the Attic chorus. An Interlude for the pianoforte, as original as anything in the songs, marks the climax. Mr. Harold Craxton, who accompanied, was set a hard task and emerged with credit. The final group, which is given to the tenor alone, shows with marvellous insight the growth of the lad's dour despair, not the least remarkable moment being that in which he has been trying to forget that despair in drink.

Certainly this song-cycle (a translation of which by Mrs. Newmarch was provided in the programme, though it was of course sung in the original Czech) is the work of an entirely original mind, which has not allowed any musical prepossessions—either academic or springing from a study of national dance and folk-song, in which Janacek is steeped—to influence the raciness of his style. This he has saturated with the melody of his people's language, till it has become an absolutely natural means of musical expression and incidentally, as Mrs. Newmarch observed, something quite original in the whole domain of music.

The Minister of Czechoslovakia occupied the chair, and in a graceful introductory speech paid a compliment to Mrs. Newmarch and the musicians of both nations who had helped to consolidate musical relations between the two countries.

H. E. W.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The chamber concert given on Monday, November 6, at the Duke's Hall opened with a Postlude for organ and strings by Sir Alexander Mackenzie—played in memory of Miss Annie M. Child, Fellow and Professor, who passed away last August. The organ part was played by Mr. Malcolm Boyle. The programme included Bach's Sonata for flute and pianoforte, admirably played by Mr. William Smith and Miss Hazel Perman, a movement from Mendelssohn's Octet for strings, and two movements from a Suite by Kouznetzov for four violoncellos. Not the least interesting items of a well-varied programme were several MS. compositions by students. These included a String Quartet (Sybil Barlow), songs by Roy Henderson and Michael Head, and a Romantic Melody for violin by Arthur Sandford (Mendelssohn Scholar). Mr. Sandford brought the concert to a conclusion with a brilliant performance of Liszt's arrangement of the Tannhäuser Overture.

The third and last of the social and musical meetings of the R.A.M. Club for the Centenary year took place in the Duke's Hall on Saturday evening, November 4, and the remarkable success which had attended the two previous gatherings was fully maintained on this occasion, both as to the distinguished artists who rendered a varied and delightful programme of music and also with regard to the large number of professors, students, and friends who had flocked to hear them. The programme included a Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte by Sammartini, played by Miss Beatrice Harrison and Mr. York Bowen, who also joined forces in Mr. Bowen's Sonata in A major. Mr. Bowen also contributed a selection of pianoforte solos by Debussy, Bax, Frank Bridge, and Palmgren. M. Mischa Leon gave a remarkable recital of some fifteen songs in about half that number of languages, and his contribution to the music of the evening with Mr. Harold Craxton at the pianoforte will live long in the memory of those present. Dr. Richards, the president, made a short speech between the two parts, and intimated that this was the last time he would speak as president of the Club, as his term of office closed with the year. The remarkable revival which the Club has had since he was elected president two years ago is due very largely to his energy and initiative, and it is hoped that the standard now reached will be maintained in future years.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

An event of outstanding interest was the private dress rehearsal on Friday, November 24, of Qualis, a one-Act opera by A. Davies Adams, a pupil of Dr. Vaughan Williams and holder of the Signor Foli Scholarship. The work deals with an incident in a country village during the Napoleonic wars, and contains an English folk-dance based on traditional steps. The score is written for a small orchestra, including a pianoforte and harp. Story, setting, and music are essentially English, and the producers, singers, and orchestra were all R.C.M. students.

M. J.

WAR MEMORIAL

On November 10 the Memorial to the members of the staff and students of the Royal College of Music who had fallen in the War, was unveiled by Lord Justice Younger. The following thirty-eight names are inscribed on the tablet, which is in the vestibule:

PRO PATRIA

Arthur Armstrong-Dash	Arthur Clements Heberden
Rupert Borowski	Herbert Noël Hosking
Gilbert Hearn Breach	Eli Hudson
Eric Brown	Joseph Knowles Ireland
George Burchell	Harry Dukinfield Jones
George Sainton Kaye	Claud Percy Mackness
Butterworth	Edward Mason
Philip Evershed Chapman	Albert Midgley
Donald John Stuart	Alfred George Millard
Chapman	Ralph Windsor Parker
Rohan Clensy	Harold William Pickett
Ernest Coster	Henry Pycock
Charles Dixon	Harry Retford
Roger Macdonnell Evanson	Eric Walter Roper
Wilfred Rupert	Leonard Sadgrove
Bucknall Eyre	Kenneth Bruce Stuart
Ernest Bristow Farrar	William Hibbert Wanklyn
Seymour Thomas Goodwin	Francis Purcell Warren
Adolphe Goossens	Arthur Benjamin Wilkinson
Wilfrid John Hare	Cecil Keith Foyle Wright
John Hatchman

Among the best-known names included in the list are those of G. S. K. Butterworth, Rohan Clensy, Ernest Farrar, Adolphe Goossens, Eli Hudson, and Edward Mason.

In unveiling the tablet, Sir Robert Younger spoke only a few words, and then the company went into the concert-hall, where the students were already gathered. The orchestra, under Dr. Adrian C. Boult, played the Funeral March composed by Sir Charles Stanford for Sir Henry Irving's production of Tennyson's Becket. After this the audience sang Parry's Jerusalem.

Sir Robert Younger then read the names of the fallen, and delivered a brief address in which he spoke of the readiness of musicians to answer the call of duty, dwelling on the fact that to those of artistic temperament the horrors of war were perhaps more real than to others. He said that though we all prayed that the call to duty would never come again in the same shape to any of us, yet we might be sure musicians would always be found to answer it as readily as any of their fellow citizens. In this way they would most fittingly honour the memory of the dead.

The ceremony concluded with the singing of Vaughan Williams's setting of For all the Saints.

Many distinguished musicians were present, apart from those more intimately connected with the Royal College of Music.

A. K.

A course of five lectures, with musical illustrations, on 'Some Operatic Studies,' will be given at the University of London, South Kensington, by Sir Frederick Bridge, on November 15, December 6, 1922, and on February 7, March 7, and May 2, 1923. Admission will be by ticket, for which application should be made to the Academic Registrar, University of London, South Kensington, S.W.7.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths:

WILLIAM BAINES, on November 6. We cannot do better than quote Dr. Eaglefield Hull's tribute, which appeared in the Morning Post of November 15:

'The death of Mr. William Baines removes from us one who, had he lived, was destined to make a great mark on music. Already—he was only twenty-three—his contribution to pianoforte and other music is of considerable importance and very great value. His published compositions include a long piece, entitled Paradise Gardens, written in the pleasure grounds of this name at York, a set of remarkable Preludes, four Poems, a bundle of Coloured Leaves, some Silver Points, three pieces entitled Milestones, and a couple of pieces called Tides. He wrote chamber music, songs, and 'cello pieces, in which direction I have had few opportunities for judging of his genius; but of his extraordinary pianoforte feeling I have never had any doubt. I make bold to place his skill in this direction in the direct line of John Field, Chopin, and Scriabin. Although he had a few lessons in playing at various times, he was in every respect a self-taught musician in composition. His playing of his own works, although somewhat rough, was always characteristic and masterly in its own way—that of genuine expression. Baines had a sweet, lovable disposition, without the slightest touch of vanity.'

HARRY COLLINGWOOD BANKS, on November 14, aged sixty-one. Educated at Christ's Hospital, he proceeded to the Royal Academy of Music, where he studied under Sir George Macfarren. At the age of nineteen he became organist of Christ's Hospital and Christ Church, Newgate Street, E.C. He was organist of Alexandra Palace for six years, and frequently gave recitals on Sunday afternoons at the Royal Albert Hall.

APPLEBY MATTHEWS'S CONCERT AT PARIS

Opportunities for hearing British music being very few at Paris, Mr. Appleby Matthews's orchestral concert, given at the Salle Gaveau on October 31, with the co-operation of the Concerts-Lamoureux, might have been expected to arouse far greater and widespread interest than it actually did. The programme, consisting of Elgar's first Symphony, Holst's Beni-Mora, Bantock's Overture The Pierrot of the Minute, Goossens's Philipp II. Overture, and smaller works by Butterworth and Grainger, was sufficiently representative and unfamiliar to be deemed worthy of special notice. Arriving at Paris a few days after the concert, I was able to ascertain that the impression created had been on the whole favourable, but limited to a very small fraction of the public.

What happened is that a great part of the public was not reached by the announcements of the concert. Let it be said frankly that the ground had not been prepared, the concert was inadequately advertised, and other mistakes must have occurred, for I met the musical critic of a big Paris daily who told me that neither programme nor Press tickets had been received at his newspaper's office. Considering the scarcity of the notices which I found in the daily Press, I should not be surprised if this was but one case among many. Perhaps the organizers of the concert were not able to secure expert advice, for certain things were overlooked which could quite easily have been done and to good purpose. For instance, there exists at Paris a weekly paper, Le Guide du Concert, whose object is to announce not only the programmes of all forthcoming concerts, but the useful analytical and biographical notices. This being the very purpose for which the paper exists, it stands to reason that the editor is eager to receive information in good time. The proper thing to do if one wants a concert to be well-noticed in its columns is to provide the necessary material—a fact of which any competent organizer is aware. But even if this is not done, the concert giver should at least communicate programmes well in advance—say, in a case like the present, at least a fortnight.

Not so long ago, as I happen to know, the editor wrote to England in order to secure notices referring to forthcoming British works. But with regard to Mr. Appleby Matthews's concert nothing appeared but the barest statement of the programme. And I discovered other instances of inadequate advertising.

It is a great pity, for, admitting that the interest evinced in France towards British music is not so great as it might be, ventures such as Mr. Appleby Matthews's might, if properly conducted in all respects, do a great deal of good; if not, they will merely make the situation appear worse than it really is—in fact, actual harm may be done.

The few Press notices which I have succeeded in collecting are not enough to enable me to form a proper estimate of the impression created by the works which Mr. Appleby Matthews introduced, and most people I met had heard nothing of the concert. In Le Ménestrel a writer who signs himself 'A. S.' begins his notice with the remark that the British works performed at Paris are always of inferior order, and that none of the really good ones have so far been performed.

'Why [he asks] are we not given Holst's Planets, or a work of Goossens's maturity, or something by Bliss? What we have heard so far is quite respectable, but too directly under the influence of non-British models.' On the other hand, in Comedia, an article unsigned but presumably by a certain young French composer of unquestionable merit, contains a measure of praise for most on the works performed.

The musical periodicals containing notices of the concert are not available at the time of writing. Should any remarks worth noting appear, they will be reproduced in next month's 'Music in the Foreign Press.'

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

London Concerts

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The season of the London Symphony Orchestra opened on October 23, when the programme contained no novelty, for the Szymanovsky piece originally promised was postponed to the second concert. The soloist was Mr. Albert Sammons, whose performance of Mozart's Violin Concerto in G major was supremely artistic. The concert began with a performance of Brahms's Variations on a Theme of Haydn. Mr. Albert Coates conducted.

At the second concert, on November 6, the Szymanovsky incidental music to Molière's Mandragore was duly performed. Written for a very small orchestra, it was hardly worth while keeping eighty-five members on the unemployed list while it was being performed. It is quite a harmless musical jest, with free use of all the common clichés of ultra-modern music. The point of it, however, was not very clear without a knowledge of the text. Does the last piece represent a farmyard, or does it not? Mr. Harold Bauer gave a masterly performance of the Brahms D minor Concerto for pianoforte. I think it may be said without exaggeration that it has never been made to sound so human all through. The accompaniment was in places somewhat heavy. Mr. Coates's reading of Also sprach Zarathustra was extremely picturesque. A. K.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

The programme of the Queen's Hall Symphony Orchestra on October 28 contained no absolute novelty, but Gustav Holst's Saint Paul's Suite for strings, which was written for the orchestra of St. Paul's Girls' School, to which it was dedicated, was unfamiliar. It is a series of dance pieces: Jig, Ostinato, Intermezzo, and Finale (the Dargason). In the last-named the handling of the bagpipes tune is very happy, and the first movement is really jolly. The Suite as a whole suffers from a slight lack of rhythmical contrast. It was exceedingly well played under the conductorship of the composer.

The soloist was M. Sapellnikov, who played Tchaikovsky's second Concerto, which is not very often heard.

The fact that the programme of the concert on November 11 bore no reference to Armistice Day is explained by the more or less commemorative scheme of the Sunday concert given the next day. The programme was entirely familiar. The soloist was Miss Myra Hess, who played Bach's D minor Pianoforte Concerto and César Franck's Symphonic Variations. Joseph Silk's Fairy Tale made pleasant hearing. Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony was very finely played, as if everybody really believed in it; when so played it has an unsuspected amount of vitality still. A. K.

HAROLD BAUER

Apart from his appearance with our foremost orchestras, Mr. Harold Bauer has been heard twice in persona and once in absentia, by which I mean that his rendering of Saint-Saëns's second Pianoforte Concerto was heard at Queen's Hall on Friday, October 27, on the Duo-Art pianoforte, accompanied by the Queen's Hall Orchestra under Sir Henry Wood. It took a few minutes to get accustomed to hearing the sounds proceeding from a pianoforte with no visible human agency. The only non-mechanical part of the process was the appearance of the gentleman who fixed the roll in its proper place.

We had a very faithful reproduction of the artist's style, except for just those little shades of colour which are heard from a living player. An adventitious interest was added to the performance by wondering whether or no the pianist would come in at the right moment after the tutti, or whether the orchestra would come in where it should do after a solo passage. But in all respects the timing was impeccable. We reflected that to direct an orchestra in these conditions must require a new kind of technique on the part of the conductor. The performance showed that a great advance has been made in the perfecting of the instrument; whether it will become popular as part of a concert programme remains to be proved.

At his recital on Armistice Day Mr. Bauer showed that since he was last heard here he has lost none of the admirable solidity of his style, and has gained in lightness and charm. A. K.

KREISLER'S RECITAL

On October 27 Kreisler gave his only recital at Queen's Hall. He was in splendid form, but the one thing that marred our enjoyment was the feeling of regret that we never hear Kreisler nowadays play the great masterpieces with orchestra. His programme included the Viotti Concerto in A, and he almost persuaded us that the slow movement was great music. Similarly he almost made us think that Beethoven's Violin Sonata (Op. 30, No. 2) deserves a higher place in the list than is usually accorded to it. The rest of the programme was made up of small pieces, of which it can only be said that they were played to perfection. To my own personal taste the playing of Mozart's Rondo from the Haffner Suite and one of the Hungarian Dances of Brahms reached the high-water mark. A. K.

A NEW DALE SONATA

On October 27, at Wigmore Hall, Mr. Rowsby Woolf and Mr. York Bowen played a new Violin Sonata by Benjamin Dale. It is in two movements, and is throughout pensive rather than robust. The second movement is a theme with variations, and here we have a good deal of variety. As in the well-known case of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Trio, the last variation is practically an independent, fully-developed movement, in which occurs some of the best music of the whole work. The chief defect of the Sonata, which has a good deal of charm and some fine workmanship, is that the composer remains till nearly the close in the same reflective mood. A. K.

MITJA NIKISCH

Mr. Mitja Nikisch gave his only pianoforte recital this season at Queen's Hall on November 2. The principal item was Brahms's Sonata in F minor. There can be little doubt that he has a special intellectual sympathy with Brahms, for this was a singularly mature and well-balanced performance—serious, but not unduly austere, and without the hard, dry tone which a great many pianists think it necessary to adopt in playing Brahms, imagining the sounds they are producing are as sombre and rich as they should be. Mr. Nikisch's Chopin playing is very brilliant, but not convincing to the same extent as his Brahms playing.

A. K.

MISS ZIFADO AND MR. ASHMOOR BURCH

On November 2 Miss Zifado and Mr. Ashmoor Burch gave a recital at Wigmore Hall. Miss Zifado is a young soprano with a pure, clear voice, which is unusually well produced, and she sings with considerable charm and sense of style. This was shown to the greatest advantage in the series of airs from Mozart's Figaro. It is not common to find so young a singer in such sympathy with the classics. Miss Zifado also sang songs of Hugo Wolf and others in the more modern idioms with unaffected grace, but at present her command of vocal colour is somewhat limited. This is on the whole to be regarded as a merit, for so many young singers nowadays are apt to put the cart before the horse, and start colouring the voice before there is a voice to colour. Mr. Ashmoor Burch also sang very pleasantly, and his voice is excellently produced. Both concert-givers were pupils of Mr. Herman Klein.

A. K.

THE LENER QUARTET

The Lener Quartet gave two concerts on November 4 and 11. At the former the combination was heard in the Phantasy Quartet of Eugene Goossens. It is in the conventional sense of the word more 'grateful' music than are some of his advanced compositions. The performance was beautifully finished.

At the concert on November 11 the novelty was the Serenade Trio for two violins and a viola, by Kodály. It is not at all advanced music, nor characteristically Hungarian, but is very pleasant to listen to.

The characteristics of the Lener Quartet's playing are by now sufficiently familiar, but the extraordinary clarity of the C sharp minor Posthumous Quartet at the second concert deserves special record.

A. K.

WOMEN COMPOSERS

The Society of Women Composers gave a concert of works by its members at Messrs. Novello's rooms, in connection with the Efficiency Club, on November 3. The programme included a movement from Dame Ethel Smyth's String Quartet and Katharine Eggar's Pianoforte Quintet, which are familiar. Among the lesser-known works were a pleasing song by Margaret Rate, sung by Miss Millicent Russell, and three unusually agreeable pianoforte pieces (Minuet, Gavotte, and Gigue) played by the composer, Miss Kathleen Richards. Miss Dora White's recitations with music are a fairly successful attempt to tackle a difficult problem, and Miss Alma Godfrey's Five Songs of Sappho, with accompaniment for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, show a considerable advance on her previous work. The six Irish folk-songs arranged for voice, violin, and violoncello by Joan Spink, well preserve the national characteristics, and the two-part songs by Jane Joseph are well adapted for young people, without being too child-like. The level of the music produced was on the whole higher than that of the performances.

A. K.

REBECCA CLARKE'S TRIO

At the concert given by Miss Marjorie Hayward, Miss May Mukle, and Miss Myra Hess at Wigmore Hall on November 3, a new Trio for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello by Rebecca Clarke was played for the first time in England. It is much influenced by Debussy and Ravel, yet bears the mark of a personal style in the making. The interest is kept alive throughout by well-marked themes and strong workmanship. There is passionate feeling in every section, and even had it been the work of a man, it would be called a virile effort. The performance was excellent, as was that of Trios by Mozart and Ravel which occupied the rest of the programme.

A. K.

THE ARNOLD BAX CONCERT

It is raking up an old story to dwell upon the advisability or the reverse of devoting an entire concert to the works of one composer, but in this instance the hero of the adventure has come singularly well out of the ordeal; owing to the unusual variety of the works included in the programme; and his publishers, Messrs. Murdoch, who organized the concert at Queen's Hall on November 13, are to be doubly congratulated on its success, and on being able to present such a programme drawn exclusively from their own publications. Neither trouble nor expense had been spared in securing this satisfactory result. The Goossens Orchestra with its conductor, the Oriana Madrigal Society under Mr. C. Kennedy Scott, Miss Harriet Cohen, Mr. Lionel Tertis, and Mr. John Coates constituted a formidable array of performers of the foremost rank. Even the programme itself was issued in a sumptuous form, and, what is perhaps equally important, was issued in advance.

Without injustice to other participants, it may be claimed that three events of the evening stand out prominently as in themselves sufficient to make the concert memorable. The first was a performance such as we have not had before of The Garden of Fand, revealing all the fascination of its orchestral texture. The second was the choral virtuosity with which the extremely difficult Mater Ora Filium, for double choir unaccompanied, was given by the Oriana singers. It is one of Bax's finest compositions, though in a branch of music in which his mastery was until recently unsuspected. The cumulative effect of the elaborate 'Allelujas' was magnificently impressive. The third was Lionel Tertis's playing of the Viola Concerto, now called a Phantasy for viola and orchestra. It was a pity that the orchestra was not more fully occupied, for, returning after a long interval, it did not infuse the same spirit into the performance of an arrangement of the pianoforte piece, Mediterranean, which concluded the programme at a very late hour. The Oriana singers, however, showed no signs of flagging when they supplemented their earlier triumph with the two other carols Of a Rose I sing and Now is the time of Christymas.

Miss Harriet Cohen is a pianist of great musical intelligence as well as technical attainments, but even in the smaller concert-halls the massive Sonata in G taxes her physical strength to the utmost. At Queen's Hall its demands went a little further, and could be met only by occasional sacrifices of rhythm. She was more successful with the smaller pieces, such as Lullaby and Burlesque. Mr. John Coates's contribution to the programme was, as always, entirely admirable.

The effect of the concert as a whole must inevitably be to consolidate Bax's reputation with the general public, in which connection it was gratifying to note the crowded condition of those portions of the hall which are generally held to be the barometer of public interest. The selection of works was also well calculated to convey a much better impression of Bax's status than has hitherto been feasible. The inclusion of a Pianoforte Sonata was perhaps open to question, for no extended work in one instrumental colouring could possibly hold its own in a programme which included the multicoloured Garden of Fand. The smaller pianoforte pieces and songs are of course not open to the same objection, as the listener readily adjusts himself to the enjoyment of a group of miniatures between larger works. One point was definitely established: Bax's feeling for beauty in line and texture is of a kind that does not quickly satiate.

E. E.

BAX'S NEW VIOLA SONATA

Madame Adelina Délines gave proof of unusual disinterestedness in making her vocal recital at Æolian Hall on November 17 the occasion for the first performance, by Mr. Lionel Tertis and the composer, of Arnold Bax's new Sonata for viola and pianoforte. Despite a goodly selection of songs it was inevitable that interest should be concentrated upon the new work. The Sonata followed the Concerto, and was completed in the current year. Like a good deal of Bax's recent work it shows at the same time more breadth and more concentration than the compositions by which he was known until three or four years ago. There is evidence of a single train of thought pervading the work, which was allowed to come to the surface and disport itself in the middle movement, but is elsewhere subdued. This middle movement, a Scherzo, might be termed an essay in diabolism, and, as frequently happens when a composer expresses such a mood, the hearer is left in some doubt as to whether its ingredients include a proportion of anger or merely of irony. The other sections imply that there may be disillusion in a purely lyrical sense, but no ill-feeling beyond a gentle sub-acidity. As a whole the work belongs to Bax's best chamber music, in which his personality is always most intimately expressed. It is needless to add it was beautifully played. E. E.

THE KENDALL STRING QUARTET

The Kendall String Quartet sought to add interest to its programme by the inclusion of a work new to us, composed by Madame Taillefer—the youngest of the redoubtable 'Paris Six' group. The novelty served its purpose. It provided the variety which is the salt of all good concerts. Unfortunately, as in the case of salt, quality and quantity are even more important than the crude fact of its presence or absence. And with all due regard for Madame Taillefer's aims and good intentions, the seasoning of her Quartet is not of the kind that will please unspoiled palates. Her musical ideas have a simplicity that would be disarming if it were not accompanied by pretentiousness. After all, it is not so easy to express a very simple thought in a very obscure manner. It is not enough to know the illusionist's patter. His apparatus and technical skill are indispensable if the trick—even the most elementary—is to be performed to the satisfaction of the audience. Madame Taillefer does not appear to have gone very far in her initiation up to the present. This, however, does not mean that her quartet is not somehow promising. In these days of exceedingly wise children it is refreshing to meet with a grown-up that has not quite foresworn directness and plain thinking.

The performance, if not brilliant, was undoubtedly adequate. B. V.

THE FLONZALEY QUARTET

The visit of the Flonzaley Quartet was marked by an event of considerable significance—the performance of Mr. Arnold Bax's Quartet. It has been said that the players by their choice paid a handsome compliment to British music in general and to Mr. Bax in particular. May I suggest that there was nothing especially 'complimentary' about this performance? The Flonzaley would not be the finest Quartet in existence if its members were not interested in modern music. It is as unfair to them as to Mr. Bax to suggest that there was a desire to curry favour with the British public by playing a British work. Of course such things have been known to happen, but it is not very difficult to discriminate between an unscrupulous attempt to enlist the sympathy of the audience and a performance such as that of the Flonzaley Quartet at Wigmore Hall. The Bax work received all the exquisite care and finish which characterize the Quartet's performances of the classics. Only appreciation and understanding of the music could give such admirable results. It is quite possible that the players began by testing various samples of British works—not in order to secure suffrages but out of a genuine desire to keep in touch with recent developments of musical art. They found in time a work which appealed to them—as it must to all musicians of unbiassed judgment—and they played it with that spiritual grace which is their speciality. Such a performance will not easily be forgotten. B. V.

ANTON MAASKOFF

The two recitals given last month by Mr. Anton Maaskoff have shown pretty conclusively that the young violinist's style is not far from complete maturity. Mr. Maaskoff gave considerable promise from the first. As a student under Dr. Brodsky, at Manchester, he exhibited very unusual powers of technique, which, coupled with natural vivacity of temperament, marked him as one of the most brilliant students of an institution which included Miss Kontrovitch, Mr. Blinder (at present a professor of the conservatoire at Odessa), and Mr. Catterall, leader of the Hallé Orchestra. In later years Mr. Maaskoff's recitals in London have been so many landmarks on the road towards self-realisation—the last, and often most trying, stage in the evolution of the performer. At present the most fascinating quality of his playing is its perfect competence or aptness. The player gives the impression of doing the one thing he was born to do. He is as sure of himself in the midst of most trying technical passages as amongst the easiest of melodies. Difficulty—the chordal difficulty of Bach or the difficulty of 'runs' in music of a more brilliant category—can never perturb him in the least. The only feature which on some rare occasions is not absolutely perfect is the intonation. This is due probably to the intense feeling which causes him to relax for a moment the inexorable control of intonation of which only mature performers realise the full value. But maturity in his case is very near, and with it, even this slight flaw will undoubtedly disappear. B. V.

ADILA FACHIRI

One could hardly help feeling that Madame Fachiri, in choosing three big Concertos for her first programme, had slightly over-rated her own strength. Her greatest admirers will not venture to maintain that she ranks amongst the giants of mere technique—the Kubeliks, the Ondriceks, and the Thomsons. If Kreisler and Ysaÿe seldom attempt more than two concertos in one evening, Madame Fachiri we believe would have been wiser to follow that example. Your mere technician has, on the whole, an easy task. He has trained his hands to perform certain tricks which they will do in the light of day or in the dark of night. So soon as the hand is trained his mind has done its work. During the preliminary stage he must think and play. Once the trick is learned he needs only to play. A violinist of temperament and intelligence, on the other hand, can never afford the luxury of a mind asleep when playing is in question. Even technical feats must be controlled by thought—since they are not an end in themselves. The hand cannot be trusted to 'repeat' a certain experiment ad nauseam, as every performance is like a new adventure in which material form is given to a conception of the mind. It was no doubt owing to mental fatigue that Madame Fachiri's performances of a Mozart, the Beethoven, and the Brahms Concerti were somewhat unequal. At best, as in the slow movement of the Beethoven, there was nobility of tone, sweetness, accuracy, and restraint. Even her worst, however, was above mere competence.

At her second recital she played an unhackneyed Bach programme with understanding and sympathy. In the Concerto for two violins she was supported by her sister, Miss Jelly d'Aranyi, whose playing matched Madame Fachiri's to perfection. The Chaconne found her, we thought, a trifle tired. But the technically less exacting Concerto in E brought out again her best qualities. In this work the organ part—a modern interpolation—was omitted, and the accompaniment left to the orchestra. In a comparatively small hall the organ is undesirable. Even the smallest orchestra in such cases gives all the assistance that is necessary—and more: for orchestras, like children, can occasionally produce a volume of noise that is utterly out of proportion to their size. B. V.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Melba, on November 12, at the Albert Hall, which was full, sang extracts from Faust and La Bohème, and a 'mixed bag' of songs ranging from Duparc's beautiful Chanson Triste to poorish stuff. But Melba sang—that was the essential. And though Melba has been singing now for more than forty years, it was by no means the spectre of a famous voice that we heard. Indeed, in spite of the fog, she sang, to my mind, actually better than I remember before (which is to say, within the past ten or twelve years).

But why does Melba sing English like a foreigner? Because she feels that the more incisive consonants and the less open vowels would arrest the sensuous tonal flow—or because she has sung so much in Italian that Italian is second nature?

Mr. Bertram Binyon sang admirably at his Wigmore Hall recital, but it seems generally agreed that he has a 'small' voice. A good deal of illusion enters into discussions of big and small voices. We know of 'big' voices that have a shattering effect on the front row of the stalls and fade away into hollowness beyond. And there are 'small' voices that nicely manage to float without effort to the furthest corner of the top gallery. What then does 'size' matter? It is the carrying power of a voice that counts, and the size of a voice is truly to be judged by its ability to fill the hall wherein the singer chooses to be heard. Well, however 'small' Mr. Binyon's voice is, it was fully adequate, and mightily refreshing it was to hear the well-strung tones of his persuasively sweet tenor, which were perfectly in keeping with the scene. He has a sense of proportion, and does not dream of 'going all out' on every excuse. The programme contained Ravel's dainty set of Greek folk-songs, and songs of Respighi, Santoliquido, and Pizzetti, in which his Italian was like an Italian's.

Miss Ursula Greville sang at Steinway Hall, and something about her singing lingered pleasantly in the memory, for all her faults. She is a light soprano, yet suddenly she displayed a beautiful mixed quality and correspondingly richened colour in a good song of E. L. Bainton, Nightingale near the House. Here she passed as it were from the art of the etcher to that of the painter. More of this elasticity would be welcome from her, for the sort of tone which borrows its principal character from the teeth is apt to sound metallic on certain vowels, and the tendency towards this should be combated by Miss Greville. Without such anxious 'placing' of tone would come a freer and more pleasing use of a telling voice. Her phrasing was indifferent in Felix White's Vespers, but she must be thanked for singing Vaughan Williams's three curiously appealing Merciless Beauty songs, which seem to have been neglected since Steuart Wilson first introduced them. Egon Wellesz's Aurora made the impression merely of a jejune cadenza, and in the difficult execution of it Miss Greville may have been slightly hampered by a cold. But the programme was out-of-the-way, and proved an ingenious mind. Some amount of technical reconstruction, and this interesting singer might have great success.

Mr. Vladimir Rosing sang at Queen's Hall. He is essentially a character-singer, and his success varies immensely with different types of song. We may be really moved by this, and by that left stone-cold. He banks on his personality, and on capriciously personal readings; perhaps it is his hearer's fault if sometimes he appears to be beating the air, but if a singer will be so individual he cannot expect everyone to go all the way with him every time. Anyhow, no one need want to hear Grieg's Romance or the Savishna and Death's Serenade of Moussorgsky better sung.

Miss Gladys Moger gave at Æolian Hall a concert notable for some of the less-known songs of Debussy, including Three Poems of Mallarmé. She has a good voice, and sings with sincerity and refinement. Her tonal emission is not always so free as it might be, and this is strange, for her breath control is good. The hearer was conscious of her effort to mould her naturally beautiful speech, an effort most noticeable on the less open vowels. This artificial pre-occupation often checked the tonal flow, and caused her intonation to suffer under pressure. These faults corrected, Miss Moger would be a thoroughly engaging singer.

Miss Doreen Kendall, a newcomer, is to be congratulated on much good singing at her recital at Æolian Hall. Her voice is light but agreeable; she sings with musical judgment.

Miss Dorothy Gray was heard at Wigmore Hall. It was singing of an aggressively frontal kind. Consonantal clarity is one of the merits of this style, but this was hardly compensation enough for the lack of the generous tone that results from apposition of a lax jaw and a widely-open throat.

Madame Celys Beralta sang at Æolian Hall several celebrated coloratura pieces. Her singing was hardly delicate enough for this style; still, a certain brittleness and agility made their effect. Her Caro nome was not strictly according to Verdi. She was much more stirring with a racy ditty in the Spanish folk-song vein, sung as an encore.

Miss Laura Evans-Williams sang at Wigmore Hall on the same day as Miss Olga Alexeeva at Æolian Hall, but at neither concert was it possible to escape from false intonation. Miss Evans-Williams has a fine voice, which she unfortunately lets sag, with the effect that her phrases often peter out weakly. She chose much good music, but the arrangement was bad.

Madame Tetrizzini too had a cold at her Albert Hall concert, but nevertheless sang with her accustomed brilliance and delightful ease. A tenor, Attilio Baggioni, appeared under her wing. He sings as well, and finds singing as easy an accomplishment as was to be expected from a young gentleman produced in these circumstances; and moreover, he mercifully spared us any Neapolitan antics.

Mr. Roland Hayes, the African tenor, wooed and won the favour of a big audience at Wigmore Hall with that famous mellifluous voice of his, which is so naturally beautiful, so well trained, and used with such pretty taste. The Woodland Solitude of Brahms pleased so well that it had to be repeated, but where is the true heart of this song if the singer is all concentrated on the amiable production of sweet sounds?

Mr. Yosie Fujiwara was terribly hampered by a large number of crabbed European languages at his song recital at Wigmore Hall, and it was a pity he didn't translate all his texts into Japanese, which sounds well (he gave us samples). Not even at Wigmore Hall had we ever heard such strange French. Nevertheless there was an attractive art in this singing. It was very narrow in range, but in that range there were delicacy, fine finish (we are now putting aside phonetics), and sensitive gradation. He is a tenor.

Miss Sybil Cropper made an uncommon concert by sandwiching groups of Wolf's songs with groups by Josef Holbrooke, and her voice was well suited to the intimate Steinway Hall. The vocal flow, while not generous, is just and dignified. The Anacreon's Grave of Wolf and Holbrooke's pretty song Where be you going? came nicely within its limits. Miss Cropper is more than a singer. She is a musician, and the listener is almost entirely occupied with her interpretation. She is still not at her zenith. What she does not so far accomplish is to dazzle the hearer at the given moment with the power of fully stressing the high lights of song.

It was a pleasure to hear Mr. Brabazon Lowther sing at Wigmore Hall, thanks to the beauty of his English diction. One may not care much for the basic quality of his voice, which is too heavy for a baritone, too restricted downwards for a bass. Nor do I care for his voice 'under pressure' or in declamation. And he is apt to overload his art. For instance, the end of the old French song Viens, aurore, was deluged under his stream of tone. But how much of good singing is good speaking! Chi sa parlare, &c. Mr. Lowther is a master of lingual shades, and in English his polished diction actually invested the voice with a hitherto unremarked beauty. Such a singer (the sort is very rare) brings home to us an inkling of the infinite musical variety of the English tongue. Some of Granville Bantock's Songs from the Chinese were particularly well sung.

H. J. K.

CHORAL CONCERTS

Two excellent Yorkshire choirs—the Cecilian Glee Society (mixed voices) and the Cleveland Harmonic (men's voices) from Middlesbrough—made their first appearance in London at Æolian Hall on November 18, conducted by Mr. Gavin Kay. They sang Madrigals by Wilbye and Gibbons, and part-songs by Elgar, Mackenzie, Stanford, Bantock, Dunhill, Gerrard Williams, and Vaughan Williams. Both choirs showed the result of a very high state of training, their tone-quality, attack, phrasing, and expression being generally first-rate; and if in the matter of intonation they were occasionally a trifle uncertain, the cause may be attributed largely to the exacting character of some of the music rendered.

A commendable feature was the unobtrusive method of the conductor, who dispensed with a baton, and appeared to obtain all that he desired with very little effort. Mr. Dunhill, who was present, conducted his own music. Miss Gladys Moger sang the solo in Elgar's To Women, and Miss May Mukle played solos.

J. E. W.

Owing to the late arrival of our critic's report, we have to limit ourselves to brief mention of two important choral concerts. One is the performance of Elijah with which the Royal Choral Society opened its season on October 21. It has been described as the finest heard in London for many years, and the chief credit goes, of course, to Sir Landon Ronald, the first 'guest-conductor' under the new regime. The other occurred at Queen's Hall on November 8, when Mr. C. Kennedy Scott and the Philharmonic Choir added to their record a most satisfying performance of the Mass in B minor.

Music in the Provinces

BINGLEY.—At the Victoria Hall, on October 18, Miss Florence Tomlinson (a local contralto) gave her first recital. She included a set of songs by Mr. Albert Jowett, who played the accompaniments throughout the recital.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—The most important event of the month was a visit from Mr. Albert Coates to conduct the City Orchestra at its symphony concert on November 8, when he drew from the players some of the finest interpretations we have heard at Birmingham this season. Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony and Scriabin's Poem of Ecstasy were in the programme, and Mr. Leon Goossens was the soloist in an Oboe Concerto by Guilhaud. At the Orchestra's Sunday concerts Dr. Goodey and Miss Dorothy d'Orsay have been the most interesting vocalists. Miss Winifred Browne, an able young pianist with much artistic insight, was heard with the orchestra in Rimsky-Korsakov's Pianoforte Concerto. The Catterall Quartet on October 20 gave one of its series of chamber concerts, and at a mid-day concert the Sheffield String Quartet showed that more than rhythmic zest and big tone are needed to do justice to the early Quartets of Beethoven. On November 9 Mr. H. G. Sear gave a mid-day causerie on Liszt, Miss Marjorie Sotham playing illustrations. The month's recitals have brought Mr. Karl Melene and Miss Vera Gilman (vocalists), Miss Gertrude Fuller (violin), Miss Eva Benson and Miss Denne Parker (vocalists). On Armistice Night the City Orchestra and Choir, with the Victoria Male-Voice Choir, joined forces in a programme which included Stanford's Last Post. Mr. Joseph Lewis conducted, and obtained from the orchestra a well-knit performance of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony. At Walsall a movement towards co-operation between the various concert-giving organizations has matured, and under the auspices of the municipality concerts are to be given on Thursdays and Saturdays at regular intervals. The first of these took place on Saturday, November 4, when the Walsall Philharmonic Society was heard in detached choruses. At Wolverhampton, Vaughan Williams's Sea Symphony has been given. The first performance of the same composer's unaccompanied Mass, announced for November 15—election day—has been postponed to December 6, in Birmingham Town Hall.

BRADFORD.—The central feature of the programme played on October 20 by the Flonzaley Quartet at the subscription chamber concerts was Arnold Bax's Quartet in G. Under the auspices of the St. John's Ambulance Brigade, a concert was given in St. George's Hall, Bradford, on November 1, when the artists were Miss Jelly d'Aranyi, M. Mischa Leon, Mr. Norman Allin, Miss Caroline Hatchard, and Miss Edna Thornton. Mr. Julius Harrison secured an effective, if rather hurried reading of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony at the Bradford Permanent Orchestra concert on November 4. Brahms's second Symphony was played by the Hallé Orchestra, under Mr. Hamilton Harty, at the Bradford Subscription Concert on November 10. Besides music by Fauré, the programme included the second performance in England of Bürger als Edelmann, the new Suite from Strauss's opera.

BRISTOL.—M. Chaliapin gave a song recital in Colston Hall on October 20, accompanied by Max Rabinovitch. On October 31 Miss C. Carter and Miss Bernhardt gave the first of a series of lecture-recitals, designed to encourage the study of the higher forms of music. Clifton Orchestral Society and the local branch of the E.F.D.S. gave illustrations. A recital of works by British composers was given on November 4 in the Victoria Rooms, prefaced by an address by Mr. van der Horst. Pianoforte pieces by York Bowen, Leo Livens, John B. McEwen, Tobias Matthay, Thomas F. Dunhill, Edgar I. Bainton, and Harold Craxton were played by Mr. Adolphe Hallis and Miss McEwan. Miss Dorothy Chalmers played violin music by Rowshy Woof and Benjamin Dale. On November 11 the Grenadier Guards Band, conducted by Lieut. George Miller, played the Scherzo and Finale from Beethoven's fifth Symphony and the Peer Gynt Suite.

BUDLEIGH SALTERTON (Devon).—A newly-formed orchestra, conducted by Mr. H. Hugh Fowler, on November 2 played a Suite for strings by Purcell, a Serenade by Elgar, and Walford Davies's Solemn Melody (with Mr. Stanley Chipperfield at the organ). Frank Bridge's Allegro Marziale for organ and Dvorák's Biblical Songs were also performed, Mr. Percy Bull being the vocalist.

CARDIFF.—The Chamber Music Concerts opened their nineteenth season on October 23, when the Léner Quartet played Dohnányi's Op. 15. Mr. David Clegg inaugurated the new organ in the Capitol on October 29.

EDINBURGH.—On October 25 Miss Theo Hunter and Mr. John Petrie Dunn gave a recital of violin and pianoforte music, including two Brahms Sonatas and Chausson's Poème. Under the auspices of the Classical Concerts the London String Quartet on October 30 opened a week's Beethoven season, playing the Quartets in chronological order. Vocal recitals have been given by Mr. Joseph Hislop, Miss Sheila Macdonald, Miss Margaret Pearl, and Miss Naysmith Young (with Mr. Albert Sammons). The thirty-third season of the Paterson Orchestral Concerts opened on November 13, the conductors being Sir Landon Ronald and Mr. Julius Harrison. The programme was exclusively Wagnerian.

EXETER.—The Philharmonic Concert season opened on October 3 with two pianoforte recitals by Miss Myra Hess, in which she included pieces by Arnold Bax (Midnight in the Ukraine and Nocturne), Frank Bridge (The Dew Fairy, from The Hour-glass), and Walter O'Donnell (Before the Dawn and Lyrical Tone-poem). Before members of the Chamber Music Club, on November 8, a song-recital and lecture on 'Interpretation in Song' was given by Mr. Plunket Greene with Mr. Samuel Liddle at the pianoforte, and assisted by Miss Sybil Eaton (violin). In the course of a tour of Devon and Cornwall, the Kendall String Quartet played at Exeter on November 10 a group of dance forms from Purcell's music to Dioclesian, the Quartet in C sharp minor by Germaine Tailleferre, a group of viola pieces (Miss Dorothy Jones), another of violin pieces (Miss Katharine Kendall) by Jeremiah Clarke, Couperin, and Handel (all accompaniments being played by string trio), Goossens's By the Tarn and Jack o' Lantern, and Smetana's Quartet in E minor.

GILLINGHAM.—The String Quartet (Miss Elsie Dudding, Miss Winifred Kent, Mr. Bernard P. Dudding, and Mr. John W. Francis) opened its season on October 23. Miss Muriel Taylor assisted in Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte Quartet, and in Sonatas.

HALIFAX.—An experimental Sunday concert was held under the auspices of the Halifax Trades and Industrial Council, in conjunction with the Musicians' Union, on November 5. An orchestra, forty strong, conducted by Mr. Willis Wood (conductor of Besses o' th' Barn Band), gave selections from Cavalleria Rusticana.

HULL.—The Janssen Subscription Concerts entered on their nineteenth season on October 21, when the Modern Trio played Pianoforte Trios by Beethoven and Brahms, and Frank Bridge's Fantasia in C minor. In aid of the Hull Philharmonic Society, a chamber concert on October 28 was arranged by Miss Jessie Mayes (pianoforte), who was associated with Miss E. Alexander (first violin), Miss O. Sheffield (second violin), Mr. T. Somerscales (viola), and Mr. Philip Chignell ('cello). They played a Quintet, Op. 1, by Dohnányi. At the Five o' Clock concert on November 1, Miss Julia Johnstone and Miss Avis Benn played a Purcell Sonata for violin and pianoforte, and Miss Etty Ferguson sang songs by Stanford, Parry, Strauss, and Hugo Wolf.—The first of this season's three concerts by the Hull Philharmonic took place on November 9 in the City Hall. Mr. J. W. Hudson conducted Franck's Symphony, also a Wagner programme in which Miss Carrie Tubbs sang Isolda's Death Song.

LEEDS.—The first of three chamber concerts arranged by Miss Kathleen Frise Smith (who played in the Bach Concerto for three pianofortes at the recent Leeds Festival) took place in Albion Hall on October 16, when she was joined by Mr. Arthur Catterall in three Sonatas for pianoforte and violin (Busoni's Op. 36a, César Franck's A major, and Paderewski's Op. 13).—The first of this term's mid-day recitals at Leeds University took the form of a pianoforte recital at which Mr. Stanley Kaye (Sheffield) played B. J. Dale's noteworthy Sonata.—An interesting experiment in popularising orchestral music among the masses is being made at Belgrave Central Hall. For a scheme of six concerts an appeal is made for two thousand patrons at a shilling each. The second concert on October 21 was given by some members of the Leeds Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Bensley Ghent. The Symphony was Schubert's Unfinished, and Miss Kathleen Moorhouse, played in Saint-Saëns's Violoncello Concerto in A minor.—Mr. John Browning's concert party included Michael Head's song-cycle Over the Rim of the Moon in its programme on October 26 at the Leeds Institute.—The Saturday Orchestral Concerts continue to flourish. On October 28 Mr. Eugène Goossens conducted Elgar's Enigma Variations, Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte Concerto (with Miss Lilia Kanevskaya), and the Good-Humoured Ladies Suite (Scarlati-Tommasini). At the next of these concerts, on November 11, Mr. Julius Harrison conducted his own Worcestershire Suite.—In its revised form, The Beggar's Opera held the boards at the Grand Theatre in the last week of October.—Handel's Samson was sung at Oxford Place Chapel on November 4, Mr. Robert Pickard conducting.—Leeds Choral Union, under Dr. Coward, gave a concert-version of Tannhäuser on November 8, in the Town Hall, Mr. Frank Mullings singing in the title-role.—There was no loss on this year's Leeds Festival, and the guarantors will not be called upon.

LIVERPOOL.—On October 24 Miss Eileen Jennings gave a song recital, assisted by Miss Gladys Patchett (violin).—At the opening concert of the Rodewald Society, on October 24, the Catterall Quartet played the Quartet in A by Pizzetti, Joseph Speaight's Shakespearean Sketches, and Brahms's Quartet in C minor.—On October 27 the members of the British Music Society heard the Sidebottom Trio play Cyril Scott's new Pianoforte Trio, the Andante from a Trio by William Fenney, and a Violin Sonata by Purcell.—On October 27 the Sonata for pianoforte and violin by Eugène Goossens was played at the Sandon Studios by Miss Gertrude Newsham and Miss Vera Seward, and Madame Eunice Westhead sang new songs by Norman Peterkin.—Mark Hambourg gave a Chopin recital on October 30.—At the Philharmonic Society's concert on November 1, Gustav Holst's Hymn of Jesus was performed, Dr. Pollitt being the chorus-master and Mr. Albert Coates conducting. Brahms's fourth Symphony and a Suite for strings by Sinigaglia were played by the orchestra, and Miss Maggie Teyte sang songs.—At the Crane Hall evening recital on November 1 Miss Isabel M'Cullagh and Dr. J. E. Wallace played John Ireland's Sonata for violin and pianoforte. In the afternoon M. Voorsanger was the violinist in Brahms's Sonata for the same combination.—On November 6 Dr. Adrian C. Boulton lectured before the Literary and Philosophical Society on 'Musical Appreciation.' He said that in the case of modern music the listener would do best to concentrate on the emotional side of it.—At a meeting of the British Music Society on November 6, the Manchester Wind Quintet played Giles Farnaby's Divisions on Quodling's Delight, Lully's Minuet from Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, the Cebell by Purcell, a Flute Sonata by Bach, a Brahms Clarinet Sonata, and some serious bassoon solos.—At Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch's second chamber concert on November 7 the music played (with original instruments) included a Musette for recorder, viola, and harpsichord, by Couperin, a Fantasy for three viols by Thomas Tomkins, and some Bach harpsichord pieces. On the following day were played Christopher Simpson's Divisions on a ground bass and a Fantasy for five viols by Lupo.—The Welsh Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Hopkin Evans, performed scenes from Hiwatha on November 11, with Miss Elsie Suddaby, Mr. Roland Hayes, and Mr. Herbert Heyner as soloists.—At the Philharmonic Society's concert on November 14 Signor Molinari was the guest-conductor, and his transcription of Vivaldi's Concerto for strings and orchestra, with pianoforte accompaniment, opened the programme. Mr. Harold Bauer was the soloist in Beethoven's Emperor Concerto. Strauss's Death and Transfiguration, Respighi's Fountains of Rome, and Verdi's Overture Sicilian Vespers were played, and the choir sang Parry's There is an Old Belief. Dr. Pollitt conducted.

MANCHESTER.—We regret that our representative's notes have not arrived.

NEWCASTLE.—The d'Oyly Carte Opera Company opened a three weeks' season at the Theatre Royal on October 16.—Under the auspices of the Bach Choir the London String Quartet opened a Beethoven week on October 23, during which were played the whole of the Beethoven Quartets.—On October 26 the Glee and Madrigal Society, numbering sixty voices, sang Prendergast's The Pixies Welcome, Elgar's After many a dusty mile (for male voices), An evening's pastoral by Martin Shaw (also for male voices), and Walmisley's Music all-powerful, Mr. R. W. Clark conducting.—The Philharmonic Orchestra opened its season on October 29, playing Elgar's Cockaigne Overture and a Wagner selection, Mr. Edgar Bainton conducting.—Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay gave a lecture on October 29 at the Stoll Theatre on Old Songs and Ballads.

OXFORD.—Backhaus gave a pianoforte recital on October 18. His modern groups included a Danse d'Olay by Pick-Mangiagalli.—The third series of the subscription concerts opened on October 19, when the orchestra, conducted by Mr. Eugène Goossens, played a Bach Suite in G, Stravinsky's Fireworks, the conductor's By the Tarn, and Vaughan Williams's Pastoral Symphony.—The Finches Club Orchestra on October 22 played Holst's Marching Song and Maurice Besly's transcription of the Adagio and Allegro from Bach's Trio in C minor. Mr. C. E. Harris conducted.—On October 23 Miss Tilly Koenen gave a recital of songs by Miss Amy Hare, who accompanied.—On October 29 the Elizabethan Singers sang Vaughan Williams's The Springtime of the Year, Granville Bantock's Willow, willow, Gustav Holst's Light leaves whisper, Maurice Besly's Sleep, and Dr. Stewart's O the bonny Christ Church Bells, to which Old Tom, playing the Curfew, supplied a drone bass with intent.—Mr. Harold Bauer gave a pianoforte recital on November 3.—On November 4 two members of the Guild of Singers and Players—Margarita Mackerras and F. H. Etcheverria—and half-a-dozen instrumentalists performed Bach's Coffee Cantata (assisted by Mr. N. Merriman), several French and Spanish songs, two songs by Dr. Walker, two by Wolstenholme, and one by Sinclair Logan, Bach's Sonata in E for flute and Pianoforte, and a String Quartet by McEwen.

PORTSMOUTH.—At the first concert of the season, on October 19, the Quartet Players performed Frank Bridge's Phantasy and Dvorák's Op. 87 for pianoforte and strings, and Major R. Bullin gave explanatory information.—The Philharmonic Society opened its fortieth season on October 19 with a Wagner orchestral programme and a performance of Saint-Saëns's Concerto in C minor, with Mr. York Bowen as pianist. Miss Margaret Balfour was the vocalist.—Miss Rowena Franklin gave a violin recital on October 21.—On November 5 Southsea Symphony Orchestra played an Overture in D, by H. J. Hickey, solo oboe of the orchestra.—On November 8 the Temperance Choral Union, conducted by Mr. T. G. Plater, sang 'The Death Croon,' from Songs of the Hebrides, Birds are Singing (female voices), by Robertson, and Whittaker's Bobby Shaftoe.

ST. LEONARDS.—Mr. Dan Godfrey, jun., has settled quickly into his stride as conductor of music for the Municipality. The winter season opened on October 28 with a two-concert Festival of British music, having Butterworth's Shropshire Lad and German's Welsh Rhapsody as its principal features.—The season's programme offers the fourth and sixth Symphonies of Glazounov, Borodin's second, Bantock's Hebridean, and Vaughan Williams's London Symphony.—That Mr. Godfrey has the rare knack of accompanying concerts was evident in the first half of November, when no less than eight examples came under his beat. The soloists were Mr. John Davies, in Max Bruch in G minor, Mr. John Pauer in the Grieg, Mr. Arnold Trowell in Haydn and Schumann, Mr. Norman Attwell in the Böellmann Variations, Miss Edna Iles in an impressive reading of Rachmaninov's new Concerto in D minor (the alleged first provincial performance), and M. Arthur de Greef in Franck's Symphonic Variations and Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia.

SHEFFIELD.—The Misses Foxon's concerts were resumed on October 18, when pieces for two pianofortes were played. Included were Debussy's Petite Suite, Saint-Saëns's Variations on a Beethoven Theme, and two numbers from Rachmaninov's Second Suite, Op. 17.—At a pianoforte recital on November 7 Mr. Harold Bauer played his own transcription of Bach's Partita in B flat for harpsichord, Beethoven's Sonata, Op. 110, and Moussorgsky's Suite, Pictures at an Exhibition.—Mrs. Dorothea Rodgers gave a song recital on November 9.

SHIRRHAMPTON.—During a three days' Festival at Shirehampton, which opened on October 26, the performers were the local Choral Society, Avonmouth Choral Society, and the Drama League. On the first and third days three of Mr. P. Napier Miles's operatic works were performed. These were Markheim, which won the Carnegie award in 1921, a one-Act piece, Queen Rosamond, and Music comes, a choral dance for tenor solo and female chorus. The second day's programme included madrigals and pianoforte music from the Elizabethan period, a Battle song-cycle, part-songs (Nocturne and Ode to Maia), and selections from the opera, Westward Ho! by Mr. Napier Miles. Mr. Miles and Mr. Powell conducted.

WAKEFIELD.—On Saturday, October 21, the programme at the Wakefield Musical Evening, in the Music Saloon, was sustained by the Flonzaley Quartet, which played the E minor Rasoumovsky Quartet and Schumann in A minor. But it was in two movements by Borodin that the players revealed their true powers.

YORK.—A demonstration song-recital by gramophone was given at St. William's College on October 21. The songs were those recorded by the late Gervase Elwes, and comprised examples from Vaughan Williams, Quilter, Graham Peel, Frank Bridge, and Dvorák. As a recollection of a great singer, the reproductions were keenly appreciated by a large audience, which also enjoyed records of the playing of the London String Quartet.—At a concert in York Art Gallery, on October 29, the Lord Mayor of the city (Alderman W. H. Birch) not only acted as chairman, but also sang John Ireland's Sea Fever.

MUSIC IN IRELAND

The Saturday evening Symphony Concerts at Belfast had an auspicious opening on October 21, when Mr. Godfrey Brown presented an attractive programme, the most favoured number being Mozart's Symphony in C.

The Theatre of the Royal Dublin Society having been requisitioned by the Irish Free State, the committee of the Society has taken over the Abbey Theatre for the winter musical recitals. The first recital was given on November 6 by the Brodsky Trio, with Dr. Espo-ito.

The first concert of the season by the Belfast Philharmonic Society took place in Ulster Hall on October 27, and was a huge success, the chief item being Sir Ivor Atkins's cantata A Hymn of Faith, conducted by the composer, who received an enthusiastic ovation. Three songs by Sir Ivor Atkins were also sung, the composer playing the accompaniments. Mr. Godfrey Brown was an alert conductor of the two orchestral items, Beethoven's Egmont Overture and Finlandia by Sibelius, and Mr. J. H. MacBratney was a sympathetic accompanist both at the organ and the pianoforte.

Notwithstanding the disturbed state of the country Dubliners afforded liberal patronage to the Carl Rosa Company, which opened a three weeks' engagement at the Gaiety Theatre on November 6.

On November 13 Miss Maude Davin, with Mr. Michael Gallighan as vocalist, gave an interesting violin recital at the Abbey Theatre, displaying fine technique, especially in the Elgar Sonata. Miss Myra Hess drew a crowded audience to her pianoforte recital on November 13, under the auspices of the Royal Dublin Society.

Madame Tetravzini's tour took her to Belfast on October 17, and Dublin on October 21.

Musical Notes from Abroad

AMSTERDAM

Prior to her departure for America, Mlle. Erna Rubinstein was engaged to appear at one of the Symphony concerts, when that youthful lady gave a startlingly ripe reading of Glazounov's Violin Concerto. The scheme contained also Moussorgsky's Nuit sur le mont chauve and Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony, which, I daresay, would be none the worse for a little rest. At the concert of October 12, Madame Charles Cahier and M. Jaques Urlus performed the solo parts in Mahler's Lied von der Erde. Under Mengelberg's inspiring leadership an altogether magnificent performance of this fine work was achieved. An event which roused the interest of a large contingent of earnest music-lovers was the first evening of Alexander Schmuller's Bach recitals on October 14. Schmuller had set himself the task to perform on three evenings the whole of Bach's solo Sonatas and Partitas for the violin, together with the Concertos. In the latter he was accompanied by a small chamber orchestra, consisting of music students, who acquitted themselves in a thoroughly admirable way.

On the occasion of the Eucharistic Congress, Alphons Diepenbrock's great Mass was sung in the church of St. Augustine. This extremely difficult work received a very creditable performance under the able conductorship of M. Alphons Vranken, the very complicated organ part finding its master in M. Willem van Kalmthout, of Nymegen.

After the symphony concert of October 15, we had to miss our orchestra for a matter of ten days. This respite was occasioned by the players having been invited to appear at Hamburg and Berlin. The subscription concert on October 26 brought Schumann's fourth Symphony and Weber's Oberon Overture. The soloist on that occasion was Mr. Percy Grainger, whose appearance after an absence of many years was hailed with tremendous applause. He was in excellent form, and it was only to be regretted that his choice had not fallen on a more congenial work than Grieg's A minor Concerto. There was no soloist at the concert of October 29. If this can be called a deficiency it was amply atoned for by absolutely finished performances of Mozart's seldom-heard D major Symphony (without Minuetto), Mendelssohn's music to A Midsummer Night's Dream, and Schubert's B minor Symphony, which completed the scheme. The symphony concert on November 2 partook of an especially festival nature. In honour of Dr. Johan Wagenaar's sixtieth birthday the programme contained no less than four of his compositions, conducted by himself, viz., the Overtures to The Taming of the Shrew, Cyrano de Bergerac, a symphonic poem Saul and David, and a first performance of descriptive music for a phantasmagoric play, The Wedding of Aladdin. The extremely long programme contained, furthermore, P. van Anrooy's Rhapsody Piet Hein, a suite for violoncello and orchestra by M. van Goudoever, who himself played the solo part, and Willem Pyper's second Symphony, the last-named three composers having been pupils of Wagenaar. The evening concert gained added lustre by the presence of the Dutch Royal family, the Queen investing Dr. Wagenaar during the interval with the insignia of the Order of Oranje-Nassau. A sudden attack of illness, presumably due to the strain of the last weeks, prevented Mengelberg from conducting the next two concerts. This was the more to be regretted inasmuch as on November 9 he was to have celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary as musical director of the Cæcilia Society. Mengelberg fortunately reappeared on the platform on November 12. At this concert M. Ernest Schelling played Chopin's E minor Concerto and the pianoforte obligato in his own Impressions of an Artist's Life. In both works he scored an immense success.

A very interesting chamber music concert was given on October 24 by the united forces of the Dutch and Hungarian String Quartets, who played Schönberg's Sextet Verklärte Nacht (a very mild and unoriginal work), Brahms's Sextet in B flat, and Mendelssohn's Octet, Op. 20. A remarkable success was that won by the famous Bohemian String Quartet, which on October 30 played no less than four big works, viz., a Quartet by Novak, two Quartets by Smetana, and Dvorák's Pianoforte Quintet, with Mlle. Ilona Kurz as pianist.

On November 6 Ernesto Consolo and Arrigo Serrato joined in works by Busoni, Respighi, and Pizzetti. Contrary to expectation, the Sistine Choir, which gave two concerts, failed to draw anything like big audiences.

It is with much regret that I have to announce the final breaking down of our National Opera, which had to close its doors about a fortnight ago. This failure is largely due to the utter incompetence of the management, for the institution was subsidised by several of the larger towns, the combined subsidy amounting to about 110,000 florins per annum.

W. HARMANS.

GERMANY

NEW BOOKS ON BEETHOVEN

As a birthday gift to the first great chamber music festival at Bonn, Breitkopf & Härtel have published a book, Studien zu Beethoven's Persönlichkeit, by Dr. Gustav Becking. The author considers the problem of the Scherzo in a manner never attempted before. He examines the Minuets of Haydn and Mozart, and then analyses the various Scherzi of Beethoven, laying bare the very essence and nature of music, the budding cells and esoteric character of the forms of expression of the Scherzo. The peculiar style of the author demands a thoroughly sympathetic reader.

Much has been written about Beethoven's deafness, but as yet the world had lacked a scientific critical description of the rise and character of this dread disease. Waldemar Schweisheimer (Beethoven's Lieder, Munich, Georg Müller) has filled the blank, and given a clear diagnosis of the clinical development of the disease so far as is possible on the strength of all that has been submitted by history. It is a praiseworthy deed of the author to disperse once and for all the accusation that lues was the cause of Beethoven's malady. The most interesting chapter is probably that dealing with the influence of the composer's deafness on his artistic work. It is astonishing how little the latter is influenced. The seventh chapter deals with the medical treatment of the malady during the composer's last months.

Albert Hensel's Beethoven (Berlin, Tatho-Verlag) is more than it pretends to be. The author is too modest when he says: 'It does not claim to be a scientific dissertation, either musically or philosophically.' It is indeed both, inasmuch as it causes the student to busy himself with questions pertaining to the appreciation of music.

Van der Pfordten's Beethoven is the outcome of a series of academic and popular lectures. It is a biography, and yet it is no biography, pointing as it does to other valuable works for reference and laying chief stress on the ethical character of Beethoven's compositions, which must be grasped and understood not by mere cult, but by the endeavour to make Beethoven's ideals one's own ideals, and so becoming immersed in the composer.

Walther Nohl's Ludwig van Beethoven als Mensch und Musiker im täglichen Leben (Stuttgart, Grüninger) is an unpretentious brochure, rich in historical matter, well told by a master of the pen.

THE PILGRIMS OF MECCA AT WIESBADEN.

Gluck's Die Pilger von Mecca, recently performed at the Wiesbaden Opera House, was rescued from obscurity in 1910 by Max Arend, who published it with a new German text (Breitkopf & Härtel), thereby rescuing one of the most charming pieces known to the operatic stage. By its graceful music and delicate humour it is the very predecessor to Mozart's Entführung aus dem Serail.

In preparing his new biography of Gluck (Schuster & Löffler, Stuttgart) Max Arend was refused assistance by the Ministre des Sciences et des Arts, of Brussels, but he discovered so much original material elsewhere that he succeeded in making his biography the most complete and uniform work of its kind. He touches upon aesthetic problems, presented to us in every work of the master, which have hitherto escaped the attention of musicologists.

TENTH BACH FESTIVAL AT BRESLAU.

The tenth German Bach Festival at Breslau was colossal. In the company of Schütz and J. S. Bach were Schein, Buxtehude, Pachelbel, Nikolaus Bruhns, and Johann Christoph Bach, finishing with the Austrian Georg Mathias Monn. This review of a wealth of music produced during and after the Thirty Years' War comprised known and unknown works. To the unknown belonged a Prelude and Fugue in G major for organ and the 100th Psalm for tenor solo, small orchestra, and organ by Bruhns, and the two Lamentos for voices, violin, three violas, and organ by J. C. Bach—works of incisive pathos and dramatic character. Thanks to the indefatigable propaganda of Prof. Dr. Max Schneider and Wolfgang Reimann, the greatness of Heinrich Schütz has always been recognised at Breslau. Bach's art was represented by the Trauerode, the Magnificat, two cantatas, five fugues from the Forty-eight (Prof. Dohrn), the Partita and Violin concerto in E major (Adolph Busch), the Suite in D minor for Violoncello solo (Paul Grummer), three arias with flute accompaniment (Lotte Leonard), the Suite for Flute (Ernest Tschirner), and the Brandenburg Concerto No. 4, in G major. The choruses were sung by the Breslau Singakademie, the Bachverein, and the church choir of St. Mary Magdalen, under the direction of Prof. Dr. Georg Dohrn and Prof. Dr. Max Schneider. At the same time the new organ, a masterwork of the firm of W. Sauer, was opened by Wolfgang Reimann.

FRANZ SCHREKER.

Among all the Sturm und Drang of the present time Franz Schreker occupies a unique position. Slowly but surely his extraordinary operas force themselves upon the attention of the public. While he is writing the music to his last opera, Irrelohe, his Gemeinde is fighting his cause. One of the best books dealing with Schreker the man and artist comes from the pen of Rudolf H. Hoffman (E. P. Tal & Co., Leipsic). Following a brief biography the author treats of the poet and the composer, his development and his style. After all it is but a repetition of the Wagnerian struggles against the Philistines, fought by a man who has implicit faith in himself.

IESUS NAZARENUS

Bruno Leopold, organist at Schmalkalden, has written an Oratorio, Jesus Nazarenus, for soli, chorus, orchestra, and organ, which fills a long-felt want, as it is indeed the first popular musical work on the life and death of Jesus. It is easy of execution, rich in melody, and both lyrical and dramatic. The new oratorio was performed at Schmalkalden under the direction of the composer with very great success. It is to be given in more than twenty towns (Cologne, Nuremberg, Dresden, Kaiserslautern, &c.), and its success seems assured. The composer is his own publisher.

COLOGNE

At the first Gurzenich concert H. H. Wetzler conducted the first performance of his Symphonic Fantasia, Op. 10. The composer is continually seeking and finding new combinations of sound, yet behind all that which is modern there is a huge amount of thematic work—canon, inversion, reduction, prolongation of the thematic material.

MUSIC OF THE MIDDLE AGES

The fitting up of the Badisch Kunsthalle at Karlsruhe means not only the beginning of a new chapter in the building of museums, but also the cultivation of the various arts of the Middle Ages. At the invitation of Dr. Storck, director of the Karlsruhe Art-Hall, Prof. Dr. W. Gurliitt, of the musico-scientific seminary of Freiburg University, gave a lecture on 'Music and the musical outlook in the time of Gothic architecture,' along with a series of concerts extending over three days. Three groups of music were dealt with: (1) the Musica ecclesiastica (i.e., Gregorian chant as it is still employed in the Liturgy of the Roman Catholic Church); (2) the Musica composita (i.e., the two-part organum and three-part motets, comprising the ars antiqua of the 13th century); (3) the Musica vulgaris, which marks the commencement of instrumental music in parts. While the mysticism of the liturgical songs of the first concert produced the deepest impression, yet, from a musico-historical outlook, the third concert proved the culminating point of the entire festival.

SONDERSHAUSEN.

Luther's birthday was celebrated at Sondershausen with a performance of Max Bruch's cantata Gustavus Adolphus, with Albert Fischer, Paul Bauer, and Martha Oppermann as soloists, and Musikdirektor Gremel as conductor. Like all Bruch's vocal compositions, this cantata is a powerful and melodious work. The Loh-orchestra, under Prof. Corbach, commemorated the twenty-fifth anniversary of Anton Bruckner's death with performances of the Quintet in F major and the sixth Symphony, which left a deep impression upon the large audience.

All the year through the string quartet (MM. Corbach, Nowack, Merbach, and Schilling) gave a series of well-attended chamber concerts. Mention must be made of Hugo Kaun's new String Quartet, Op. 114, a concise composition full of beautiful musical ideas, with two especially remarkable inner movements. Kaun was also the chief figure at this year's Festival at Sondershausen. When the local musical forces decided to perform his choral composition Mother Earth they proved that valuable work may be accomplished away from the great musical centres. The other chief items of the Festival were a Violin Concerto by August Reuss, played by Felix Berber, and orchestral songs by Frickhöffer, sung by Agnes Leydecker.

Fritz Busch (brother of the violinist Adolph Busch, one of Germany's leading artists) conducted two concerts at the Gewandhaus with such success that he was invited to direct all the concerts there during the summer season. As his engagements at Stuttgart permitted him to undertake only part of the work, Hans Pfitzner and Sigmund von Hausegger conducted the remainder of the programmes. After the death of Nikisch, Busch was called upon to lead a Philharmonic concert at Berlin. He had to decline offers from Vienna to conduct a Brahms Festival, as well as concerts at Budapest and other towns, and operatic festival performances at Chemnitz.

MUNICH

During the recent season the chief musical societies of Munich combined to give a series of concerts under the title of Deutsche Chor- und Kammermusik. The programmes ran as follows: May 21 and 22, Haydn; May 31, unaccompanied choruses by Brahms; June 9, old music (Akademie der Tonkunst); June 12, Bach; June 20 and 21, Mozart, choral works; June 27, German madrigals; July 4, Mozart, chamber music; July 13 and August 12, Munich composers; August 22, Romantic evening; August 29, Pfitzner (Von deutscher Seele); September 10, Beethoven's ninth Symphony; September 15, German Volkslieder; September 18, Munich composers; September 26, Beethoven chamber music.

FR. ERCKMANN.

NEW YORK

It was Mr. Stokowski and his Philadelphians who appropriated the first date of the orchestral season. No novelties were presented in the programme of three numbers.

One of these, Ein Heldenleben, did not add to the enjoyment of the concert, brilliantly played as it was. This tone-poem has been played frequently in the last few seasons, but not even the composer's conducting could make it interesting—so why not let it die of 'innocuous desuetude'?

Close upon Mr. Stokowski came Mr. Stransky and the first concert of the New York Philharmonic Society in its eighty-first season. Beethoven's seventh Symphony was followed by Erich Korngold's Sursum Corda (Lift up your Hearts), labelled a 'symphonic overture.' The composer says his aim was to suggest 'a mood of struggle and aspiration, a joyous deliverance out of stress and storm.' Young Korngold is clever in his understanding and use of the resources of a modern orchestra, but the paucity of his original ideas was even more marked in this composition than in his opera Die Tote Stadt produced last year at the Metropolitan. In the opera Korngold seemed to have imbibed ideas from many old masters of the art of composition; in the Sursum Corda he has apparently been contented to limit himself to imitating Richard Strauss. Strauss, be it said, is not great enough to be imitated, but he has the originality the younger man lacks, and Salome's Dance which followed Korngold's elaborate but tiresome efforts shone, in comparison, with brilliant effulgence.

Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony Society, opening their season on a Sunday afternoon, gave a Concerto grosso written for a few strings by Vivaldi and cleverly arranged for a modern string orchestra by Sam Franko. A few days later the Orchestra was heard to better advantage in Carnegie Hall, playing Glazounov's fifth Symphony and assisting Albert Spalding in Brahms's Violin Concerto in D minor. Mr. Spalding's performance confirmed the impression made at his recital two weeks before, that he has become one of the masters of the violin.

At his second concert Mr. Stokowski brought forward Schumann's Symphony in C major. The Schumann Symphonies have been sadly neglected by all conductors of late years, and Mr. Stokowski deserves thanks for reviving one of them. Old concert-goers can remember when the four Schumann Symphonies were standardised in the winter programmes. At least two were played every season, and belonged to the established repertoire as firmly as Beethoven's fifth and seventh. The novelty at the second concert of the Philadelphians was the introduction to New York of Madame Sigrid Onegin, a Swedish singer who has been engaged for the season at the Metropolitan. She has an immense voice which will undoubtedly be heard without difficulty in the last row of the top gallery in the Opera House. She sings (or rather, declaims) in a somewhat old-fashioned style, and she chose poor selections for the concert stage.

A new organization is announced, called the 'City Symphony Orchestra.' Promising the best music at half the price of the older societies, it has a better chance to compete with the established orchestras than had the short-lived 'National Symphony'—and for this very reason.

No vocal recital given this season has aroused more interest than that of Florence Easton, who is known on the operatic stage for her beautiful voice, her remarkable diction, her great talent as an actress, and her extraordinary versatility—having a repertoire of over a hundred operas that she can sing at a few hours' notice. In this recital she gave one operatic aria (the well-known song from Iphigenia in Tauris), four romantic songs of Schumann, four of Wolf, and some more modern music ranging from Ravel to Frank La Forge, the composer-pianist who assisted her at the pianoforte.

The Metropolitan announces Tosca for its opening night, with Scotti and Jeritza. Later in the week Jeritza appears in Rosenkavalier. Chaliapin also makes two appearances in the first week—in Boris and Mefistofele. Ever since the great tenor died one is continually asked, 'Who will be Caruso's successor?' The answer is, in voice and personality, 'No one,' but for popularity his mantle has fallen on the shoulders of the great basso Feodor Chaliapin.

M. H. FLINT.

PARIS

At Paris the musical season does not, as in London, last eleven months and a-half per annum. From the middle of July to the end of October, or thereabouts, there is a grande pause throughout the concert world. With the advent of October, the plans made by the various organizations become known, and after a few weeks of suspense and anticipation, the music-lover finds his hands pretty full. This year, for instance, the things which are to be done at the Théâtre des Champs Élysées should suffice to keep him busy: apart from the usual series of the Concerts Padeloup, we are to have concerts organized by Wiener, concerts organized by Goldschmann, seven concerts of contemporary music from all countries, and ten of Russian music organized by Alexandrovich. On the other hand the newly-founded Société de Musique Française is preparing a big move in favour of lyric-drama and other works by French composers. It is not yet clear whether the list on its prospectus constitutes an enumeration of works which are actually to be played, or merely (as at the Opéra and Opéra-Comique) of works from which a number will be selected for performance. But the list itself is certainly very imposing. It comprises Aubert's La Forêt Bleue and de Bréville's Eros Vainqueur, two fine things which musical circles here are particularly eager to welcome (both were produced with success abroad), Labey's Bérénice, Mariotte's Gargantua, Claudel's Proteus with Milhaud's incidental music, and works by Gaubert, Max d'Olonne, M. Bertrand, Lenormand, Woollett, Mayelier, and others. So much for the Théâtre des Champs Élysées.

At the Opéra, the principal novelties are to be Magnard's Guercaur, Tournemire's Les Dieux sont morts, André Bloch's Prélude Férrique, Maurice Emmanuel's Salamine, Roussel's ballet Padmavati, and Hué's ballet Siang Sin.

At the Opéra-Comique we are to have a Polyphème by Jean Cras, La Brebis Égarée by Milhaud, Albeniz's Pépita Jimenes, and various things whose writers are M. S. Rousseau, Florent Schmitt, and Florence Fourdrain. The first première of the season has already taken place; it were better to say, the first three, for the programme consisted of a lyric-comedy by Max d'Olonne, Les Uns et les Autres, a lyric-drama by Bachelet, Quand la Cloche Sonnera, and Puccini's opera-buffa Giovanni Schicchi—all in one Act. This mixed bill provided a very acceptable entertainment. Alfred Bachelet (recently appointed director of the Nancy Conservatoire in replacement of Guy Ropartz, who takes charge of the similar institution at Strasbourg) is a very genuine and imaginative composer, and has succeeded in writing attractive music to a somewhat unconvincing libretto. Puccini's Giovanni Schicchi is extremely amusing, and Max d'Olonne has given us light music of quite pleasing order, with many clever bits of parody thrown in.

At the Concerts Padeloup the season began with an all-French programme (from Berlioz to Ravel). At the Concerts Lamoureux the inaugural programme was entirely French except for Beethoven's Eroica, and comprised examples by Lalo, Fauré, Franck, and d'Indy. The Concerts-Colonne have so far given nothing outside the current repertory except Roger-Ducasse's graceful Nocturne de Printemps, and a tone-poem by Jacques Ibert, inspired from Wilde's Ballad of Reading Gaol, which belongs to that order of programme-music of which we get so easily tired, but is fairly good of its kind.

Kusnezovsky is doing fine work at the concerts which he is giving at the Opéra. His programmes are rich in examples by Russian and French composers, but the only British work included was Holbrooke's Bronwen Overture.

It seems as though British music might be systematically ignored during the coming season. The inclusion in the programmes of the Concerts Colonne of a work by a British composer (I refer to Lord Berners's Spanish Fantasy, played there on November 11) is rare enough an occurrence to deserve special mention. Whether the other concert institutions will follow suit is still doubtful. Of the fourteen concerts of the Revue Musicale (whose editor, M. Henri Prunières, is preparing to devote a special number of his excellent periodical to British composers and their works), one will be partly devoted to Cyril Scott, Bax, Bliss, Holst, and Goossens, introduced by Miss Dorothy Moulton and the Société Moderne d'Instruments à Vent. A Sonata by Cyril Scott will be played at another of these concerts. This, and the orchestral concert given on October 31 at the Salle Gaveau by Mr. Appleby Matthews (see page 872), may bear fruit: but what is chiefly needed is that people interested in British music and likely to play it or otherwise to contribute to its diffusion should be provided with more information about it and easier access to it.

Mlle. Blanche Selva—an altogether admirable pianist who certainly ought to visit London—has given a recital of works by Bach, Rameau, Beethoven, Debussy, Dukas, and Franck. Madame Olénine d'Alheim has resumed her vocal recitals. The programme of the first consisted of songs by various troubadours, and of airs by Purcell, Schütz, and Bach. Equally attractive was the concert given by Mlle. Janacopulos and Prokofiev jointly, the programme being devoted to works by Moussorgsky and Prokofiev.

Of other recitals there has been no dearth. I shall mention a few of them next month. A. BOLD.

TORONTO

Music certainly seems to be coming into its own again here, judging by the list of artists and organizations booked for the season. We are to have no less than four orchestras, six choral societies, Rachmaninov, Paderewski, Hoffman, Kreisler, Toscha Seidel, Pablo Casals, Geraldine Farrar, Ernest Hutcheson, and Emma Calvé. And so far the audiences have fully justified the risk.

Jeanne Gordon and Guilo Crimi, contralto and tenor of the Metropolitan Opera, opened the Massey Hall season on October 7 in a joint recital, choosing scenes from Carmen and Il Trovatore to satisfy a public which has been fed with the operatic spoon for many years. Marie Novello, who comes to us as 'a gifted young Welsh pianist,' made a sound impression as an artist of great promise. She appeared with Bertha Crawford, a Canadian coloratura who has seen many large audiences at New York, and the Toronto Festival Chorus. The latter body was recently formed to compete for a 100,000 dollar prize at Buffalo. Second place was secured in the contest. Mischa Elman, returning after his extended tour in the far East, drew a capacity house. The Toronto Chamber Music Society opened its second season with the New York Trio in Hart House Theatre at the University on October 11. Messrs. Clarence Adler, Scipione Guidi, and Cornelius Van Vliet were newcomers to Toronto, but it is to be hoped that such thorough musicians as they proved to be will become regular visitors here. Their enjoyable programme included the Schubert B flat major Trio, the G minor Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte of Rachmaninov, and the d'Indy Trio, Op. 9.

The pupils of M. Henri Czaplinski, violin professor of the Hambourg Conservatory, have given a concert nearly three-and-a-half hours long. It was an unusual experience for Toronto music-lovers to hear in one evening Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, Mozart's Concerto in D major, Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor, the Mendelssohn Concerto, the first movement of the Beethoven Concerto (with a Cadenza by Henri Czaplinski in honour of Madame Hambourg), Saint-Saëns's Rondo Capriccio, and the Lalo Symphonic Espagnole. A small orchestra of strings accompanied the works exceedingly well. H. C. F.

VIENNA

ORCHESTRAL AND CHORAL CONCERTS

Choral singing is a branch of music generally all but neglected in Central Europe owing, perhaps, to the preponderance of orchestral and chamber music activities. This state of things possibly accounts for the curious fact that a work like Handel's Josua (which had its Vienna première in 1880, almost a hundred and fifty years after its creation) had to wait more than thirty years for its second Vienna production, which Leopold Reichwein recently offered with the chorus of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde. The performance was dull, and poorly studied. Part of the blame doubtless rests with certain Bolshevik tendencies now prevalent with our orchestral men, who apparently consider democratic principles incompatible with discipline. Their aversion towards rehearsal is assuming perilous proportions, and is moreover a grave danger to the musical future of the city. Strong men like Walter and Furtwängler still manage to keep up a certain authority, but younger and less-established conductors are utterly unable to cope with the organized 'passive resistance' of their men.

The coming of Eugène Ysaÿe was an event of more than local importance, constituting as it did the famous violinist's first reappearance as a soloist after many years devoted solely to orchestral conducting. Notwithstanding a certain nervousness, Ysaÿe fascinated as ever by his playing, which places temperamental display above considerations of style. His bow arm, to be sure, has lost some of its infallibility, but in his readings there is still the old fire and strength. Ysaÿe still loves arbitrary rhythmic eccentricities which at times proved a difficult task for his famous violinist-colleague, Arnold Rosé, who acted as conductor. Ysaÿe was less happy as a composer, his Extase, Op. 21, and Divertimento, Op. 24—both for violin with orchestra—proving rather uninspired and laboured music.

Other eminent players who have recently appeared at Vienna must be dismissed in a summary. Szigeti had an almost sensational success. His countryman Emil Telmányi interested us in the Violin Concerto, Op. 33, of Carl Nielsen (his father-in-law). Vasa Prihoda, a young Czech violinist, showed technical assurance. Aldo Ruggenini, a violinist from Torino, joined the composer in a Sonata by Giorgio Frederico Ghedini. Gianni Pavouich played the Strauss Violin Sonata and Wilhelm Winkler gave us the first performance of Kodály's Violoncello Sonata.

Another work new to Vienna was the Elegiac Trio by Serge Rachmaninov, played for the first time by a new chamber music organization consisting of Stefan Bergmann (pianoforte), Fritz Lilienthal (violin), and Walter Kleinecke (cello).

Its passionate first movement and the second one with its variations on a Russian national song, are far superior to the weak last movement. The one novelty so far offered by the Rosé Quartet this season has been the first performance anywhere of a new and hitherto unpublished String Quartet in D minor by E. N. von Reznicek—good and serious music distinguished principally by its freshness and unaffectedness. An unknown String Quartet by Guido Peters was performed by the Gottesmann Quartet, in connection with the same composer's Octet for strings, oboe, clarinet, and horn, both works being orthodox music demonstratively adhering to the classic style. They do more honour to the sincerity than to the genius of this struggling composer.

SCHÖNBERG

The return to active work of Arnold Schönberg's 'Society for Private Musical Performances' is being gladly welcomed by the large number of serious musicians interested in the personality of this great, though somewhat erratic and extravagant artist. Following a few months' interruption, necessitated by financial difficulties, the Society has inaugurated its new enterprise with a number of 'propaganda concerts' accessible to the general public—which is an innovation in the history of the organization. The series opened with a performance of Schönberg's Pierrot lunaire, which, strangely enough, offered the Vienna public its first opportunity for hearing this important work by Vienna's representative composer, all previous Vienna productions of the composition having been open exclusively to the members of the Society. Space forbids a comprehensive study of this composition, which is beyond doubt one of the most original and singular in all musical literature. What strikes one most strongly at a first hearing is the fact that the deepest impression emanates not so much from the musical setting, but chiefly from the weirdly-fanciful poems of Albert Giraud, which Erica Wagner recited with faithful devotion to the exacting demands of the composer—without, however, being fully convincing. (It is a sad sign of our times that this serious artist is compelled to waste her talents on the impersonation of the chief rôle in an operetta, entitled Die Siegerin, and based on a concoction of mutilated melodies by Tchaikovsky, which is having an all too successful run here just now.) The instrumental performance of Pierrot lunaire, flawless beyond description, was the result of well over a hundred painstaking rehearsals held under the scrutinising supervision of Arnold Schönberg himself. Among the instrumentalists, chief honours are due to the pianist, Eduard Steuermann, who contributed his share to the second 'propaganda concert' of the Society with his own pianoforte transcription of Schönberg's Chamber Symphony. Steuermann's arrangement succeeds to a remarkable degree in preserving the complicated orchestral texture of this difficult, though by no means ultra-radical, early work of Schönberg.

Steuermann, an enthusiastic exponent of modern music and a member of Schönberg's most intimate circle, to-day counts among Vienna's most representative and individual pianists. His sister in art, Helène Lampl, is less uncompromising in her programmes; at her recent recital she presented, for the first time, a new Dance Suite by Wilhelm Grosz, whose unquestionable talent is unfortunately impaired by an ever-increasing tendency towards the dainty and 'catchy.' It still remains to record the return from America to the Vienna concert-platform of Maria Ivogün, whose musicianship and polished style are even more praiseworthy than her truly marvellous coloratura fireworks, and of Hermann Jadlowker, the idolized Berlin tenor, whose vocalism is as crude now as it was in years past, while his voice itself has lost many of its former fine qualities.

OPERATIC NOVELTIES

Both the Staatsoper and Volksoper have repeatedly been subjected to severe criticism in these columns. It is the more gratifying, therefore, to state that both theatres are this season to be credited with more productive work than has been their record for some years past. The Volksoper is to be particularly congratulated upon its production of Moussorgsky's opera Boris Godounov, which was, on the whole, well staged and performed in a satisfactory manner.

The Staatsoper, also, seems more ambitious and active this season than in former years. A splendid revival, staged at the Redoutensaal Theatre, of Donizetti's rarely-heard opera Don Pasquale, with Director Schalk at the desk, had all the spontaneity, humour, and spirit, of a musical commedia dell'arte. The long-heralded première of Franz Schreker's latest opera Der Schatzgräber has at last materialised. It was particularly welcome as a promising sign that the Staatsoper has at last abolished its narrow-minded policy towards all novelties excepting those by its director, Richard Strauss. Der Schatzgräber is a decided advance over Schreker's earlier operas, of which all but Das Spielwerk (in its original version) and Die Gezeichneten, have been unduly ignored by the Staatsoper. This new opera is more mature and uniform (though, perhaps, less original), and shows Schreker's supreme mastery of stage situations, and of what an untranslatable German word calls Stimmung. It disposes with a good deal of the symbolism and intricate psychologies (or pathologies) which rendered Die Gezeichneten at once interesting, and, to the uninitiated, difficult.

The musical idiom employed by Schreker in this opera accrues from Wagnerian principles enriched, however, by a wealth of manifold and novel orchestral colour which is frequently stupendous. On the whole, Der Schatzgräber is far less problematic than the Schreker operas which preceded it, and several of the lyrical solos (such as the Lullaby, the Love Scene, and the closing song), with which the company interspersed the dramatic climaxes of his opera, easily explain the great favour which Der Schatzgräber has found in many German opera-houses. PAUL BECHERT.

Composers are reminded that works to be submitted under the Regulations of the scheme for the publication of musical compositions by the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust for 1923 must be received by the secretary of the Trust not later than December 21, 1922. Copies of the Regulations can be had on application to the Secretary, Carnegie United Kingdom Trust, East Port, Dunfermline.

CONTENTS.

Page

British Players and Singers. VIII.—Henry George Ley (with Portrait)	837
The Negative in Music. By Alexander Brent-Smith	839
César Franck. Organist. By Harvey Grace (Illustrated)	840
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XXVI.—Sir William Hawte. By W. H. Grattan Flood	845
Who wrote Gounod's Faust ? By A. Keay	846
A Precursor of the Saxophone. By Tom S. Wotton	846
Occasional Notes	849
Musical in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	851
The Musician's Bookshelf	852
New Music	856
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	858
Church and Organ Music	863
Letters to the Editor	865
Gresham Lectures	868
The Amateurs' Exchange	869
Sixty Years Ago	869
Sharps and Flats	869
Ballad Opera: its place in the 18th century	870
Crecho-Slovak Music. Mrs. Rosa Newmarch's Lectures	870
Royal Academy of Music	871
Royal College of Music	872
Obituary	872
Mr. Appleby Matthews's Concert at Paris	872
London Concerts	873
Music in the Provinces	877
Music in Ireland	879
Musical Notes from Abroad	879

MUSIC:

Say, Shepherds, say. No. 2 of '6 Ayres to 4 Voices.'
By MICHAEL CAVENDISH (1558) 859

THREE EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS are given with this Number:

1. Portrait of Henry George Ley.
2. 'How far is it to Bethlehem?' Christmas Anthem.
By Geoffrey Shaw.
3. Competition Festival Record.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BACH, J. S.—"Christians, grave ye." Cantata No. 65.
For Christmas. Edited by JOHN E. WEST. English version by CLAUDE AVELING. 2s.

—"O Christ, my all in living." Cantata No. 95.
For the Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity. Edited by JOHN E. WEST. English text by CLAUDE AVELING. 2s.

BRIDGE, J. C.—"On Bethlehem's Hill." Christmas
Carol. 3d.

CANTERBURY, F.—Two Kyries and Three Chants.
On Card. 2d.

DOWLAND, JOHN.—"An heart that's broken."
Anthem. (No. 246, Novello's Short Anthems.) 2d.

FLETCHER, PERCY E.—"The Passion of Christ."
A short sacred Cantata. For Lenten or Easter Services, or for General Use. For Soprano, Tenor, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Accompaniment for Organ or Small Orchestra. 3s.

HAVERGAL, CECILIA.—"Christ's Christmas Call."
Carol. 1d.

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS:

No. 407. "His Birthday keep." A. M. GOODHART. 1½d.

No. 408. "Cradle Song." SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE. 1½d.

No. 409. "Carol, carol." SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE. 1½d.

No. 410. "Rejoice, the Christ has come."

STANLEY MARCHANT. 3d.

POINTER, JOHN.—"Rough wind, that moanest."
Four-part Song. (No. 1406, Novello's Part-song Book.) 3d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice
Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Pianoforte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 1333. "Sing a Song of Sixpence."
Unison Song. TRADITIONAL 2d. —

No. 1343. "Ring a ring o' Roses."
Unison Song. TRADITIONAL 2d. —

No. 1345. "Girl Guides." Unison Song.
ETHEL BOYCE 3d. —

SHAW, GEOFFREY.—"How far is it to Bethlehem?"
Anthem for Christmas. (No. 245, Novello's Short Anthems.) 3d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH—(continued).

STOCKS, H. C. L.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in E minor. 6d.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:

AUSTIN, FREDERIC.—"Songs in a Farmhouse." A Cycle of Traditional Songs. Arranged for S. A. T. B. 1s.
BACH, J. S.—"Bide with us." Cantata No. 6. Welsh
Words, 1s.

BRIDGE, SIR FREDERICK.—"In sorrow and in want."
Christmas Carol. 2d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2395. "The Voice of Spring." S.S.A.

HAROLD RHODES 3d.

No. 2397. "Sing, O Heavens." Christmas
Anthem. ALFRED HOLLINS 2d.

No. 2398. "Song of the Pedlar." For S.S.A.
C. LEE WILLIAMS 2d.

TRADITIONAL.—"Rouse, rouse from your slumbers."
Cornish Carol. 2d.

WILBYE, JOHN.—"O Lord, turn not Thy face from me." (No. 247, Novello's Short Anthems.) 3d.

WOOLLEY, C. E. A.—A South African Carol. 1s.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

CANDLYN, T. F. H.—"In dulci Jubilo." For
S.A.T.B. 12 cents (6d.).

—"Sleep, Holy Babe." For S.A.T.B. 12 cents (6d.).

LUTKIN, P. C.—"Who can comprehend Thee."
Motet for eight-part Chorus. 20 cents (1s.).

—"The Carol of the Beasts." 10 cents (4d.).

WARREN, E. R.—"Christ went up into the Hills."
For Soprano or Tenor Solo and Chorus.
10 cents (4d.).

WEBBE, W. Y.—"The cruise of the Elves." For Two Sopranos. 12 cents (6d.).

JOSEPH MCLEAN

BARITONE.

Successful appearances include London Philharmonic Society,
Queen's Hall Saturday "Pops," &c.
22, Leathwaite Road, Clapham Common, S.W. 11.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for All Saints' Church, Eastbourne. Good Musical Service
Not Choral Eucharist. Well-trained Choir. Fine Three-Manual
Organ by Hills (electrical blower). Duty: Morning and Evening Services on Sunday and two Practices. Communicant. State age and salary required, and send copies of testimonials, to the Vicar.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for Ladhope
United Free Church, Galashiels. Salary £100. Applications with testimonials, to be lodged with J. K. Brown, 161, Magdala Terrace, Galashiels.

ALTO WANTED, Christ Church, Victoria Road,
Kensington. For particulars, apply Choirmaster, 4, Kelso Place, Kensington, W.8.

ASSISTANT CHOIRMASTER required for West-end Church. £15 per annum. No Sunday duties.
Good boy-trainer essential. Apply, "C.S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd.,
160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SALE or EXCHANGE, Modern Courses, Piano
Technique, &c. "A. W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160,
Wardour Street, W.1.

N. POLYTECHNIC, HOLLOWAY.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 17, 8 p.m. CHRISTMAS MUSIC.
All seats free. Collection. Hon. Director, MUNRO DAVISON.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, S.W.

WANTED.—Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass Soloists to form Quartet for the Choir. Good Readers. £25. Two Sunday Services and Friday Choir Practice. Apply, R. Gant, Esq., 18, Stradella Road, Herne Hill, S.E.24.

UNITY CHURCH

CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.

At Unity Church, Upper Street, Islington, on Saturday, December 9, a PERFORMANCE of the following works of CHERUBINI will be given at 8.15 p.m.:

- (1) Overture to the "Water Carrier" ("Les Deux Journées").
- (2) Requiem Mass in C minor.

All seats free.

Collection to cover expenses.

Musical Directors in Search of Something New should procure

ELKIN & CO.'S 'PIANO AND STRINGS' SERIES

A collection of good modern pieces in the lighter style, arranged for Piano, Two Violins, 'Cello, Double-Bass (optional).

- | | |
|--|---|
| 1. CARISSIMA Edward Elgar | 8. REVERIE Edward MacDowell |
| 2. ROSEMARY Edward Elgar | 9. DREAM CASTLES Brian Hope |
| 3. INTERMEZZO Cyril Scott | 10. NOCTURNETTE Brian Hope |
| 4. PASSACAGLIA Cyril Scott | 11. TWO EASTERN SONGS Agnes Mary Lang |
| 5. THREE LITTLE WALTZES, No. 1 Cyril Scott | 12. CORONACH Edgar Barratt |
| 6. THREE LITTLE WALTZES, No. 2 Cyril Scott | 13. MENUET ANTIQUE Robert Elkin |
| 7. VESPERALE Cyril Scott | 14. MOONLIGHT ON THE LAKE Roger Quilter |
- (INTERMEZZO from "Where the Rainbow Ends.")

Price each 2s. net.

No fee or permission necessary for public performance.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NEW AND REVISED EDITION.

CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS

PAST AND PRESENT.

A RECORD OF THE SUCCESSION OF ORGANISTS
OF THE

Cathedrals, Chapels Royal, and Principal Collegiate Churches of the United Kingdom, from about the period of the Reformation until the present day.

WITH BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES, EXTRACTS FROM THE CHAPTER BOOKS, ANECDOTES, ETC.

By JOHN E. WEST.

Price ... Nine Shillings.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

LONDONDERRY FEIS.

5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th MARCH, 1923.

COMPOSERS' COMPETITION

For best setting of a Song, words to be selected by competitor.

Silver Challenge Cup, and Miniature Cup to be retained.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs.

All particulars,

Mrs. ABRAHAM STEWART, Honorary Secretary,
Holly Lodge.

First English Edition.

THE COMPLETE OPERA BOOK

By GUSTAV KOBBE.

The plots of 187 Operas are given, together with 400 OF THE LEADING AIRS AND MOTIVES in Musical Notation.

25s. net.

PUTNAM'S: 24, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.2.

TWO BEAUTIFUL CHRISTMAS SONGS.

- "OUT OF THE DEEP I CALL" Easthope Martin
A beautiful setting of the De Profundis.
In C (A or C to D or E), D, and E flat.
- "CAROL OF JESUS CHILD" Herbert Hughes
(Just issued). In E flat (B flat to D or F), F, and G.
Price each, 2s. net.

ENOCH & SONS, Enoch House, 58, Gt. Marlborough St., London, W.1.
And at Paris, New York, Toronto, and Melbourne.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER (Nonconformist),
DESIRES POST. South of England preferred. Excellent testimonials. Apply, "Lyric," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ANTHEMS FOR CHRISTMAS.

*A song of joy	John E. West	4d.	*Nazareth	Ch. Gounod	3d.
*All darkness flies	Bach	2d.	*Now is come Salvation	Cuthbert Harris	4d.
And the Angel said unto them	J. P. Sweelinck	6d.	*Now when Jesus	Joseph Holbrooke	4d.
And thou, Bethlehem	F. W. Wadely	2d.	O come, all ye faithful (Adeste Fideles)	Arr. by G. J. Tredaway	3d.
Angels from the realms of glory, F. H. Cowen	4d.	O come hither	W. Jackson	3d.
Angels from the realms of glory	P. E. Fletcher	4d.	*O come, Redeemer of mankind	Arthur W. Marchant	4d.
Arise, shine, for thy light is come	H. A. Chambers	4d.	*O come, Redeemer of mankind	John E. West	4d.
Arise, shine, for thy light is come	G. F. Cobb	6d.	*O Holy Babe	A. C. Mackenzie	2d.
Arise, shine, for thy light is come	Geo. Elvey	2d.	*O Holy Night	Adolphe Adam	2d.
Arise, shine, O Jerusalem	Thomas Adams	4d.	O Jerusalem I look about thee	E. W. Naylor	6d.
*Awake, put on thy strength	F. R. Greenish	6d.	*O Jerusalem I look about thee	John E. West	2d.
Before the heavens were spread abroad	Horatio W. Parker	4d.	*O sing to God (Noël). (Female Voices)	Ch. Gounod	3d.
Behold, all the earth lieth still	G. F. Huntley	6d.	*O sing to God (Noël). (Arranged for S.A.T.B.)	Ch. Gounod	2d.
Behold, a star appeareth	*B. L. Selby, 2d.; N. W. Gade	6d.	*O Thou that teltest	Händel	2d.
Behold, I bring	J. Barnby and E. V. Hall, ea.	4d.	*O world in sorrow sleeping	Alfred Hollins	4d.
Behold, I bring you glad tidings	J. Goss and Giovanni Croce, ea.	2d.	*O Zion, that bringest good tidings	J. Stainer	4d.
Behold, I bring you glad tidings	*C. W. Smith and Vittoria, ea.	2d.	Of the Father's love begotten	E. C. Bairstow	4d.
Behold, I bring you good tidings	J. M. Crament	6d.	Rejoice and sing	Bach	4d.
*Behold my servant	J. Frederick Bridge	4d.	Rejoice in the Lord	J. B. Calkin	2d.
Behold, the Name of the Lord	Percy Pitt	6d.	Rejoice in the Lord	Alfred Hollins	4d.
*Behold the Tabernacle (Two-part Anthem)	G. A. Macfarren	4d.	*Rejoice greatly, O Daughter of Zion	Charles H. Lloyd	2d.
Be peace on earth	W. Crotch	3d.	Rejoice, O ye people	Mendelssohn	2d.
*Beside Thy Cradle	J. S. Bach	2d.	*Rest, weary earth	A. M. Goodhart	4d.
*Bethlehem	Ch. Gounod	2d.	*Ring out, wild bells	P. E. Fletcher	4d.
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel S. S. Wesley & The Earl of Mar, ea.	2d.	Saviour, Who didst make Thy dwelling	F. Adlam	3d.
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel	C. L. Williams	6d.	Say, where is He born (Trio)	Mendelssohn	3d.
Blessed be the Lord God of Israel W. S. Bennett & *E. V. Hall, ea.	4d.	*See, amid the winter's snow	John E. West	2d.
Born to-day (Motet. S.S.A.T.B.)	J. P. Sweelinck	4d.	Ditto (Three-part)	John E. West	4d.
Break forth into joy	*H. A. Matthews and W. G. Alcock, ea.	4d.	*Silent Night (Melody by F. Grüber)	Arr. by John E. West	2d.
*Break forth into joy	T. Ridley Prentice	8d.	*Sing and rejoice	J. Barnby and John E. West, each	2d.
*Break forth into joy	S. Coleridge-Taylor and Bruce Steane, ea.	4d.	*Sing and rejoice	Basil Harwood	6d.
*Break forth	J. S. Bach	2d.	Sing a song of praise	Oliver King	4d.
Brightest and best	E. Vine Hall	6d.	*Sing, O Daughter of Zion H. W. Wareing and W. G. Alcock, ea.	2d.
Calm on the list'ning ear of night	Horatio W. Parker	4d.	Sing, O Daughter of Zion	H. Gadsby	2d.
Christ's Incarnation	Myles B. Foster	2d.	Sing, O heavens *H. Davan Wetton, Kent, & T. T. Trimmell, ea.	6d.
Christians, awake	J. Barnby, 4d.; *H. M. Higgs	6d.	Sing, O heavens	A. C. Mackenzie	2d.
Christians, be joyful	Bach	4d.	*Sing, O heavens	J. H. Maunders and B. Tours, each	2d.
*Christmas Day (Choral Fantasy on Old Carols)	G. Holst	6d.	*Sing, O heavens	Bruce Steane 4d.; *Arthur S. Sullivan	3d.
*Come and thank Him	Bach	4d.	*Sing, O heavens	A. Hollins and A. Gan, ea.	2d.
*Come and worship the Lord	Thomas Adams	2d.	*Sing unto the Lord	Vincent Novello	4d.
*Come hither, ye faithful	H. Hofmann	6d.	*That God doth love the world	Bach	2d.
*Come, ye Gentiles, hear the story	Edward C. Bairstow	2d.	*The Angel Gabriel was sent from God	H. Smart	2d.
*Come, ye lofty	H. Elliot Button	2d.	*The Angel said unto them (Two-part. Sop. and Bass)	Brown	3d.
*Crown Him, the Virgin's Son	B. Luard-Selby	3d.	*The first Christmas (Words only, 4s. per 100)	J. Barnby	3d.
Dawns the day, the natal day	Robin H. Legge	4d.	*The Grace of God which bringeth salvation	J. Barnby	2d.
Drop down, ye heavens	J. Barnby, 2d.; J. Stainer	6d.	*The hallowed day hath shined	B. Luard-Selby	4d.
*For unto us a Child is born	Händel	3d.	*The hallowed day hath shined	J. Stainer	2d.
*Give the king Thy judgments, O Lord	A. H. Brown	2d.	*The Hymn of the Angels	John E. West	6d.
Glory be to God	Bach	4d.	The light hath shined	E. Silas and C. G. Verrinder, ea.	2d.
Glory to God	Bach, 3d.; Händel	1d.	*The Lord our Righteousness	Hugh Blair	4d.
Glory to God in the highest *Clowes Bayley and Pergolesi, ea.	2d.	*The morning stars sang together	J. Stainer	6d.
Glory to God in the highest	E. Markham Lee	4d.	The morning stars sang together	G. A. A. West	4d.
*God so loved the world	J. Goss and M. Kingston, ea.	4d.	*The New-Born King	Percy E. Fletcher	2d.
God so loved the world	*J. Stainer, 2d.; J. V. Roberts	4d.	*The star that now is shining	Oliver King	2d.
*God, Who at sundry times	Edward C. Bairstow	4d.	The whole earth is at rest	J. Varley Roberts	6d.
God, Who at sundry times	J. H. Mee	6d.	*The Word is flesh become	Ch. Gounod	3d.
*Good King Wenceslas	Arr. by W. G. Ross	3d.	*The Word is made Incarnate	Thomas Adams	3d.
Hail! thou that art highly favoured	Arthur Carnall	6d.	*There shall a star	Mendelssohn	2d.
Hail to the Christ (Carol-Anthem)	J. Barnby	3d.	*There shall come a star	Cuthbert Harris	4d.
Hallelujah! for unto us a Child is born	W. H. Monk	3d.	*There shall come forth a Rod *Ferris Tozer & F. W. Wadely, ea.	4d.
Hallelujah! the light hath shined	Oliver King	4d.	*There shall come forth a star	O. A. Mansfield	4d.
Hark! the glad sound	Myles B. Foster and E. V. Hall, ea.	4d.	*There was silence in Bethlehem's fields (Unison)	J. Stainer	2d.
Hark! the herald angels sing	E. V. Hall	4d.	Ditto	J. Stainer	2d.
Hear, King of Angels	Oliver King	2d.	*There were shepherds	Myles B. Foster and B. Tours, ea.	2d.
He cometh forth	Bach	4d.	Ditto (Two-part Anthem)	Myles B. Foster	4d.
How beautiful are the feet (Appendix to the "Messiah")	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	*There were shepherds	Edgar Pettman and H. W. Wareing, ea.	6d.
I desired wisdom	J. Stainer	8d.	*There were shepherds	E. A. Sydenham and Healey Willan, ea.	4d.
I will set His dominion in the sea	Horatio W. Parker	6d.	This day Christ is born (Men's Voices)	Basil Harwood	4d.
*In a stable lowly (Carol-Anthem)	Oliver King	2d.	*This is the month	E. W. Naylor	2d.
In that day	J. F. Bridge	4d.	*Thou art My Son	Thomas Adams	4d.
In the beginning	G. B. Allen and B. Luard-Selby, ea.	2d.	*Thou must leave Thy lowly dwelling	Berlioz	2d.
In the beginning	E. H. Thorne	2d.	*Thus speaketh the Lord of Hosts	J. Stainer	2d.
In the beginning	F. Tozer and *C. Macpherson, ea.	6d.	Unto us a Child is born	F. Adlam	6d.
In this was manifested	F. E. Gladstone	3d.	Unto us was born (Two-part Anthem)	G. A. Macfarren	8d.
*It came upon the midnight clear	J. Stainer	2d.	What sweeter music can we bring	H. Walford Davies	6d.
*Jesus, Who from Thy Father's throne	F. C. Woods	4d.	When Christ was born to earth	H. Walford Davies	6d.
*Let us now go even unto Bethlehem J. T. Field & E. J. Hopkins, ea.	2d.	*When Jesus was born in Bethlehem	W. A. C. Cruickshank	4d.
*Let us now go even unto Bethlehem	Bruce Steane	2d.	While all things were in quiet silence H. Willan & *H. J. King, ea.	4d.
*Like silver lamps	J. Barnby	2d.	*While all things were in quiet silence M. B. Foster & O. King, ea.	2d.
*Lo, God, our God has come	Battison Haynes	4d.	While all things were in quiet silence	G. A. Macfarren	4d.
Lo, star-led chiefs	W. Crotch	3d.	*While shepherds watched their flocks Geo. Elvey & E. V. Hall, ea.	4d.
*Love Divine, all love excelling	E. V. Hall	4d.	*While shepherds watched their flocks J. Barnby, 6d.; W. T. Best	2d.
*Mercy and truth are met together (Words, 4s. per 100) J. Stainer	4d.	With all Thy Hosts	*John E. West and A. W. Wilson, ea.	2d.

THE "LUTE" SERIES OF CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.

*72 Arise, shine	T. W. Stephenson	4d.	*71 Fear not; for behold	F. J. Sawyer	4d.
*95 Arise, shine	F. C. Maker	4d.	*12 Hark! what mean (Carol Anthem)	Arthur Sullivan	4d.
179 Behold! He cometh	Albert W. Ketelbey	4d.	143 How beautiful are the feet	W. A. C. Cruickshank	4d.
16 Behold, I bring	F. Aubrey Owen	4d.	144 Let us now go	A. Kempton	4d.
94 Behold, I bring you good tidings	Fredk. Peel	4d.	131 Rejoice ye with Jerusalem	Arthur Page	4d.
225 Behold, my Servant	C. Harris	4d.	170 Sing, O Daughter of Zion	H. Elliot Button	4d.
108 Behold, my Servant	Ebenezer Prout	4d.	180 Sing, O Daughter of Zion	Arthur Page	4d.
166 Behold, upon the mountains	A. W. Ketelbey	4d.	154 Sing, O Heavens	Coldham Hall	4d.
*59 Blessed be the Lord	J. Barnby	4d.	*48 Sing, O sing	Henry Leslie	4d.
204 Break forth into joy	F. Aubrey Owen	4d.	*83 There were shepherds	A. R. Gani	4d.
155 Break forth into joy	J. C. Bridge	4d.	132 Unto us a Child is born	H. E. Nichol	4d.
*119 Break forth into joy	Seymour Smith	4d.	101 While all things	Cuthbert Harris	4d.
*23 Come near, ye nations	Michael Watson	4d.	*118 While shepherds watched	G. C. Martin	4d.
*35 Daughter of Zion	F. C. Maker	4d.

Anthems marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1st, 2d, and 3d. each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Digitized by Google

CANTATAS FOR CHRISTMAS.

BETHLEHEM

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES AND CHORUS

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND ARRANGED BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

THE

STORY OF BETHLEHEM

FOR CHRISTMAS SERVICES, ETC.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence; Tonic Sol-fa, Ninepence.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

String Parts, 6s. 6d.; Wind Parts and Full Score, MS.

CHRISTMAS EVE

FOR CONTRALTO SOLO, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

NIELS W. GADE.

(Op. 40.)

Price One Shilling; Tonic Sol-fa, Fourpence.

CHRISTMAS SCENES

FOR FEMALE VOICES

COMPOSED BY

FREDERIC H. COWEN.

Price Two Shillings; Tonic Sol-fa, Ninepence.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO

BY

J. S. BACH.

Divided into six sections, intended originally for separate performance on the three days of Christmas, New Year's Day, New Year's Sunday, and the Festival of the Epiphany.Vocal Score, Two Shillings; Vocal Parts, One Shilling each.Parts 1 and 2, 1s.; Parts 3 and 4, 1s.; Parts 5 and 6, 1s.
Tonic Sol-fa (Parts 1 and 2), 6d.
Books of Words (per 100), 10s.
Parts 1 and 2 (per 100), 5s.

THE NATIVITY

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

With Hymns to be sung by the Congregation

THE WORDS AND HYMNS SELECTED AND THE MUSIC

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling; Tonic Sol-fa, Eightpence.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

FOR SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

JULIUS HARRISON.

Price One Shilling.

Words only, 5s. 6d. per 100.

THE HOLY CHILD

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI,
CHORUS, AND ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling; Tonic Sol-fa, Sixpence.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

YULE-TIDE

COMPOSED BY

THOMAS ANDERTON.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth, gilt, 3s.BEFORE THE PALING OF THE STARS

A CHRISTMAS HYMN

BY

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

SET TO MUSIC FOR VOICES AND ORCHESTRA

BY

B. J. DALE.

Price One Shilling; Tonic Sol-fa, Ninepence.

"Such settings as these cannot do otherwise than tend to popularise the Church Service."—Musical Standard, June 6th, 1891.
 "Good, effective, easy, and dignified."—Musical Times, April 1, 1891.
 "Admirably adapted to meet the requirements of the majority of choirs and congregations." "Deserve extensive recognition and use."—Musical News, September 4 and 25, 1891.
 Also recommended by the Guardian, Church Times, &c., &c.

POPULAR CHURCH MUSIC

BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

CHRISTMAS ANTHEMS.				Staff	Tonic
				Notation.	Sol-fa.
Anthem—Christians, Awake	4d.	3d.
Carol—Once in Bethlehem	3d.	2d.
Two Christmas Carols	4d.	3d.

SERVICES

SERVICE IN G	2s.	1s. 4d.
Or, separately:—
Te Deum	4d.	3d.
Benedicite, omnia Opera	3d.	3d.
Benedictus	3d.	3d.
Jubilate	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	10d.	8d.
Pater Noster from the above	3d.	3d.
Amen ditto	1½d.	1½d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.

SERVICE IN CHANT FORM (No. 1)	1s. 4d.	10d.
--------------------------------------	-----	-----	-----	---------	------

Or, separately:—

Te Deum, &c., with Kyrie	4d.	3d.
Office for the Holy Communion	8d.	6d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	4d.	3d.
Te Deum in B flat	4d.	3d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in C (partly Unison)	4d.	2d.
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in D	4d.	3d.

ORGAN.

Volz Seraphique (for Recitals)	2s.	—
---------------------------------------	-----	-----	-----	-----	---

CHURCH CANTATA.

Penitence, Pardon, and Peace (for General use)	2s.	1s. 4d.
---	-----	-----	-----	-----	---------

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS

BY

EDWARD BUNNETT, MUS. D., CANTAB.

Organist to the Corporation of Norwich.

Address: 36, Christ Church Road, Norwich.

ANTHEMS FOR CHRISTMAS.

BEHOLD, I BRING GOOD TIDINGS	2d.
IN THE BEGINNING	4d.
" " " Tonic Sol-fa	4d.
ARISE, SHINE, FOR THY LIGHT	2d.
" " " Tonic Sol-fa	2d.

SERVICES.

TE DEUM IN E (Chant Form)	4d.
BENEDICITE IN E	2d.
BENEDICTUS AND JUBILATE IN E	4d.
CANTATE AND DEUS IN E	4d.

FIVE SETS OF CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

In Books or single numbers. List on Application, or single numbers.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

W. J. YOUNG'S PART-SONGS.

I LOVE THE MERRY SPRINGTIME	2d.
GAILY THROUGH THE GREENWOOD	2d.
Ditto, Two-part	2d.
HAIL, MERRY CHRISTMAS	2d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC FOR ADVENT AND CHRISTMAS

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

BENEDICITE IN D	0 4
A MORNING, COMMUNION, AND EVENING SERVICE in E minor. Op. 28:

Te Deum and Benedictus	0 6
Communion Service (including Benedictus and Agnus Dei)	2 0
Magnificat and Nunc dimittis	0 6

ANTHEM, "When the Son of Man shall come"	0 6
---	-----	-----	-----	-----

TWO CHRISTMAS CAROLS:

1. "Lowliest! Loftiest!"	0 5
2. "O hearken, all ye sad and lone"	0 5

ORGAN FANTASIA, "Christmastide"	3 6
--	-----	-----	-----	-----

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THREE SUCCESSFUL CAROLS

BY R. WALKER ROBSON.

"LO, NEW-BORN JESUS."
 "O'ER THE MEADOWS."
 "SLEEP, HOLY BABE."

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW PUBLICATIONS IN THE YORK SERIES.

509. COMMUNION SERVICE, B minor	Arthur Henry Brown	6d.
813. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, B minor	Arthur Henry Brown	4d.
815. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS, B flat	C. W. Parnell	6d.
816. LIGHT (S.A.T.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
817. TO MY LOVE (T.T.B.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
818. WHEN I AM DEAD (S.A.T.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
819. SAVE US, LORD, OR WE PERISH (S.A.T.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
820. Ditto (T.T.B.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	4d.
821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD (S.A.T.B.)	T. Tertius Noble	5d.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

T. MEE PATTISON'S POPULAR CANTATA

THE ANCIENT MARINER

31st 1,000.

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. Choruses only, 1s. 3d.

Band Parts may be hired.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC AND TEXT BOOKS

AT BARGAIN PRICES.

A wide range of SECOND-HAND Copies of Standard Text-Books in good condition, also of Vocal and Pianoforte Music.

Send to us also for New Music and Books; quick delivery guaranteed.

Catalogue 122 (post free). Mention requirements.

Books on approval. Books and Music Purchased.

FOYLES, 121-5, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

Performed at the Leeds Musical Festival.

ODE TO DEATH.

POEM BY

WALT WHITMAN.

SET TO MUSIC FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA BY GUSTAV HOLST.

(Op. 38).

Price, One Shilling and Sixpence.

String Parts, 3s. 4d. Full Score and Wind Parts on hire.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MUSIC BY NOEL PONSONBY.

FIVE SHORT PIECES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

(Novello, 2s.)

CHURCH MUSIC.

TE DEUM AND JUBILATE

FOR BOYS' VOICES.

(Novello, 6d.)

"GOD BE IN MY HEAD"

Set to be sung in Unison or Harmony.

(Cambridge University Press, 3d.)

JUST PUBLISHED.

YOUNG SINGERS:

THEIR VOICE CULTIVATION AND PRESERVATION.

A CONCISE, COMPREHENSIVE, UP-TO-DATE GUIDE TO ALL ENGAGED IN TEACHING SINGING TO BOYS AND GIRLS.

BY

JAMES BATES.

AUTHOR of Novello's Primers—"Voice Culture for Children." LECTURER on Voice Culture and Class-Singing at the Royal Academy of Music (1908-1922).

CHOIRMASTER, Christ Church, Lancaster Gate (1885-1910).

DIRECTOR, London College for Choristers (1893-1919).

TEACHER of Voice Production, Phonetics, and Singing at St. Mary's College, Lancaster Gate (1906-1922); Roedean School, Brighton (1908-1922); Francis Holland School, Chelsea (1908-1922); Kensington High School, to Student-Teachers (1910-1922); Frognal Girls' School, Hampstead (1910-1922); High Wycombe County School for Girls (1912-1922); Wycombe Abbey, Bucks, and "Hillside" Convent Schools, Farnborough.

DIRECTOR of Choral Singing, Edgbaston High School, Birmingham; Northampton County School for Girls; Winchester School for Girls; "West Downs," Winchester, &c.

In "Young Singers" Mr. Bates gives the results of his forty years' unique facilities for the study and practice of Voice Culture and School Singing. It is the only book published which deals completely with the treatment of English Vowels and Consonants in Singing.

"In this admirable treatise Mr. Bates crystallizes his vast experience as a trainer of young voices, and the rules he gives will be found invaluable by those undertaking this difficult and important work."—W. G. Alcock, Esq., Mus. Doc., M.V.O., Organist and Choirmaster, Salisbury Cathedral.

"Your success as a trainer of young voices I have long admired."—Sir Frederick Bridge, Mus. Doc., C.V.O.

"Your book, 'Young Singers,' is most excellent."—E. T. Cook, Esq., Mus. Bac., Organist and Choirmaster, Southwark Cathedral.

The training of boys' voices is a subject of which you are a master, and all who are interested in the culture and preservation of young voices owe you a tremendous debt of gratitude."—H. A. Fricker, Esq., M.A., Mus. Bac., Conductor of the Mendelssohn Choir, Toronto.

"I cannot imagine a more successful book for those engaged in teaching class-singing."—Stanley R. Marchant, Esq., Mus. Doc., Sub-Organist, St. Paul's Cathedral.

"The book will, I am sure, prove most valuable to the very many who are engaged in training the voices of young singers."—Stanley Roper, Esq., B.A., Mus. Bac., Organist and Choirmaster to H.M. Chapels Royal.

"Your new little book is most excellent. . . It is packed full of sound information and unimpeachable principles."—Sir R. R. Terry, Mus. Doc., Organist and Choirmaster, Westminster Cathedral.

To be obtained, 1s. 6d. post free, from the Author,

6, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, LONDON, W. 2.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SUITABLE FOR USE IN ADVENT.

RHAPSODY

FOR ORGAN

BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

(Op. 38.)

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

OLD ENGLISH

PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Arranged and Edited by GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

JOHN BULL.

Album of Selected Pieces 5 0

WILLIAM BYRD.

Album of Selected Pieces 5 0

Three Dances 3 0

Pavana. Galiarda. La Volta.

GILES FARNABY.

Album of Selected Pieces 4 0

OLD ENGLISH SUITE 6 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE

ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
72. LAMENT	J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
73. ELEGIAC PRELUDE	G. J. Bennett	2 3
74. CRADLE SONG	R. G. Halling	1 6
75. CHORALE FANTASIA ON "HEINLEIN"	J. E. Wallace	3 0
76. TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer")	C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77. ANDANTE RELIGIOSO	Alec Rowley	1 6
78. SCHERZO	G. J. Bennett	2 3
79. THREE PRELUDES	G. J. Bennett	2 3
80. DÉSÉPOIR	Ch. Quef	1 6
81. CAPRICE IN D FLAT	J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
82. THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1	H. Howells	1 6
83. " " " No. 2	H. Howells	1 6
84. " " " No. 3	H. Howells	1 6
85. THEMA OSTINATA	C. C. Palmer	1 6
86. COVENANTERS' MARCH	R. G. Halling	1 6
87. CHORAL MELODY	C. F. Waters	1 6
88. CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR	Alfred Hollins	3 0
89. HOMAGE TO HANDEL	S. Karg-Elert	3 6

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

MANGELSDORFF'S EXAMINATION TEXT-BOOKS.

"THE GROUNDWORK OF MUSIC AND ELEMENTARY EAR-TRAINING."

Paper, 1s. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

"100 Examination Questions" (Elementary), Cloth, 1s. 6d.

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

HAWKES & SON'S POPULAR ALBUM LIBRARY. FOR PIANO SOLO.

ST. AGNES' EVE. Suite.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

From the Incidental Music. Adapted and Arranged by ADOLF LOTTER.

- I. "That Ancient Beadsman heard the Prelude soft." II. "Her maiden eyes divine."
III. "Porphyro, now tell me where is Madeline."

SYLVAN SCENES. Suite.

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

- I. In Beauty's Bower. II. Sylvia Dances. III. The Pool of Narcissus.
IV. Cupid's Carnival.

MY LADY DRAGON FLY. Suite from the Ballet.

HERMAN FINCK.

- I. The Call of the Sun. II. The Bull Frog's Shadow. III. The Dance of the Silver Pool
IV. Golden Days. V. The Love Spell. VI. The Last Dance of Summer.

HIAWATHA. Suite from the Ballet Music.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR Price 4s. 3d. post free.

- I. The Wooing. II. The Marriage Feast. III. (a) Bird Scene. (b) Conjuror's Dance.
IV. The Departure. V. Re-union.

AMERICANA. Suite.

T. W. THURBAN.

- I. March, The Tiger's Tail. II. Serenade, When Malindy Sings.
III. Sketch, The Water-Melon Fête.

INTERMEZZI. Suite Dansante.

FREDERICK ROSSE.

- I. Valse Lente. II. Pas Seul. III. Danse Tambourin.

WOODLAND PICTURES. Suite.

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

- I. In the Hayfields. II. An Old World Garden. III. The Bean-Feast.

THREE DANCES.

HERMAN FINCK.

- I. Processionale et Danse Florale. II. Valse des Adoratrices. III. Danse Barbare

A CHILDREN'S SUITE.

JOHN ANSELL.

- I. Punchinello. II. The Musical Box. III. The Box of Soldiers.
IV. The Story Book. V. The Fairy Doll.

Price each Album, 3s. (3s. 3d. post free), except where marked.

Obtainable at all Music-Sellers, or direct from the Publishers:

HAWKES & SON, Denman Street, London, W.1.

HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

Edited by ERNEST NEWMAN.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH
BY HARVEY GRACE

Cloth, gilt, xviii. + 319 pages.

WITH OVER TWO HUNDRED MUSICAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Price Twelve Shillings net.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

THE TIMES LITERARY SUPPLEMENT

The first impression with regard to this book is a sense of surprise that it should have waited for Mr. Grace to write it: the second, one of satisfaction that the task came into his hands. . . . The book is for organists who wish to know Bach better: it is therefore rightly technical and frankly critical. Because of the latter quality it is also worth reading by those who are not organists . . . The whole leaves the effect of a competent mind working direct on the material and not through others.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH

. . . It is the most comprehensive and open-minded treatment of the subject in existence. . . . There is hardly a man in this country better equipped than Mr. Grace for writing on this one branch of Bach's many activities: he speaks not only with the authority of a theoretical analyst, but with the even greater authority of a man who has played the works on many divers organs.

DAILY NEWS

A STIMULATING BOOK

All who have read . . . cannot fail to have been impressed by the wide knowledge shown by Mr. Grace, and the thoroughly human way in which he expresses his learning.

THE NATION AND THE ATHENÆUM

In principle this is a technical book of instruction: it is written to remind organists of what "old Bach" wrote for their instrument; and it gives a great deal of practical help towards execution and interpretation. But it is not only useful for the man who makes a noise up in the organ-loft and doesn't have to be perpetually kneeling down or standing up all through the service: it will be interesting to the listener in his pew down below. It is, indeed, a valuable listener's guide to all sorts of Bach; and will end by leaving the reader, whether an organist or not, in a position to enjoy Bach more than he did before.

NEW WITNESS

Apart from its contribution to scholarship and its creative accuracy of fact, this book is unusually vivid, illuminating, and practical. . . . There seems to me to be that fusion of academic clarity of thought with imaginative understanding which is as often desired in a book like this as it is missing. . . . We come to the end of the book knowing Bach the organist as he must veritably have been, and not as we would like to think him. . . . The book is admirably done, and no less pleasant than it is able.

YORKSHIRE POST

Mr. Grace writes with the discrimination of a judicious critic and the practical knowledge of an expert organist, and the result is a handbook from which all organists, even the cleverest, may gain some useful suggestions. To the inexperienced player it will be an indispensable vade mecum.

LIVERPOOL DAILY POST AND MERCURY

. . . . will be welcomed by musicians. Mr. Grace preserves a sense of proportion in dealing with a subject over which writers are apt to lose their heads.

THE REFEREE

. . . . may be read with profit not only by every organist but by every admirer of the great composer.

SUNDAY TIMES

The student of the organ works could have no better guide than Mr. Grace.

MUSICAL NEWS AND HERALD

Here is a book on Bach—"Old Bach," . . . which will surely help on this ever-young composer. . . . three hundred pages of delightful criticism, guidance, and appreciation. He brings humour to bear, and imagination, in addition to the well-considered results of life-long study and experience. . . . The whole book is delightful.

THE MUSIC TEACHER

A new book on Bach is something rare and greatly to be desired. Here comes Mr. Harvey Grace, with a study of The Organ Works of Bach that will delight the heart of every lover of this mighty music. . . . It contains the fruit of a lot of original investigation and fresh thinking. . . . We like particularly his treatment of the wonderful chorale preludes.

CHURCH TIMES

Mr. Grace's excellent book. . . . For other than organists and would-be organists the present work offers much interest and instruction.

CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER

Altogether a delightful and well-written volume.

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD

. . . . This masterly survey of Bach's organ works. . . . The book will be a great delight to a sympathetic organist, and even those who are not organists but who take pleasure in Bach will find it delightful. . . . Those organists who read this book can hardly fail to be stirred up to give various audiences a much fuller range of Bach music. . . . Enlightened critical comment. . . . Illuminating analyses.

EDITIONS MAURICE SENART.

SONGS BY REGINALD C. ROBBINS

FOR BASS OR BARITONE (OR CONTRALTO).

	No.	Page
A PASSER BY (Robert Bridges), G#-C#	2	0
NIGHTINGALES (Robert Bridges), G#-C#	2	0
MY LOST YOUTH (H. W. Longfellow), A-D	2	0
PSALM XVIII., B-E?	2	0
PSALM LXVIII., B?-C#	2	6
IN THE HIGHLANDS (R. L. Stevenson), A?-D?	2	0
{ AVE ATQUE VALE, Prologue (A. C. Swinburne), B?-D	2	0
{ AVE ATQUE VALE, Epilogue (A. C. Swinburne), A-D	2	0
THE WANDERERS (Robert Browning), A-D	2	6
GENIUS LOCI (Margaret L. Woods), B?-D?	2	0
THE SHEPHERDESS (Alice Meynell), A-D	2	0
{ THE LAST FAUN WAKES	Helen M. Seymour { A-D
{ THE LAST FAUN SEEKS	from { B?-D
{ THE LAST FAUN THINKS OF DEATH }	"The Last Faun " { B-D?	4 0
A SHRINE BY THE SEA (Greek Anthology, trans. Sir Rennell Rodd), B-D	2	0
THE FORSAKEN MERMAN, Epilogue (Matthew Arnold), A#-C#	2	0
THE SCHOLAR GYPSY, Epilogue (Matthew Arnold), G#-E	2	0
SOHRAB AND RUSTUM, Epilogue (Matthew Arnold), C#-D	2	0
INVOCATION TO YOUTH (Laurence Binyon), A-D	2	0
ODE ON A GRECIAN URN (John Keats), A?-E	2	0
ODE TO A NIGHTINGALE (John Keats), G-F	3	0
NYMPH OF THE DOWNWARD SMILE (John Keats), C-D?	2	0
A CERTAIN ONE WHO DIED (David Morton), B?-C?	2	0
THE DEAD MEN SING, from "The Ancient Mariner" (S. T. Coleridge), A-D	2	0
DREAMS OF THE SEA (W. H. Davies), A?-D#	2	0
SONG TO DAVID (Christopher Smart), G-E	3	0
ODE TO THE WEST WIND (P. B. Shelley), G#-F	3	0
LA BELLE DAME SANS MERCI (John Keats), G#-E	2	0

PARIS : 20, RUE DU DRAGON.

LONDON: NOVELLO & COMPANY, LIMITED, 163, WARDOUR STREET, W.1.

BOOSEY & CO.'S
LATEST ORCHESTRAL MUSIC

OVERTURES.

Fierrabras	...	Schubert
Overture in B flat		Schubert
Shamus O'Brien	...	Stanford
Undank Storch

SUITES.

Harvest Time	... Haydn Wood
Faust	... Coleridge-Taylor
As you like it	... Roger Quilter
Wayside Sketches	Scott-Minchin
Gipsy Pictures	Hugh Mallory
Princess Gioia	Colin Campbell

MARCHES.

Spirit of Pageantry	Fletcher
Here Goes ...	Bayne
Imperial Britain ...	Chandler
Old Glory... ..	Lestrang

SELECTIONS.

The Beggar's Opera ...Austin
W. H. Squire's Popular Songs
W. Sanderson's Popular Songs

ENTR'ACTES.

Melody David
Slumber Time Robinson
Mam'zelle Coquette ... Gilman

ALL WITH FREE PERFORMING RIGHTS.

BOOSEY'S BAND CLUBS

afford the finest medium for keeping in touch with new Orchestrations at low subscription rates.

Write for particulars.

BOOSEY & CO., 295, REGENT STREET
LONDON, W.1.

HARRY HODGE TOCCATINA

IN G MAJOR. FOR THE PIANO.

Price 2s. net.

"A work built on a large scale, which gives the impression that its creator has come under the spell of Bach. The melodic line is effective and away from the beaten track, the harmony fascinating, the pianistic writing, although not very difficult, nevertheless modern and full of interest. The 'Toccatina' is remarkable for great climaxes and mighty pedal-points. We can fully recommend this powerful 'Toccatina' to all pianists for public performance."—

Allgemeine Musik-Zeitung.

"A very effective little 'Toccatina.' . . . The composer writes in a pianistic style that sounds remarkably well."—

Dresdner Anzeiger.

"A pleasant and most effective 'Toccatina.'"—

Reichenberger Zeitung.

"This is a composition most suitable for study. There is variety in technique, but not extreme technique; it is naturally rhythmic from beginning to end."—

The Scottish Musical Magazine.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD.,
11, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SOME RECENT ORGAN COMPOSITIONS

SUITABLE FOR

CHURCH, RECITAL, OR CINEMA PURPOSES.

Title.	Grade.	Composer.	Price.
AT SUNRISE	Moderately easy	J. A. Meale	1/6
A delightful "A" or "B" number for a Recital programme.
CAPRICE	Moderate	J. Stuart Archer	1/6
A dainty number to enliven any programme.
CARILLON	Moderate	Purcell J. Mansfield	2/0
An effective suggestion of bell music.
EVENING BARCAROLLE	Mod. easy	Gatty Sellars	1/6
A short and attractive encore number.
FIVE SHORT VARIATIONS	{ Mod. diff. }	J. Stuart Archer	2/0
ON A SCOTS AIR
(Gala Water)
The first modern English Organ Composition played by Marcel Dupré.
FOUNTAIN MELODY	Moderate	J. A. Meale	2/0
A scenic tone-picture of an illuminated fountain.
INTERMEZZO	Moderate	J. Stuart Archer	1/6
A graceful piece of light melody.
INTERMEZZO in C	Easy	H. Davan Wetton	1/6
An attractive air.
LAGOON LULLABY	Mod. easy	Gatty Sellars	2/0
A charming composition, always certain of an encore.
MELODIE in D	Mod. easy	H. Davan Wetton	1/6
A distinctive melody.
MIGHTY ANDES, THE	Moderately diff.	Gatty Sellars	2/6
A descriptive and effective tone-poem portraying— Daybreak, Nature's Grandeur, A Storm, and Evening's Calm.
SERENADE	Moderately diff.	J. Stuart Archer	1/6
Another light, melodious work on a high plane of musicianship.
VESPERTILIA	Moderate	Roland Diggle	1/6
A useful short composition.

Of all Music Dealers, or the Publishers:

PAXTON'S, 22, HIGH ST., NEW OXFORD ST., LONDON, W.C.2.

Ask to see copies through our "On Approval" Department.
Send for Graded Organ Catalogue, (C. 501), post free.

TO THE BUSY MUSIC TEACHER.

THINK WHAT YOU GAIN

by sending for our thematic lists of melodious and attractive pianoforte pieces which will enable you to select at a glance pieces suitable to the capacity of any pupil. You need something which will attract from the recreative point of view, and at the same time be a means of helping forward the instructions you have imparted. As these lists have been carefully compiled with these objects in view we feel confident you will find yourself amply repaid for the trouble you take in sending for them by the time you will save in making a suitable selection.

It is easy to prove these facts to your satisfaction by sending for our THEMATIC lists and trying the pieces over. We feel sure that you will be satisfied.

These lists are also admirably adapted for sight-reading tests. We also forward gratis and post free a list of 150 albums of easy pianoforte pieces carefully graded from "VERY EASY" through ten sections to "MODERATELY EASY." This is no ordinary catalogue, but a list graded in such a manner that the task of selection by the teacher is greatly facilitated.

These valuable Booklets and Catalogue of ORGAN MUSIC will be sent gratis and post free on receipt of a postcard by

A. HAMMOND & Co.,
6, KINGLY STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE BACH CHORALE BOOK

SELECTED AND EDITED

BY THE

REV. J. HERBERT BARLOW.

A collection of more than 100 of the finest existing Chorales harmonized for S.A.T.B. by J. S. BACH. Now first arranged for regular Church use as Hymns, with specially selected English words according to the various occasions of the Church year.

The first practical and comprehensive publication making Bach's masterpieces available to every American choir. This book should be used as a supplement to the regular Hymnal in every Church.

Cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

Now being Printed. A selection of 25 of the best CHORALES in the above collection, arranged for T.T.B.B. by CECIL FORSYTH.

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE PURCELL SOCIETY.

COMMITTEE.

PROF. SIR HUGH ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

G. E. P. ARKWRIGHT, Esq.

SIR J. FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.

ROBERT BRIDGES, Esq., M.A., M.B., D.Litt., LL.D., POET LAUREATE.

E. J. DENT, Esq., M.A., Mus. Bac.

J. A. FULLER-MAITLAND, Esq., M.A., F.S.A.

ALAN GRAY, Esq., LL.M., Mus. Doc.

AUGUSTUS LITTLETON, Esq.

SYDNEY H. NICHOLSON, Esq., M.A., Mus. Bac.

CYRIL B. ROTHAM, Esq., Mus. Doc.

W. BARCLAY SQUIRE, Esq., M.A., F.S.A.,
F.R.G.S., Hon. Sec.

SIR C. VILLIERS STANFORD, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Messrs. NOVELLO & Co. have the pleasure to announce that the Committee has decided to sell the Volumes to the general public at the uniform price of

TWENTY-FIVE SHILLINGS PER VOLUME NET.

The Subscription Price will remain at

ONE GUINEA PER VOLUME NET.

The following Volumes have now been published :

- | | |
|---|---|
| I. THE YORKSHIRE FEAST SONG. | XII. THE FAIRY QUEEN. |
| II. THE MASQUE IN TIMON OF ATHENS. | XIIIA. SACRED MUSIC—PART I. |
| III. DIDO AND ÆNEAS. | XIV. SACRED MUSIC—PART II. |
| IV. ODE ON THE DUKE OF GLOUCESTER'S BIRTHDAY. | XV. WELCOME SONGS FOR CHARLES II. AND JAMES II.—PART I. |
| V. TWELVE SONATAS OF THREE PARTS. | XVI. DRAMATIC MUSIC—PART I. |
| VI. HARPSICHORD AND ORGAN MUSIC. | XVII. SACRED MUSIC—PART III. |
| VII. TEN SONATAS OF FOUR PARTS. | XVIII. WELCOME SONGS—PART II. |
| VIII. ODE FOR ST. CECILIA'S DAY, 1692. | XIX. THE INDIAN QUEEN AND THE TEMPEST. |
| IX. DIOCLESIAN. | XX. DRAMATIC MUSIC—PART II. |
| X. THREE ODES FOR ST. CECILIA'S DAY. | XXI. DRAMATIC MUSIC—PART III. |
| XI. BIRTHDAY ODES FOR QUEEN MARY—PART I. | |

JUST ISSUED.

XXII. DUETS, TRIOS, AND CATCHES.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 170.

BLACKPOOL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

HELD as usual in the numerous spacious halls of the Winter Gardens, this gathering will for the first time occupy an entire week, October 16-21. Details of the entries point to rather an overwhelming task for the management. On the closing day between eighty and ninety bodies of choralists and instrumentalists pass before the judges. The imposition last year of song-cycles as tests in place of individual songs, whilst arising from purely artistic considerations, was expected to have an incidental advantage in reducing the mass of candidates to more manageable proportions: last year this proved to be the case—not so this. A hundred and forty sopranos have studied three of Bantock's settings of Browning's Dramatic Lyrics; fifty-four tenors have entered for Arnold Bax's 'Celtic' cycle (Fiona McLeod); ninety mezzo-sopranos will sing Michael Head's music to Francis Ledwidge's 'O'er the rim of the Moon'; Elgar's 'Sea Pictures' attracts ninety-two contraltos; forty-three basses have prepared Wolf's 'Michel Angelo' songs; and sixty-four baritones sing the late George Butterworth's cycle from Housman's 'Shropshire Lad.' The dead weight of this concentrated endeavour is impressive; nobody could have been surprised had works like those of Bax or Wolf drawn no more than a dozen candidates. On the analogy of past experiences probably a score of really well-equipped singers will emerge from these various classes. Few persons will envy Madame Edith Hands, Madame Gleeson-White, Mr. Austin, Mr. Plunket Greene, Dr. R. R. Terry, and Mr. Steuart Wilson their tasks. Abundant justification for steady persistence in the operatic classes, despite the apparent indifference of competitors in former years, may now be found in the response this year in the operatic ensemble classes, all chosen from Mozart's 'Cosi fan tutte'; five groups appear in the quartet class (in costume), and over thirty sets in the various duets. A useful attempt to stimulate interest in the wealth of song-writing done by the lutenist composers of the Elizabethan age has yielded quite a satisfactory entry for an initial effort. Each singer has prepared two of John Dowland's airs, and must play his (or her) own accompaniment, transcribed for pianoforte from the old lute tablature. Dr. R. R. Terry will doubtless have much to say on this subject that will be helpful for future study. The folk-dance classes, both adult and juvenile, assume rather formidable dimensions; on October 20 there is a prospect of dancing from early morn to a late hour in the afternoon. At last the juvenile choral classes have got back to their pre-war standard. Compared with what is found in populous artisan centres like Birmingham or Hull, the Blackpool entries seem insignificant, but the revival in this important branch is most welcome. Mention must also be made of the orchestral development; Julius Harrison's recently-published Prelude Music for pianoforte and strings has attracted five orchestras which are allowed the assistance of only one professional player. The pianoforte part is naturally formidable, and amateur viola players will find something to think about. The chamber music classes and those for Church choirs are the only ones which mark time or reveal a slight decline. It seems certain that Blackpool retains its pre-eminence as being the festival of this type which, prescribing a scheme of music making the most searching demands upon interpretative and creative qualities, at the same time attracts such crowds of candidates. The general comfort and high efficiency of the organization, not mentioning the ridiculous cheapness of the reserved seats (31s. 6d. for the entire week), all contribute to confirm this position. Appended are details of the song-cycles and the choral music:

	Candidates.
Soprano.—Three Dramatic Lyrics ('My Star,' 'In a Year,' 'Now'), by Robert Browning (Bantock)	140
Mezzo-Soprano.—Cycle, 'O'er the rim of the Moon,' Francis Ledwidge (Michael Head) ...	90
Contralto.—'Sea Pictures,' Cycle, various (Elgar)	92
Tenor.—'The Celtic' Song-Cycle, Fiona McLeod (Arnold Bax)	54
Baritone.—Six Songs from Housman's 'Shropshire Lad' (George Butterworth)	64
Bass.—Three Michael Angelo Songs (Hugo Wolf)	43

The music prescribed in the open choral classes is as follows:

FEMALE VOICES (20-35 singers).

- 'The Storm Cloud,' 4-part (Rimsky-Korsakov).
- 'In midst of ocean,' 6-part (Schumann).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (Tenor Lead). (30-40 voices.)

- 'Pibroch of Donuil Dhu' (Bantock).
- 'O sweet delight' (Bantock).
- Fifteenth Century Carol, 'Now is the time of Christymas' (accompaniment for pianoforte and flute) (Bax).

MALE-VOICE CHOIRS (Alto Lead). (25-36 voices.)

- 'Sigh no more, ladies' (R. J. S. Stevens).
- 'Love wakes' (C. H. H. Parry).

MIXED-VOICE CHOIRS, 'A' (60 voices).

- 'Go, song of mine' (Op. 57) (Elgar).
- 'There is sweet music' (Op. 53, No. 1) (Elgar).
- 'Of a rose I sing a song' (accompaniment for harp, 'cello, and bass) (Arnold Bax).

MIXED VOICE CHOIRS, 'B' (limited to those who did not win in the 40-60 voices Challenge Shield Class in 1912, 1913, or 1920).

- 'Three Sleeps' (J. Gerrard Williams).
- 'The Blue Bird' (C. V. Stanford).

THE NORTH LONDON FESTIVAL.

November 17-25.

In the first two years of its existence (1920-21) this Festival became firmly rooted. It appeals to a large area which, since the demise of the Alexandra Palace meetings, badly needed a festival of its own, and was in danger of becoming chorally sterile for want of it. The musical condition of the district is reflected in a competition syllabus and entry list. Here music of the home flourishes. Teachers of the pianoforte and of singing, like the poor, are always with us. Soloists have over fifty classes open to them in this year's North London syllabus. Choirs, at first, were few in proportion to the enormous population that provided them. The choirs—senior and junior all told—and orchestras that entered for the first competition numbered forty-nine, in seventeen classes. At the second Festival the number had increased to seventy-nine. When it passes the hundred it will be approaching a just proportion. Possibly that stage will be reached this year.

In the present syllabus there are ninety-one classes. 'New features are added. Junior and infants' schools will bring singing-games and nursery rhymes. A vocal duet for lady and gentleman and a men's vocal quartet are new. Ladies will have a Shakespearean duologue. 'Cellists will be in senior and junior divisions. A challenge cup is offered for former winning lady vocalists. Mezzos, who are numerous, have a division for those of eighteen to twenty years of age. The number of performers in string bands is optionally increased.'

There are now eight classes for adult choirs. We give the chief particulars and tests:

OPEN CLASSES.

Choral Societies, up to sixty voices.—'Awake, awake' (Bantock) and 'Tewkesbury Road' (Sweeting).

Ladies' Choirs, up to thirty voices.—'Dream Pedlary' (Colin Taylor) and 'Birds are singing' (Hugh S. Robertson).

Men's Choirs, up to twenty-five voices.—'A Lover's Counsel' (Cowen).

LOCAL CLASSES (London N. or N.W.).

Choral Societies, up to fifty voices.—'Pastoral' (Julius Harrison) and 'Now is my Chloris fresh as may' (Frank Idle).

Choral Societies, up to twenty-five voices.—'To music' (George Dyson) and 'When May is in his prime' (John Ireland).

Ladies' Choirs, up to thirty voices.—'When summer dies' (Luard-Selby) and 'Beauteous morn' (Edward German).

JUNIOR CHOIRS.

Ten classes cover Sunday school choirs, boys' choirs, girls' choirs, elementary schools, singing-games, nursery rhymes for infants, sight-singing, and ear-tests. Larger elementary school choirs (for whom sight-singing is compulsory) sing (boys) 'The Minuet' (Arthur Richards) and 'King Bruce and the Spider' (Percy Fletcher); and (girls) 'The Shepherd' (Walford Davies) and 'The Dream-seller' (Markham Lee).

Entries close on October 21. Mr. John Graham, 74, Park Hall Road, East Finchley, N.2, is the hon. secretary.

SOUTH-EAST LONDON.

February 16, 17, March 12-17.

The plan of the third South-East London Musical Festival differs from last year's only in one small detail—the subdivision of the class for junior violin bands. Otherwise the divisions of the syllabus remain as before.

The Festival has three conspicuous features: (1) It is open only to local competitors. (2) There are no solo competitions (following the tradition of the People's Palace Festival). The nearest approach is made in chamber music and in quartets, trios, and duets for voices. (3) Special music is prescribed for combined concert performance. Juniors sing Dyson's 'Praise,' Parry's 'Jerusalem,' and an old dance tune, 'The children are singing,' Mr. Geoffrey Shaw conducting. The adult choirs are to prepare Bach's 'Sleepers, wake' for performance under Dr. Adrian C. Boulton.

The adjudicators are Mr. Shaw, Dr. Emily Daymond, Mr. Dan Price, and Mr. R. H. Walthew. The hon. secretary is Miss Helen Ridley, 34, Emperor's Gate, S.W.7.

TORQUAY.

SOUTHERN COUNTIES' SEMI-NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

The third annual Festival was held on September 4-9 at Torquay. Exeter had previously been the place of meeting, but for lack of adequate support a change of venue was decided on. The attendance of the public during the week was better than before, but was not at any time embarrassing. New features included were classes for organ and trombone playing, accompanying at sight, ladies' vocal trio, pianoforte playing or own selection, veterans' vocal solo, and ladies' choral singing. Also the solo vocal classes were divided into smaller sections. The entries, amounting to eleven hundred and sixty, were a hundred and thirty more than last year, and nearly eight hundred competitors were involved. Entries were received from Ireland, Nottingham, Staffordshire, Middlesex, Northamptonshire, all parts of Wales, Hertfordshire, Wiltshire, Yorkshire, Warwickshire, Sussex, Lancashire, Kent, Somerset, Gloucestershire, Cornwall, and Devon. The syllabus included eighty competitions, and the adjudicators were Mr. W. G. Edwards, of Cardiff, Dr. Leonard Fowles, Dr. William Prendergast, and Dr. Ferris Tozer, of Exeter. The prizes consisted of gold, silver, and bronze medals, books, a sixty-eight guinea pianoforte (given by Messrs. Paish & Co., and won by Miss Winnie Richards, of Neath), a twenty-five guinea violin (given by Mr. William Glenister), and money (in the male choir class). The greatest number of entries occurred in open classes for pianoforte playing and hymn-tune composition. Only one competitor succeeded in gaining maximum marks during the Festival, this being Miss May Jones for unqualified success in vocal sight-reading. Very few choirs entered, September being the wrong time of the year for them. The standard of the male choir class was high, though only two choirs entered. The entries in the violin classes showed an increase, and the standard was much higher than formerly, but there was only one entry for 'cello playing and none for chamber music classes. The level of the tenor solo and ladies' vocal trio classes was low.

In solo singing the chief prizes were won by Miss Margaret Southan and Miss Enid Pascoe (soprano), Miss M. Edgcombe (mezzo-soprano), Mrs. Prettyjohns and Miss F. Pike (contralto), Mr. R. M. Miners (tenor), Mr. F. Baden Powell (baritone), Mr. C. B. Millman (bass), Mr. Norman Bolt and Miss May Jones (sight-reading).

Prizes for instrumental solo playing were won by Mr. R. S. Oke (organ), Mr. N. Peace (violin), Mr. R. Oke, Miss W. Richards, and Miss K. M. Stone (pianoforte), Mr. Clifford Strong (accompanying at sight).

The chief choral results were as follows:

Male-Voice Choirs (open class).—Tests: 'I would I were the glow-worm' (Harold Rhodes) and 'Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee' (Bairstow). 1st, Gunnislake and District; 2nd, Falmouth.

Female-Voice Choirs (open class).—Tests: 'The dream of home' (Charles Wood) and 'Orpheus with his lute' (German). 1st, Orpheus Ladies' Choir.

Boys' Choirs.—1st, St. Mary's Church Choir Boys.

Girls' Choirs.—1st, Stoke Damarel Girls' Ambulance Brigade.

HALIFAX.

A new competition Festival has been organized at Halifax under the chairmanship of Mr. T. W. Benson, with Mr. J. E. Hoyle (14a, Crossley Street) as secretary. It will be held for the first time at Victoria Hall, Halifax, on November 24 and 25. There are twenty-five classes, which cover solo playing and singing (fourteen), vocal quartet, brass quartet (an unusual feature), elocution, and choral singing. The chief tests are 'Two Roses' (Cui) and 'Go, song of mine' (Elgar) for mixed-voice choirs, 'Hymn before action' and 'After many a dusty mile' (Elgar) for male-voice choirs.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 171.

THE BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL—Oct. 16-21.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

A QUITE hopeless task confronts the chronicler of this meeting. Events proceeding simultaneously in as many as half-a-dozen halls from 9 o'clock in the morning to 5 o'clock, and then with a brief break running in the great Pavilion from 6 or 6.30 until after 10 o'clock give a faint idea of the concentration of purpose and endeavour connoted in the words 'Blackpool Festival.' The crowds which used to assemble in the latter half of the week are now evident in full force on the opening day, and this year the enthusiasm of the audience 'came to the boil' very much earlier than in former times, and by the closing days the pressure-gauge certainly stood higher than ever before. Attention, then, may be directed to the events of outstanding prominence, and had best be recorded in the form of a diary. On the first day the most vital item was the competition (the first of its sort ever held anywhere, said Dr. R. R. Terry) in which the solo writing of the Elizabethans was utilised in the endeavour to make our contemporaries understand that this stuff, so far from being merely antiquarian matter, was in very truth a vital force and destined to exercise as energising an influence on study and practice as any of the numerous 'fertilizing agencies' so much talked about nowadays. The singers of these very modern 'Ayres' of old John Dowland played their own accompaniments on a grand pianoforte from a score based on the lute tablature in use when the music was written, and generally played with marked discretion. Rightaway one was made acquainted with a feature which became increasingly evident during the week—memorised work. Some of these girls singing the Tudors were Margaret Coopers at the pianoforte. They sang and played to us with a simplicity and ease in marked contrast to the usual platform manner, and were the more to be commended because they had no models to follow, only their own innate sense of musical feeling serving as a guide. We have not heard the last of this sort of thing. Publishers are at work, and where Blackpool leads other Festivals will follow, and our Elizabethans will in a few years possess the land in a very real sense. The adult folk-dancing had an honoured place in the Monday evening programme; by its very nature it will be preserved from the merely spectacular. As the intricacies of its technique become as familiar to the audience as to the dancers, its popularity with the former will steadily increase; but in any normally constituted assembly the desire must surely arise to participate rather than look on, especially in the country dances, which took their rise purely from the social conditions of the life of their time and district. Here again, as in the Tudor solo work, we felt instinctively that we were standing on the verge of tremendous possibilities—virgin land waiting for development.

On the second day we were enabled to some extent to sample the type of results flowing from our existing system of pianoforte and violin teaching. Here is surely matter far beyond the provision of an incentive for the juvenile heart and mind. Teaching methods have, like most other things, grown up in this country in more or less haphazard fashion. What sense is there in entering for a violin competition a girl or boy who is not able to tune a fiddle without assistance? It is such wrong-headed work which makes us wonder what degree of competence is behind the teaching. Whilst writing thus, one does not lose sight of the fact that many more come to learn than to teach, and that only thus do competitive Festivals justify an existence; but more judgment will have to be exercised in entering those who must be known to be really incompetent. Juvenile pianists seemed to me to shape with much greater success at some short Bach studies than at two short sections from Schumann's 'Waldscenen.' Julius Harrison's 'Pixie Man' again seemed to snare the interest of the kiddies more successfully than some simple Mozart extracts. Adult tastes and affinities are bad enough to judge, but youngsters' predilections are past finding out, and safety would seem to lie only in prescribing a course of Festival test-pieces spread over a number of years (could one be sure that the youngsters would come forward consistently during such a period), which would secure some really all-round acquaintance with composers that matter.

Other features of this second day were male-voice singing in small choirs which would be completely out-classed in the great open classes on the closing day. These probationary classes are meant to serve as feeders for the larger ones, and bodies of men came from as far afield as Coventry. This body of railwaymen (for such proved to be their employment) greatly distinguished themselves in two widely-contrasted works by Bantock and Elgar. Again memorised singing was the rule and not the exception. Dr. Terry was at great pains to drive home the point that brainy interpretation was little good unless the voices could respond to such demands. Wittily he remarked that a choir which combined all these qualities was the one we were all hoping to join some day.

Orchestral playing at these big northern festivals has languished in comparison with choral work. Committees have tried again and again to stimulate this branch, and the solution appears to be in the direction of prescribing works for strings and single wind with timpani. Here Saint-Saëns's Overture, 'La Princesse Jaune,' was played by five bands of thirty-five players, who were allowed the assistance of a couple of professionals. With one exception, a distinctly high level was attained and maintained. If this response may be taken as a fair sample, then salvation lies in the direction of encouraging the small orchestra rather than the full one. Honours went to a local band making an initial appearance under the direction of Mr. Percy Dayman.

The third and fourth days brought a great assembly of solo singing aspirants accompanied by still greater crowds of hearers. Four song-cycles were heard on Wednesday and two more on Thursday, the former day also giving us a series of duets and quintets from Mozart's 'Così fan tutte'. These duets varied enormously in quality, and made one wonder on what principles some had entered. Where women sang together the results were often really delightful for even blasé ears, but rarely was the man well-mated with woman or vice versa. The quintets were heard on the Pavilion stage with scenery, costumes, and appropriate lighting, accompanied by pianoforte. Mr. Austin, as a widely experienced operatic singer, brought the highest qualifications to the task of discrimination, not the least being a sympathy bred of a full first-hand knowledge of the problems confronting amateurs. Mozartian stage deportment must have grace and repose. Whatever our Northerners may do in the ball-room, these qualities were not conspicuously present on Wednesday evening. Stiff acting goes ill with the nimble music of Mozart, and more pleasure came to the hearer who followed the score rather than watched the stage. Yet with these defects the measure of accomplishment was much ahead of a similar class in 1913.

(Our correspondent's description of the solo and choral singing, and a list of the chief results, will appear in next month's issue.)

SALTAIRE.—The annual choral competition under the auspices of the Co-operative Choral Association took place at Saltaire on September 30, this being the first occasion on which it has been held in the Airedale district of Yorkshire. Dr. E. C. Bairstow awarded the Association Challenge Shield to Accrington Church Choir for its singing of 'April is in my mistress face' (Morley), and 'An Evening Scene' and 'Go, song of mine' (Elgar). Of the male-voice choirs, that from Barrowford was awarded first place.

BRIGHOUSE.—The second Competitive Festival held at Brighouse occupied three days in the opening week of October. There were crowded audiences, and the standard reached by the competitors aroused the enthusiasm of the adjudicator, Mr. R. H. Wilson, who had a warm word of praise for the children's choirs. Besides solo contests for soprano, contralto, tenor, bass, pianoforte, and violin, there were classes for choir-boys, elementary school choirs, and church choirs.

MEXBOROUGH.—The Competitive Festival held on October 6 and 7 was a success, both artistically and financially. In twenty-six classes there were over two hundred entries, representing about fifteen hundred competitors. The test-pieces included works by fourteen British composers, which fact drew appreciative comment from Dr. J. F. Staton, who was assisted in adjudicating by Mr. Maurice Unwin and Madame Edith Hands. There was only one entry in the senior violin class, and it is suggested that this scarcity may be because young string-players can now command such remuneration in cinemas that they do not bother to pursue their studies into more advanced spheres. The first prize for full orchestra went to Barnburgh Main, conducted by Mr. W. Williams, whose Don Valley String Band also headed its own class. With his fine choir from Dodworth, near Barnsley, Mr. H. Riding once more won the shield for male voices. After keen competition with the Oxford Road Choir, Mexborough, the premier place in the mixed-voice class was secured by the Rawmarsh and Parkgate Choral Society, trained by Mr. A. G. Steel.

MANCHESTER.

Three important competitive Festivals have followed each other on three successive Saturdays here. The second annual Manchester Musical Festival, held on September 23, showed a distinct advance on the previous one, both in attendances and in the number of competitors, who totalled over a thousand, arranged in ten classes. Miss Dickens (Droylsden) was awarded the challenge cup presented by Trinity College, London, for the most artistic individual performance of the day. The choral singing reached a fair, rather than a high standard. Dr. Brearley's Contest Choir, Blackburn—the sole entrants in the Madrigal class—was awarded the Gentlemen's Glee Club's Cup for fine performances of Munday's 'Lightly she trippeth' and Callcott's 'O snatch me swift.' This choir also secured premier honours in the mixed-voice section, the test-piece being Bach's 'Rest here in peace' ('St. John' Passion); Todmorden Glee and Madrigal Society being placed second. Of the six male-voice choirs which sang C. Jenkins's 'Sea Fever,' Crossley Motors, Gorton, gained the first position, and the Greetland Vocal Union, Halifax, the second. Seven church and chapel choirs were also heard in 'Greater love hath no man' (Ireland) and Wesley's 'O Lord my God' (unaccompanied), Hazel Grove Wesleyan, last year's winners, retaining the Fairfield Challenge Cup. The judges were Mr. R. W. Baker, Dr. T. Keighley, Mr. W. S. Nesbit, Dr. A. W. Wilson, and Mr. R. H. Wilson.

On September 30 the third annual Manchester and District Choir Eisteddfod brought a crowded audience and singers from all parts to the Free Trade Hall. To stimulate native art, the choral pieces were all written by Welshmen. The large monetary prizes in the chief choral class for seventy voices attracted choirs from the Principality and the Potteries. The technical difficulties of 'The God of Dreams' (J. Owen Jones), which proved too exacting for the Welsh choirs, were overcome with apparent ease by their English confrères. In the course of the day prizes were won by May Bank (Stoke-on-Trent); Manchester Orpheus; St. John's Wesleyan, Weaste; and Talk-o'-th'-hill, Staffs (junior). Dr. D. Vaughan Thomas, Mr. E. T. Davies, Mr. Ivor Owen, and Mr. H. M. Dawber were the adjudicators.

The Belle Vue Choral Contests attained their majority on October 7. Seventeen church and chapel choirs were heard in Wesley's 'O Lord my God' (unaccompanied) and 'The Lord is loving unto every man' (Garrett). After a keen contest Hesketh Lane, Southport, came first; Bedford Wesleyan, Leigh, second; and Radcliffe Bridge Wesleyan, third. The tests for the mixed-voice choirs of fifty voices proved to be melodious rather than crucial—Bantock's setting of the Scotch lullaby, 'O can ye sew cushions,' forming a pleasant foil to Benet's madrigal, 'All creatures now are merry-minded.' Seven choirs competed, and premier honours—for the third year in succession—fell to Stocksbridge Choral Union (Dr. W. M. Robertshaw), second place to Atherton Baptist (Mr. George Meadows), and third to Ryecroft Vocal Society, Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Jack Ramsden). A strong quintet of judges was provided in Dr. T. Keighley, Mr. W. S. Nesbit, Dr. A. W. Wilson, Mr. John Holgate, and Mr. R. W. Baker.

DIARY OF COMPETITIONS—1922.

LONDON SEMI-NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD (Central Hall, Westminster).—November 16. Mr. D. B. Jones, 24, Distin Street, Lambeth, S.E. 11.

NORTH LONDON (Northern Polytechnic, Holloway).—November 17-25. Mr. John Graham, 74, Park Hall Road, East Finchley, N. 2.

HALIFAX.—November 24, 25. Mr. J. E. Hoyle, 14A, Crossley Street, Halifax.

COLNE.—December 1, 2. Mr. Robert Hartley, 17, Higgin Street, Colne.

HARTLEPOOL.—December 26. Mr. Fred Franks, 65, Thornton Street, West Hartlepool.

The

Competition Festival Record

No. 172.

THE BLACKPOOL FESTIVAL—Oct. 16-21.

BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT

(Continued from November number, Competition Festival Record)

THE SOLO SINGING

THE Elgar Sea Pictures call for little comment save that at least half-a-dozen fine, rich-voiced, genuine contralto voices emerged; but not more than a couple of these possessed any high degree of temperament. The mezzo-sopranos had in some ways a comparatively simple task; the range of emotion demanded in Michael Head's music was more restricted, but it was of a somewhat elusive character. Corporal Francis Ledwidge's verse was written in Serbia and Egypt during the War, and there is a veiled note of anguish both in verse and music. Here the voice that gained success was one that in its vast proportions and delicate poise of style was quite ideal. Its possessor is Miss Lilas Chew, who works as a weaver in a Preston manufacturing concern. The baritone class worked on George Butterworth's Shropshire Lad songs. I chanced to hear two men from the Shropshire-Staffordshire border sing these, and could not help the reflection that although their musical sophistication was not of a high order the tang and bite of the verse came more convincingly from their lips. A Cheshire man of obviously superior education came very close in the final, but the award went to a Blackpool hairdresser who got inside the skin of the narrator both in the 'Lads in their hundreds' and 'Is my team ploughing?' Mr. Plunket Greene here gave a masterly adjudication, and probably the audience benefited most from his exposition of solo voice æsthetics. The tenors, like the basses in Wolf, had the most formidable musical tasks to grapple with in Arnold Bax's Celtic Cycle. Not many amateurs can play them except in a sketchy fashion, and probably most candidates heard them really played for the first time during the competition by the official accompanist, Mr. Arnold Pirry, of Manchester. Mr. Plunket Greene also had charge of this class, and could not come to a conclusion without a retrial of six or seven men whose marks ran well into the eighties. One man, after singing, had returned to his work some miles away, and an eager but dismayed wife raced off in a taxi to St. Anne's to bring him back for his second hearing. Such moments serve to show the fine spirit of fellow-singers and audience; no murmuring, just patient waiting for his return, and no bustling him on to the platform until he was quite collected. The choice of this Cycle had been fiercely attacked, I gathered, both in the local and in part of the Manchester Press. The adjudicator may not have known this, but his remarks on the wisdom of the choice were the clearest vindication of the Selection Committee's work. Again, the victor was a mill operative, from the neighbourhood of Dewsbury, in Yorkshire. No adjudicator could discharge the difficult task of reviewing the work of these six winners after hearing each cycle in turn (as was the case in the 'Rose Bowl' competition on Thursday evening) with finer insight than Mr. Frederic Austin. No discrimination was possible except along the lines of general artistic qualifications as revealed in the approach made by the several candidates to his or her task of interpretation. The degree of interpretative power called for varied considerably. All possessed good voices. For the rest, trust relied on the trained instinct which could spot various points which definitely revealed the singer's all-round capacity, and not solely the musical ones. With many it was a conflict between the dictates of heart and brain. The contralto swept the vast audience off its feet in a torrential outpouring of emotion;

the baritone brought still higher powers of vivid portrayal to bear on the Shropshire Lad, and the mezzo-soprano's singing was ten minutes of sheer loveliness. The virtuosity of singing by the tenor candidate in the Bax cycle held the crowd as in a vice; it gasped at the wonder of the accompaniment and at the easy, confident bearing of the man who could, so to speak, take such things in his stride. And there was Mr. Austin up in the box, coming fresh and untrammelled to the task, quite calm on tumult's wheel. The cheering dies and a pin-dropping silence falls on the assembly as he walks on to the stage and begins his searching analysis, not in any Beckmesserish mood, but as a man who has 'been there,' knowing his work to the last note and making all feel the power of his calm, deliberate judgment. Consternation reigned momentarily as the contralto was passed over, only to be succeeded by a franker and more comprehending appreciation of how the tenor had impressed his powers upon a trained and acute intelligence. The dawning of this appreciation, as its rays spread over the audience, was a thing to be seen before it could be believed. In the end all knew how Ernest Akroyd had won and why, and they rose as one man in acknowledgment of the essential justice of the award. The baritone was placed second and the mezzo-soprano third.

THE CHORAL SINGING

Any visitor to Blackpool on the great choral day, without any previous experience of such an event, would have pronounced the task of handling nearly ninety bodies of singers and players (numbering about four thousand individuals) as quite impossible. It was stated that officials from eight English Festivals were present inspecting the machinery, so to speak, which ran so smoothly all day, with a view to adapting it to their own requirements. But the marvels of administration are merely the bones of this festival body: What of its soul and spirit; if its pulse beats so strongly, is its inspiration equally strong? The day's music was infinitely varied, and in every section a wonderfully high standard was attained and maintained. I am disposed to think that male-voice singing throughout the North is stronger than in pre-war days; the process of recovery has undoubtedly been generally slower in mixed-voice work. The tasks set for the mixed-voice choirs and conductors had this year a rather unusual element. They met and studied for the first time a new idiom in the work of Arnold Bax, and clearly some of them had not assimilated the strange tongue; they could only speak in broken Bax, much as they might in broken French or German. Further, the conductors, born choir-trainers as we know them to be, did not handle the unusual accompaniment of harp, violoncello, and bass with equal confidence. Three experienced Hallé Orchestra men were provided by the Festival executive in Messrs. C. Collier, Walter Hatton, and Stott—so full tone and musicianly certainty were assured, although no previous rehearsal was possible. The first two choirs to deal with Of a Rose I sing, had no real grip of their task, and the accompaniment was left pretty much to itself. Thus was exposed the weak side of some of these small choirs: they have grown up on a cappella stuff; rarely, if ever, do they have the chance to sing in association with any form of orchestral accompaniment, much less such an unusual one as is used by Bax. In rehearsal attention probably had to be concentrated on a study of Bax's choral idiom, and the general musicianship was not sufficiently strong to fuse the choral and instrumental elements into one bold, convincing musical structure. Modern composers may not confine their attention to unaccompanied singing when such wonderfully emotional power can be attained so easily as was the case here, and conductors of choirs in the future will probably have to face more rather than less of such problems, and inevitably this will entail closer study of the interdependence of voice and accompaniment. Such thoughts as are here expressed were abundantly confirmed by the performances of the remaining choirs in this class. They had not gone a score of bars before it was felt that these conductors were masters of the situation: players, as well as singers, got a firm lead; niceties of expression, details of ornament as well as the bolder outline and sweep of melody, were achieved. The audience was as responsive as the choir and players; there's never any mistaking that pin-dropping silence that seizes a gathering like this when the real thing comes along. As on Thursday night with the solos, so now; Bax got home to the heart of the people.

The male-voice Bax carol, Now is the time of Christy-masse, with flute and pianoforte accompaniment, was more simple and direct in its appeal, and received an uproarious welcome. Thus was accomplished one of the outstanding achievements of the week—the vindication of Arnold Bax, much as in the past both at Morecambe and Blackpool, Brahms, Cornelius, Elgar, Bantock, and the rest had similarly been vindicated. What size of choir, it may be asked, sang these carols with this slight accompaniment? The male-voice ones averaged thirty-five to forty singers and the mixed-voice choirs did not exceed sixty voices; forty and sixty were the respective maximum limits, and choirs rarely sing under strength on these occasions. In the mixed-voice carol the full weight of sixty voices was rarely pitted against the accompaniment, and it was in the delicate yet sure feeling for balance as well as colour that Bax convinced; the tenor solo part was sung by several voices in all choirs. Two choral songs by Elgar, Go, song of mine and There is sweet music were heard along with the Rose carol in the mixed-voice class. The readings of Go, song of mine ranged from the frankly unemotional to the height of emotional power; Elgar minus emotion does not carry any conviction, however vocally pure it may be. The balancing of these qualities always did and always will produce baffling results according to the sway of our inclination; a powerful emotional expression from a vocally less efficient artist is more to be valued than a less emotional impression from a superior equipment. Adjudicators, no less than conductors, are creatures of temperament, and so in their judgments we get infinite variety.

The male-voice singing was easily the dominating feature of this final work. Quantity and quality were alike notable. The grim elemental qualities in Bantock's Pibroch of Donuil Dhu led some conductors and men into inartistic excesses of emotion and tone. Luckily, the choice of music in the preliminary round enabled the men to exhibit the broader and deeper aspects of their musical natures in Bantock's O Sweet Delight, which I am inclined to place in the very forefront of Bantock's writing in this style—worthy of ranking with the Lost Leader or Lucifer. The animating spirit of the Bax carol sung at the evening session quickly spread to the audience, which was quite prepared to respond to its invitation to 'make me merry, both more and less.'

A tolerably long remembrance of these Festivals leads the writer to record the outstanding fact that by far the great majority of competitors, solo or choral, vocal or instrumental, adult or junior, performed from memory—surely with enormous gain to themselves and with enhanced delight to the audience. Diction and enunciation in the vast majority of cases were also far ahead of the standard of ten years ago. No review of this week could overlook the advance in orchestral work. The composition chosen for performance by string orchestras and pianoforte was a recent one of Julius Harrison styled Prelude Music, and published for the Festival. Three of the four orchestras played it with distinctively high proficiency. Comparisons turned on the balance of the five orchestral voices rather than on serious flaws in performance. It almost seems as if at long last orchestral interest is finding something of the same stimulus which has produced such well-recognised results in choral and solo matters.

Blackpool may well be congratulated on many fine points in its management, but probably the one which most impressed a visitor was the price of the week's programme. Covering more than a hundred pages, and packed with every imaginable, serviceable kind of information for the audience, it cost one shilling! We may well believe that nearly four thousand copies were sold—necessitating a second edition.

THE ELIZABETHAN MUSIC COMPETITIVE FESTIVAL.—March 2 and 3, 1923.

We have received the syllabus of this very interesting venture, and a fine list of good stuff it is. For large choirs there are Weelkes's Hosanna to the Son of David, Byrd's This day Christ was born and This sweet and merry month, Morley's O amica mea, Weelkes's Sing we at pleasure, Tomkins's Fusca, in thy starry eyes, &c. All these are in five or six parts. For smaller choirs the S.A.T.B. items include Byrd's Sacerdotes Domini and Wounded I am, and Wilbye's Thus saith my Chloris bright. For three-part female-voice choirs the test is Weelkes's Strike it up, Tabor.

The vocal solo classes are one female-voice, two men's, two female, three mixed, three female, and four mixed. This section is a particularly good feature, and should lead to a revival of interest in vocal chamber music—a delightful and typically English kind of art.

The instrumental classes are for pianoforte under fifteen years of age (Byrd's Earle of Salisbury Pavane and Farnaby's Pawle's Wharf), and over fifteen (Byrd's The Carman's Whistle and Bull's The King's Hunt). The string quartet tests are a couple of In nomine by Parsons and Perslye. Organ competitors play pieces by Bull and Gibbons.

This excellent scheme deserves the enthusiastic support of all singers, players, and conductors who wish to lend a hand in the present revival of our old music. They should at once obtain a syllabus from the hon. secretary, Mr. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2.

SWINDON EISTEDDFOD.—November 13-18.

This fifteen-year-old Festival rose superior to fog and general election, large audiences and a general air of enjoyment being the rule. Entries advanced from last year's 300 to 370. Especially large and promising were the novice classes. The choral singing all round showed improvement, a high standard being reached by the Broad Street, Reading, Choir, which won the Hill Shield, and the Sanford Street, Swindon, which was winner in the Church Choirs' class. The Festival wound up with a couple of concerts, at which some capital massed singing was a feature. The judges were Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Harvey Grace, and Mr. Dan Price.

SUMMERSCALES.—The twenty-fifth annual Competitive Festival of the Summerscales Memorial Fund was held on October 28 and November 4, Dr. Henry Coward being the adjudicator. With over two hundred entries and over two thousand competitors a new record was established. Bradford Philharmonic Society (Mr. E. S. Hird) again won the shield for mixed-voice choirs. The other open prizes for choral singers were won by the ladies of Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. W. H. Whitaker) and the men of Greetland Vocal Union (Mr. H. Shepley).

PORTSMOUTH.—It has been decided that Portsmouth is to have its own musical Festival next year. For the past five years competitions for choirs, orchestras, and soloists have been held in connection with the annual Festival of the Portsmouth Welfare Association, but these were intended primarily for the young, and the present proposal is the outgrowth of that movement. Entries will be open to all-comers, from any part of the country, the date suggested for the proposed Festival being towards the end of May. Being largely in the nature of an experiment, next year's effort is not expected to last more than two days.

No. 1301.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.
(SECOND SERIES.)Price ~~4d~~ 6d.

TO MY FRIEND PERCY C. HULL, HEREFORD.

SERENADE

CHORAL-SONG FOR S.A.T.B.

ADAPTED FROM THE RUSSIAN OF MINSKY BY

ROSA NEWMARCH*

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 73, No. 2.)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegretto (comodo).

SOPRANO.

ALTO.

TENOR.

BASS.

(For practice only.)

mf Dreams all too brief, p Dreams with-out grief, mf Once they are bro-ken,

mf Dreams all too brief, p Dreams with-out grief, mf Once they are bro-ken,

mf Dreams all too brief, p Dreams with-out grief, mf Once they are bro-ken,

mf Dreams all too brief, p Dreams with-out grief, mf Once they are bro-ken,

Allegretto (comodo). ♩ = 100.

cantabile. mf

p come not a-gain, pp Dreams all too brief, pp Dreams with-out grief,

p come not a-gain, pp Dreams all too brief, pp Dreams with-out grief,

p come not a-gain, pp Dreams all too brief, pp Dreams with-out grief,

p come not a-gain, pp Dreams all too brief, pp Dreams with-out grief,

cantabile. mf

May be sung
a semitone higher.

* By permission of Mr. Elkin Mathews.

SERENADE.

- cross the sky the dark clouds sweep, And all is dark and

Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why should you scat - ter them in

Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why should you scat - ter them in

Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why should you scat - ter them in drear a - bove ; The bare trees toss their arms and weep . . .

vain ? . . . Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain, vain ? . . . Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain, vain ? . . . Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain,

SERENADE.

Rest on, and do not wake, dear Love. . . .

f Dreams all too brief, pp Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain,

f Dreams all too brief, pp Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain,

f Dreams all too brief, pp Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain,

f Dreams all too brief, pp Once they are bro - ken, come not a - gain,

più mosso.
ppp Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep,

f Dreams with - out grief, più mosso.
ppp Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep,

f Dreams with - out grief, più mosso.
ppp Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep,

f Dreams with - out grief, più mosso.
ppp Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep,

f Dreams with - out grief, più mosso.
ppp Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep,

SERENADE.

cres. molto. allargando. ff

Why should you scat - ter them . . in . . vain? . .

cres. molto. allargando. ff

Why should you scat - ter them . . in vain? . .

cres. molto. allargando. ff

Why should you scat - ter them . . in vain? . .

cres. molto. allargando. ff

Why should you scat - ter them . . in vain? . .

Tempo 1mo. p pp

Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief, Once they are bro - ken,

Tempo 1mo. pp

Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief, Once they are bro - ken,

Tempo 1mo. pp

Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief, Once they are bro - ken,

Tempo 1mo. pp

SERENADE.

cantabile.
p

Hap - py is he, when Au - tumn falls, Who

pp come not a - gain. Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why

pp

come not a - gain. Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why

pp

come not a - gain. Since glad dreams haunt your slum - bers deep, Why

p feels the dream - kiss of the Spring; And hap - py he in should you scat - ter them in vain? . . . Once they are bro - ken, should you scat - ter them in vain? . . . Once they are bro - ken, should you scat - ter them in vain? . . . Once they are bro - ken,

SERENADE.

pris - on walls . . . Who dreams . . . of free - dom's come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Once they are bro - ken,

come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Once they are bro - ken,

come not a - gain, Dreams all too brief, Once they are bro - ken,

poco rit.
pp res - cu - ing; . . . But woe to him who come not a - gain, Dreams with - out grief. But woe to him who come not a - gain, Dreams with - out grief. But woe to him who come not a - gain, Dreams with - out grief. But woe to him who accel. . . . al . . . più mosso.

ppp

SEBENADE.

cres. molto. molto allargando.

vain - ly calls Through sleep - less nights for ease from cres. molto. molto allargando.

vain - ly calls Through sleep - less nights for ease from

cres. molto. molto allargando.

vain - ly calls Through sleep - less nights for ease from

cres. molto. molto allargando.

vain - ly calls Through sleep - less nights for ease from

Tempo lmo.

ff pain ! . . .

Tempo lmo. p . . .

ff pain ! . . . Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief,

Tempo lmo. p . . . pp . . .

ff pain ! . . . Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief,

Tempo lmo. p . . . pp . . .

ff pain ! . . . Dreams all too brief, Dreams with - out grief,

Tempo lmo. p . . . pp . . .

SERENADE.

rit. pp

rit. pp

rit. pp

Once they are broken, come not a - gain.

Once they are broken, come not a - gain.

Once they are broken, come not a - gain.

rit. pp

(Hadley Green, 1914.)

Also published in Novello's Tonic Sol-fa Series, No. 2176.

Jesu, meek and lowly

COMPOSED BY
EDWARD ELGAR.

953. A charge to keep I have ... King 3d.
884. A crown of grace for man Brahms 4d.
478. A few more years shall roll H. Blair 3d.
597. A prayer for peace ... Crotch 3d.
801. A solemn prayer ... A. H. Brewer 2d.
935. A song of joy ... John E. West 3d.
917. Abide with me ... Ivor Atkins 3d.
424. Ditto ... R. Dunstan 3d.
805. Adeste Fideles ... H. Hofmann 4d.
927. All go unto one place ... Wesley 3d.
247. All nations whom B. Luard-Selby 4d.
113. All they that trust ... Hiller 8d.
1033. All Thy works ... T. Adams 3d.
475. Ditto ... J. Barnby 4d.
503. Ditto ... G. H. Ely 4d.
30. Ditto ... E. H. Thorne 3d.
719. All ye who seek ... H. M. Higgs 3d.
9. All ye who weep ... Gounod 3d.
592. Alleluia! now is Christ T. Adams 3d.
729. Alleluia: the Lord liveth C. Harris 3d.
548. Almighty Father ... B. Steane 3d.
937. Almighty God, give us ... Wesley 3d.
261. And all the people saw J. Stainer 6d.
699. And God shall wipe Greenish 3d.
1055. And in that day F. R. Rickman 4d.
229. And it was the third hour Elvey 4d.
485. And Jacob was left alone J. Stainer 6d.
658. And Jesus entered H. W. Davies 4d.
732. And suddenly there came H. J. Wood 3d.
675. And the Lord said T. W. Stephenson 3d.
357. And the wall of the city Oliver King 3d.
778. And there shall be signs Naylor 4d.
402. And when the day ... C. W. Smith 3d.
861. Angel Spirits P. Tchaikovsky 2d.
642. Angel voices, ever singing E. V. Hall 3d.
611. Angels from the realms Cowen 3d.
749. Ditto ... P. E. Fletcher 3d.
751. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d.
1017. Arise, shine ... T. Adams 3d.
923. Ditto ... G. F. Cobb 4d.
228. Art thou weary ... C. H. Lloyd 6d.
948. As Christ was raised Wareing 3d.
311. As I live, saith the Lord E. T. Chipp 3d.
333. As it began to dawn C. Vincent 3d.
408. As Moses lifted up F. Gostelow 3d.
643. As the earth bringeth A. H. Brewer 4d.
24. As the hart pants (s.s.t.s.) Gounod 3d.
147. Ascribe unto the Lord Travers 4d.
109. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley 4d.
399. At the Lamb's High E. V. Hall 3d.
456. At the Sepulchre H. W. Wareing 3d.
957. Author of Life Divine Button 3d.
660. Awake, awake ... John E. West 3d.
700. Awake, awake, put on Greenish 3d.
56. Ditto ... J. Stainer 6d.
759. Ditto ... Stephenson 4d.
140. Ditto ... M. Wise 4d.
955. Awake! O Zion ... C. Forrester 3d.
199. Awake, thou that sleepest Stainer 6d.
150. Awake up, my glory M. Wise 3d.
744. Be glad and rejoice M. B. Foster 3d.
578. Ditto ... B. Steane 3d.
212. Be glad, O ye righteous H. Smart 3d.
989. Be glad then, ye ... A. Hollins 3d.
143. Be merciful ... H. Purcell 6d.
257. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 3d.
597. Be peace on earth ... Crotch 3d.
567. Be Thou exalted ... C. Bayley 3d.
583. Be ye all of one mind A. E. Godfrey 3d.
471. Be ye therefore ... A. S. Baker 3d.
440. Before the heavens H. W. Parker 3d.
651. Behold, all the earth G. F. Huntley 3d.
598. Behold, God is great E. W. Naylor 3d.
865. Behold, God is my John E. West 3d.
636. Ditto ... F. C. Woods 3d.
1035. Behold, how good J. Battishill 3d.
349. Ditto (Male) Caldicott 3d.
349. Ditto (s.a.t.b.) Caldicott 3d.
419. Ditto ... Hamilton Clarke 3d.
89. Behold, I bring you J. Barnby 3d.
348. Ditto ... J. Maude Cramment 4d.
296. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d.
870. Behold, I come quickly Ivor Atkins 3d.
711. Behold, I have given you C. Harris 3d.
554. Behold, I send ... J. V. Roberts 4d.
587. Behold My servant J. F. Bridge 3d.
65. Behold now, praise I. B. Calkin 3d.
631. Ditto ... F. Iliffe 3d.
912. Ditto ... John E. West 3d.
315. Behold, O God ... F. W. Hird 4d.
524. Behold, the days come Woodward 4d.
1045. Behold the Heaven A. R. Gaul 3d.
652. Behold the Name ... Percy Pitt 4d.
502. Behold, two blind men J. Stainer 3d.
938. Bethlehem ... Ch. Gounod 1d.
378. Bless the Lord ... M. Kingston 4d.
796. Bless the Lord, O my soul Hailing 3d.
855. Bless the Lord thy God Roberts 3d.
450. Bless thou the Lord C. Bayley 4d.
374. Ditto ... Oliver King 3d.
693. Blessed are the dead B. L. Selby 2d.
667. Blessed are the pure A. D. Arnott 3d.
390. Blessed are they ... A. W. Batson 3d.
616. Ditto ... H. Blair 3d.
77. Ditto ... W. H. Monk 3d.
112. Ditto ... Arthur Page 3d.
15. Blessed be the God S. S. Wesley 2d.
756. Blessed be the Lord J. Barnby 3d.
370. Ditto ... J. F. Bridge 5d.
895. Ditto ... O. Gibbons 2d.
876. Ditto ... E. V. Hall 3d.
183. Ditto ... Heap 6d.
770. Ditto ... Markham Lee 3d.
331. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 4d.
1006. Blessed be the Name Macfarren 3d.
724. Blessed be Thou E. C. Baird 4d.
838. Ditto ... J. Kent 4d.
400. Blessed City ... A. C. Fisher 4d.
284. Blessed is He F. E. Gladstone 4d.
262. Ditto ... C. H. Lloyd 8d.
292. Ditto ... A. C. Mackenzie 4d.
206. Blessed is the man Clarke-Whitfield 3d.
64. Ditto ... John Goss 4d.
769. Ditto ... H. W. Wareing 3d.
1004. Blessed is the soul (s.a.) Macfarren 3d.
286. Blessed Jesu (Stabat Mater) Dvorak 6d.
943. Blessed Lord ... S. S. Wesley 2d.
5. Blessing, glory, wisdom B. Tours 3d.
950. Ditto ... A. H. Brewer 3d.
652. Blow up the trumpet F. Iliffe 3d.
97. Blow ye the trumpet Henry Lealie 3d.
961. Born to-day ... J. P. Sweetlinc 3d.
118. Bow Thine ear ... W. Bird 3d.
939. Bread of Heaven ... E. German 3d.
1024. Break forth into joy W. G. Alcock 3d.
774. Ditto ... H. E. Button 3d.
415. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 3d.
798. Ditto ... H. A. Matthews 3d.
92. Ditto ... R. Prentice 6d.
491. Ditto ... B. Steane 3d.
323. Brightest and best ... E. V. Hall 4d.
340. Bring unto the Lord Gladstone 3d.
98. Brother, thou art gone J. Goss 4d.
279. By Babylon's wave Gounod 2d.
197. By the rivers of Babylon L. Samson 4d.
121. By the waters of Babylon Boyce 4d.
644. Ditto ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 3d.
511. Ditto ... H. Clarke 3d.
853. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 3d.
742. By Thy glorious death A. Dvorak 4d.
116. Call to remembrance J. Battishill 6d.
952. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 3d.
680. Calm on the list'n'g ear Parker 3d.
841. Cast me not away C. Lee Williams 3d.
975. Ditto ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
497. Christ both died ... E. W. Naylor 3d.
454. Christ is risen ... G. B. J. Aitken 3d.
368. Ditto ... J. M. Cramment 3d.
666. Ditto ... W. Jordan 4d.
533. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 3d.
814. Ditto ... E. A. Sydenham 3d.
307. Christ our Passover E. V. Hall 3d.
783. Christ the Lord is risen again 4d.
370. Christ the Lord is risen to-day 3d.
488. Christians, awake ... J. Barnby 3d.
648. Ditto ... H. M. Higgs 3d.
953. Christmas Day G. von Holst 4d.
445. Cleanse me, Lord G. F. Wrigley 3d.
999. Come and let us ... A. Hollins 3d.
52. Come, and let us return J. Goss 3d.
95. Ditto ... W. Jackson 3d.
805. Come hither, ye faithful Hofmann 4d.
283. Come, Holy Ghost G. Elvey 4d.
201. Ditto ... J. L. Hatton 4d.
829. Ditto ... Palestrina 2d.
717. Ditto ... C. Lee Williams 2d.
881. Come, let us join our E. V. Hall 3d.
293. Come, my soul ... G. C. Martin 4d.
314. Come now, and let us H. W. Wareing 4d.
1. Come unto Him ... Gounod 2d.
946. Ditto ... H. Leslie 3d.
256. Come unto Me H. R. Coudrey 3d.
635. Ditto ... G. J. Elvey 3d.
103. Ditto (Bach) J. Stainer 3d.
922. Come with high and holy Blair 3d.
1005. Come ye, and let us Macfarren 3d.
748. Come, ye children and J. Booth 3d.
924. Ditto ... H. J. King 3d.
334. Come, ye faithful ... E. V. Hall 3d.
921. Come, ye faithful, raise the strain 3d.
1019. Come, ye Saints ... H. E. Button 3d.
951. Come, ye sin-defiled J. Stainer 2d.
931. Come, ye thankful ... B. Steane 3d.
914. Comes at times ... Woodward 3d.
1008. Ditto ... H. Oakeley 2d.
994. Coronation Offertorium Elgar 2d.
622. Create in me a clean heart P. J. Fry 3d.
688. Crown Him the B. Luard-Selby 3d.
356. Daughters of Jerusalem H. J. King 3d.
449. Dawns the day ... R. H. Legge 3d.
213. Day of Anger (Requiem) Mozart 6d.
682. Day of wrath ... J. Stainer 3d.
252. Death and life ... Walter Parratt 3d.
968. Death is swallowed up in Hollins 3d.
849. Deliver us, O Lord Gibbons 3d.
90. Distracted with care ... Haydn 3d.
887. Do not fill heaven ... H. Blair 3d.
773. Doth not wisdom cry D. S. Smith 3d.
703. Drop down, ye heavens Stainer 4d.
277. Enter not into Judgment Clarke 2d.
362. Eternal source ... F. Brandeis 2d.
1008. Evening and Morning Oakeley 2d.
854. Exalt ye the Lord H. Elliot Button 3d.
764. Except the Lord build Edwards 3d.
771. Ditto ... Eaton Fanning 4d.
628. Ditto ... H. Gadsby 4d.
470. Eye hath not seen (s.a.) Foster 3d.
584. Ditto (s.a.t.b.) M. B. Foster 3d.
625. Far be sorrow ... E. V. Hall 3d.
672. Far from the world H. W. Parker 3d.
329. Far from their home Woodward 3d.
364. Father, hear the prayer F. Brandeis 3d.
763. Father, now Thy grace W. Coenen 3d.
46. Father of Heaven Walmsley 3d.
384. Father of Life ... S. J. Gilbert 3d.
768. Father of mercies ... E. V. Hall 3d.
1065. Ditto ... S. P. Waddington 3d.
671. Ditto ... John E. West 3d.
1050. Fear not, O land ... E. Elgar 3d.
28. Ditto ... John Goss 3d.
916. Ditto ... W. Jordan 3d.
872. Fear Thou not, for I am J. Booth 1d.
446. Flee from evil ... W. J. Clarke 3d.
553. For a small moment J. Stainer 2d.
254. For ever blessed Mendelssohn 3d.
198. For the mountains L. Samson 3d.
901. For this mortal ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
728. Forsake me not ... J. Goss 4d.
273. From the deep I called ... Spohr 6d.
227. Give ear, O Lord T. M. Pattison 2d.
433. Give ear, O Shepherd A. Whiting 3d.
88. Give ear, O ye heavens Armes 3d.
956. Ditto ... W. G. Alcock 3d.
604. Give thanks, O Israel Ouseley 4d.
741. Give the King thy W. G. Alcock 6d.
990. Ditto ... A. H. Brewer 3d.
309. Give the Lord ... C. H. Lloyd 8d.
183. Give unto the Lord H. W. Parker 4d.
933. Glorious and powerful God Gibbons 3d.
1039. Glorious in Heaven Victoria 3d.
2. Glory be to God ... S. S. Wesley 3d.
779. Glory to God in the E. M. Lee 3d.

NOVELLO'S

OCTAVO EDITION OF ANTHEMS.

236.	God be merciful unto us	C. F. Lloyd	6d.	1015.	Hosanna (in E flat)	O. Gibbons	3d.	371.	I will set His dominion	H. W. Parker	4d.
105.	God came from Teman	Stieggall	4d.	43.	Ditto	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	100.	I will sing a new song	Armes	8d.
667.	God is a Spirit	W. S. Bennett	18d.	657.	Hosanna to the Lord	W. Jordan	4d.	608.	I will sing of the mercies	J. Booth	3d.
128.	God is gone up	Croft	4d.	646.	Ditto	Luard-Selby	3d.	134.	I will sing of Thy power	Greene	4d.
892.	Ditto	O. Gibbons	3d.	1021.	Hosanna we sing	John E. West	3d.	192.	I will sing unto the Lord	Wareing	3d.
864.	Ditto	Walter B. Gilbert	2d.	260.	How beautiful are the feet	Handel	3d.	1086.	Ditto	J. V. Roberts	6d.
605.	God is my salvation	C. F. Bowes	3d.	691.	How blest are they	Tschaikowsky	4d.	6.	I will wash my hands	Hopkins	3d.
1062.	God is our hope	A. H. Brewer	3d.	321.	How excellent is Thy	Cowen	6d.	710.	If any man hath not	H. W. Davies	4d.
131.	Ditto	Greene	6d.	615.	How great is the loving	West	3d.	819.	If Christ be not raised	Macpherson	4d.
332.	God is our refuge	A. Foote	4d.	373.	How long wilt Thou	Oliver King	2d.	979.	If the Lord had not	E. C. Bairstow	3d.
101.	Ditto	H. Hiles	6d.	807.	Ditto	Jeremiah Clarke	3d.	825.	If the Lord Himself	W. Child	3d.
75.	God said, Behold	G. Macfarren	4d.	647.	How lovely are	C. Salaman	3d.	758.	Ditto	Walmisley	6d.
969.	God so loved the world	H. Moore	3d.	104.	Ditto	Spohr	8d.	53.	If we believe that Jesus died	Goss	18d.
1012.	Ditto	E. G. Monk	4d.	988.	Ditto	J. Brahms	2d.	1078.	Ditto	M. Vinden	3d.
473.	Ditto	J. V. Roberts	3d.	766.	I am Alpha	Ch. Gounod	3d.	544.	If ye love Me	B. Steane	2d.
342.	God, that madest earth	A. C. Fisher	2d.	539.	Ditto	J. V. Roberts	3d.	453.	Ditto	H. W. Wareing	3d.
1056.	God the All-fatherly	A. Hollins	3d.	623.	I am He that liveth	T. Adams	4d.	732.	Ditto	H. J. Wood	3d.
344.	God, Who at sundry times	J. H. Mee	4d.	664.	I am the Resurrection	Croft	3d.	789.	If ye then be risen	Ivor Atkins	4d.
715.	God's peace is peace eternal	Grieg	3d.	662.	Ditto	R. Rogers	4d.	469.	Ditto (s.a.)	M. B. Foster	3d.
107.	Grant us Thy peace	G. Bullivant	3d.	268.	I am well pleased	J. Rheinberger	3d.	58.	Ditto	Naylor	3d.
550.	Grant, we beseech Thee	M. Elvey	2d.	120.	I behold, and lo	Blow	6d.	61.	In Christ dwelleth	John Goss	3d.
388.	Ditto	Roberts	3d.	280.	Ditto	Elvey	6d.	913.	In divers tongues	Palestrina	2d.
517.	Great and marvellous	J. F. Bridge	4d.	496.	I came not to call	C. Vincent	3d.	619.	In every place incense	John E. West	3d.
187.	Ditto	Monk	3d.	207.	I cried unto the Lord	Heap	4d.	655.	In heavenly love	H. Parker	3d.
848.	Ditto	T. Tomkins	3d.	537.	I declare to you	Cruikshank	4d.	403.	In my Father's house	Crament	3d.
223.	Great is Jehovah (Male)	Schubert	4d.	168.	I desired wisdom	J. Stainer	6d.	777.	Ditto	H. Elliot Button	3d.
987.	Ditto	Schubert	4d.	230.	I did call upon the Lord	Pattison	4d.	102.	In sweet consent	E. H. Thorne	3d.
602.	Great is our Lord	M. B. Foster	4d.	515.	I do not ask, O Lord	Roberts	3d.	802.	In that day (Christmas)	Bridge	3d.
136.	Great is the Lord	Hayes	4d.	117.	I have set God	Blake	6d.	278.	Ditto	G. Elvey	4d.
708.	Ditto	A. W. Marchant	4d.	420.	Ditto	Hamilton Clarke	4d.	720.	In the beginning	C. Macpherson	4d.
237.	Ditto	F. Ouseley	6d.	130.	Ditto	J. Goldwin	3d.	582.	Ditto	F. Tozer	4d.
481.	Ditto	B. Steane	4d.	122.	I have surely built	Boyce	4d.	890.	In the day shalt	H. W. Wareing	3d.
813.	Ditto	E. A. Sydenham	3d.	219.	Ditto	T. T. Trinnell	4d.	138.	In the fear of the Lord	J. V. Roberts	3d.
220.	Grieve not the Holy Spirit	Stainer	3d.	590.	I heard a great voice	G. F. Cobb	3d.	980.	In the hour of my	Davies	4d.
609.	Guide me, O Thou	H. Blair	3d.	396.	I heard a voice	John Goss	2d.	659.	In the Lord	C. Macpherson	4d.
427.	Hail! gladdening Light	J. T. Field	2d.	903.	I looked, and behold	H. Willan	3d.	282.	Ditto	R. Stewart	6d.
545.	Ditto	Martin	4d.	1029.	I love to hear	M. B. Foster	3d.	385.	In Thee, O Lord	S. C. Taylor	3d.
326.	Hail, thou that art	A. Carnall	4d.	1022.	I saw the Lord	C. Harris	3d.	33.	Ditto	M. B. Tours	3d.
563.	Hail to the Christ	J. Barnby	3d.	171.	Ditto	J. Stainer	6d.	148.	Ditto	J. Waldon	3d.
945.	Hail, true Body	H. Willan	2d.	114.	I was glad	T. Attwood	4d.	725.	Is it not wheat-harvest	T. Adams	3d.
499.	Hallelujah, Christ is risen	Seane	3d.	993.	Ditto	A. H. Brewer	3d.	467.	Is it nothing (s.a.)	M. B. Foster	3d.
382.	Hallelujah! the Light	Oliver King	3d.	1080.	Ditto	H. R. Coudrey	3d.	571.	Ditto (4 voices)	M. B. Foster	3d.
173.	Happy is the man	E. Prout	8d.	32.	Ditto	G. Elvey	3d.	91.	It came even to pass	Ouseley	4d.
1077.	Hark! hark my soul	P. E. Fletcher	3d.	79.	Ditto	C. E. Horsley	6d.	180.	It is a good thing	J. Barnby	6d.
681.	Hark, the glad sound	M. B. Foster	3d.	373.	Ditto	C. H. H. Parry	4d.	231.	Ditto	T. M. Pattison	4d.
409.	Ditto	A. R. Gaul	3d.	749.	Ditto	T. T. Trinnell	4d.	215.	It shall come to pass	Garrett	2d.
487.	Ditto	E. V. Hall	3d.	119.	I was in the spirit	Blow	6d.	908.	Jesu, Lord of life and glory	Elgar	3d.
444.	Hark, the herald angels	E. V. Hall	3d.	205.	I will always give thanks	Clarke	3d.	397.	Jesu, lover of my soul (Male)	F. Iliffe	3d.
404.	Hark! what news	Oliver King	3d.	1064.	I will cause the shower	Naylor	3d.	907.	Jesu, meek and lowly	Elgar	3d.
820.	Harvest Hymn	F. Tozer	2d.	874.	I will cry unto God	H. J. King	3d.	1031.	Jesu, our Lord	Ch. Gounod	3d.
784.	Haste Thee, O God	John Shepherd	3d.	73.	Ditto	Stieggall	4d.	654.	Jesu, Thou joy	E. H. Davies	3d.
535.	Have mercy upon me	J. Barnby	3d.	592.	I will extol Thee	C. M. Hudson	3d.	844.	Jesu, Thou sweetest	H. J. King	3d.
1013.	Ditto	J. Goss	4d.	1068.	Ditto	John E. West	3d.	904.	Jesu, word of God incarnate	Elgar	3d.
377.	Ditto	E. Minshall	3d.	209.	I will give thanks	J. Barnby	3d.	455.	Jesu, Christ is risen	Oliver King	4d.
401.	Ditto	Kellow J. Pye	3d.	156.	Ditto	E. J. Hopkins	6d.	788.	Jesu, Christ is risen to-day	Gaul	4d.
794.	He sendeth the springs	Wareing	4d.	368.	Ditto	Mozart	2d.	971.	Jesu, lives! no longer now	Foster	3d.
701.	He shall swallow up	Greenish	3d.	915.	I will give unto him	H. Blair	3d.	618.	Jesu, of Nazareth	G. Byrd	4d.
707.	He that shall endure	Mendelssohn	4d.	674.	I will give you rain	H. W. Wareing	4d.	548.	Joy in harvest	B. Steane	3d.
837.	He that shall endure	Mendelssohn	4d.	245.	I will go unto	Gauntlett	2d.	7.	Judge me, O God	Mendelssohn	18d.
898.	He that spared not His	Gladstone	3d.	591.	I will go unto the altar	C. Harris	3d.	677.	Just Judge of Heaven	Garrett	6d.
900.	He will swallow up death	Wesley	14d.	437.	I will greatly rejoice	Cruikshank	3d.	614.	Justorum anime	Naylor	6d.
389.	Hear me when I call (Male)	Distin	2d.	1037.	Ditto	E. C. Bairstow	3d.	179.	King all glorious	J. Barnby	6d.
339.	Hear my prayer	Mendelssohn	4d.	495.	I will lay me down	A. C. Edwards	3d.	997.	Ditto (4 voices)	J. Barnby	4d.
1001.	Ditto	F. Purcell	4d.	195.	Ditto	H. Gadsby	2d.	581.	Kings shall be thy	G. C. Martin	4d.
146.	Ditto	C. Stroud	4d.	209.	Ditto	H. Hiles	3d.	894.	Kings shall see and arise	Bridge	3d.
442.	Hear my words	C. H. H. Parry	8d.	958.	I will lift up mine eyes	J. V. Roberts	3d.	425.	Lead, kindly Light	R. Drimstan	3d.
310.	Hear, O God	A. Friedländer	6d.	739.	Ditto	D. S. Smith	3d.	528.	Ditto	C. L. Naylor	4d.
138.	Hear, O heavens	P. Humphreys	3d.	126.	I will love Thee	J. Clark	4d.	589.	Ditto	D. Fughe-Evans	3d.
94.	Hear, O Lord	John Goss	3d.	1058.	Ditto	Oliver King	3d.	1067.	Ditto	B. Smith	3d.
139.	Ditto	C. King	2d.	394.	Ditto	Kingston	4d.	37.	Ditto	J. Stainer	4d.
162.	Ditto	F. Ouseley	2d.	760.	I will magnify Thee	W. H. Bell	4d.	706.	Let all the world	W. Jordan	4d.
831.	Hear, O My people	J. Holbrooke	3d.	78.	Ditto	J. B. Calkin	4d.	132.	Let God arise	Greene	6d.
203.	Hear, O Thou Shepherd	Clarke	4d.	27.	Ditto	John Goss	3d.	375.	Ditto	T. T. Trinnell	4d.
522.	Ditto	T. A. Walmisley	4d.	633.	Ditto	F. Iliffe	3d.	857.	Let my complaint	Arthur Batten	2d.
770.	Hear the voice and prayer	Tallis	3d.	405.	Ditto	Oliver King	4d.	346.	Ditto (Male)	Thorne	3d.
773.	Hearken unto Me	W. H. Bell	3d.	780.	Ditto	E. M. Lee	3d.	509.	Let not thine hand	J. Stainer	3d.
376.	Hide not Thy face	Kellow J. Pye	2d.	1310.	Ditto	C. H. Lloyd	3d.	807.	Let not your heart	Eaton Fanning	3d.
366.	Ho! every one	J. M. Crament	4d.	929.	Ditto	A. W. Marchant	3d.	438.	Ditto	M. B. Foster	3d.
240.	Ditto	G. C. Martin	4d.	886.	Ditto	Palestrina	3d.	338.	Let the heavens be glad	M. Higgs	3d.
330.	Holy Ghost, to earth	Dvorak	3d.	1085.	Ditto	J. V. Roberts	3d.	226.	Let the peace of God	J. Stainer	4d.
111.	Holy, holy, holy	Crotch	3d.	153.	Ditto	J. Shaw	3d.	565.	Let the righteous	R. F. Lloyd	3d.
342.	Holy, Lord God	T. Bateson	4d.	575.	I will mention	A. Sullivan	6d.	328.	Let the words of my A. D. Culley	3d.
412.	Honour the Lord	J. Stainer	4d.	793.	Ditto	W. Byrd	2d.	494.	Let Thy merciful ears	W. B. Bell	3d.
129.	Hosanna (in C)	O. Gibbons	3d.	519.	I will open rivers	E. Pettman	3d.	1066.	Let us now fear	A. M. Goodhart	3d.

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S.

Psalms xxiv. 1; lxxv. 9, 10; cvii. 8; ciii. 2.

ALBERT LOWE.

Allegro maestoso.

TREBLE.
ALTO.
TENOR
(sve lower).
BASS.

The earth is the Lord's, and the ful-ness thereof, the
The earth is the Lord's, and the ful-ness thereof, the
The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, the
The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof, the Allegro maestoso.

f
Ped.

earth is the Lord's, the earth is the Lord's, the earth . . is the Lord's, the earth is the Lord's, the earth is the Lord's, the earth . . is the Lord's, the earth is the Lord's the earth is the Lord's, the earth . . is the Lord's, the earth is the Lord's the earth is the Lord's, the earth . . is the Lord's, the

rit. a tempo. rit. a tempo. rit. a tempo. rit. a tempo. rit. e cres. a tempo.

earth . . is the Lord's, and the ful - ness thereof, the ful - ness, the fulness there .
earth . . is the Lord's, and the ful - ness thereof, the ful - ness, the ful-ness there .
earth . . is the Lord's, and the ful - ness thereof, the ful - ness, the fulness there .
earth . . is the Lord's, and the ful - ness thereof, the ful - ness, the fulness there

(1)

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S.

rit. of. rit. of. rit. of. rit. ad lib. Reduce Gt. to Stop Dp. (Sw.) Ped.

Moderato. con espress. Thou vi - sit - est the earth, . . and bless - est it: Thou mak'st it slentando. Moderato. ten. ten. p legato.

ve - ry plen - teous, ve - ry plenteous, and and Thou vi - sit - est the earth, . . and Thou vi - sit - est the earth, . . and

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S.

bless - est it: Thou mak'st it ve - ry .. plen - teous, ve - ry .. plenteous. Thou pre - bless - est it: Thou mak'st it ve - ry plen - teous, ve - ry plenteous.
 bless - est it: Thou mak'st it ve - ry, ve - ry plenteous.
 bless - est it: Thou mak'st it ve - ry, ve - ry plenteous.

Full Sto.

par - est their corn, for so Thou pro - vi - dest for the earth, for so, for so Thou pro - vi - dest for the earth,
 Thou pre - par - est their corn. for so Thou pro - vi - dest for the earth.
 Thou pre - par - est their corn, for so Thou pro - vi - dest for the earth,

rall. e dim.
rall. e dim.
rall. e dim.
rall. e dim.

Man.
Allegro risoluto.
Slower.
 pro - vi - dest for the earth.
 pro - vi - dest for the earth.
 pro - vi - dest for the earth.
 pro - vi - dest for the earth.

Slower.
Allegro risoluto.
ff Marcato.
Ped. (3)

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S.

First system of the musical score. It features a vocal melody in the upper staves and a piano accompaniment in the lower staves. The lyrics are: "O that men would therefore praise the Lord for His good - ness, and de -". The piano part includes a pedal point marked "Ped.".

Second system of the musical score. The vocal melody continues with the lyrics: "O that men would there - fore praise the Lord, therefore praise the Lord for His good - ness, His good-ness, His good - ness - clare the won - ders that He do - eth for the chil - dren of men,". The piano accompaniment provides harmonic support.

Third system of the musical score. It shows a vocal melody and piano accompaniment. The lyrics are: "O that men would therefore praise the Lord for His good - ness and de -". The piano part features a prominent bass line with a "V" marking at the end.

THE EARTH IS THE LORD'S.

clare, de-clare the won-ders that He do-eth for the chil-dren of men.

clare, de-clare the won-ders that He do-eth for the chil-dren of men.

- clare, de-clare... the won-ders that He do-eth for the chil-dren of men.

- clare, de-clare... the won-ders that He do-eth for the chil-dren of men.

poco rit.
Praise the Lord, O my soul, and for-get not all ... His

poco rit.
Praise the Lord, O my soul, and for-get not all ... His

poco rit.
Praise the Lord, O my soul, and for-get not all His

poco rit.
Praise the Lord, O my soul, and for-get not all ... His fff Slow.

ben-e-fits, praise the Lord, praise the Lord. A-men.

fff ben-e-fits, praise the Lord, praise the Lord. A-men.

fff ben-e-fits, praise the Lord, praise the Lord. A-men.

fff ben-e-fits, praise the Lord, praise the Lord. A-men.

fff Slow.
ben-e-fits, praise the Lord, praise the Lord. A-men.

NOVELLO'S

OCTAVO EDITION OF ANTHEMS.

793	The Lord is my Shepherd (S.A.T.B.)	H. Smart	3d
738.	Ditto	D. S. Smith	3d.
305.	Ditto	C. V. Stanford	6d
862.	The Lord is my strength	Booth	3d.
398.	Ditto	S. Coleridge-Taylor	3d.
843.	Ditto	J. Goss	6d.
947.	Ditto	Bruce Steane	3d.
422.	The Lord is risen	G. M. Garrett	4d
1020.	Ditto	B. Luard-Selby	3d.
1028	The Lord is very great	Beckwith	4d.
696.	The Lord liveth	A. W. Marchant	3d.
731.	The Lord Omnipotent	T. Adams	3d.
873.	The Lord our Righteousness	Blair	3d.
304.	The Lord preserveth	... Armes	6d.
474.	The Lord shall be	J. V. Roberts	4d.
84.	The Lord that made	J. Turle	3d.
112.	The Lord will comfort	... Hiles	6d.
86.	The morning stars	... J. Stainer	6d.
767.	Ditto	G. A. A. West	4d.
1057.	The Name of the Lord	A. Hollins	3d
749.	The New-born King	P. E. Fletcher	3d.
465.	The night is far spent (S.A.)	Foster	3d.
607.	Ditto	(S.A.T.B.) Foster	3d.
640.	The Parable of the	F. J. Sawyer	4d.
576.	The people that	... C. F. Bowes	4d.
762.	The promise which was	Bairstow	4d.
941.	The radiant morn	... B. Steane	3d.
736.	The reproaches	... J. B. Dykes	3d.
1064.	Ditto	... W. S. Hoyte	4d.
1044.	Ditto	... Palestrina	4d.
174.	The righteous live	... J. Stainer	4d.
855	The righteous living	Mendelssohn	3d.
155	The righteous shall flourish	Calkin	4d.
977.	The secret of the Lord	... West	3d.
614.	The souls of the righteous	Byrd	3d.
559.	Ditto	... Elvey	2d.
249.	Ditto	Myles B. Foster	3d.
140.	Ditto	... Nares	3d.
894.	Ditto	... Wm. Rea	6d.
285.	Ditto	H. H. Woodward	3d.
755.	The stars in their silent	... West	4d.
457.	The Story of the Cross	M.B. Foster	3d.
557.	Ditto	J. V. Roberts	3d.
531.	Ditto	A. Somervell	3d.
452.	Ditto	... J. Stainer	3d.
360.	The strong foundations	F. Brandeis	2d.
834.	The surrender of the...	Cornelius	4d.
925.	The Vineyard of the Lord	Wareing	3d.
493.	The whole earth	... J. V. Roberts	4d.
31.	The wilderness	... John Goss	2d.
110.	Ditto	... S. S. Wesley	6d.
649.	The Word is made	... T. Adams	2d.
576.	There is a green hill	... Gounod	4d.
302.	There is no condemnation	Irons	3d.
882.	There is no sorrow	A. E. Godfrey	3d.
845.	There is none like unto	... Goss	6d.
809.	There is none that can	... Atkins	4d.
85.	There shall a star	Mendelssohn	6d.
600.	There shall be an heap	F. Tozer	3d.
670.	Ditto	Cuthbert Harris	3d.
685.	There shall come a star	C. Harris	3d.
574.	There shall come forth	Mansfield	3d.
750.	Ditto	... F. Tozer	3d.
1062	Ditto	F. W. Wadely	3d.
853.	There was a marriage	J. Stainer	3d.
414.	There was war in	Cruikshank	3d.
466.	There were shepherds (S.A.)	Foster	3d.
516.	Ditto	... E. Pettman	3d.
817.	Ditto	E. A. Sydenham	3d.
324.	Ditto	... C. Vincent	4d.
447.	Ditto	H. W. Wareing	3d.
871.	Ditto	Healey Willan	3d.
19.	Therefore with angels	V. Novello	2d.
93.	These are they which came	Dykes	6d.
966.	They are at rest	... E. Elgar	3d.
157.	They that go down	T. Attwood	4d.
709.	Ditto	... H. Clarke	4d.
546.	Ditto	... G. Elvey	6d.
432.	They that sow	... A. W. Batson	3d.
705.	They were lovely	... Stainer	4d.
2005.	Thine for ever	H. Elliot Button	3d.
221.	Think, good Jesu	... Mozart	6d.
359.	Think not that they	F. Brandeis	2d.
161.	This is the day	... S. C. Cooke	3d.
422.	Ditto	... G. M. Garrett	4d.
327.	Ditto	... E. V. Hall	4d.
949.	Ditto	... B. Harwood	3d.
621.	Ditto	E. H. Lemare	4d.
462.	Ditto	A. W. Marchant	3d.
1046.	Ditto	... J. H. Maunder	3d.
1059	Ditto	... R. W. Robson	3d.
13.	Ditto	... John Sewell	2d.
735.	Ditto	... B. Steane	4d.
4.	Ditto	... J. Turle	3d.
851.	This is the record of John	Gibbons	3d.
828.	Thou art a Priest for	S. Wesley	3d.
678.	Thou art gone to the...	Williams	2d.
934.	Thou art My Son	... T. Adams	3d.
1000.	Thou art worthy	F. E. Gladstone	3d.
865.	Thou Judge of quick and dead	Wesley	3d.
859.	Thou, Lord, art merciful	Mozart	6d.
653.	Thou, Lord, in the	... J. Stainer	4d.
354.	Thou, O God, art praised	E. V. Hall	3d.
930.	Ditto	J. W. Elliott	2d.
579.	Ditto	B. Luard-Selby	3d.
281.	Ditto	... R. Stewart	4d.
62.	Ditto	... S. Wesley	3d.
747.	Ditto	W. Wolstenholme	4d.
226.	Thou shalt keep the feast	Cowen	4d.
476.	Thou shalt shew me	C. Bowdler	3d.
634.	Thou that sittest between	F. Iliffe	3d.
480.	Thou visitest the earth	J. Barnby	4d.
244.	Ditto	... J. B. Calkin	4d.
191.	Ditto	... Callcott	2d.
549.	Ditto	... Elliott	3d.
866.	Thou who art for ever	A. Dvorak	3d.
484.	Thou wilt keep him	... P. Armes	4d.
714.	Ditto	... J. B. Calkin	4d.
72.	Ditto	... Gauntlett	3d.
107.	Ditto	S. S. Wesley	3d.
276.	Ditto	C. L. Williams	3d.
515.	Through peace	... J. H. Roberts	3d.
902.	Through the day...	Luard-Selby	2d.
1040.	Ditto	John E. West	3d.
622.	Thus saith the Lord	... P. J. Fry	3d.
216.	Ditto	... Garrett	6d.
1052.	Ditto	G. C. Martin	3d.
441.	Thy mercy, O Lord	... Garrett	6d.
320.	Ditto	E. J. Hopkins	6d.
514.	Thy word is a lantern	H. Purcell	4d.
985.	To bless Thy chosen	F. Brandeis	11
980.	To the Holy Spirit	H. W. Davies	16
322.	To Thee, O Lord	C. L. Williams	3d
443.	Try me, O God (Male)	A. D. Culley	2d
618.	Turbanum voces...	... G. Byrd	4d
275.	Turn Thy face	... Steggall	4d
626.	Turn ye (Rend your)...	Godfrey	3d
160.	Unto Thee have I cried	G. Elvey	3d
601.	Unto Thee, O God, do we	B. Steane	3d
555.	Unto us a Child is born	F. Adlam	4d
1003.	Unto us was born (S.S.)	Macfarren	3d
186.	Wash me thoroughly	S. S. Wesley	3d
386.	We beseech Thee	John E. West	2d
76.	We give Thee thanks	Macfarren	3d
74.	We have heard	... A. Sullivan	6d
888.	We sent unto thee	... A. Hollins	3d
387.	We shall not hunger	A. Mackenzie	3d
127.	We will rejoice	... Croft	4d
757.	Weary of earth	... E. V. Hall	3d
610.	Weary pilgrims	... F. Leoni	3d
57.	What are these	... J. Stainer	3d
965.	What sweeter music	H. W. Davies	6d
974.	Whate'er the blossom'd	... Haydn	3d
235.	Whoever is born of God	Oakeley	3d
666.	When Christ was born	... Davies	4d
538.	When Christ, Who	J. V. Roberts	2d
337.	When God of old	... E. V. Hall	3d
786.	When Israel came out of	Wesley	4d
489.	When Jesus was born	Cruikshank	3d
1014.	When the Lord turned	W. G. Alcock	6d
791.	Ditto	... E. Faning	4d
372.	Ditto	... E. Prout	6d
563.	Where Thou reignest	Schubert	3d
69.	Wherewithal shall	... G. Elvey	5d
26.	Ditto	... H. Hiles	3d
650.	While all things	... H. J. King	3d
889.	Ditto	Healey Willan	3d
529.	While shepherds watched	Barnby	4d
341.	Ditto	... Elvey	2d
910.	Ditto	... E. V. Hall	3d
637.	While the earth remaineth	Gaul	4d
175.	Ditto	... Heap	4d
640.	Ditto	... Sawyer	4d
578.	Ditto	Bruce Steane	3d
954.	Ditto	H. W. Wareing	3d
403.	Ditto	C. L. Williams	3d
361.	While with ceaseless	F. Brandeis	2d
995.	Who are these	... R. Redhead	3d
787.	Who can comprehend Thee	Mozart	3d
264.	Who is like unto Thee	A. Sullivan	6d
836.	Who is this?	H. Elliot Button	3d
417.	Ditto	Fred. Rayner	2d
115.	Who is this that cometh	Arnold	4d
181.	Whoso dwelleth...	G. C. Martin	4d
269.	Why assemble the	Rheinberger	3d
299.	Why do the heathen	Gardner	4d
23.	Why rage fiercely	Mendelssohn	6d.
218.	Why seek ye the living	Alexander	3d.
468.	Ditto (S.A.)	M. B. Foster	3d.
918.	Ditto	... A. Hollins	3d.
423.	Ditto	... F. Peel	4d.
645.	Why standest Thou	M. B. Foster	3d
661.	Wisdom shall praise herself	West	3d
20.	With angels...	... J. L. Hopkins	3d
821.	Withdraw not Thou	Thy Attwood	4d
22.	Word of God incarnate	Gounod	4d
785.	Worthy is the Lamb	E. H. Thorne	3d
572.	Ye holy Angels bright	Richards	3d
352.	Ye shall go out with joy	J. Barnby	4d
1036.	Ditto	Oliver King	4d

(To be continued.)

YEA, CAST ME FROM HEIGHTS OF THE MOUNTAINS

PART-SONG

WORDS FROM THE GREEK ANTHOLOGY (ANONYMOUS) TRANSLATED BY ALMA STRETTELL*

MUSIC BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(OP. 45, No. 1)

ARRANGED FOR S.A.T.B. BY THE COMPOSER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro
con fuoco

SOPRANO
Yea, cast me from heights of the moun - tains . . . to

ALTO
Yea, cast me from heights of the moun - tains . . . to

TENOR
Yea, cast me from heights of the moun - tains . . . to

BASS
Yea, cast me from heights of the moun - tains . . . to (QUASI SOLI)

(For practice only) Allegro $\text{♩} = 112$
f con fuoco

largamente pp deeps of the o - - - cean, a tempo. risoluto ff Yea, cast me from heights of the largamente pp deeps of the o - - - cean, a tempo. risoluto ff Yea, cast me from heights of the largamente pp deeps of the o - - - cean, a tempo. risoluto ff Yea, cast me from heights of the largamente pp deeps of the o - - - cean, a tempo. risoluto ff Yea, cast me from heights of the largamente pp deeps of the o - - - cean, a tempo. risoluto ff Yea, cast me from heights of the largamente pp ff a tempo. risoluto

* With the kind permission of the Translator

Copyright, 1922, by Novello and Company, Limited

Originally published for T.T.B.B. in THE ORPHEUS, No. 362

Digitized by Google

MADE IN ENGLAND

YEA, CAST ME FROM HEIGHTS OF THE MOUNTAINS

moun - tains . . to deeps of the o - - - cean, . .

moun - tains . . to deeps of the o - - - cean, . .

moun - tains . . to deeps of the o - - - cean, . .

moun - tains . . to deeps of the o - - - cean, . .

Let the thun - der-bolt strike me, strike me, strike me, strike me, the thun - der-bolt strike me, let the thun - der-bolt . . . strike me,

Let the thun - der-bolt strike me strike me, strike me, strike me, the thun - der-bolt strike me, let the thun - der-bolt . . . strike me,

Let the thun - der-bolt strike me, the thun - der-bolt strike me, let the thun - der-bolt . . . strike me,

Let the thun - der-bolt, . . . let the thun - der-bolt . . . strike me,

YEA, CAST ME FROM HEIGHTS OF THE MOUNTAINS

allargando ten. dim. ppp dolce

o'er - sf whelm me with fire or with snow! Since him whom allargando ten. dim. ppp dolce

o'er - - sf whelm me with fire or with snow! Since him whom allargando ten. dim. ppp dolce

o'er - - sf whelm me with fire or with snow! Since him whom allargando ten. dim.  p ma marcato* o'er - sf whelm me with fire or with snow! Whom . . .

allargando ten. dim. ppp dolce

 il basso marcato*

espress.

Love's . . bur - den hath crushed, . . and whom E - - ros hath

espress.

Love's . . bur - den hath crushed, . . and whom E - - ros hath

espress.

Love's . . bur - den hath crushed, . . and whom E - - ros hath

E - - ros hath . . bro - - -

espress.

* A few Basses may sing an octave lower for six bars.

NET BOOK.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL

CONTAINING

THE CANTICLES AT MORNING AND EVENING PRAYER
SET TO APPROPRIATE CHANTS

FERIAL AND FESTAL RESPONSES, LITANY, RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS
FINAL AMENS, VESPER HYMNS AND VESTRY PRAYERS

TOGETHER WITH

ORGAN ACCOMPANIMENTS TO THE LORD'S PRAYER, APOSTLES' AND NICENE CREEDS.

The Canticles, with the Cathedral Psalter Pointing, have been set to appropriate Chants by Sir John Stainer, Sir George C. Martin, Sir Joseph Barnby, Sir George Elvey, and other well-known church composers.

The Responses to the Commandments have been selected from the Services of the above composers as well as those of Myles B. Foster, Dr. Garrett, C. Gounod, Dr. E. J. Hopkins, Dr. C. H. Lloyd, Merbecke, H. Smart, John E. West, S. S. Wesley, and others.

Sir John Stainer's Sevenfold Amen is also included, as well as Vesper Hymns by Beethoven, Sullivan, and others; concluding with two Vestry Prayers by S. S. Wesley and the Rev. Canon Hervey.

PREFACE.

Organists, choirmasters, and librarians of choirs often have occasion to wish for a choral service-book of a comprehensive nature. This desideratum the "Parish Choir Manual" seeks to meet by supplying within one cover the Canticles for Morning and Evening Prayer, Responses (Ferial, Festal, and to the Commandments), Final Amens, Vesper Hymns, and Vestry Prayers, in addition to organ accompaniments to the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' and Nicene Creeds.

The constant usefulness and the practicability of such a compilation are obvious, and a glance at the names of the composers will assure confidence in a publication that should commend itself for use "in quires and places where they sing."

Demy 8vo, 72 pp., price Three Shillings; Cloth, Four Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 3s.; Cloth, 4s.

Separately from the above :—

THE RESPONSES TO THE COMMANDMENTS, PRICE 8D. SOL-FA, 8D.

THE CANTICLES, PRICE 6D.

NET BOOK.

THE PARISH CHOIR MANUAL
FOR HOLY COMMUNION

CONSISTING OF

VARIOUS SETTINGS OF
THE OFFICE

BY THE

MOST EMINENT AUTHORS

ANCIENT AND MODERN

AND INCLUDING

THE BENEDICTUS QUI VENIT, AGNUS DEI,
A COMPLETE SET OF OFFERTORY SENTENCES,
A COMMUNION HYMN, AND FINAL AMENS.

Price 3s.; Cloth, 4s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 3s.; Cloth, 4s.

NET BOOK.

THE VILLAGE CHANT BOOK

No. I.

CONTAINING

100 SINGLE CHANTS.

PRICE SIXPENCE. TONIC SOL-FA, 4d.

NET BOOK.

THE VILLAGE CHANT BOOK

No. II.

CONTAINING

50 DOUBLE CHANTS.

The Chants contained in the above collection have been chosen for their attractive melody and simple harmonies. A special feature is the pitch of the reciting-note, which in no chant exceeds C natural.* The requirements and capabilities of Village Choirs have been carefully considered in making the selection, which it is hoped will materially aid an important part of Divine Service.

* One exception to this occurs in No. 2 (No. 23, by Lord Mornington), which is included on account of its great popularity.

PRICE EIGHTPENCE. TONIC SOL-FA, 6d.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

No. 1399.

IT'S OH! TO BE A WILD WIND.—Edward Elgar.

Price—2d. 8d.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

- No. 614 Absence ... H. Goetz 2d.
 217 * Do. (A.T.T.B.) J. L. Hatton 1d.
 181 * Do. ... S. Reay 1d.
 67 Adieu love, adieu G. A. Macfarren 2d.
 312 Adieu, my native shore Pearsall 3d.
 943 Adieu, sweet Amaryllis J. W. G. Hathaway 2d.
 1227 Do. ... C. Macpherson 3d.
 390 Adieu to the woods S. J. G. Egerton 3d.
 638 Advice to lovers ... P. W. Pilcher 2d.
 913 After the battle arr. T. R. G. Jozé 3d.
 674 Ah, my dear Son (Carol, 3 V.) ... 3d.
 1375 Ah! what is love ... W. McNaught 3d.
 1375 Ah! woe is me (6 V.) ... H. Lahee 4d.
 648 Airley Beacon C. V. Stanford 2d.
 568 Airs of Summer ... J. L. Roeckel 2d.
 17 All among the barley E. Stirling 3d.
 971 *All for my true love H. D. Wetton 3d.
 81 All is not gold that shineth bright in snow (5 V.) W. J. Westbrook 3d.
 394 *All is still! ... G. A. Macfarren 1d.
 802 All Souls' Day J. Rheinberger 3d.
 59 All ye woods and trees and bow'rs J. L. Hatton 1d.
 83 * Do. (5 V.) ... H. Lahee 1d.
 940 Do. ... H. W. Wareing 1d.
 1037 *Allan Water arr. H. E. Button 2d.
 478 *Allen-a-Dale ... C. H. Lloyd 4d.
 1020 * Do. ... J. B. McEwen 3d.
 334 Already snow has fallen R. Franz 1d.
 113 Alton Locke's Song G. A. Macfarren 1d.
 1011 *Amaryllis I did woo John E. West 2d.
 1322 *American National Songs (Three) 1d.
 972 Amintor's well-a-day John E. West 3d.
 1364 An address to the nightingale W. W. Pearson 3d.
 175 An Autumn song ... C. Pinsuti 3d.
 20 An emigrant's song W. Macfarren 2d.
 1074 *An Empire song A. C. Mackenzie 3d.
 1053 An end will I bring Schubert 3d.
 1387 *An old Song resung H. B. Gardiner 4d.
 485 And then no more ... R. Raff 2d.
 1103 *Angelic hunter, The arr. J. Brahms 3d.
 1091 Angel's call, The I. I. Viotta 3d.
 960 Angel's greeting, The J. Brahms 3d.
 1167 *Angelus (Tuscan) E. Elgar 4d.
 1340 *Anglers, The W. W. Pearson 2d.
 30 Angler's Trysting-tree, The C. W. Corfe 3d.
 1039 *Annie Laurie arr. H. E. Button 2d.
 1088 Annie Lee ... J. Barnby 1d.
 182 April showers ... J. L. Hatton 1d.
 218 Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... 1d.
 1318 Arethusa, The ... W. Shield 3d.
 137 Arise, sweet love ... H. Leslie 1d.
 97 Arise, the sunbeams hail F. Berger 3d.
 520 Around the maypole tripping J. L. Hatton 1d.
 859 *Arranmore Boat Song arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d.
 457 *Arrow and the song, The W. W. Pearson 3d.
 973 As Amoret with Phillis sat John E. West 2d.
 1054 As dewdrops at morn Schubert 3d.
 525 As I saw fair Clara F. Corder 3d.
 146 As it fell upon a day ... S. Reay 3d.
 619 As the ripples flow E. A. Sydenham 2d.
 1052 As the watcher longs J. Pulein 2d.
 900 As through the land J. Pulein 2d.
 796 *As torrents in summer E. Elgar 2d.
 1180 As when the sun renews his strength (Madriral) C. E. Miller 3d.
 1257 *Ash Grove, The arr. Dunhill 3d.
 1105 At Andernach in Rhineland Abt 3d.
 393 At first the mountain hill G. A. Macfarren 1d.
 981 At her fair hands ... J. Elliott 3d.
 788 Do. ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.
 338 At parting ... R. Franz 1d.
 335 *At the coming of the Spring J. L. Hatton 3d.
 195 Auburn ... 1d.
 582 *Auld Lang Syne arr. E. Land 1d.
 71 Autolycus' Song C. A. Macrone 1d.
 1006 * Do. ... C. Lee Williams 1d.
 156 Autumn ... W. Macfarren 3d.
 274 Do. (T.T.B.B.) ... 3d.
 353 Do. ... A. C. Mackenzie 1d.
 1162 Autumn fields, The N. W. Gade 3d.

- No. 464 Autumn is come again (5 V.) F. Corder 3d.
 403 Autumn song ... S. Reay 3d.
 683 Do. ... J. Rheinberger 2d.
 484 Ave Maria ... J. Raff 3d.
 241 * Do. ... H. Smart 1d.
 968 *Awake, awake ... G. Bantock 3d.
 76 *Awake, awake, the flow'rs unfold H. Leslie 1d.
 25 Awake the starry midnight hour Mendelssohn 2d.
 923 *Away to the woodlands H. W. Warner 3d.
 978 *Baby's feet, like sea shells pink, A C. H. Lloyd 3d.
 225 Bacchanalian Song (A.T.T.B.) J. L. Hatton 3d.
 193 Bait, The (Come live with me) J. L. Hatton 1d.
 996 *Ballad, A (8 V.) ... T. Wendt 3d.
 1016 Ballade of Midsummer ... 3d.
 1017 Ballade of Spring ... 4d.
 1044 *Battle of the Baltic, The C. H. Lloyd 4d.
 861 *Battle song, A arr. T. R. G. Jozé 3d.
 578 Do. ... E. A. Sydenham 3d.
 1334 *Beacon, The ... A. Carse 3d.
 689 Beauty, arise ... K. J. Pye 3d.
 841 Before me careless lying (5 V.) C. H. Lloyd 4d.
 1238 *Beleaguered, The A. S. Sullivan 1d.
 56 *Belfry Tower, The J. L. Hatton 1d.
 1311 *Belgian National song F. Campenhout 1d.
 572 Bells across the snow Ch. Gounod 3d.
 432 *Bells of St. Michael's Tower, The W. Knyvet (5 V.), arr. R. P. Stewart 4d.
 1271 *Ben Bowlegs (humorous) W. W. Pearson 3d.
 984 Bendemeer's Stream J. Pointer 3d.
 1216 Beside the river ... A. Jensen 2d.
 793 Better music ne'er was known C. H. H. Parry 3d.
 184 *Beware ... J. L. Hatton 1d.
 220 Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... 1d.
 111 *Bird of the Wilderness J. Barnby 3d.
 196 Do. ... J. L. Hatton 3d.
 1157 Birds are singing, The Hans Sitt 3d.
 798 Birthday serenade, A G. Elvey 3d.
 1308 Birthright, The ... E. Elgar 3d.
 300 Bishop of Mentz, The Pearsall 1d.
 1107 *Black Monk, The (Welsh folk-song) arr. R. Boughton 3d.
 55 *Blow, blow thou winter wind G. A. Macfarren 1d.
 1254 Blow, breeze, from the North G. Elvey 3d.
 1369 Blow, western wind W. W. Pearson 3d.
 661 *Blue-bottle's fate, The (humorous) A. H. Ashworth 3d.
 544 Blue-eyed lassie, The F. Brandeis 3d.
 933 Blwyddyn Bywyd D. Protheroe 3d.
 187 Blythe is the Bird J. L. Hatton 1d.
 399 *Boat Song ... H. Leslie 1d.
 357 * Do. ... E. Prout 4d.
 1088 Do. ... F. Schubert 2d.
 385 Boat, The ... R. Schumann 3d.
 3 Boating Song ... E. G. Monk 3d.
 521 *Boatman's Good-night, The F. Schira 1d.
 545 *Bonnie Bell A. C. Mackenzie 2d.
 1310 *Boy, The (humorous) A. H. Brewer 3d.
 63 *Break, break on thy cold grey stones, O sea G. A. Macfarren 1d.
 99 Breathe soft, ye winds J. B. Calkin 1d.
 1307 * Do. ... W. Paxton 1d.
 878 Bridal Song ... H. Leslie 1d.
 639 Bright be thy dreams Oliver King 3d.
 402 Bright-hair'd morn, The S. Reay 3d.
 584 Bright Moon ... John E. West 2d.
 1222 *Bring me a golden pen F. H. Cowen 3d.
 601 Broken Flower, The Oliver King 3d.
 447 Brook, The C. G. Reissiger 3d.
 1015 *Brownies, The Moellendorf 3d.
 223 Busy, curious, thirsty fly (A.T.T.B.) J. L. Hatton 2d.
 743 *Butterfly, The J. Blumenthal 4d.
 1095 *By a gentle river laid John E. West 3d.
 1002 *By the waters of Babylon P. Corneliu 2d.
 1141 By woodland and wayside E. Franz 2d.

- No. 1272 Call John (humorous) arr. W. W. Pearson 3d.
 1122 Calm is the lake ... F. Abt 3d.
 359 Calm night ... J. L. Hatton 3d.
 380 Calm of the sea, The H. Hiles 4d.
 911 *Capture of Cremona, The arr. T. R. G. Jozé 3d.
 314 Caput apri defero ... Pearsall 3d.
 178 *Caravan, The ... C. Pinsuti 1d.
 1251 *Cargoes ... H. B. Gardiner 3d.
 1273 Carrion Crow, The (humorous) W. W. Pearson 3d.
 607 Cavalier, The ... C. Goodall 3d.
 529 Cavalry song C. A. Macrone 3d.
 635 Cephalus and Procris A. W. Batson 3d.
 482 Chafer's Wedding, A (humorous) Lewandowski 6d.
 1087 Chapel, The ... C. Kreutzer 3d.
 427 *Charge of the Light Brigade, The E. Hecht 4d.
 85 *Charm me asleep (6 V.) H. Leslie 3d.
 906 Do. ... J. B. McEwen 3d.
 847 *Chase, The ... E. German 3d.
 757 Cherry ripe ... A. H. Brewer 2d.
 583 Do. ... arr. E. Land 1d.
 1255 * Do. ... W. G. Ross 2d.
 731 Do. (6 V.) S. P. Waddington 3d.
 1212 Cheshire cheese, The arr. J. C. Bridge 3d.
 734 Chi la Gagliarda ... B. Donato 3d.
 375 Chieftain to the Highland bound, A Pearsall 2d.
 466 * Do. ... O. Prescott 4d.
 94 Childhood's melody F. Berger 1d.
 101 Chivalry of Labour, The (5 V.) J. B. Calkin 4d.
 1145 Chloe, that dear bewitching prude H. Willan 2d.
 1147 *Chorus of Empire C. A. E. Harriss 3d.
 66 *Christmas... G. A. Macfarren 1d.
 1109 *Christmas greeting, A E. Elgar 6d.
 314 Christmas song, A ... Pearsall 3d.
 967 Do. ... M. Pratorius 2d.
 845 Close to my heart... W. Davies 3d.
 677 *Clouds, The J. Rheinberger 3d.
 823 Come again, sweet days J. Dowland 2d.
 726 *Come away ... E. German 3d.
 873 * Do. ... H. Parker 4d.
 1169 Come away, come away, death arr. Arne 2d.
 36 Do. (5 V.) G. A. Macfarren 3d.
 51 Do. (5 V.) ... 3d.
 58 Come celebrate the May J. L. Hatton 1d.
 668 Come, fairies, trip it ... F. Iliffe 3d.
 102 Come fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.) J. B. Calkin 3d.
 118 *Come follow me A. Zimmermann 1d.
 1143 Come forth, the summer's innumur hear ... E. Franz 2d.
 14 Come, heavy sleep J. Dowland 2d.
 745 Come if you dare... Purcell 4d.
 1210 Come, lasses and lads arr. J. C. Bridge 3d.
 899 Come let me take thee J. Pulein 1d.
 317 Come let us be merry Pearsall 1d.
 507 *Come live with me W. S. Bennett 1d.
 360 Do. ... J. L. Hatton 3d.
 193 Do. (The Bait) ... 1d.
 497 Come, May, with all thy flowers J. L. Gregory 2d.
 1052 Come, O come, dearest, come Schubert 2d.
 671 Come o'er the burn, Bessie (3 V.) 2d.
 1214 Come out across the heather A. Jensen 3d.
 791 *Come, pretty wag, and sing C. H. H. Parry 2d.
 38 Come sleep... J. Benedict 3d.
 1060 Do. ... J. W. G. Hathaway 2d.
 1110 Do. ... R. H. Walthew 1d.
 945 Do. ... A. G. Wathall 3d.
 1007 *Come to me, gentle sleep F. H. Cowen 3d.
 701 Do. ... H. W. Schartau 3d.
 713 Come, tuneless friends (humorous) C. H. Lloyd 3d.
 1034 Come with me, fairest J. Brahms 3d.
 615 Comfort ... H. Goetz 2d.
 999 *Comfort in tears... P. Corneliu 4d.
 1182 *Comrades' song of hope, The arr. A. Adam 2d.
 383 Confidence (8 V.) ... R. Schumann 3d.

MADE IN ENGLAND.

Digitized by Google

FEASTING I WATCH

PART-SONG

WORDS FROM THE GREEK ANTHOLOGY (MARCUS ARGENTARIUS) TRANSLATED BY RICHARD GARNETT *

MUSIC BY

EDWARD ELGAR

(OP. 45, No. 5)

ARRANGED FOR S.A.T.B. BY THE COMPOSER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Allegro ff sostenuto

SOPRANO
Feast - ing I watch with west - ward - look - ing eye . . The flash - ing

ALTO
Feast - ing I watch with west - ward - look - ing eye . . The flash - ing

TENOR
Feast - ing I watch with west - ward - look - ing eye . . The flash - ing

BASS
Feast - ing I watch with west - ward - look - ing eye . . The flash - ing

Allegro ff sostenuto 120

(For practice only)

con - stel - la - tions' pa - gean-try, Sol - emn . . and con - stel - la - tions' pa - gean-try, Sol - emn . . and con - stel - la - tions' pa - gean-try, Sol - emn and con - stel - la - tions' pa - gean-try, Sol - emn . . and

* With the kind permission of the Translator

Copyright, 1922, by Novello and Company, Limited.

Originally published for T.T.B.B. in THE ORPHEUS, No. 366

FEASTING I WATCH

p rit. e dim.

splen - did, . . . sol - emn . . . and splen - did;

p rit. e dim.

splen - did, . . . sol - emn . . . and splen - did;

p rit. e dim.

splen - did, . . . sol - emn . . . and splen - did;

rit. e dim.

splen - did, . . . sol - emn . . . and splen - did;

p rit. e dim.

p a tempo

Feast - ing I watch with west - ward - look - ing eye . . . The flash - ing

a tempo

Feast - ing I watch with west - ward - look - ing eye . . . The flash - ing

p a tempo

Feast - ing I watch with west - ward - look - ing eye . . . The flash - ing

p a tempo

Feast - ing I watch with west - ward - look - ing eye . . . The flash - ing

p a tempo

FEASTING I WATCH

con - stel - la - tions' pa - gean-try, Sol - emn . . and

con - stel - la - tions' pa - gean-try, Sol - emn . . and con - stel - la - tions' pa - gean-try, Sol - emn and con - stel - la - tions' pa - gean-try, Sol - emn . . and

splen - did, . . sol - emn . . and splen - did;

splen - did, . . sol - emn . . and splen - did;

splen - did, . . sol - emn . . and splen - did;

splen - did, sol . . . emn . . and splen - did;

FEASTING I WATCH

Poco più tranquillo

p legato

then a - non I wreathe My

p legato

then a - non I wreathe My hair, I wreathe, I

p legato

then a - non I wreathe My hair, a - non I wreathe, . . I wreathe, I

p

then a - non I . . wreathe, I wreathe My

Poco più tranquillo $\text{♩} = 100$

p legato

dolce pp cantabile

hair, . . and war - bling to my harp, . . . and dolce cantabile pp

wreathe my hair, and war - bling to my dolce pp

wreathe my hair, and war - bling, and war - bling, and

dolce hair, . . . and war - - - - bling, and

dolce

FEASTING I WATCH

war - bling to my harp . . I . . breathe My full heart harp, . . and war - bling I breathe My full heart war - bling, and war - bling I breathe My full heart war - bling to my harp I . . breathe My full heart forth, . . and know . . the heav'ns look down,

 forth, . . and know the . . heav'ns look down,
 forth, . . and know the heav'ns look down, . .
 forth, and know . . the heav'ns look down, . .

FEASTING I WATCH

Grandioso
Tempo 1mo.

cres. rit. al ff Tempo 1mo.

look down . . Pleas - ed, for they al - so have their cres. rit. al ff Tempo 1mo.

look down . . Pleas - ed, for they al - so have their cres. rit. al ff Tempo 1mo.

look down . . Pleas - ed, for they al - so have their cres. rit. al ff Tempo 1mo.

look down Pleas - ed, for they al - so have their

Grandioso

cres. rit. al ff Tempo 1mo.

molto allargando

Lyre . . and Crown, . . they al - so have their Lyre and Crown.

molto allargando

Lyre . . and Crown, . . they al - so have their Lyre . . and Crown.

molto allargando

Lyre . . and Crown, . . they al - so have their Lyre . . and Crown.

molto allargando

Lyre . . and Crown, . . they al - so have their Lyre . . and Crown.

molto allargando

Lyre . . and Crown, . . they al - so have their Lyre . . and Crown.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

No.		No.		No.
201	Good wishes ... J. L. Hatton 3d.	638	How sweet the answer Oliver King 2d.	858	*Irish Reel, The arr. T. R. G. Joze 4d.
1268	*Goslings, The (humorous) ... J. F. Bridge 3d.	767	Do. ... C. H. H. Parry 2d.	886	*Irish wedding song ... arr. B. J. Rogers 3d.
295	*Great God of Love (8 V.) ... Pearsall 3d.	155	Do. ... A. S. Sullivan 1d.	1280	Iron Horse, The ... W. W. Pearson 4d.
28	Green leaves ... B. Taylor 2d.	737	*How sweet the moonlight sleeps ... D. E. Evans 1d.	1279	*Ironfounders, The ... R. Müller 3d.
1174	Had I a cave ... H. Willan 2d.	974	Do. (8 V.) ... Eaton Fanning 3d.	449	Is it to odours sweet that I sing ... C. H. Lloyd 2d.
727	*Hag, The (The Hag is a-stride) ... B. Luard-Selby 4d.	77	Do. ... H. Leslie 1d.	756	Is not that my fancy's Queen ... C. H. Lloyd 2d.
628	Hail, hail to the swallow ... A. M. Goodhart 6d.	1173	How sweet thy modest light ... A. S. Burrows 4d.	828	It is the hour ... C. H. Fogg 3d.
1331	Hail, sweet peace ... J. B. Lott 3d.	151	How sweet to wander ... Schubert 3d.	397	Do. ... H. Leslie 1d.
393	*Hail to the Chief ... H. Leslie 1d.	602	Hunt is up, The ... J. L. Hatton 1d.	349	It was a lass ... H. MacCunn 3d.
357	Do. ... E. Prout 4d.	963	*Hunter, The ... J. Brahms 2d.	506	*It was a lover and his lass ... J. Barnby 3d.
1088	Do. ... F. Schubert 2d.	1066	Hunter went a-riding, A ... arr. J. Brahms 3d.	422	Do. ... J. Booth 1d.
221	*Happiest land, The (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hatton 1d.	1126	Hunter's farewell, The ... Mendelssohn 3d.	822	Do. ... A. H. Brewer 1d.
935	*Hard by a fountain H. Waelrant 1d.	536	Hunters, The ... W. W. Pearson 3d.	127	Do. ... G. A. Macfarren 4d.
284	*Hardy Norseman's house of yore, The... Pearsall 1d.	471	Hunting chorus ... E. Louis 4d.	690	Do. ... C. Wood 1d.
82	Hark, how the birds (6 V.) H. Lahee 3d.	756	*Hunting song ... J. Benedict 3d.	1505	It was the charming month of May ... W. McNaught 3d.
946	Do. ... H. W. Wareing 3d.	622	Do. ... E. Duncan 3d.	292	It was upon a springtide day (5 V.) ... Pearsall 3d.
942	Hark, jolly shepherds ... J. W. G. Hathaway 2d.	719	Do. ... R. H. Legge 2d.	1117	Italian National Air ... Arranged 2d.
214	Hark, the convent bells are ringing ... J. L. Hatton 3d.	260	Do. ... W. Macfarren 1d.	991	*Italian Salad (humorous) ... R. Gevee 4d.
440	Hark, the lark ... F. Kücken 3d.	45	Do. ... H. Smart 1d.	854	Jack and Jill ... C. E. Horsley 4d.
130	Do. ... G. A. Macfarren 3d.	1255	Do. ... W. W. Starnes 3d.	1360	*Jack Frost ... A. R. Gaul 3d.
665	*Hark, the Vesper hymn is stealing ... arr. J. Stevenson 1d.	1374	Do. ... J. G. Williams 3d.	196	Do. ... I. L. Hattor 1d.
723	*Harvest feast, The ... A. R. Gaul 3d.	147	*Huntsman, rest ... S. Reay 3d.	230	Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... T. Distin 4d.
887	Harvest rose, The ... arr. T. R. G. Joze 3d.	779	*Huntsmen's Chorus ... Weber 2d.	850	*Jack Horner ... C. E. Horsley 4d.
13	*Harvest song ... W. Macfarren 2d.	762	Hurrah for England ... F. Bridge 2d.	1351	Jäger Chorus ... W. W. Pearson 3d.
754	Haste thee, nymph ... F. Adlam 3d.	854	Hush-a-bye, baby ... C. E. Horsley 4d.	666	Jean ... Oliver King 3d.
722	*Haven, The ... J. Barnby 3d.	1077	Do. ... J. B. Lott 3d.	1003	*Jerusalem ... P. Cornelius 2d.
53	Haymaker's song ... R. P. Stewart 3d.	356	*Hushed in death... H. Hiles 6d.	1211	Joan to the Maypole ... arr. J. C. Bridge 3d.
907	*He is gone on the mountain ... G. A. Macfarren 2d.	1326	*Hymn before action ... H. W. Davies 3d.	19	Jolly Cricket Ball, The ... E. G. Monk 3d.
1130	He left the upland lawns (5 V.) ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.	1148	*Hymn of the homeland, A ... A. S. Sullivan 1d.	483	Joy in Spring ... J. Raff 3d.
362	*He that hath a pleasant face ... J. L. Hatton 1d.	1047	Hymn of trust ... A. Zimmermann 2d.	779	*Joy of the hunter, The ... Weber 2d.
143	Hear, sweet spirit ... H. Smart 1d.	518	Hymn to Aurora ... H. Smart 2d.	153	Joy to the Victors ... A. Sullivan 2d.
1206	*Heart of the night, The ... H. Bath 3d.	444	Hymn to Cynthia... B. Tours 3d.	246	Joy of Spring, The ... H. Smart 3d.
558	Heath rose, The ... R. Schumann 2d.	473	Do. ... B. Tours 3d.	1221	June ... F. H. Cowen 3d.
159	Hemlock tree, The ... J. L. Hatton 4d.	763	*Hymn to music ... D. Buck 3d.	24	Do. (S.S.C.) ... F. Dun 2d.
229	Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... C. Wood 2d.	956	Hymn to the Eternal ... Schubert 3d.	1026	*Justice (8 V.) ... J. W. G. Hathaway 6d.
605	Do. ... C. Wood 2d.	446	Hymn to the moon ... J. Booth 4d.	577	*Kathleen Mavourneen ... F. N. Crouch 1d.
1234	*Hen wlad fy nhadau ... arr. J. James 3d.	986	I call and I call (5 V.) ... C. Wood 3d.	1334	*Keel Row, The ... arr. T. F. Dunhill 3d.
282	Hence, all you vain delights ... W. Macfarren 3d.	930	*I can but love thee (6 V.) ... P. Cornelius 3d.	361	Keep time, keep time ... J. L. Hatton 3d.
424	*Hence, loathed melancholy (5 V.) ... H. Lahee 4d.	499	I love my love ... G. B. Allen 1d.	883	Kind words ... H. Leslie 3d.
431	*Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee ... J. Goss 4d.	916	*I loved a lass ... W. H. Bell 3d.	1208	Kindred hearts ... C. Lee Williams 2d.
1054	Her true love ... F. Schubert 3d.	237	Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hatton 4d.	1192	King of Thule, The ... R. Schumann 2d.
1312	Here's a health unto His Majesty Melody by J. Saville ... arr. S. G. Ould 2d.	191	I loved her ... 3d.	1333	King, The (A Toast) A. H. Brewer 2d.
920	*Heroes, The ... F. H. Cowen 4d.	232	Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... 3d.	316	King there was in Thule, A ... Pearsall 2d.
952	*Hero's rest, The ... P. Cornelius 3d.	198	I met her in the quiet lane ... 2d.	391	King Winter ... S. Egerton 3d.
594	High upon hills... V. Caillard 3d.	739	I prithee send me back my heart ... J. V. Roberts 3d.	227	King Witlaf's drinking horn ... (A.T.T.B.) ... J. L. Hatton 3d.
1159	Hie upon Heaven's domain ... F. Curti 3d.	170	Do. ... H. Smart 1d.	458	*Kings and Queens ... C. Pinsuti 3d.
854	Highland laddie, The ... H. E. Button 2d.	290	*I saw lovely Phillis ... Pearsall 1d.	1170	*Kitty of Coleraine (Irish air) ... arr. C. H. Lloyd 2d.
560	Highland lassie, The ... R. Schumann 3d.	87	I saw the moon rise clear ... H. Hiles 1d.	649	*Knight's tomb, The ... C. V. Stanford 2d.
275	Highland war song (T.T.B.B.) ... W. Macfarren 3d.	1385	I sing the birth (Carol) ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.	1096	Know ye the land... L. Spohr 2d.
773	*His Majesty the King ... F. H. Cowen 4d.	686	I think on thee in the night ... E. Fédarb 3d.	918	Lacking my love ... John E. West 3d.
721	Holiday in Arcadia ... A. Thomson 3d.	541	If doughty deeds ... C. Lee Williams 3d.	46	*Lady, rise, sweet morn's awaking ... H. Smart 1d.
6	Home fairy, The (T.T.B.B.) ... P. Winter 2d.	910	If I had but two little wings ... J. F. Barnett 2d.	636	*Ladye fair, thou hast my life ... 1d.
759	Home of my heart ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.	627	If I love, will you doom me to die ... W. Jackson and F. Corder 3d.	1367	Lake, The ... W. W. Pearson 3d.
581	Home, sweet home ... E. Land 1d.	527	If love be dead (5 V.) ... C. Wood 4d.	1209	Lament, A ... arr. H. E. Button 2d.
340	*Home that I love ... F. Abt 1d.	982	If love his arrows ... H. W. Wareing 3d.	890	*Do. ... arr. T. R. G. Joze 2d.
107	Home they brought her warrior dead ... J. Barnby 1d.	199	If thou art sleeping, mai'en ... J. L. Hatton 3d.	716	Do. ... R. H. Legge 2d.
1148	*Homeland, The ... A. S. Sullivan 1d.	983	*If to my lady fair ... J. Pointer 3d.	1031	Do. ... John E. West 2d.
443	*Homeward ... H. Leslie 4d.	1052	I'm in no hurry ... Schubert 3d.	78	Land ho ... H. Leslie 1d.
590	Hope ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.	1131	In a harbour grene ... C. H. H. Parry 2d.	1118	Land of beauty ... Mendelssohn 1d.
676	Do. ... J. Rheinberger 2d.	1080	*In absence ... D. Buck 2d.	1232	*Land of my fathers arr. J. Jones 3d.
795	Do. ... E. Sachs 2d.	16	In all thy need ... J. Dowland 2d.	255	Land of wonders, The ... H. Smart 3d.
439	Hope and faith ... Weber 2d.	462	*In April time ... C. Pinsuti 2d.	369	Lark, The ... J. L. Hatton 3d.
874	*Hope of my heart (5 V.) ... J. Ward 3d.	348	*In Autumn ... F. Hensel 1d.	501	*Lass of Richmond Hill, The ... arr. J. Hook 1d.
298	*How bright is the May ... Pearsall 3d.	296	*In Dulci Jubilo ... Pearsall 3d.	724	Last load, The ... H. H. Clarke 2d.
550	How can a bird help singing ... F. Abt 3d.	966	*In praise of Mary ... J. Brahms 3d.	809	Last prayer, The ... J. Rheinberger 3d.
812	*How dear to me the hour ... arr. A. A. Needham 3d.	1245	*In praise of Neptune ... German 3d.	310	Laugh not, youth, at age ... Pearsall 4d.
1253	*How eloquent ... John E. West 3d.	944	*In praise of Song ... C. H. H. Parry 4d.	839	*Laughing waves, The ... R. Somerville 3d.
352	How I love the festive boy ... A. C. Mackenzie 3d.	551	In Spring-time ... F. Abt 3d.	320	*Lay a garland (8 V.) ... Pearsall 3d.
257	How soft the shades of evening creep ... H. Smart 1d.	1021	In the garden ... C. Lee Williams 2d.	1231	*Lee shore, The ... S. Coleridge-Taylor 3d.
258	How sweet is summer morning ... H. Smart 2d.	1142	In the lazy Summer noon ... E. Franz 2d.	1166	*Leprehaun, The (Irish air) ... G. Bantock 4d.
		488	In the moonlight ... J. Raff 3d.	811	Let Erin remember ... L. Dix 2d.
		1168	In the North land... C. Forrester 3d.	922	*Let me the canakin clink ... J. B. MacEwen 4d.
		1165	*In the silent West (8 V.) ... G. Bantock 4d.	694	Let me wander ... L. Spohr 2d.
		388	In the woods ... S. Egerton 3d.	1061	Let the bells ring ... J. W. G. Hathaway 4d.
		502	*In this hour of softened splendour ... C. Pinsuti 1d.	815	Let the hills resound ... B. Richards 4d.
		557	Inconstants, The ... R. Schumann 1d.
		60	*Indian maid, The ... J. L. Hatton 1d.
		11	Interker Vitz (T.T.B.B.) ... F. Flemming 1d.
		754	Invitation to mirth ... F. Adlam 3d.
		38	Invocation to sleep ... J. Benedict 3d.
		1180	Irene (Madrigal) ... C. E. Miller 3d.

How far is it to Bethlehem

COMPOSED BY

GEOFFREY SHAW

78. Above all praise Mendelssohn 1d.
242. All darkness flies ... Bach 1d.
58. Almighty and everlasting Smith 1d.
145. Ditto A. M. Richardson 1d.
122. Almighty God, Who hast Ford 1d.
20. And I saw another Angel Stanford 2d.
24. Arise, O Jerusalem Oliver King 1d.
36. Arise, O Lord ... G. F. Cobb 1d.
126. Ditto ... Hervey 1d.
168. Arise, ye people ... W. Hayes 1d.
60. Ave Maria ... Arcadelt 1d.
244. Ave Verum ... F. Adlam 1d.
48. Ditto ... J. White 1d.
90. Awake up, my glory ... F. Iliffe 1d.
177. Be not Thou far from me Hird 1d.
193. Behold, God is my ... Stainer 1d.
165. Behold, O God C. Macpherson 1d.
117. Ditto G. C. Martin 2d.
195. Behold the Lord ... Thorne 1d.
30. Beloved, if God so loved Barnby 1d.
35. Beloved, let us love G. F. Cobb 1d.
10. Beloved, now are we E. H. Thorne 1d.
204. Beside Thy cradle ... J. S. Bach 1d.
160. Blessed are they S. S. Wesley 1d.
185. Blessed be the Lord Ouseley 1d.
125. Blessed be Thou, O Lord Lloyd 2d.
143. Blessed is He ... A. H. Brewer 1d.
9. Ditto ... B. Luard-Selby 1d.
199. Ditto ... Verrinder 1d.
26. Blessed is the man ... Oliver King 1d.
194. Ditto ... J. Stainer 1d.
207. Blessed Lord ... C. Lee Williams 1d.
228. Bow down Thine ear A. H. Brewer 1d.
98. Bread of the world John E. West 2d.
167. Break forth ... J. S. Bach 1d.
17. Christ is not entered E. Fanning 1d.
59. Come, let us worship Palestrina 1d.
102. Come unto Me ... H. Hiles 2d.
40. Ditto ... M. Kingston 1d.
173. Come, ye blessed ... Barnby 1d.
108. Deliver me, O Lord J. Stainer 1d.
127. Deliver us, O Lord ... Batten 1d.
164. Except the Lord F. H. Cowen 1d.
135. Father of all ... Tye 1d.
229. Father of Heaven ... Williams 1d.
240. For a small moment J. V. Roberts 1d.
45. For it became Him Oliver King 1d.
81. For our offences Mendelssohn 1d.
179. Forth from the dark ... Hook 1d.
91. Fret not thyself ... F. Iliffe 1d.
60. Give ear unto my prayer Arcadelt 1d.
114. Give rest, O Christ ... Arranged 1d.
38. God so loved the world Kingston 1d.
239. Ditto (in F) J. V. Roberts 2d.
1. God, Who is rich in mercy Garrett 1d.
227. Good King Wenceslas (arr.) Ross 2d.
223. Grant, O Lord ... J. Booth 1d.
11. Grant, we beseech Thee J. Booth 1d.
205. Ditto C. Lee Williams 1d.
141. Hark, hark my soul Oliver King 1d.
147. Haste Thee, O God J. Hopkins 1d.
47. Have mercy upon me J. White 1d.
210. He that soweth ... J. B. Calkin 1d.
130. Hide me under the shadow West 1d.
213. Hide not Thou Thy Face Farrant 1d.
123. Ho! ye that thirst ... C. Tye 1d.
107. Holy, Holy, Holy ... F. Cellier 1d.
124. How dreadful is this place Monk 1d.
113. How still and peaceful ... C. Tye 1d.
161. I am not worthy C. Lee Williams 3d.
170. I am Thine, O save me Wesley 1d.
82. I heard a Voice G. M. Garrett 1d.
86. Ditto ... A. Gray 1d.
234. Ditto ... C. Macpherson 1d.
157. Ditto ... C. V. Stanford 1d.
92. I look for the Lord ... F. Iliffe 1d.
54. I will arise ... Ch. Wood 1d.
42. I will go forth ... H. Blair 1d.
189. I will go to the altar ... Reay 1d.
131. I will go unto the altar H. Gadsby 2d.
230. I will lay me down in B. Smith 1d.
156. Ditto ... Williams 1d.
8. I will magnify Thee Luard-Selby 1d.
37. I will wash my hands A. D. Culley 1d.
85. If any man sin Thos. Adams 1d.
103. Ditto ... H. Hiles 1d.
21. If thou shalt confess C. V. Stanford 2d.
215. In life's gay morn ... C. Tye 1d.
18. In this was manifested C. H. Lloyd 3d.
233. Ditto ... F. E. Gladstone 2d.
155. Is it nothing to you ... Ouseley 1d.
241. Ditto ... J. V. Roberts 1d.
206. It is high time ... Williams 1d.
22. It is of the Lord's mercies Thorne 1d.
56. Jesu, Saviour, I am Thine Steane 1d.
46. Jesu, Who from Thy F. C. Wood 3d.
244. Jesu, Word of God ... F. Adlam 1d.
48. Ditto ... J. White 1d.
64. Jesus said unto the people Stainer 1d.
186. Judge me, O God ... Ouseley 1d.
208. Judge nothing before Williams 1d.
61. Lead me, Lord ... S. S. Wesley 1d.
116. Let my prayer be set forth Martin 1d.
166. Ditto C. Macpherson 1d.
118. Let my prayer come up Purcell 1d.
80. Let our hearts be Mendelssohn 1d.
139. Let the wicked forsake his Goss 1d.
32. Let the words of my mouth Blair 1d.
117. Let Thy hand be ... G. C. Martin 2d.
65. Let us come boldly C. H. Lloyd 1d.
237. Let us go forth ... J. V. Roberts 1d.
209. Let your moderation Williams 1d.
137. Lift up the everlasting gates Tye 1d.
224. Lighten our darkness J. Booth 1d.
219. Like as the hart ... Novello 1d.
235. Listen, O isles ... G. B. Allen 1d.
161. Lo! from the hills ... Williams 1d.
120. Lo, the day of rest Elliot Button 1d.
19. Lo, the Winter is past H. Gadsby 3d.
142. Lord God Almighty Verdonck 1d.
93. Lord, I call upon Thee F. Iliffe 1d.
140. Lord, in thankful love Schubert 1d.
79. Lord, on our offences Mendelssohn 1d.
128. Lord, we beseech Thee Batten 1d.
149. Lord, we pray Thee Chambers 1d.
154. Love not the world Ouseley 1d.
62. Master, what shall I do Bowes 1d.
100. Mercy and truth A. Sullivan 2d.
176. Mine eyes are ever Hamilton 1d.
212. Mock not God's Name C. Tye 1d.
94. My song shall be of mercy F. Iliffe 1d.
232. Now thank we all our God Bach 1d.
73. O Day-spring ... J. Stainer 1d.
148. O do well unto Thy servant West 1d.
75. O Emmanuel ... J. Stainer 1d.
146. O God, forasmuch as Richardson 1d.
136. O God of Bethel ... Tye 1d.
162. O God, our help C. Lee Williams 1d.
23. O God, Whose nature ... A. Gray 1d.
214. O happy is the man ... C. Tye 1d.
119. O hearken Thou ... A. Sullivan 1d.
72. O Key of David ... J. Stainer 1d.
74. O King and Desire ... J. Stainer 1d.
70. O Lord and Ruler ... J. Stainer 1d.
53. O Lord, correct me J. Coward 1d.
67. O Lord, give ear W. H. Cummings 2d.
133. O Lord, give Thy Holy Tallis 1d.
113. O Lord, grant the King Child 2d.
138. O Lord, increase my faith Gibbons 1d.
159. O Lord, my God C. Lee Williams 2d.
13. O Lord, my trust ... King Hall 1d.
15. O Lord, rebuke me not H. Lahee 1d.
132. O Lord, we beseech Thee Shaw 2d.
57. O Lord, Who hast Iggluden 1d.
188. O Lord, why sleepest Thou Reay 1d.
33. O most merciful ... J. W. Elliott 1d.
225. Ditto ... E. Bullock 1d.
80. O Perfect Love H. Elliot Button 1d.
112. Ditto ... C. L. Naylor 2d.
43. O praise God ... H. Blair 1d.
174. O praise the Lord, all ye Barnby 1d.
203. O praise the Lord F. Champneys 2d.
71. O Root of Jesse ... J. Stainer 1d.
104. O Saving Victim ... J. Stainer 2d.
218. Ditto ... A. W. Wilson 1d.
171. O send out Thy light ... Armes 1d.
84. Ditto ... J. B. Calkin 1d.
231. O thou Sword of the M. B. Foster 1d.
69. O Wisdom ... J. Stainer 1d.
95. O worship the Lord ... F. Iliffe 1d.
196. Ditto ... E. H. Thorne 1d.
178. O ye priests of the Lord Hird 1d.
39. O ye that love the Lord Elliott 1d.
44. Ditto S. Coleridge-Taylor 1d.
217. Our Father which art ... Phillips 1d.
7. Our soul on God G. M. Garrett 1d.
45. Ponder my words, O Lord Culley 1d.
3. Praised be the Lord daily Calkin 1d.
105. Prevent us, O Lord A. H. Brewer 1d.
242. Rejoice and sing ... Bach 1d.
14. Rejoice greatly ... Woodward 1d.
175. Rejoice in the Lord ... Calkin 1d.
187. Ditto ... Reay 1d.
76. Rejoice, O ye people Mendelssohn 1d.
144. Rejoice ye with Jerusalem King 1d.
200. Remember, Lord ... Verrinder 1d.
153. Rend your heart ... Ouseley 1d.
236. Rest in the Lord ... Williams 1d.
226. Save us, O Lord ... Hugh Blair 1d.
129. Seek the Lord H. Elliot Button 1d.
201. Seek ye the Lord ... Verrinder 1d.
49. Shew me Thy ways J. V. Roberts 3d.
115. Sing to the Lord ... Tye 1d.
220. Spirit of mercy H. A. Chambers 1d.
5. Teach me Thy way Gladstone 1d.
55. The Angel of the Lord ... A. Gray 1d.
243. The eyes of all ... J. Barnby 1d.
190. The Gentiles shall come Reay 1d.
4. The great day of the Lord Martin 1d.
216. The Harvest truly ... Pearson 2d.
111. The Heavenly Word Williams 3d.
150. The joy of our heart ... Foster 1d.
202. The Light hath shined Verrinder 1d.
181. The Lord hath been Macfarren 1d.
198. The Lord hath brought us Thorne 1d.
27. The Lord is in His Holy Elliott 1d.
197. Ditto ... E. H. Thorne 1d.
96. The Lord is King ... F. Iliffe 1d.
88. The Lord is nigh ... Cummings 1d.
31. The Lord is the True God Barnby 3d.
50. The Lord opened the Woods 1d.
83. The Lord redeemeth J. B. Calkin 1d.
191. The Love of God ... Reay 1d.
184. The pains of hell ... Monk 1d.
52. The peace of the just J. V. Roberts 1d.
101. The Peace of God J. Rheinberger 1d.
12. The pillars of the earth Tours 1d.
134. The righteous souls ... Skeats 1d.
41. The Sacrifices of God ... H. Blair 1d.
152. The Salvation of the ... Ouseley 1d.
34. Ditto ... Vincent 1d.
169. The Souls of the righteous Hall 1d.
87. The steps of a good Cambridge 3d.
222. There is a green hill ... Gounod 1d.
66. These are they which ... J. Goss 1d.
180. These have left a name Hook 1d.
192. This is the day ... Reay 1d.
211. Thou didst turn Thy face Attwood 1d.
77. Thou, Lord, our Mendelssohn 1d.
28. Thou shalt shew me the A. Gray 1d.
29. To Thee do I lift up my soul Hall 1d.
16. Try me, O God ... C. Wood 1d.
99. Turn Thee again ... A. Sullivan 1d.
158. Turn Thy face C. Lee Williams 2d.
51. Watch ye and pray G. R. Vicars 2d.
172. We wait for Thy loving Armes 1d.
182. Ditto ... Macfarren 1d.
2. When my soul fainted J. F. Bridge 1d.
63. Wherewithal shall a ... Alcock 1d.
183. While all things were Macfarren 1d.
106. While we have time H. W. Parker 3d.
6. Who are we, O Lord C. H. Lloyd 1d.
68. Whom have I in heaven Elvey 2d.
151. Ditto ... Ouseley 2d.
110. Whom the Lord C. Macpherson 3d.
239. Whosoever shall do J. V. Roberts 1d.
121. Why art thou so heavy Gibbons 2d.
109. Why art thou so C. Macpherson 2d.
221. With all Thy Hosts A. W. Wilson 1d.
97. Worship and praise ... F. Iliffe 1d.

(To be continued.)

NOVELLO'S PARISH CHOIR BOOK.

Hymns and Hymn Tunes.

604. ALCOCK, W. G. O Thou, Who turnest destinies to dust (Coronation) (Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
- 568 ARMISTEAD, J. To Thee our God we fly (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
757. ATKINS, IVOR. Jesu! the very thought is sweet .. 1d.
826. ATKINS. Eternal God, who quickening light (Processional) .. 1d.
862. BARNBY, J. Come, ye thankful people, come (Harvest Processional) .. 1d.
218. *BARNBY, J. Crossing the bar .. 1d.
537. BARNBY, J. For others' sake we will forego (Temperance)
(Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
365. BARNBY, J. Let all our brethren join in one (Processional, Harvest) (Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
469. BARNBY, J. O Lord of Heaven, and earth, and sea .. 1d.
513. BARNBY, J. Praise the Lord, to-day we raise (Hymn for thanksgiving after Victory) (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
300. *BARNBY, J. The Sower went forth sowing (Harvest) .. 1d.
520. BATTENBERG, H. R. H. PRINCESS HENRY. Hear, Holy Father (Baptismal) .. 1d.
586. BATTENBERG, H. R. H. PRINCESS HENRY. Lord of Grace and Holiness (Confirmation) .. 1d.
598. BENNETT, G. J. Hark, hark, the Organ (Processional) .. 1d.
448. BENNETT, J. L. Lift high the Cross (Processional) (Words only, 2s. per 100) .. 3d.
298. BEST, W. T. Abide with me! fast falls the eventide .. 1d.
299. BEST, W. T. Dies iræ, dies illa! (Day of wrath!) .. 1d.
211. BEST, W. T. Jesus Christ is risen to-day .. 3d.
921. BLAIR, HUGH. Two Hymn Tunes .. 1d.
1. Atholcane. 2. Hovingham.
887. BLUNT, F. W. (Two hymn tunes). Lyndhurst, and Art thou weary .. 1d.
- 1070 BLUNT, F. W. Now the day is over .. 1d.
386. BONAVIA-HUNT, H. G. Dies iræ (Day of mourning) .. 3d.
538. *BOURGEOIS, LOUIS. All people that on earth (Old 100th).
(Two Versions) .. 1d.
938. BOYCE, E. An English Hymn. God of our Fathers and Lord of the Deep. (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
440. BREWER, A. H. Hymn Tune, "Cathedral" (Processional) .. 1d.
370. BREWER, A. H. Hymn Tune, "Eather" (Processional) .. 1d.
768. BREWER, A. H. Hymn Tune, "St. Ethelbert" (Processional) .. 1d.
840. BRIDGE, J. F. (Adapted by). The King, O Lord, in Thee this day rejoices (Coronation) (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
202. BROWN, A. H. All glory, laud, and honour (Processional, Palm Sunday) .. 1d.
280. BROWN, A. H. Ride on! Ride on in Majesty (Passion Sunday) .. 1d.
530. BROWN, A. H. The King's Messengers (Missionary)
(Words only, 3s. per 100) .. 1d.
979. BULLIVANT, GERALD. The spacious firmament on high (Septuagesima) .. 1d.
811. BUTTON, H. ELLIOT. God is in Heaven! can He hear .. 1d.
815. BUTTON, H. ELLIOT. Let all the world in every corner sing .. 1d.
792. BUTTON, H. ELLIOT. O what can little hands do (Child Service) .. 1d.
791. BUTTON, H. ELLIOT. Who is on the Lord's side
(Processional) .. 1d.
252. CLAY, F. I love to hear the story (for Children) .. 1d.
838. COSS, G. F. Praise, O Sion, praise thy pastor (Lauda Sion) (Corpus Christi) .. 1d.
867. CRAMENT, J. M. Three Hymns .. 1d.
1. Hark, hark! my soul. 2. Lead, kindly Light.
3. Brightly gleams our banner.
904. CRAWFORD, H. Onward, Christian Soldiers (Processional) .. 1d.
903. CRAWFORD, H. We give Thee but Thine own .. 1d.
968. KIMP, H. E. Rejoice, ye pure in heart (Processional) .. 1d.
935. *CROFT, W. O God, our help in ages past .. 1d.
799. CRUICKSHANK, W. A. C. Lord of Life .. 1d.
800. CRUICKSHANK, W. A. C. O God, on whom no mortal eye
(Processional) .. 1d.
919. CUTLER, E. I could not do without Thee .. 1d.
761. DAVIES, H. W. To Thee, our God, we fly (A Prayer for our Fatherland. Processional) (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
910. DAWRE, R. O come, O come, Emmanuel (Advent) .. 2d.
959. DYKES, J. B. From East and West. (Thanksgiving for Peace) (Words only, 3s. per 100) .. 1d.
837. *DYKES, J. B. God of our fathers, known of old (Recessional) .. 1d.
623. DYKES, J. B. Lead, kindly Light .. 1d.
825. *DYKES, J. B. O Father King of earth and sea (Words only,
2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
595. ELOAR, E. O Mightiest of the mighty (Coronation) .. 1d.
704. *ELOAR, E. How calmly the evening .. 1d.
719. ELLIOTT, J. W. O day of rest and gladness (Processional) .. 1d.
231. EVAN-SMITH, LADY. Two Flower Service Hymns .. 2d.
1. He dwells among the Lilies.
2. For the freshness of the morning.
803. EYRE, A. J. To the Father and Redeemer (for Festival of Dedication. Processional or General use) .. 1d.
523. FOSTER, M. B. Flag of our Country (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
498. GARRETT, G. M. My God, and is Thy table spread (Communion) .. 1d.
72. GAUL, A. R. { Lead, kindly light } .. 2d.
549. GAUNTLETT, H. J. Unto the Paschal Victim (Easter) .. 1d.
933. *GERMAN, E. Father Omnipotent, in E flat (Intercessory Hymn in time of War) (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 2d.
- 933a. * Ditto (Revised version), in D flat .. 2d.
749. GIBBONS, O. On! all you creatures of the Lord .. 1d.
865. GIBSON, JESSE (Words by). O God, we come before Thee
(Flower Service) (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
843. GILBERT, W. B. Come, ye thankful people, come (Harvest) .. 1d.
843. GILBERT, W. B. On our way rejoicing (Recessional) .. 1d.
717. *GILBERT, W. B. Pleasant are Thy courts above (Processional) .. 1d.
740. GOODHART, A. M. God of our Fathers, unto Thee (National thankgivings and other occasions) (Words only, 1s. 6d.
per 100) .. 1d.
193. GOODHART, A. M. Lord of all being! throned afar
(Sunday hymn) .. 1d.
600. GOODHART, A. M. What can I give Jesus (Flower Service, Processional) (Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
895. GOSS, JOHN. Praise, my soul, the King of Heaven .. 1d.
379. GOUNOD, CH. Hymn Tune, "Gounod" (Processional) .. 1d.
875. HERVEY, F. A. J. The roseate hues of early dawn .. 1d.
507. HILES, H. The shadows of the evening hours (Evening) .. 1d.
918. HINE-HAYCOCK, S. R. When on my day of life .. 1d.
945. HOYTE, W. S. Day of wrath, O day of mourning. (Dies iræ, dies illa) .. 1d.
947. HOYTE, W. S. Sing, my toogus, the glorious battle
(Pange Lingua) .. 1d.
539. IRONS, H. S. Great God, Who madest all for man (Tem- perance) (Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
470. JORDAN, W. The King of saints (Processional) .. 1d.
607. JORDAN, W. The Sword of the Lord (Processional)
(Words only, 2s. per 100) .. 1d.
611. LANGRAN, J. O God of glory, King of kings most high (National Thanksgiving) (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
928. LITTLETON, A. H. Jesus lives! No longer now .. 1d.
951. LLOYD, C. H. A Thirteenth Century Prayer .. 1d.
467. LLOYD C. H. Lie still, beloved, lie still (Funeral) (Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
503. LLOYD, C. H. Lord, we uplift our voice (Evening) .. 1d.
568. LLOYD, C. H. Renunciation (Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
692. LLOYD, C. H. Uprouse ye, Christian people (St. George's Day) (Words only, 2s. per 100) .. 1d.
562. LUTHER. How blest the land (Coronation Service) .. 1d.
927. *LWOFF, A. God the All-terrible (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
962. MACPHERSON, C. (arr. by). The Old Hundredth (All people that) (with two Faux-Bourdoons) .. 1d.
323. MANN, A. H. Twelve Popular Hymns with Tunes, Part 1 .. 1d.
324. MANN, A. H. Twelve Popular Hymns with Tunes, Part 2 .. 1d.
803. MARTIN, G. C. As the world turneth from evening to morning (Processional. For St. Cecilia's Day or for Choral Festivals) .. 1d.
776. MARTIN, G. C. Glorious things of thee are spoken
(Processional) .. 1d.
772. MARTIN, G. C. God of our fathers, known of old (Recessional) .. 1d.
922. MARTIN, G. C. God the All-terrible (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
795. MARTIN, G. C. Go forth to win the world (Processional) .. 1d.
339. MARTIN, G. C. How shall we teach our children .. 1d.
689. MARTIN, G. C. In the Faith of Christ (Processional) .. 1d.
816. MARTIN, G. C. Jesus, I my cross have taken .. 1d.
690. MARTIN, G. C. Jesu our Lord and God (Processional) .. 1d.
742. MARTIN, G. C. Lord of our Fathers, Thou didst blend
(Empire Day) (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
794. MARTIN, G. C. Lord of our Fathers, Thou didst blend (Britain) .. 1d.
712. MARTIN, G. C. O for a closer walk with God .. 1d.
360. MARTIN, G. C. O God, our Father (Parish Hymn) (Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
775. MARTIN, G. C. O Saviour dear, true friend of man (A hymn for men) .. 1d.
526. MARTIN, G. C. Thanks be to God (Thanksgiving for peace)
(Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
691. *MARTIN, G. C. There is an ancient river (Processional) .. 1d.
738. MARTIN, G. C. Through the day Thy love has spared us .. 1d.
657. *MAUNDER, J. H. By day and night (A Harvest Hymn of Praise) (Processional). (Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 2d.
540. *MAUNDER, J. H. Come forth, ye rich and poor (The joy of harvest) (Thanksgiving Processional) (Words only, 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
924. MAUNDER, J. H. God bless our native land (Words only
1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
849. MAUNDER, J. H. God of our Fatherland (Coronation and National occasions) (Words only, 1s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
939. *MAUNDER, J. H. Raise the Song, ye loyal voices .. 1d.

* Orchestral Parts may be had. Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

How far is it to Bethlehem

ANTHEM FOR CHRISTMAS

Words by FRANCES CHESTERTON

Music by GEOFFREY SHAW

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Moderato

SOPRANO

ALTO

TENOR

BASS

(For practice only)

Moderato. ♩ = 84

pp mp

How far is it to Beth-le-hem?

Ah, . . . ah, . . . ah, . . .

Ah,

Not ve-ry far? Shall we find the sta-ble room, Lit by a star? Can we see the lit-tle Child,

pp mp

Ah, . . . Ah, . . .

pp mp

Ah, . . . Ah, . . .

pp mp

Ah, . . . Ah, . . .

HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM

Is He with - in? If we lift the wood - en latch, May we go in?

Is He with - in? . . . May we go in?

Is He with - in? May we go in? . . .

Is He with - in? May we go in?

pp mp p

May we stroke the crea-tures there, Ox, ass, and sheep? May we peep like them, and see

May we stroke there, Ox, ass, and sheep? May we see there

May we stroke there, Ox, ass, and sheep? May we see there

Ox, ass, and sheep?

mf mp

HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM

Je - sus a - sleep? If we touch His ti - ny hand, Will He a - wake?

Je - sus a - sleep? If we touch His ti - ny hand, Will He a - wake?

Je - sus a - sleep? If we touch His hand, Will He a - wake?

Je - sus a - sleep? If we touch His hand, Will He a - wake?

Will He know we'd come so far, Just for His sake?

Will He know we'd come so far, Just for His sake?

Will He know we'd come, Just for His sake?..

Will He know we'd come, Just for His sake? Great kings leave pre-cious gifts,.

HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM

mf mp mf

And we have nought. Lit-tle smiles and lit-tle tears are all we brought. . . For

mf p mf

And we have nought. (humming) 'm For

mf p mf

And we have nought. (humming) 'm For

mf p mf

For

mp

all wea-ry chil-dren Ma-ry must weep; Here, on His bed of straw.

mp

all wea-ry chil-dren Ma-ry must weep; . . Here, on His bed of straw,

mp

all wea-ry chil-dren Ma-ry must weep; Here, on His bed, . . .

mp

all wea-ry chil-dren Ma-ry must weep; Here, on His bed, . . .

mp

HOW FAR IS IT TO BETHLEHEM

poco rall. p pp A little slower mp

Sleep, chil-dren, sleep. God in His mother's arms, Babes in the byre,

poco rall. p pp

Sleep, chil-dren, chil - dren, sleep.

poco rall. p pp

Sleep, chil - dren, sleep.

poco rall. p pp

Sleep, chil-dren, sleep.

poco rall. p pp

Sleep.

A little slower mp

poco rall. p a tempo pp

Sleep as they sleep who find their heart's de - sire.

poco rall. p a tempo pp

'm (humming) poco rall. a tempo pp

'm . . . 'm . . . 'm . . . 'm .

poco rall. p a tempo pp

'm (humming) a tempo pp

'm . . . 'm . . . 'm . . . 'm .

p poco rall. pp a tempo

NOVELLO'S PARISH CHOIR BOOK.

Hymns and Hymn Tunes—continued.

654. MAUNDER, J. H. Three Hymns (from "Olivet to Calvary") 1½d.	640. STAINER, J. Behold the Lamb of God 1d.
1. Just as I am.	569. STAINER, J. Blessed and Holy Three (Offertory Hymn) 1d.
2. Thy will be done.	(Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.
3. Rock of Ages cleft for me.	902. STAINER, J. Boys and Girls of England 1d.
550. MENDELSSOHN. All blessing, honour, glory, might (Easter and Festival use) (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.	512. STAINER, J. God the All-terrible (Words only , 1s. 6d. per 100) 1d.
934. MENDELSSOHN. Brightest and Best 1½d.	494. *STAINER, J. Story of the Advent of Jesus (Words only , 3s. per 100) 2d.
797. MONK, E. G. Come, Holy Ghost, our souls inspire (Festival or General use) 2d.	559. STAINER, J. This is the day which the Lord hath made (Easter. Processional) (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.
848. MONK, E. G. Nisi Dominus Frustra (O God our Heavenly Father) (Processional) 1d.	368. STOCKS, W. H. Paraphrase of the "Anima Christi" (Soul of Jesus, make me holy) 1½d.
660. MORLEY, F. W. O Thou who with the Altar's living coal (Vestry Hymn before Service) 1d.	358. §SULLIVAN, ARTHUR. "Bishopgarth" (Tune only) (Processional) 1d.
777. NAYLOR, E. W. God of our fathers, known of old (Recessional) 1d.	720. SULLIVAN, ARTHUR. Courage, brother, do not stumble 1d.
514. §NOW THANK WE ALL OUR GOD (Nun danket) (Thanksgiving) 1d.	926. SULLIVAN, ARTHUR. Lord of Hosts our King shall be, The 1d.
538. *OLD 100TH. THE (All people that on earth do dwell). (Two Versions) 1d.	596. *SULLIVAN, ARTHUR. Lord of might, our Land's defender (Coronation) (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.
962. Ditto (arr. by C. MACPHERSON) 1½d.	935. §SULLIVAN, ARTHUR (arranged). O God, our help in ages past (St. Anne) 1½d.
917. OUSLEY, F. A. G. Jerusalem on high 1d.	601. *SULLIVAN, ARTHUR. O God, the Ruler of our race (Coronation) (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.
624. PARRATT, W. God of Glory, King of Nations (Processional for a Founder's Day Festival) 1d.	354. §SULLIVAN, ARTHUR. Onward, Christian soldiers (Processional) 1d.
539. PARRATT, W. Lord of Hosts, Who hast endured us (Peace) (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.	357. §SULLIVAN, ARTHUR. Ditto. (Welsh words) (Processional) 1d.
637. PARRY, C. H. H. Crossing the Bar 1d.	553. *SULLIVAN, ARTHUR. The roseate hues of early dawn 1d.
658. PARRY, C. H. H. Through the night of doubt and sorrow (Processional) 1d.	606. SULLIVAN, ARTHUR. To mourn our dead we gather here (Funeral) (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.
949. PARRY, C. H. H. Hush! for amid our tears (Memorial) (Words only , 1s. 6d. per 100) 1d.	533. *SULLIVAN, ARTHUR. We are but strangers here (Funeral) (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.
958. PARRY, C. H. H. O praise ye the Lord 1½d.	671. SYDENHAM, E. A. Rejoice, ye pure in heart (Processional) 1d.
608. PERRIN, H. C. The New Year's Dawn is brightening 1d.	511. TILLEARD, J. Church Bells 1½d.
226. PETTMAN, EDGAR. Four Evening Hymn Tunes 1½d.	531. TILLEARD, J. Lo! He comes with clouds descending (Advent) 1½d.
1. Saviour, breathe an evening blessing.	668. TILLEARD, J. Star of Morn and Even 1½d.
2. Through the day Thy love has spared us.	257. TILLEARD, J. Through the day Thy love has spared us 1½d.
3. God that madest earth and Heaven.	970. TYSON, A. C. Love divine, all loves excelling 1½d.
4. Sun of my soul.	610. WESLEY, S. S. Lift your heads, ye gates of God (Processional) (Words only , 1s. 6d. per 100) 1d.
227. PETTMAN, EDGAR. The strain upraise of joy and praise .. 1½d.	793. WESLEY, S. S. The Church's one foundation (Processional) 1d.
366. PURDAY, C. H. Lead, kindly Light 1d.	782. WEST, JOHN E. Hark, hark! the organ (Festival. Suitable for Thanksgiving Services or the dedication of an organ) .. 3d.
522. ROBERTS, J. V. We love God's acre round the Church (for those who die far from home and country) (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.	508. WEST, JOHN E. Jesu, kind and tender Master (Children's Missionary Hymn) (Words only , 3s. per 100) 1d.
543. SELBY, B. L. God rest our Queen (Funeral) (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.	824. WEST, JOHN E. Saviour, blessed Saviour (Processional) 1d.
1022. SHERLES, J. The Spacious Firmament on high 1d.	783. WEST, JOHN E. Songs of praise the angels sang (Festival or ordinary use. Processional) 1d.
1072. SMART, H. The day is gently sinking 1d.	599. §WEST, JOHN E. With gladsome feet we press (Processional) .. 1d.
519. SMITH, S. Forward be our watchword (Processional) 1d.
521. SMITH, S. Summer suns are glowing 1d.
560. SMITH, S. Veni, Creator Spiritus (Come, Holy Ghost) (for Whitsuntide, Ordinations, Ember Days, Missions, and Confirmations) 1d.
688. STAINER, J. At home with Christ (Funeral) 1d.
536. STAINER, J. At the manger. A Litany of the Incarnation (Words only , ½d.; or 1s. 6d. per 100) 1d.

Wedding Hymns.

361. BARNEY, J. O Perfect Love 1½d.	256. KING, A. How welcome was the call 2d.
491. BENNETT, G. J. O Perfect Love 1½d.	907. MARTIN G. C. O Sacred Guest 1d.
633. COENER, W. O God of Wisdom 2d.	256. POWELL, J. B. The voice that breathed o'er Eden 2d.
612. DYKES, J. B. The voice that breathed o'er Eden 1d.	564. STAINER, J. Now is the earth with God's Glory rejoicing (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) 1d.
941. HOYTE, W. S. The Voice that breathed o'er Eden 1d.	563. STAINER, J. O God of grace. (Words only , 2s. 6d. per 100) .. 1d.
When Christ shall take the Church His Bride ½d.	256. TILLEARD, J. Lead us, Heavenly Father, lead us 2d.
How welcome was the call 1d.	192. TURLE, JAMES. Father of life 1½d.

§ Orchestral Parts may be had. Those marked * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 958.—Vol. 63
Registered at the General Post Office for Canadian Postage

DECEMBER 1 1922

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

FIFTY-SECOND SEASON, 1922-23.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1922, AT 2.30 P.M.

CAROLS

MISS FLORA WOODMAN.
MISS DOROTHY CLARK.
MR. BEN DAVIES.
MR. PETER DAWSON.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 6, 1923, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS AGNES NICHOLLS.
MISS MARGARET BALFOUR.
MR. TUDOR DAVIES.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

At the Organ - Mr. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

Conductor MR. H. L. BALFOUR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery (Promenade), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O., Mus.Doc., F.R.C.M.

LENT TERM will begin on Monday, January 15.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATION on or about January 11.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERT, Saturday, December 2, at 3

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Tuesday, December 12, at 3.

The Sainton Scholarship in Violin Playing, and the Liszt Scholarship in Musical Composition or Pianoforte Playing, will be competed for in January. Last day for entry, December 18.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... SIR LONDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.G.S.M.

AUTUMN HALF-TERM BEGAN October 30th.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical subjects and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Stage Dancing, Opera.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers, approved by Teachers' Registration Council.

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Local Schools Examinations (open to general public), free.

Telephone: Cent. 4159.

H. SAXE WYNNDHAM, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

Classes for Score Reading, Conducting, Training of Teachers, and Musical Criticism are held at the College.

The OPERATIC CLASS has the use of the newly-equipped College Opera Theatre with spoken Orchestra.

There is a JUNIOR DEPARTMENT for pupils under sixteen.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held twice a year in April and September.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir S. Ernest Palmer, Bart., F.R.C.M., for the encouragement of All British Composers and Executive Artists).

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Choral Prelude, "I give to thee farewell." J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 19, p. 7; Augener, p. 846; Peters. Vol. 7, No. 51.)

Toccata and Fugue, "The Wanderer" (Fugue only). Parry. (Novello.)

"Sposalizio." Liszt. Arranged by E. H. Lemare. (Schott.) This arrangement only.

The 10 selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the January, 1923, A.R.C.O. Examination, are the same as those set for July, 1922.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W. 7.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April at all Centres, and in the London district and certain Provincial Centres in November-December also. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, February 7th, 1923.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the March-April Examinations close Wednesday, January 31st, 1923.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed Centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

Examination Music and Scales for Pianoforte and for Violin, and Past Written Papers are published officially by the Board, and can be obtained from the Central Office, or through any Music Seller.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Patroness: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.
President: SIR THOMAS BEECHAM, Bart.
Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Special Houses of Residence recommended for Students.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

Opera Class—Miss MARIE BRENA.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

STANLEY WITHERS, Registrar.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.)

SESSION 1921-1922.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—
H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

96, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1. TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL for instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of twenty-seven senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS

(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council).

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars write, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.
Thirty-first Year.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras. Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.

An Orchestral Concert will be given in the Houldsworth Hall on Tuesday, December 19.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

The work of the
OSTROVSKY INSTITUTE OF HAND DEVELOPMENT is concentrated solely and exclusively on the perfection of the hands of PIANISTS, VIOLINISTS, 'CELLISTS, &c.

THE OSTROVSKY INSTITUTE OF HAND DEVELOPMENT, with the aid of special apparatus and appliances, the result of life-long study, has successfully developed the hands of players, even those who had long despaired of their technique, until they attained an extremely high standard of artistic playing which would not have been possible by any other means.

A successful débutante at the Æolian Hall says—

"The training not only works wonders but works them quickly."

Another, at Wigmore Hall:—

"Mr. Ostrovsky's System goes to the very core of the matter."

VIOLINISTS, PIANISTS, 'CELLISTS, &c., are invited to demonstrations. For courses, consultations, hire of apparatus, literature, &c., write Secretary, 71, Linden Gardens, W.2. 'Phone: Park, 1251.

And at the Guildhall School of Music.

JOHN B. WOOD, MUS. BAC.
C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY, COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,
6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W. 2.

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

How to play difficult music with ease. . . .

Pianists who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System, the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 15,000 successful students add their testimony.

From Brain to Keyboard Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

MEMORY—MISS LILIAS MACKINNON
undertakes to develop Perfect Memory for Pianists in six Correspondence Lessons. Complete Course for £3 3s. Address, 21, Upper Cheyne Row, S.W. 3.

THOMAS CRAWFORD'S FAREWELL RECITALS,
Friday, December 1st, 1.10 p.m., St. Stephen's Walbrook.
Sunday, December 10th, 3 p.m., St. Michael's, Chester Square.

MORECAMBE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

MAY 3, 4, and 5, 1923.

SYLLABUS OF COMPETITIONS

is now ready, and may be obtained (price 6d., post free), from W. C. FAWCETT, Secretary, Musical Festival Office, Morecambe.

HASTINGS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

MARCH 15th, 16th, 17th and 19th, 20th, and 21st, 1923.

Syllabus now ready, and to be had at Music Shops, price 2d., or post free, 2½d., from

LADY ISHAM, } Hon. Secs.
JOHN LOCKEY, }

FESTIVAL OFFICES, Station Approach, Devonshire Road, Hastings.

SOUTHPORT CHORAL AND MUSICAL FESTIVAL WINTER GARDENS

MANAGER - - - IVAN YEATMAN.

Friday and Saturday, April 27th and 28th, 1923.

OVER £450 IN PRIZES.

SOLO, QUARTET, INSTRUMENTAL, CHORAL, SCHOOL
CHOIR, AND CHILDREN'S COMPETITIONS.

Festival Musical Director - Mr. HUGH W. WOOD.

ADJUDICATORS:—Dr. E. C. BAIKSTOW, F.R.C.O., Mr. John Brook.
Mr. Harold M. Dawber, F.R.C.O., Mr. H. Hill Whitfield, L.R.A.M.,
Mr. Hugh W. Wood.

NOTE.—Entries Close, April 7th, 1923.

OFFICIAL SYLLABUS.—Price 4d., Post free, 5d.

All inquiries to be made to the Secretary,

FRED M. JONES, Winter Gardens, Southport.

BUXTON AND NORTH DERBYSHIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

MAY 10, 11, and 12, 1923.

ADJUDICATORS:

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.
JOHN BRIDGE.
HENRY COWARD, Mus.D.

DENNE PARKER.
DANIEL PRICE, A.R.C.M.
ANDERSON TYRER.

Syllabus now ready (post free, Sixpence).

C. STEVENSON, Hon. Sec.,

Festival Office, 59a, Spring Gardens, Buxton.

THE NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD OF WALES (1924). PONTYPOOL.

TO MUSIC COMPOSERS AND PUBLISHERS.

The Music Committee of the above National Eisteddfod invites Music Composers and Publishers to submit to its consideration Musical Compositions (Printed or in MS.), suitable as Test-Pieces at the forthcoming National Eisteddfod of 1924.

A special appeal is made for Compositions by Welsh Composers, and for Works having Welsh as well as English words.

Copies should be sent as soon as possible to

R. STEPHEN, 1, Victoria Road, Pontypool,
General Secretary National Eisteddfod.

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO (Bach) will be given with full Orchestra and Organ at St. Anne's, Soho, on Saturday Afternoons, December 9, 16, and January 6, at 3.30 p.m. Tickets may be had by sending stamped addressed envelope to Rector, 28, Soho Square, W.1.

BISHOPSGATE INSTITUTE

(Two minutes from Liverpool Street Station)

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

will give a

CONCERT

WITH ORCHESTRA

ON THURSDAY, DECEMBER 21ST, 1922, AT 8 P.M.

The Programme will include compositions by

BACH, ELGAR, VAUGHAN-WILLIAMS,
PURCELL, Etc.

SOPRANO - - - GLADYS MARLOE
BASS - - - JOHN BUCKLEY
PRINCIPAL VIOLIN - - W. H. REED, A.R.A.M.

Pianoforte - MAUD L. ALLWRIGHT

Conductor - HAROLD BROOKE

Tickets (including Tax): Reserved 5s 9d., 3s 6d., and 2s.

To be obtained from Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.: The Reference Library, Bishopsgate Institute, and of
H. A. GRIFFITH (Secretary, Novello Choir),
Novello Works, Hollen Street, W.1.

CHARLES TREE

GROWING SUCCESS OF THE MOVEMENT AMONG TEACHERS AND STUDENTS.

Mr. C. Lindop, A.R.C.M., Belfast, November 6, 1922: "How I appreciate what you have done for me. My voice was completely gone, but it is improving every day. I give on an average sixty lessons per week, beside my Church choir practice and my Male-Voice Prize Choir, yet never feel vocal fatigue. Your instruction is absolutely priceless. Please send another eighteen copies of the 'Bel Canto' Exercises."

Lessons by Correspondence.—I am still having to tell inquirers that such are impossible. The pupil must be heard to be instructed. I last week heard one of these "correspondence pupils" in Guernsey.
Poor fellow, he was in a hopeless mess. The best I can do, personally, is to give an occasional "overhauling" to those who have fully digested the two books. This is proving itself of great help.

How to ACQUIRE EASE or VOICE-PRODUCTION, 5/2.

EXERCISES ON THE "BEL CANTO" (New, 1922), 3/7.

(If difficult to obtain, write author.)

Instruments of Torture.—I have just received particulars of a U.S.A. school of singing. It offers in its course of correspondence lessons "several weird instruments, including tongue depressors, whistle, &c.—free of charge, mark you! But unfortunately this go-ahead business firm has omitted an instrument for abstracting, cleaning, and replacing the vocal parts. Here is a chance for some of our home "correspondence teachers." Is it any wonder that the majority of our fine young voices are ruined? This ruination can and is being avoided by True speech into song.

THIS SEASON:

Mephistopheles "Faust" Cardiff Musical Society.
Mephistopheles "Faust" Hull Choral Society.
Mephistopheles "Faust" Brighton Choral Society.
Mephistopheles "Faust" Scarborough Musical Society.
Mephistopheles "Faust" Walsall Choral Society.
Mephistopheles "Faust" Leighton Buzzard Choral Society.
Lucifer "Golden Legend," "Hiawatha," &c., London, &c.

Faust, Brighton, November 2, 1922.—"There was a great welcome of course, for Mr. Tree's powerful Mephisto. There was no question as to the deliberateness and the effectiveness of his grim satanic humour."—Herald.

Paisley Choral Union. Lecture, October 10, 1922: "A large audience—complimentary alike to the capabilities of the lecturer and the good judgment of the promoters in selecting this phase of musical culture as the opening of the season. He held his big audience in rapt attention, introducing instruction and humour."

The Secretary writes: "A great success, and a decided financial success too. There never was a dull moment."

The President writes: "Congratulations on a great success. It was all thoroughly sound and delightfully convincing."

Cirencester, October 26, 1922. H. W. Chester, Esq., F.R.C.O.
"By unanimous agreement your Lecture-Recital is looked upon as one of the finest things ever given in the town."

Cirencester Herald.—"The Lecture-Recital was a happy combination of shrewd wisdom and sparkling humour."

Jersey Post, November 7, 1922.—"After hearing his brilliant lecture last evening, the members had only one opinion—that Mr. Tree was one of the most entertaining lecturers that had ever appeared before them. He kept his audience spell-bound with his clever speech and delightful singing, and in the grave and gay moods he runs the whole gamut of the emotions. A packed hall."

Mr. Tree is pleased to help any who are in vocal difficulty. Visiting students can obtain residence same hotel. Occasional lessons, if possible, wherever he happens to be engaged.

Address: 14, COURTFIELD GARDENS, KENSINGTON, S.W.5.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A., A.C.P.

MATRIC.	- -	SUCCESES	- -	85	21 Students of the M.C.C. have passed Matric. this year. 20 of these passed at 1st attempt under M.C.C. tuition.
1ST M.B.	- -	Sept., 1922,	6 Students passed.		Two of these were students of the M.C.C., and both passed at the 1st attempt.
A.R.C.O.	- -	SUCCESES	- -	7	All at 1st attempt under M.C.C. tuition.
AND F.R.C.O.	- -
L.R.A.M.	- - -	SUCCESES	- -	7	All at 1st attempt.
(Pianoforte and Singing)
A.Mus. T.C.L	-	A Student gained 94 per cent. for Counterpoint.

£20 —→

For a fee of £20 we guarantee to give you tuition until you gain the Mus.Bac. Before the M.C.C. Guarantee Course was originated, students have paid £80 to £100 for Personal Tuition.

We give you a signed guarantee, and fees can be paid by instalments.

DO YOU WISH TO ESTABLISH A LUCRATIVE TEACHING CONNECTION?

If so, work for the L.R.A.M. or A.R.C.M. Take up Two Subjects: Pianoforte and Singing; or Singing and Elocution; or Musical Appreciation and Elocution.

WE GUARANTEE TO PASS YOU IN ANY GROUP.

ELOCUTION	-	Our Tutor for this subject is a leading London Professor, and the Course is so arranged that an average Student can cover it in three to four months.
SINGING	- -	For a nominal fee, our Students receive a Personal Lesson in London , immediately before the Examination. Our Tutor has secured hundreds of successes.
PIANOFORTE	-	Carefully graded Lessons in every branch. Form—Rudiments—Harmony—Touch—Phrasing—Pedalling—Annotation of Test-Pieces. Our Students can receive a Personal Lesson in London.
A.R.C.M	- - -	Teaching of Aural Training, Sight-Singing, Musical Appreciation, and Pianoforte Accompaniment.	These are new Subjects, but the M.C.C. Courses are ready.

THIS IS THE AGE OF THE SPECIALIST. To pass your Examination you need the aid of Specialists.

M.C.C. - - - Tutors specialise in a particular branch, and this accounts for the success of our Students.

FREE -

The "Modern Guide" to MATRIC., MUS. BAC., &C.
Twelve pages. New edition.

201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

STUDY AT HOME FOR YOUR DIPLOMA

Complete and Individual Preparation for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
Mus. Bac., Mus. Doc., and all Diplomas of T.C.L., and R.C.O.

These Postal Courses enable you to study at home, in your own time, and at your own convenience. Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for diplomas and degrees.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

1. L.R.A.M., Christmas, 1922 :
Special Short Course of Five
Revision Lessons.
This Course can be completed in two weeks.
2. Durham "First" Mus. Bac.,
March, 1923.
Full Preparation.
3. A.R.C.M., April, 1923 :
Full Preparation in every part of the Paper Work.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.), L.R.A.M.

NOTE.—The success of Dr. Sprankling's system is due very largely to the fact that the tuition is entirely Individual, and a personal interest is taken in the progress and success of each student.

PRACTICAL WORK—PERSONAL LESSONS IN BRISTOL AND LONDON.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should write to

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
48, LINDEN ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone Bristol 3033.

APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.

Correspondence Courses in this subject will be given as under :—

- (a) First General Course.
- (b) Advanced Course.
- (c) Course with an additional section for Teachers.
- (d) Advanced Course for Teachers.

Further particulars from the Secretary,

(DEPT. A) THE WARDROP CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE,
21, BEDFORD ROW, LONDON, W.C.1.

CORRESPONDENCE TUITION

FOR

MUS. B. AND MUS. D.

DR. B. BURROWS

(Mus. D. LONDON.)

Terms, Testimonials, and Successes:

30, HIGHFIELD STREET, LEICESTER.

To all Pianists, Violinists, and 'Cellists. THE TECHNIQUER.

STEWART MACPHERSON, Esq., F.R.A.M. and "THE TECHNIQUER."

"I can honestly say that, after doing a great deal of writing—a daily task with me—I find great benefit after a few minutes' use of 'The Techniquer.'"

"The effect is to render the hand at once flexible, and is equivalent to at least half-an-hour of actual practice. So that, when one begins to play, a good deal of unnecessary labour is saved for the actually musical side of one's practice—and to a busy man, that is an asset not to be despised."

"Hand Development," with 15 photos, 1s. 6d.

Full particulars of "The Techniquer" from the Secretary,
Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O.,

21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

SPECIALISED INDIVIDUAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS in Modern Pianoforte Playing and Teaching; also Harmony for Pianists. See THE CHARLES A. GILLET PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, page 830.

An Entirely New Departure HARMONY FOR PIANISTS

Being Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom—without written exercises.

By DR. PERCY RIDEOUT, D.Mus. Lond., A.R.C.M.

A Course of instruction BY CORRESPONDENCE in CHORDS and ORNAMENTAL DEVICES, together with their TEMPERAMENTAL VALUE, as bearing on MUSICAL APPRECIATION and INTERPRETATION, the whole being based on and ILLUSTRATED by music written for the Pianoforte.

AN ESSENTIAL PART OF A PIANIST'S EQUIPMENT affording a CLEAR INSIGHT INTO THE MATERIAL FORMING THE STRUCTURE OF MUSIC and ITS MEANING.

THE FOUNDATION OF THE ART OF STYLE and INTERPRETATION.

FOR FURTHER PARTICULARS WRITE

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,

(Studio M.T.), 11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE MODERN TEACHING OF WEIGHT TOUCH

EVERY Pianist, whether Amateur, Teacher, or Public Performer, needs to acquire the CHARLES A. GILLETT method of

WEIGHT TOUCH TONE

The ONLY source of beautiful and finely graded

No pianist who has mastered the CHARLES A. GILLETT method of APPLIED WEIGHT TOUCH will ever revert to the old unscientific Knuckle Touch with all its drudgery and disappointments.

The advantages of the CHARLES A. GILLETT method cannot be overestimated. The method can be acquired ENTIRELY by SPECIALISED INDIVIDUAL CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS, affording a complete training in all details with a MINIMUM of practice. The lessons have won testimonials from all grades of pianists.

Particulars will be sent to those giving details of their playing, with names of two or three pieces they play. If they prefer to call and discuss the lessons with MR. GILLETT, by all means do so.

MR. CHARLES A. GILLETT receives pupils for Private Lessons and Consultations at his studios.

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT PIANOFORTE SCHOOL,

(Studio M.T.), 11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, LONDON, W.1.

VOICE TRAINING

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (under the name of the "Simplex" System), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

Dame Clara Butt writes: "I advise all would-be Singers and all interested in the Teaching of Singing to take the 'Simplex' Course. They will find it most helpful."

Mr. Ben Davies writes: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

For Full Particulars, address: MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS

Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation.

L.R.A.M., Christmas, 1921: Entries, 5; Passes, 5.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

INGLESIDE, GOLDSWONG TERRACE, NOTTINGHAM.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hessele, E. Yorks.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MADAME MARY BAKER

CONTRALTO.
Oratorios, particularly "Messiah."
Audition, London till 22 December.
Sheffield and North of England till New Year.
44, Stanhope Avenue, Finchley, N.3. Tel.: Finchley 977.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.
15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

FRANK CARLETON

(TENOR).
ORATORIOS, CONCERTS, Etc.

"Mr. Carleton is the possessor of a powerful tenor voice of rare range and capacity, and his rendering of the song, 'How lovely are Thy dwellings' (Liddle), was a fine performance."—
Northwich Guardian, July 14, 1922.

Address: 13, GROSVENOR ROAD, HYDE, CHESHIRE.

MOUNTFORD SCOTT

TENOR
St. Paul's Cathedral, E.C.4.
108, Stapleton Hall Road, Stroud Green, N.4.

MR. EUSTACE BELHAM

(Oriana Madrigal Society, Philharmonic Choir, &c.).
BASS-BARITONE.

Oratorios. Quartet. Concerts.
69, Trouville Road, Clapham Park.

HERBERT SMITH, M.C.

BASS-BARITONE.

Late CHORAL SCHOLAR of KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, and late Solo Baritone of

CARLISLE, NORWICH, and DURHAM CATHEDRALS.

Terms, &c., 17, Rectory Road, Walthamstow, E.17.

Bookings include Steinway Hall, December 4th.

Telephone: Walthamstow 30.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5. London Wall 4033.

ARCHIBALD CURTIS

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

Professor of Singing Trinity College of Music.

VOCAL TEACHER AND ADJUDICATOR.

Postal Course for SINGING-TEACHERS' DIPLOMAS.

Many Successes.

14, Hanover Street, W.1.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and A.R.A.M. Exams.

Notice of last Pupils' Concert:

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

Address: 59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

Telephone: Hampstead 4597.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,
MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.
Nearly 700 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A., Performer and Teacher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

SYLVIA WHYTE

WRITER OF LYRICS.

Words written to any Music.

Lyrics of every description to order.

Collaboration or Revision of Plays and Librettos.

19, Clifton Gardens, W.9.:

and Actors' Club, 98, Charing Cross Road, W.C.2.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.

For terms, vacant dates, &c., apply to ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MR. EDWARD OXENFORD

Author of "I FEAR NO FOE," and thousands of other Songs, &c.
SUBMITS UP-TO-DATE AND PROFITABLE LYRICS.

Speciality: NEW WORDS written to Songs.
Haddenham, Bucks. Postage refunded.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 Book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"I Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentleman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MUSICAL REVISOR TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-SEVEN YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Prof. H. WOLFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

STUDY AT HOME

FOR YOUR DIPLOMA.

See Page 829.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. D. and MUS. B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities, Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L.Mus.L.C.M. (1922 List), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and eighty-nine. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, Organ, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus.B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations,
Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1.
Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-22 ... 204 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-22 ... 50 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., c/o FORSYTH BROS., Deansgate, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,
L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, Essay Models, Sight-
Reading, and Practical tests in 6 Lessons.
Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.
HAZELDEN, TEWKESBURY.

SPECIAL POSTAL COURSE FOR L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. teaching Singing. Personal Lessons also given. Fifty recent Successes. S. W. Churchill, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., 60, Berners St., W.1.

THOMAS CRAWFORD, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L., Org. and Choirmaster, St. Paul's, Toronto. Address:
after Dec. 15th, c/o Toronto Conservatory of Music, Toronto, Canada.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 400 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen
Victoria Street, London, E.C., makes a speciality of PREPARING Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatam Place, S.W. 2. Telephone: Streatam 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Latest Successes: DURHAM—Final Mus. Bac.: 2 out of 3 passes, both at first attempt. Mus. Bac. "Exercise" (3), after preliminary course in Composition. Also First Mus. Bac. (2). All in 1922.
Over 130 Successes at Durham. The Durdans, Reigate.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haversstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920), specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 66, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancs.

THE MIDLAND CORRESPONDENCE
COLLEGE provides EXPERT CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. at moderate instalment Fees.
Goddard's Studio, 59, Spring Gardens, Buxton.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing,
R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS PREPARES for
L.R.A.M. and other Examinations. Pianoforte, Harmony,
"Form and Teaching," &c. Lessons (oral or by correspondence). Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte. Many recent successes,
L.R.A.M., &c. Pianoforte Classes, 10, Matheson Rd., West Kensington

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

DR. TAYLOR teaches through the post any musical subject. Accompaniments written or revised. Successful preparation for all exams. Portland Place, Lancaster.

THE CLIFTON COOKE SCHOOL OF SINGING. Established 1888. "Pre-eminent for Professional Training." Principal: Mr. Clifton Cooke (Author of "Practical Singing," Kegan, Paul & Co.) offers exceptional advantages to serious professional students. Periodical competitions for valuable Free and Assisted Scholarships. For interview address Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

MISS EDITH NIGHTINGALE, L.R.A.M., desires ENGAGEMENTS as PIANIST in Chamber Music, or as Accompanist to Vocalists or Instrumentalists. Excellent testimonials. Write, 38, Sackville Street, Piccadilly, W.1.

SINGING.—VOICE-PRODUCTION, BREATH
CONTROL as taught by the late Manuel Garcia, ensuring easy singing and rapid progress. Successful teacher. Moderate terms.
Miss Norah D'Arcy, Wigmore Hall Studios, Wigmore Street, W.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
- (3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
- (4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham, including September, 1922.

RECENT SUCCESSSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
9 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 E.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

LADY, L.R.A.M., will act as ACCOMPANIST to Vocalists or Instrumentalists. Good Reader. Moderate Terms.
Apply, "P.C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ACCOMPANIST (Certificated Pianist) Rehearses with Vocalists and Instrumentalists. Moderate Terms.
References. Miss Player, 44, Lady Margaret Road, N.W.5.

MISS MARJORIE EDWARDS. Songs at the Piano. DESIRES ENGAGEMENTS, Concerts, Socials, &c.
Apply, 82, Gravelly Hill, Birmingham.

EASTBOURNE.

DOWNSMEADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS.
Modern education with special musical training if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

ALTO WANTED for St. Matthew's, Denmark
Hill. Good reader. Light duty. £12. Dr. J. Warriner. de Crespigny House, Denmark Hill, S.E.5.

CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL. — TENOR
WANTED: Communicant, under 32. Stipend, £125 (less £5 for Insurance); after two years, £150. Applications, with not more than four testimonials, to be sent to The Rev. Precentor Helmore, Precincts, Canterbury.

ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL, DUBLIN.

There is a VACANCY in the Choir for ONE BASS SINGER.
Salary £130 and extra fees. There is a superannuation scheme in connection with the Choir. Attendance required at few Sunday and five week-day (Evensong) Services. Applications, with testimonials and references, must be sent before December 15, 1922, to the Rev.
E. H. F. Campbell, Succentor, St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, from whom further information may be obtained.

Notice of the day of trial will be sent only to selected candidates whose travelling expenses will be paid.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER wanted for Trinity U.F. Church, Greenock. Salary £100. Applications, with qualifications and copies of testimonials, to be sent to Robert Macpherson, Monfode, Greenock, before December 8.

ST. BARNABAS, Kensington. CHOIRMASTER
WANTED. Churchman. Salary, £50 to £75. Apply by letter.
Rev. C. Lowe, 15, Kensington Crescent, W.14.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER required for St. Luke's, Charlton. Good musical standard essential.
Starting, £70. Apply, with three recommendations, to Rev. D.
Christopherson, The Rectory, Fairfield Road, Charlton.

ADVERTISER, F.R.C.O., ORGANIST AND CHOIRMASTER AT THE LEADING NONCONFORMIST
CHURCH IN EAST ANGLIA, with an excellent Teaching Connection, and many years' experience as a Conductor, is DESIROUS OF PURCHASING a GOOD TEACHING CON-NECTION in the Midlands or North of England with a good Organ Appointment. Present appointment held for thirteen years.
Highest references given. Apply, "A. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

R.C.O. EXAMINATIONS.

SINGLE LESSONS (covering all the requirements) and PRACTICE on facsimile R.C.O. Instrument. Many recent Successes (including Lafontaine Prize). Address, Allan Brown,
F.R.C.O., 298, High Road, Balham, S.W.17. Phone: Battersea 916.

CONDUCTOR REQUIRED immediately, to inaugurate a Scottish Choir. Rehearsals in S.E. London.
Voices drawn from a Society of 700 members. For particulars apply, The Secretary, Mrs. Robert Black, 44, Tressillian Road, St. Johns, S.E.4.

CORK MUNICIPAL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The Committee of the Cork Municipal School of Music invites applications for post of Teacher of Violin, Viola, and Orchestra, at an hourly rate of remuneration.

Applications, which should contain full particulars of candidate's qualifications and teaching experience, will be received by the undersigned at his office, SHARMAN CRAWFORD STREET, CORK, not later than December 14. Three recent testimonials should accompany each application, one of which should be from a Clergyman.

Canvassing, directly or indirectly, will be regarded as a disqualification.

For further particulars apply to

November, 1922.

F. B. GILTINAN, Secretary.

HACKNEY CHORAL SOCIETY.—Keen Amateurs required immediately to form ORCHESTRA for Choral and Operatic work. Frequent performances of Operas and Oratorios. Write stating instrument, "Society," 130, Rushmore Road, Clapton, E.5.

PROFESSOR, Pianoforte, wishes to PURCHASE High-Class TEACHING CONNECTION. State particulars, price, &c., to "B., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester. S.W.

TWO-MANUAL and Pedal ORGAN, rebuilt, suitable for a country Church. No reed. Fourteen draw Stops, including couplers. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works.

BARGAIN for quick SALE.—Two-Manual and Pedal Reed ORGAN (Bell). 20 Stops. Hand or foot blown. Good condition. For further particulars apply to J. Herbert Dobrie, 2, Castle Park Terrace, Kendal.

FOR SALE.—Reed ORGAN (Bell) One Manual, foot blowers, 17 Stops. £20. Box 5, c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED.—Three-Manual REED ORGAN (Mason & Hamlin preferred). Full particulars, "J. E., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BELOW HALF PRESENT PRICE. Holt ORGAN, Two-Manual and Pedals. "J. E., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WANTED, Second-hand, Two-manual and Pedal ORGAN for Church. Must be by good Builder, and of fine tone. About £400. Reply, "J. M. W., c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

TO ORGANISTS.—Piano, with two octaves of Organ Pedals (detachable), very little used. Price £50, with organ seat included. Mrs. Rickaby, Bilbrough, York.

FOR SALE.—Fine old 'CELLO, in perfect playing order. Beautiful quality tone: admirable for quartet and solo work. Write, "S., 18, Versailles Road, Anerley, S.E.20.

VIRGIL CLAVIER, good condition. Price £6 (carriage free to London Station) or offer. Roscoe, Crockham Hill, Edenbridge, Kent.

FOR SALE.—A HARP, by Erard, in good condition. No reasonable offer refused. Apply, Box 195, Hampshire Chronicle.

SET of Norman & Beard's Pneumatic Pedal Attachment and Adjustable Stool 21a, Duxbury Street, Darwen.

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.—Illustrated Record of Choir, Organists, and Music, including Specification of Organ and Annotated Service List of Leeds Musical Festival week. By Arthur J. Dobson. Price 1s. net. Apply, H. Bacon Smith, 31, Vernon Road, Leeds.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy Song, "THE HAPPIEST LAND" (Oakley). Compass, G to D. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address, 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N. 16.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O.—Eight model Essays on the two books set for January exam. next. Valuable hints on writing the Essays. Send 5s. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPIED and TRANSCRIPTED. Copying, 9d. per twelve-stave sheet. Transposition extra. Mr. J. Morris, 114, Alexandra Road, Hampstead, N.W.8.

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET

LONDON, W. 1.

TELEPHONE: GERRARD 2653.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool.
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments made.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

ROUSE, ROUSE FROM YOUR SLUMBERS.

TRADITIONAL CORNISH CAROL

Price Twopence.

This Carol was recorded from a rendering given on Christmas Eve, 1921, by Mrs. Ellen Lobb, then aged 86, who has lived all her life at Penrose, St. Ervan, Cornwall. When a child she was taught the Carol by her grandfather, Tippet, who also lived at Penrose. The words were recorded by her niece, Miss Old, of Helland School, and the music by her son, Mr. W. T. Lobb, Bandmaster of Wadebridge Town Band. The Carol is probably from 100 to 200 years old.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

NEW SACRED CANTATA

THE NAZARENE

By JOHN S. WITTY.

REMARKABLE SUCCESS in first month of publication, Send for specimen.

O.N. 2s. each; Sol-fa 1s.; Post free.

ALSO

THE VICTOR'S THRONE (Peace).

CHRIST THE CONQUEROR (Witty).

KING SAUL (Jamouneau).

Choirmasters are invited to send HALF PRICE (1s. post free) for a sample of any work to introduce.

(C DEPT.) JOHN BLACKBURN, LTD.,
188, CARDIGAN ROAD, LEEDS.

THE "DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER

Is installed and giving complete satisfaction in over a thousand Cathedrals, Churches, Theatres, and Cinemas in Great Britain alone. This fact is eloquent, as well as convincing testimony, to its efficiency and durability. It is the most satisfactory method of mechanical organ blowing, and as the motive power may be oil, gas, or electric motor, the "Discus" is suitable for churches in any locality. The application of a "Discus" equipment to an organ ensures a steady supply of wind being instantly available, and enables the organist to obtain the best possible effects from the instrument. The "Discus" blower is the most scientifically designed machine for organ blowing purposes on the market. It is made of metal throughout, of the best quality combined with high grade workmanship. Being entirely free of complicated mechanism, a minimum of attention is required, and very many years of satisfactory services ensured. Efficiency and reliability are fully guaranteed with each "Discus" equipment we instal.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

*Sole Makers, Watkins & Watson, Organ Blowing Specialists for the past thirty years.
Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ Blowing.*

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

B. WATKINS AND WATSON
WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

GREAT SUCCESS OF THE MUSIC TEACHER

The extraordinary popularity of "The Music Teacher" amongst teachers of the piano, vocal teachers, and trainers of choirs and school music classes is due to the practical help this great paper gives.

"The Music Teacher" saves time and wasted effort, by describing the best—and only the best—material for teaching purposes.

It gives expert guidance on teaching methods. It describes what to do and how to do it, and helps teachers to devise fresh ways and means of training their pupils and of holding their interest.

Each issue of "The Music Teacher" solves over forty individual problems of teachers who have special difficulties of their own.

This specialised help is available to every reader free of charge.

SEND FOR A FREE SPECIMEN COPY.

To "THE MUSIC TEACHER," Montague House, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

*Please send me a Complimentary Copy of "THE MUSIC TEACHER" as mentioned in
"The Musical Times."*

Name (Mr., Mrs., or Miss).....

Address.....

NOVELLO'S CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

LATEST NUMBERS.

No.		No.
373.	Come and hear the Angels ... C. H. Lloyd 2d.	392.	The Carollers ... A. M. Goodhart 1½d.
	(Words only, 2s. per 100.)	393.	The Rose and the Lily ... A. Rowley 1½d.
374.	It came upon the midnight clear Arr. A. Sullivan 2d.	394.	Carol of the Three Kings ... J. F. Bridge 2d.
375.	Christ was born on Christmas Day C. Lee Williams 1½d.	395.	Green grows the Holly Tree ... J. F. Bridge 1½d.
376.	Thou didst leave Thy throne T. R. Matthews 1½d.	396.	The coming Christmas ... J. F. Bridge 1½d.
377.	From the East come Monarchs wise C. M. Spurling 1½d.	397.	I sing the Birth ... Thomas Adams 1½d.
378.	The snow lies thick ... Geoffrey Shaw 2d.	398.	O lovely voices of the sky ... W. G. Alcock 2d.
379.	When Christ was born of Mary free C. H. H. Parry 3d.	399.	This Day ... Gerrard Williams 1½d.
	H. A. Chambers 1½d.	*400.	Hark! what mean those Holy voices A. Sullivan 4d.
380.	Breathe, breathe o'er a world of woe H. A. Chambers 1½d.	*401.	Four Christmas Carols ... 2d.
381.	In Natali Domini ... W. G. Ross 1½d.		1. In Bethlehem, that noble place B. J. Dale
	(Words only, 2s. per 100.)		2. Sleep, Holy Babe! ... R. W. Robson
*382.	Good King Wenceslas. Varied Harmonies by W. G. Ross 3d.		3. The First Christmas Night W. H. Sangster
383.	Welcome Yule ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.		4. There dwelt a King ... John E. West
384.	I sing the birth ... C. H. H. Parry 4d.		(Words only, 4s. per 100.)
385.	A Carol of Peace ... G. J. Bennett 2d.	*402.	Silent Night ... Franz Grüber 2d.
386.	When Christ was born... Myles B. Foster 1½d.	403.	Carols of Bethlehem ... C. W. Pearce 2d.
387.	The Nativity ... H. Rhodes 1½d.		1. No room in the Inn. 2. The heavenly host.
388.	Ring, Christmas Bells ... J. F. Bridge 1½d.		3. Our "House of Bread."
389.	Would I had been a Shepherd J. F. Bridge 1½d.	404.	Good King Wenceslas... Geoffrey Shaw 2d.
390.	By Nazareth's green hills J. F. Bridge 2d.	*405.	O lovely voices of the sky (Unison) Cuthbert Harris 1½d.
391.	Sweet hours of night ... H. C. Dixon 1½d.
		*406.	Ditto. (Four Voices) Cuthbert Harris 2d.
		407.	A Merry Christmas Carol A. M. Goodhart 1½d.
		408.	Christmas Cradle Song ... J. F. Bridge 1½d.
		409.	Carol, Carol tenderly, sweetly J. F. Bridge 1½d.
		410.	Rejoice, the Christ has come Stanley Marchant 1½d.

* Also published separately in Tonic Sol-fa.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES, OR FOR GENERAL USE.

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO.)

THE MUSIC COMPOSED FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS, WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER

PRICE - - - THREE SHILLINGS.

Paper Boards, 5s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 2s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., K.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

December 4th. at 4 p.m.—Violin Recital by Miss SARAH FENNINGS, assisted by her Students.

December 4th.—Last day of entry for the January Higher Examinations for Teachers' Diplomas and Certificates.

December 6th. at 3 p.m.—Recital by Mr. ALEC ROWLEY of his own works.

December 7th. at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert at Steinway Hall.

December 9th.—Last day of entry for the next Open Competition for Scholarships.

January 8th.—Lent Term begins.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

A Special Course of Training for Music Teachers has been instituted to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, and has been approved by the Council.

THE ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W. 1.

String Players, Please Note.

In view of the scarcity of really interesting modern works of moderate length for 'Cello and Piano, MESSRS. ELKIN & CO., LTD., have particular pleasure in announcing the following new Publication:

"POEM"

By ERIC FOGG.

FOR 'CELLO (OR VIOLIN) WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.

Price 3s. 6d. net.

This was originally composed for 'Cello; but as it was found to be remarkably effective for Violin also, both 'Cello and Violin parts are included in each copy. The work is romantic in character, and is splendidly written from the soloist's point of view.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET, W. 1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

CHRISTMAS CAROLS.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE—
NOVELTY.

THE STAR IN THE EAST. A Christmas Fantasy for Contralto and Chorus (S.A.T.B.). Price 9d.

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. 9d.

- | | |
|--------------------|--------------------------|
| 1. Ring Out. | 4. Christmas Day. |
| 2. A Babe ys Born. | 5. When Christ was born. |
| 3. Welcome Yule. | 6. Yonder in Bethlehem. |

Separately, 3d. each.

TWO CHRISTMAS MOTETS.

Edited by SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

ORLANDO DI LASSO—LET ZION RESOUND WITH PRAISE (Five Parts.) Price 6d.

JACOB HANDL—BEHOLD, THOU SHALT CONCEIVE. (Four Parts.) Price 4d.

THOMAS ADAMS—

SIX CHRISTMAS CAROLS. 9d.

- | | |
|-----------------------|------------------------------|
| 1. 'Tis at Christmas. | 4. Born is the Babe. |
| 2. No more Sadness. | 5. Christmas Bells. |
| 3. Into this World. | 6. How bright was the Glory. |

Separately, 3d. each.

THE BOSWORTH CAROL ALBUM

1s. 3d. net.

"Many Old and New Friends."

A wonderful collection. 25 Carols. 48 pages.

BOSWORTH & Co., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

HOMAGE TO HANDEL

54 STUDIES IN VARIATION FORM

FOR ORGAN

ON A GROUND BASS OF

HANDEL

BY

SIGFRID KARG-ELERT

Price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, N.W.1.

INSTITUTED 1822.

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1880.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

PRINCIPAL—

SIR ALEXANDER CAMPBELL MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O. Mus.D., LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.C.M.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors, Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the letters A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after leaving the Institution may be elected by the Directors, Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the letters F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the letters L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter.

A Special Teachers' Training Course, to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council, has been instituted.

A JUNIOR DEPARTMENT is now open.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.

J. A. CREIGHTON,
Secretary.

Marshall & Rose

SUPERB GRAND & UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES

THE PIANOS WHICH INSPIRE

THOSE who purchase the Superb Marshall and Rose Pianoforte can always be confident that their instrument will win the highest measure of praise on account of its superlatively sympathetic qualities. The Marshall and Rose Pianoforte in the making has been treated with the same care and tenderness as a rare violin; it is the supreme outcome of years of experience and steady striving after an ideal; every part of it has literally been trained towards perfection, and the result is an instrument which is almost human in its responsiveness.

The artist who avails himself of this wonderful instrument as a means of self-expression will find that his message never fails in its appeal when given to an audience in such an exceptional manner. Real connoisseurs of Music are convinced that the magic and beauty of the immortal works of the great Composers can only be adequately realised when interpreted on the Piano of Perfection—the instrument which bears the name—MARSHALL AND ROSE.

The Marshall and Rose Grand and Upright Pianofortes can also be obtained containing THE WORLD-FAMED ANGELUS PIANO-PLAYER, which gives you a Piano possessing every musical quality and the ability to play it.

Kindly call or write for Illustrated Catalogue No. 112 to the Manufacturers

SIR HERBERT MARSHALL & SONS, LTD.,
Angelus Hall, Regent House, 233, Regent St., London W.

GRAND AND UPRIGHT PIANOS

UNRIVALLED FOR PURITY OF TONE,
DELICACY OF TOUCH, AND DURABILITY.

CHAPPELL

Acknowledged by consensus of musical opinion, to be world supreme—the standard by which all other Pianos are judged.

CHAPPELL PLAYER-PIANOS—GRAND AND UPRIGHT.

Agents in all the Principal Towns.

AMAZING GRAMOPHONE INVENTION AT CHAPPELL'S.

Call at our Gramophone Salons and hear your favourite selections reproduced by the "Cliftophone"—the wonderful instrument which is acclaimed as the ultimate evolution of the gramophone. The "Cliftophone" plays ordinary gramophone records with an extraordinary effect of reality.

THE CHAPPELL PIANO CO., LTD., Showrooms: 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON, W.-1.

BOUND

MAY 25 1973

UNIV. OF MICH.
LIBRARY

ONE DAY
CIRC.

